The result was, that instead of these earnings being distributed, whether to labor, to stockholders, or, by reduced prices, into creating a larger purchasing power which would absorb more goods, they were frozen into plants for the products of which the day came when there was no market.

Immediately the situation spread, lack of confidence was inspired, people began to save and hoard money, and the factories stood, as he likes to say, "stark and idle."

So the New Deal economists would dread the day when Dr. Moulton's estimate of how many more men could be employed in the durable goods industries might be realized in actual employment. They would figure another 1929 crash would follow very speedily.

Popularity Declines

Probably the decline of President Roosevelt's popularity is much more real—certainly it is much more obvious—on Capitol Hill than it is out in the country. Senators and representatives in private conversations admit that they believe the President has lost only a fraction of his following in the country.

Proof of that pudding will not be evident until there are some significant primaries, in which some anti-New Deal Democrat puts up a real battle.

But on Capitol Hill there are a surprising number of Democrats who seem anxious that the President's foot should slip a little. It is one of the reasons why the fight against enlargement of the Supreme court has become so important—and so bitter.

Most of the insurgents do not explain why they are insurging—they claim that in each particular case, be it the court, or the reorganization, or federal economy, or the PWA, or what not, much to their regret they have been forced to oppose the President.

It is perfectly true that they, in most instances at least, are really opposed to the President on these issues. But there is an underlying motive which has not come out in the open.

This is a burning desire that, when the Democratic national convention meets three years hence, it will be dominated by what they like to call "Regular Democrats," and it will positively not nominate a New Dealer to succeed Mr. Roosevelt.

Third Term Up Again

They are assuming—and it seems to many observers to be a violent assumption—that the President will not seek a third term. Strangely enough their very course of action, if sufficiently successful, may force the President to take another nomination. It may turn out, if what he will regard as the reactionaries in the Democratic party are apparently in control and purpose to name some man he will not believe will carry out his policies, that Mr. Roosevelt will conceive it his patriotic duty to run for a third term.

This possibility, however, does not seem to enter at all into the logic of the insurging Democrats. They are frankly hostile to the nomination of any of the men who they feel sure would win Roosevelt's approval. It is not so much Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace or any other of the half dozen New Dealers who have frequently been mentioned for the White House in the recent past.

Being politicians themselves, the senators and representatives who hope to regain control of their party at the next convention and put a man more satisfactory to them in the White House, realize that anything may happen in the three long years to come to trip any particular candidate. So it is not individuals they are planning to beat—it is really, in essence, the New Deal itself.

It is not so much that they want to make any move that Mr. Roosevelt would regard as a backward step. But they just do not yearn to go any further forward. They think they have gone plenty far already in revamping the country's economic structure. They want a "breathing spell."

The same logic spells plenty of trouble for Mr. Roosevelt next session unless there should be some convincing demonstration that the country is behind the President, not the insurgents.

Labor Bill Hits Snag

The whole trouble about the maximum hours and minimum wages bill, so far as getting it through congress is concerned, lies in that differential between wages in the North and wages in the South.

In one way or another the government has always avoided making any move which would interfere with the generally accepted idea that the wage scale in the South should not be so high as it is in the North.

The South has drawn many industries from the North as a result of this differential, plus certain other advantages, such as smaller cost for heating plants due to warmer climate, etc. It has been justified by the slightly lower cost of living in the South for the workers. For instance, many southern mills, located in small communities, are worked by people who live on tiny farms, which, through the labor of their wives and children—their own when unemployed—provide them with vegetables, chickens and sometimes even a little pork.

The movement of the textile industry to the South is a good illustration.

But naturally the employers of the North, and the labor union leaders, and those who agree with President Roosevelt and John L. Lewis about building up buying power among the classes of labor now unable to buy luxuries, dissent violently.

It so happens that Chairman William P. Connery, of the house labor committee, comes from Massachusetts, which has been hard hit for many years by this idea of a wage differential in favor of the South. Naturally he is vigorously against making any exceptions which would discriminate against New England in the new wages and hours bill he has introduced at the President's request.

But just as naturally southern senators and representatives are not anxious to see anything done by the federal government that would have the effect of removing this differential, which for some years now has been building up southern industry.

Question of Politics

At the same time the southern senators and representatives are politicians, and the workers have more votes than the employers—or even the chambers of commerce. And it might be assumed that the local storekeepers would be in sympathy with the workers. So it is just possible there may be more votes in eliminating the differential than in keeping it—even for the southerners.

That is just speculation, of course, for there is no indication yet that it is working in that direction. The indications are that the southern legislators regard the differential as an advantage, and will fight to keep it.

All of which points to labor troubles in the South sooner or later, for John L. Lewis is very set on the idea of building up buying power, and not purely from an altruistic standpoint at all. The C. I. O. has two objections to groups of underpaid labor. One is that they are probably competing with labor the wages and hours of which the union is trying to improve. The other is that it wants more people buying automobiles, electric refrigerators, radios, etc., which are produced by comparatively well paid labor. The more buying the more jobs, the more jobs the more union dues.

Sentinels of Health

Don't Neglect Them!

Nature designed the kidneys to do a marvelous job. Their task is to keep the flowing blood stream free of an excess of toxic impurities. The act of living—life itself—is constantly producing waste matter the kidneys must remove from the blood if good health is to endure.

When the kidneys fail to function as Nature intended, there is retention of waste that may cause body-wide distress. One may suffer nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—feel tired, nervous, all worn out.

Frequent, scanty or burning passages may be further evidence of kidney or bladder disturbance.

The recognized and proper treatment is a diuretic medicine to help the kidneys get rid of excess poisonous body waste. Use Doan's Pills. They have had more than forty years of public approval. Are endorsed the country over. Insist on Doan's. Sold at all drug stores.

SYNOPSIS

Brooke Reyburn visits the office of Jed Stewart, a lawyer, to discuss the terms of an estate she has inherited from Mrs. Mary Amanda Dane. Unwittingly she overhears Jed talking to Mark Trent, a nephew of Mrs. Dane who has been disinherited. Mrs. Dane had lived at Lookout House, a huge structure on the sea, built by her father and divided into two, for her and Mark's father. Brooke had been a fashion expert, and Mrs. Dane, a "shut-in," hearing her on the radio, had invited her to call and developed a deep affection for her. Mark discloses that Mrs. Dane had threatened to disinherit him if he married Lola, from whom he is now divorced. He says he does not trust Henri and Clotilde Jacques, Mrs. Dane's servants. He says he is not interested in an offer of Brooke's to share the estate with him. Leaving her department store job, Brooke refuses an offer to "go stepping" with Jerry Field, a carefree young man who wants to marry her.

"Do you dislike Mark Trent?"

"Don't dislike him. Just don't want to think about the man, that's all. My sister Daphne went cock-eyed about him and he turned her down hard. Like a perfect gentleman, of course, but it got my goat."

"Are you sure he turned her down?"

"Sure. I'm not blaming him, I'm ashamed for her, that's all. He was probably fed up with her type. His ex-wife was never quite sober, I've heard. Daphne fell for him the minute she saw him, she had worried me by her crazy ideas of freedom for a girl, she'd picked up a post-war germ somewhere—all talk of course—and when Trent came along, she stopped drinking and staying out till morning at night clubs. I was relieved. Then he side-stepped. Forget it. I don't know why I told you. Nice street this, isn't it?"

Brooke nodded assent as they passed houses whose polished windows, violet-paned some of them, screened by laces of unbelievable fineness, regarded her with inscrutable calm. Thoroughbred dogs, proudly conscious of their gay collars and smart breast-straps, decorously escorted their young masters. Shining limousines waited before charming old doors. In the distance rose the faint, far sound of traffic, murmurous as a mighty flood which never rolled nearer.

"Here we are at your door. Sure you won't change your mind and go stepping?" The boyish quality was back in Field's voice. "Grand old house. Pity it was turned into apartments. Do you realize that you never have invited me to meet the family? What's wrong? Ashamed of your home—or me?"

"Neither. What a beastly suggestion, Jerry. If you must know, I haven't told them about our friendship. I have the finest family in the world, but their bump of humor is over-developed, it isn't a bump, it's a coconut."

"What is there about me that's a joke?"

"Nothing; don't be so touchy. I decided to be a little mysterious, that's all. Sam resents it if I ask him a question about his friends, thinks I am treating him like a boy when he is almost two years older than I; and since I got Lucette the chance to model and she is financially independent, she scorns my interest."

"Is your mother like that?"

"No, Mother's a dear, but she is so bound up in her children that she has no real life of her own. It's a pity because she is a comparatively young woman."

"She sounds old-fashioned and motherly to me. Grade A in mothers. I like that kind. Can't I come in and meet her? I had planned to celebrate with you. Now that you've turned me down, I haven't any place to go."

"You carry off that aggrieved, little-boy pose well, Jerry, but it leaves me cold. You, with your Crowd—capital C—, having nowhere to go! That's the funniest thing I ever heard. I intend to devote the next two hours to making plans with the family. But when we're settled, I'll invite you to Lookout House. Good night. Sorry."

The front door slammed with a force which shook the house. Sam, of course. The atmosphere tingled when he appeared. He was whistling as usual. Good-looking boy! His horn-rimmed spectacles added a touch of distinction. She patted his sleeve as he stopped beside her.

"Had a nice day, Sammy?"

"Not too good. They're taking off the play tomorrow. Our dear public wouldn't see it."

He pulled open the elevator door. "Hop in." As it clanged shut, he asked:

"All through being a working girl?"

Brooke swallowed a lump in her throat and nodded.

"It will seem queer being a lady of leisure."

"Leisure! You don't know the first letter of the word. I can see you wondering what you'll do next. Leisure isn't your line. You'll plunge into classes and sports. There won't be hours enough in a day for you."

The elevator stopped. A voice seeped through the cracks around the apartment door. Sam Reyburn grinned.

"Say, listen! Lucette's on the air—and how."

"Oh dear, what's her grievance now?" Brooke whispered, and put her key into the lock.

She tried to appraise with the eyes of a stranger the high-ceilinged, large living-room she entered. A connoisseur of portraits would know that Grandfather Reyburn over the mantel had been painted by a great artist; that the portrait of his daughter on the opposite wall was a choice bit of work; that the duchess of Argyle in her sables, green satin, and emeralds was a masterpiece. Always she had wanted to decorate a room as a background for the picture. Now she could. The duchess was hers. The mahogany and maple was sadly in need of rubbing up, but no amount of wear and tear could disguise its period and value.

Her eyes lingered on her mother perched on the arm of a couch. She did young things like that. Her hair was a sheeny platinum; her eyes were dark; her skin was clear and smooth; her figure in the amethyst crepe frock was round without in the least suggesting fat. There was a quizzical twist to her lovely mouth as she looked at her younger daughter, who, with legs thrust straight out before her, was slumped in a chair. Her red beret, which matched the belt of her slim green plain frock, was on the floor. Her hair was black and wavy; her eyes were brilliantly dark; her painted lips drooped at the corners. Brooke recognized the symptoms. Sam had been right, Lucette was on the air. She said as she slipped out of her lapin coat:

"In the Valley of Despond again, Lucette? Had a nice day, Mother?"

Mrs. Reyburn smiled and nodded. She would make her home-coming children think she had had a nice day, if the heavens had fallen. She was like that. Lucette answered her question.

"You'd be in the Valley of Despond, if you had had the day I've had, Brooke Reyburn. I'm dead to the world. A woman came into the sports shop with three daughters, and kept me showing clothes all the afternoon. Gosh! My feet ache like teeth gone nervy."

"Did she buy much?"

"Not that baby. She bought that little blue number only. For Pete's sake, why does Sam have to whistle when he's under the shower? The walls of this apartment are regular sounding boards."

"Bear up, Lucette, you will be out of it soon. If we can't sublet this apartment, we'll shut it up."

"Spoken like a lady and a multi, Brooke darling. And after that what?"

"You won't have to model for fussy women and you'll have a dressing room of your very own. Mr. Stewart has told me that I may take possession of Lookout House as soon as I like. Mark the Magnificent has given the Jovian nod. He won't contest the will. I'm going there tomorrow with a plumber. A bath for every bed will be my battle-cry."

Silence followed her words, a silence fraught with significance. Brooke caught her sister's look at her mother before she sat up straight and tense. She knew that posture, she was preparing for a skirmish. Lucette said defiantly:

"Glad you brought up that subject, Brooke. News flash! I'm not going to the sticks with you, not if you offer me a gold tub with diamond settings. I spent one night at the home of the late Mary Amanda Dane, and, so far as I am concerned, the name means look out and not go there again. That sealed door in her living-room gave me the creeps. Sam isn't—"

She dashed to the hall as the telephone rang.

"Lucette Reyburn speaking," she answered eagerly.

"Yes—yes—he is. I'll call him." Her voice was as flat as de-bubbled champagne. She pounded on the bath-room door.

"Phone for you, Sam—How do I know? It's the girl who always calls just as you've stepped under the shower.—All right."

She returned to the phone. "Hold the line. He'll be here in a minute."

Back in the living-room she dropped into a chair. With elbows propped on her knees, chin in her palms, she stared at the floor.

In bathrobe and slippers, Sam answered the phone.

"Can't make it—No. It's not another girl, it's a family confab. Sam Reyburn signing off. Good-by!"

He slammed down the receiver. "And I know of no reason why I should explain to you what I'm doing," he growled under his breath.

"Hi! Sammy! What's the shower-dame's name?" Lucette called.

Her brother scowled at her. "There's about as much privacy in this apartment as there is in the bandstand on the Common."

"Cheerio, darling. You'll have privacy, and how, if you live with Brooke. She's going house-owner in a big way. If there's to be a bath for every bed, of course there will be a sound-proof telephone booth with every room. What did you say the girl friend's name was?"

"It's none of your business, kiddo, who calls me." Hands deep in the pockets of his hectic bathrobe, Sam paced the living-room floor.

His mother laughed softly. She patted the couch.

"Stop walking the floor like a hungry lion and sit down, Sam. Lucette started something just before the phone rang. She should have known better than to start anything in the Reyburn family before it has been fed, but now that she has, you'd better finish it."

"What d'you mean by started, Mother?"

Brooke perched on the arm of a chair at the desk. She faced them all. Most of the time she could tell quite well what they were thinking. She answered her brother's question before her mother could.

"She means that Lucette announced that she did not intend to live at Lookout House with me, and that you—"

"Were not going either, Sam," Lucette finished triumphantly.

"Aren't you, Sam?"

"Say listen, Brooke. Don't you see how it is? I have to be at the theater early; I'm late when I get through; rehearsing all the morning. Twenty miles is a long way to commute."

"I had planned to buy you the snappiest convertible coupe on the market."

"Don't make me feel like a brute. Don't you see—"

"Of course I see, Sammy. You want to be on your own. I do understand."

"Don't worry about his being on his own, darling," Lucette cut in bitterly. "No one can be on his own in this family. The Great Adviser intends to stay right here to look after his little sister."

Brooke's eyes met her brother's; he nodded. Lucette flamed on:

"And Mother's going to stay to look after both of us."

"Mother!" Brooke echoed the word with shocked incredulity. "But I've planned the most wonderful things for Mother. Is it true?"

Celia Reyburn's eyes shone through a mist as they met her elder daughter's. Her lips curved in a lovely, trembly smile.

"When you say Mother, Brooke, I think it the most beautiful word in the world. But I will not make my home with you—at present. First, because Lookout House is yours and you should assume the responsibility and direction of it. You will do it more easily if I am not there. Second, I want to stay in the city, not so much because of the children, but because now that your financial future is assured, I shall feel that I may use a little of the money your father left me. I want—I want to be in the heart of things. I'll have an experienced maid, I'll have the right clothes, and—and I'll go places, I'm dying to go places."

Her impassioned voice broke. "Perhaps I'm selfish, perhaps you children think I'm a silly old woman."

Sam flung his arm about his mother. "Hooray for the Spirit of '56! Sorry, I shouldn't have mentioned your age, Celia Reyburn. Don't worry that you won't get enough of your family, Brooke. I'll have to drag these two giddy girls off to the country for rest occasionally. Aren't sore at us, are you, Brooke? Don't feel that we have let you down to go on alone?"

"Of course I don't, you old dear. Why shouldn't each one of us do as we like, now that there is some money back of us? Because I feel that I must carry out Mrs. Dane's wishes is no reason for dragging the rest of you into the country. Let's get busy planning If you are all sold on staying in the city, we'll have a bigger apartment. I may want to spend a week-end away from the sticks myself."

Best Hunting Dogs

"The best hunting dogs," pointer owners say of the breed. They have much to back that statement. Pointers are equal to any dog in intelligence, speedier than any other bird dog and easy to teach. Their duty is not to kill or retrieve. They merely scent out birds and point them out to the hunter. They do this by standing rigidly still, nose pointed directly at the game and tail out, pointed straight as a ramrod.

Clothes That Look the Part

NOW, Milady, that you've seen all three, which will you choose, the lovely dance frock, an easy-to-sew runabout model, or a slick all around the clock dress to flatter your every move and moment? It's a personal question but one you'll surely want to toy with since Sew-Your-Own makes the answer so easy.

Any Time After 8:30.

The romantic fashion at the left will make memorable occasions of your summer parties as only a lovely appearance can. Its two pieces are young, cool and streamlined. For the Miss whose interest centers about matinee goings-on, there's a dashing shorter style—it differs only in length, and either will be picturesque in marquisette, dimity, or organdie.

A Tip for Tea Time.

When you're keeping up with the Joneses, wear this stylish all occasion dress. It will do great things for you socially, and, figuratively speaking, it will cut inches from those high spots and make you feel pounds lighter. Think of what that means to chic and comfort when things get hot out your way. Dark sheer crepe is the material that lends top charm to this creation.

Fore and Aft.

Easy to sew and always ready to go is this new spectator frock for young women and those who want to turn back the clock. With this number handy there's no need to pause for reflection about what to wear. And that holds good whether you're bound for sports, business, or society. It is becoming as a sun tan, as simple to sew as a dress can be, and a cinch to launder. Why not make a carbon copy for the morning after? Remember summer chic depends upon the company your wardrobe keeps. Be sure it's amply supplied with cool convenient Sew-Your-Owns!

The Patterns.

Pattern 1291 is designed in sizes 12 to 20 (30 to 38 bust). Size 14 requires 6 yards of 35 or 39 inch material. Size 14, walking length, requires 5½ yards.

Pattern 1847 is designed in sizes 36 to 52. Size 38 requires 4¾ yards of 39 inch material.

Pattern 1279 is designed in sizes 32 to 46. Size 34 requires 4¼ yards of 35 inch material. Ribbon for belt requires 1 yard.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., Room 1020, 211 W. Wacker Dr., Chicago, Ill. Price of patterns, 15 cents (in coins) each.

VILLAGE CHATTER FROM SILURIA

Strolling seems to be all the go these days. Late afternoons and early evenings when the locust begins to drone his summer song we see couples, threesomes, foursomes, and so on leisurely strolling around the town. Sybil Creasman and Velton Umphree were taking it slow and easy down Main Street Thursday evening. Ruby and Doyle Cofer no doubt were treading on air as they strolled around Saturday night after winning the Jack Pot at the show. Lucky dogs! Some o fthese strollers can be seen stopping to gaze in rapture at that slender moon hanging low in the sky or maybe they can be heard to exclaim abruptly "Hello Moon." . . . . Speaking of generosity, Chris Peeples has the world beat. He kindl yoffered us the privilege of sitting outside his door Sunday morning to inhale the delicious odor of that toothsome chicken on his table. For som ereason we felt inclined to decline this so generous offer . . .Mr Howel lis with us again after a lengthy visit with his daughter, Mrs. Lonnie Caton ,of Clanton. We are glad to see Mr. Howell occupying his accustomed chair out in the shade. . . . Did you notice those two lonesome souls drifting around Siluria last week like ships without a rudder Well, that was none other than Geo. Thomason and A. B. Bradly and the secret of their despondency lies in the fact that their charming young wives, Mary nad Doris have been spending a week with Mary's parents in Talladega. . . . . This place will blossom out like an oriental garden some day if Vadie Lee Tilley, Evelyn and Lillian Robinson will hang these sun bonnett quilts they are stitching on out to air. Industrious kiddies! . . . . Ting-a-ling, ting-a-ling — telephone? No, that's only some more wedding bells. Lorene Faulks and Maurice Oden got hitched and so did Wilma Latham and George L. Scott. . . . Blink, blink! Are we seeing things or is that really a new coat of paint upon our depot? It really is ,folks ,and doesn't it improve appearances around here . . . We regret the fact that Mrs. Fern Ward had to be rushed to the hospital Tuesday afternoon for an emergency operation. It's great to hear that she is doing fine now . . . Calvin Collins passed by our house the other day going somewhere in a powerful big hurry and was he yawning. Calvin we think you are mighty good natured to open your mouth that wide and not swallow somebody . . . Come on, let's go down to Buck Creek Cash Store and meet some o four most popular radio personalities (Well, not the real McCoy but some apt substitutes) Here's the line-up: Uncle Dave Macon, Mr. John Denham, Sarah, John R. Sweney Sally, Jess Barton, Lum, Carl Edwards, Abner, Leonard Gray. We hear they really look their part. . . . We were pleased to meet Nell Maudrey's little brother who wa visiitng here last week. It's doubtful if Jack would weigh a pound over two hundred and fifteen pounds. He is just home from Hiawaii where he has served in the Navy and we understand he's home for keeps. Well good! . . . . It was delightful to see our dear little friend, Sonny Amos in our town for a short visit last week. "Have you ever seen a dream walking'.? Well, we have for Helen Johnson was certainly a dream with that little white off the face hat on the other day . . . If you ever feel the need of a side splitt in laugh, just go get Margie and Mavis to dress up in the same togs they visited us in last Monday night. They were a scream! What would we have given for a camera just then? Gee, we could have made good in the scare crow business And it was these same two young ladies ,mind you, who served soured tea to their Sunday dinner company. It wasn't until the next day that they made the "liver flopping" discovery that the tea was soured. Thats the best to be expected out of them though . . . We're worried about Mrs. Horton, afraid he house shoes will cramp her feet. Sh-sh-sh, don't tell her 'cause we don't mean any harm. . . . Some Alabama gals came out the other night and frolicked by the light of the moon ,and that's just what they did too, for Elizabeth Pope gave a moonlight party Thursday night. . . . Sey, we think we'll quit here.

Nell and Nelle.

We are beginning to hear of fishing luck—although we never have an yourselves.

WILTON-DAY BY DAY

By Alice Nolen

The people of Shelby County appreciate the fine work being done by the County Board of Revenue on the rural roads. Our people now wish to know whether the Board can make arrangements to pave the road that would mean so much toward further development of the County. So many of our important towns are situated on this road, namely: Vincent, Harpersville, Wilsonville, Columbiana, Calera, Montevallo and Wilton. If through an error, other towns are on this route accept our apology for omission. The people of the whole County would be benefited by the paving of this road. We do hope we will hear some encouraging news in the very near future concerning this county wide improvement.

No Advertisement Is Big Enough To Tell What 20,000 Women Are Saying

EVEN a whole newspaper wouldn't be big enough to tell you what all of the 20,000 Alabama women who have electric ranges in their kitchens are saying about them. And if we printed what they are saying, perhaps you wouldn't believe it, because, with few exceptions, they say, "FINE!"

Why Do They Like Their Electric Ranges?

Recently an electric range manufacturer determined to find out. So he had his representatives ask thousands of women who already had electric ranges. He found almost as many reasons for liking an electric range as there were owners of them. But the Chief Reasons for Liking An Electric Range The Women Visited Gave Were:

"I LIKE MY ELECTRIC RANGE because it's easier to keep pots and pans clean."

"I LIKE MY ELECTRIC RANGE because the whole kitchen's easier to keep clean."

"I LIKE MY ELECTRIC RANGE because it costs so little to operate."

"I LIKE MY ELECTRIC RANGE because it seems that when I started cooking electrically, food tasted better."

"I LIKE MY ELECTRIC RANGE because it doesn't heat up the kitchen so much."

"I LIKE MY ELECTRIC RANGE because I like to be up-to-date."

"I LIKE MY ELECTRIC RANGE because it gives me more time to do the things I like to do—and I spend less time in the kitchen."

"I LIKE MY ELECTRIC RANGE because it gives my cook time to help me with other things."

You too, Will Like An Electric Range

"Yep — but there is no way around it"—B-U-M-P A masculine ejaculation which will not look well in print—BUMP-STOP Engine killed! Meeting a school bus! Left wheel in a "ditch" in the middle of the road. An accident narrowly averted—BUMP-e-ty — bump-e-ty--BUMP! So grateful to be alive, we arrived in the office one hour late—a broken spring—and a cut tire. Rather an expensive trip with only one half black to travel from home to work! COMPLAINTS from College Street—and from other town surrounding territory. Can't something be done about these streets. We soon won't have even a road bed? What about a public subscription if no other means is available—or declare a civic day with a pick and shovel for all concerned. Concentrated effort and co-operation and co-ordination—and the proper "filler" is now a necessity for Columbiana streets—or else?—utter destruction for all motor vehicles—to say nothing of a sprained ankle or two. LOUISE THOMPSON'S BEAUTY SALON

Louise Thompson's Beauty Salon is offering a special on Permanent Waves for each Monday and Tuesday for a few weeks—This little Beauty operator states she has nothing special to offer as an inducement for DAD'S DAY—Sunday, unless it be that MOTHER LOOK HER BEST FOR DAD! Not a bad idea that—In fact, Wally Simpson includes this well groomed appearance as one essential for happiness. "Never allow your husband to see you looking anyway but your best"—And it is a pretty good rule to follow! Try the Beauty Shoppe for enhancing your feminine charm! Delilah and Louise will certainly improve your looks no matter h ow far gone you think you are when entering this Cosmetic Emporium! Try them for your "freshening" up requirements.

COLUMBIANA LEADER

The Columbiana Leader is headquarters for Dad's Day, and whether you call him POP Governor. The old endearing term -DAD- Father- or by whatever name you call HIM there are lovely remembrances which he will appreciate, useful and beautiful to be found at the Columbiana Leader. Shop with Mr. Max. He is a "proud papa" himself and knows what these snappy dressers desire. And, believe it or not—DAD likes to look good—no matter how little you think about it. And if there is anything more attractive than a well groomed lady or gentleman we have not found it!

CULLEN MORGAN

A distinguished guest who received a cordial welcome in the Democrat office on Monday was Cullen Morgan Editor and Publisher of the Hale County News, and former Publisher of the Shelby County Democrat. Chatting the craft with ths experienced and prominent gentleman was a decidedly refreshing diversion for a Blue Monday. We O. K. this fellow journalsit ,and recall two years happily spent while we travelled the same inky trail in the attempt to establish permanently the "Voice of Democracy" in the homes of Shleby County. It is lots of fun to reminiscence! Even "valleys of discouragement" thru which we passed together on this initial journey were laughed about on Monday! Interesting old fascinating, newspaper game. Here's hoping Editor Morgan continues to prosper in his chosen work. He is a credit to the profession.

MR. AND MRS. K. C. HARRISON

"Mr. and Mrs." is the name, and Columbiana citizens are happily engaged in welcoming as residents Mr. and Mrs. Karl Harrison, who returned Sunday from a brief honeymoon trip to Florida. Their wedding was beautifully solemnized in Savannah, Georgia on June 12th. Mr. and Mrs. Harrison are now at home to their many friends on College Street.

Red Hawkins and Miss Jesse Cross of Birmingham were guests of Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Roberts on Sunday.

THE "MASON SISTERS

One of the happiest family reunions we know about is the house party now in progress in the hospitable home of Mrs. Esther Christian, who is entertaining her sisters, Mrs. Etta McMillan, Mrs. Henry Milner of Birmingham and Mrs. Patty Milner of Albeurqueque, New Mexico.

Many old friends have taken advantage of the happy privilege of extending a cordial welcome to these attractive matrons who once were residents of Columbiana.

Personally reminiscing, memory roams a sunny track back 26 years ago, when Lady Milner inauguarated the custom of honoring "brides-to-be" with Linen Showers. The first "Linen Shower" turned out to be a veritable Linen Storm ,and "yours truly' was the beneficiary. Perhaps this outstanding event in my life is one of the happiest anniversaries I now remember. It preceeded, by a few days, the final "life sentence" I took from "His Honor" as we, along with 28 members of our wedding party, treked down the aisle to Hymen's beflowered altar to the immortal melody of old Mendelshon—played by Mrs. Esther Christian—and spoke those fatal words—"for better or worse—until death do us part.'" Ah, how fast the years have flown, since that day we sailed our little matrimonial barque together—and how vividly were the days recalled when, at the close of a long, long day—MONDAY, we were honored with a brief visit, in our own little haven, from these dear friends, who thru "sunshine and shadow too," have stood staunch and true. A glorious privilege and a happy one we shared with these old friends—BLUE MONDAY became a RED LETTER DAY on our little desk calendar—all on account of the sweet memories and the rich associations we have enjoyed thru the years—even though paths do not cross as often as they used to. We have the sweet consciousness of knowing they are THERE—as fixed as stars! We count this fact a rich heritage.

Regular prices will prevail. The cast of local talent will be admitted FREE.

WRITER'S CONCLAVE

The fifteenth annual session of the Writer's Conclave opened in Montevallo on Tuesday night with several hundred members present. President George W. Lang, of the University of Alabama, presiding.

A brief musical program opened the meeting in Calkins Halls, followed by a cordial welcome graciously extended by Dr. Arthur Harmon of Alabama College, with response by Mittie Owen McDavid of Birmingham, after which Dr. Lang addressed the assemblage. Following the conclusion of the presentation of artists, Dr. and Mrs. Harmon entertained with a brilliant reception honoringthe distinguished guests.

The program this year, is outstanding—and many distinguished speakers, poets, short story writers, exponents of Drama, journalism, and other interesting subjects will be important features of the week. The session will close with a luncheon on Friday at which time the newly elected officers will be introduced by retiring President Lang—and a lovely musical program will be presented by Alabama writers.

All interested in fostering the ARTS in Alabama are urged to attend these delightful offerings during this week in Montevallo.

ANNE WATSON

We happily present and welcome a new official in Shelby County — Miss Anne Watson, of Tuskegee, who will assist Miss Elizabeth Nolen in Home Demonstration Work in Sh elby County during the summer activities.

Miss Watson has had wide experience in her chosen profession, after graduating from Alabama College, she aceepted a responsible position in the Department of Public Welfare in Jefferson County. From this important post, she was elected Dietitian for Gorgas Hospital. She has also served as Elmore County's Demonstration Agent, and was on the Editorial Staff of the Progressive Farmer under the supervision of Sallie Hill. Columbiana citizens are for tunate in having this talented and versatile young official in her midst. Miss Watson is sharing the apartment of Miss Marye Elizabeth Nolen.

MUSIC

When music sounds ,gone is the earth I know,
And all her lovelier things even lovelier grow;
Her flowers in vision flame, her forest trees
Lift burdened branches ,stilled with ecstacies,
When music sounds, out of the water rise
Naiads whose beauty dims my waking eyes,
Rapt in strange dream burns each enchanted face,
With solemn echoing stirs their dwelling place.
When music sounds, all that I was I am
Ere to this haunt of broodng dust I came;
And from Time's woods break into song,
The swift-winged hours as I hasten along.

BLESSING ON A GARDEN

Come all good birds!
Robin and wren and thrush,
For every one a bush—
Come with glad words.

And all bring flowers:
Phlox and delphinium ,
Rose and tall lily, come,
Make fair the hours.

Be kind here, weather!
Rain, wet the tender roots!
Sun, warm the golden fruits;
Dews, softly gather.

Love, be the warden;
Peace, all the borders fold.
God Himself once of old
Walked in a garden.

TO A LADY WHO PASSED

The world seemed beautiful before you passed.
A night bird warbled in the almond tree.
A silver moon soft, velvet shadows cast,
As, through the window, it peeped in at me.

But since you passed ,the night in silence grieves.
You stole the beauty of my world away.
Moonbeams no longer dance with almond leaves.
You passed! And there was nothing more to say!

Why did you pass, when, with a fist like that,
W ehad a sure grand slam right in the hat?

PERHAPS A PRESUMPTUOUS WORRY

If heaven wears a clearer, sweeter green
Than lies behind these early morning clouds,
Or of the blue of shadows flung between
The wings of angels, is the blue that crowds
These quiet hills at dusk . . how shall I fare
Through endless glory of a paradise?
Even a soul can ache, if beauty bear
Too hard a hand on earth enchanted eyes!

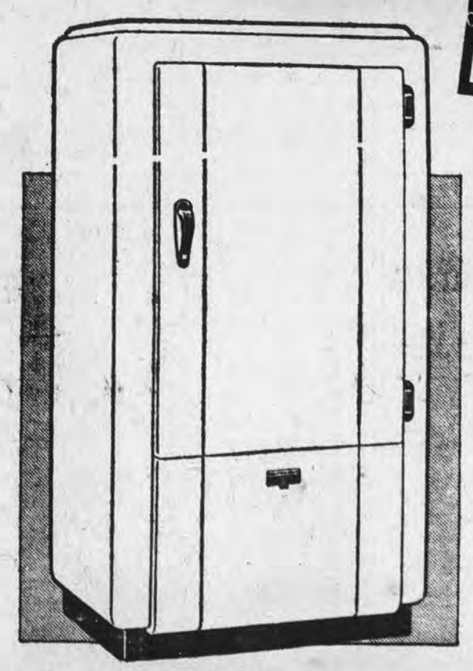
TOMORROWS



Old black Ann, from her infinite calm,
Used to say when we'd fume and fret,
Slow, in a voice like a shepherd's psalm,
Hands held peacefully, palm to palm,
"There's all tomorrow that ain't touched yet."

It soothed our troubles, we didn't know how,
And helped us reckon mistakes and sorrows
As not eternal. It helps us now.
When old Black Ann of the quiet brow
Has touched, unterrified, all tomorrows.
We've learned at last what she knew so long —
That a day is too brief for dark regret:
And w esay to our souls when the hour goes wrong,
We quote to our hearts, and it makes them strong,
"There's all tomorrow that ain't touched yet."

WHAT REFRIGERATOR HAS THE LOWEST 10-YEAR COST?

THE U. S. PUBLIC WORKS ADMINISTRATION WANTED TO KNOW

and here's what they did about it

● When PWA's Housing Division studied food-keeping economy for the future residents of their low-rent housing projects, they made a discovery. They found that electric refrigeration was the lowest cost food-keeping they could buy, in a majority of their projects.

To pick the most economical electric refrigerator, for 16,697 dwellings in 34 of these projects, they asked for bids from leading manufacturers — not on price alone, but initial price PLUS ten-year cost of electricity. Westinghouse won this contract, showed the lowest 10-year cost of them all. It's 10-year Economy that counts!

Too Smooth for Comfort

That a certain young man is wise beyond his years was proved when he paused before answering a widow who had asked him to guess her age.

"You must have some idea," she said.

"I have several ideas," said the young man with a smile. "The only trouble is that I hesitate whether to make you ten years younger on account of your looks or ten years older on account of your intelligence."—Toronto Globe.

what Irvin S. Cobb thinks about:

The Good Old Days.

SANTA MONICA, CALIF.—Taking pen in hand to write Uncle Sam's check for that next installment, I look longingly backward to what I'm sure was the golden age of our generation.

It was the decade that began soon after the turn of the century and ended with 1914.

Irvin S. Cobb

Kings lolled securely on comfy thrones and dictatorships in strong nations were undreamed of.

Without shaking the foundations of the financial temple, Teddy Roosevelt was filing the alligator teeth of predatory wealth.

People laughed at the mad suggestion that there could ever be another great war—let alone a world war.

With suffrage in prospect, women were going to purify politics.

Taxes were a means unto an end and not the end of our means.

Standards of living climbed faster than did the costs of living.

Millions actually believed that, if prohibition by law ever became effective, drunkenness would end and crime decrease.

Yes, I'm sure those were indeed the happy days—the era when the Twentieth Century limited started running and W. J. Bryan stopped.

Synthetic Imitations.

WE STOPPED at a wayside station advertising pure orange juice; there's one every few rods. Next to autograph hunters, oranges are the commonest product of California.

The drink was the right color. But there didn't seem to be any orange in it. The best you could say for it was that probably its mother had been badly frightened by an orange.

I made inquiry, and an expert told me some roadside venders—not many, but some—were peddling an essence compounded of chemical flavoring and artificial extracts because it kept better than the genuine article.

I thought America had reached tops in the gentle arts of substitution and adulteration when we began makjng pumpkin pies out of squash and maple syrup out of corn stalks and buckwheat flour out of a low grade of sawdust—anyhow, it tastes like that—and imported English sole out of the lowly flounder and scallops out of skate fins. But when, in a land where a strong man couldn't tote a dollar's worth of oranges on his back, there are parties selling synthetic imitations—well, just let the East equal that magnificent stroke of merchandising enterprise!

Poor Little Rich Men.

LET us take time off to pity the poor little rich man who owns a large but lonesome sea-going yacht.

During the depression, the species grew rare—there were money lords then who hardly had one yacht to rub against another—but, with better days, a fresh crop lines the coasts.

No matter how rich, the owner feels he must use his floating palace. He may be content with a saucer of processed bran and two dyspepsia tablets, but no yacht crew yet ever could keep soul and body together on anything less than double sirloins. So he goes cruising—and gosh, how he does dread it!

Problems on Wheels.

AMERICA'S newest problem goes on wheels. One prophet says by 1938 there'll be a million trailers and three million people aboard them. Roger Babson raises the ante—within twenty years, half the population living in trailers and all the roads clogged.

So soon the trailer-face is recognizable. It is worn by Mommer, riding along behind, while Popper smiles pleasantly as he drives the car in solitary peace—getting away from it all. Have you noticed how many trailer widows there are already?

But as yet nobody reckons with the chief issue: think of the increasing mortality figures when the incurable speed bug discovers that not only may he continue to mow down victims with head-on assaults, but will garner in many who escaped his frontal attack by sideswipes of the hitched-on monster that is swinging and lunging at his rear like a drunken elephant.

Cooking Rhubarb—Rhubarb is disliked by some people because of its acidity. But this can be considerably reduced if the fruit is covered with cold water, brought to the boil and then strained before being stewed in the ordinary way. This method is only recommended to anybody who dislikes ordinary stewed rhubarb, as the healthful salts are lost when the fruit is cooked twice.

Keeping Flowers Fresh—A couple tablespoons of sulfurous (not sulphuric) acid added to each pint of water encourages buds of cut flowers to continue growing and leaves and stems remain greener.

Cabbage Cooked with Milk—Two cups milk, six cups shredded cabbage, one-third cup milk or cream, two tablespoons melted butter, two tablespoons flour, half teaspoon salt. Heat milk and cook cabbage in it two minutes. Add milk or cream, flour blended with butter and salt. Cook for three or four minutes, stirring constantly.

Custard Sauce—One and one-half cups scalded milk, one-eighth teaspoon salt, one-quarter cup sugar, one-half teaspoon vanilla, yolks of two eggs. Beat eggs slightly, add sugar and salt; stir constantly while adding gradually the hot milk. Cook in double boiler till mixture thickens, chill and flavor.

Boiling Sirup—If the saucepan is well buttered around the top sirup that is being boiled in it will not boil over the top of the pan.

Thoughtful Tommy

Mother—How did papa's new book get in this condition?

Tommy—Why, mamma, I heard papa say several times last night that the book was too dry for him, so I put it in the sink and turned the water on it.—Windsor Star.

"LITTLE STORIES FOR BEDTIME"

by Thornton W. Burgess

PETER RABBIT KEEPS WATCH

EVERY minute that Peter Rabbit was awake he seemed to be watching for something. Even when he was eating he seemed to be all the time looking and listening. If he was in the Green Forest he would sit up every few minutes and look and look. And he always looked in one direction, and that was the direction from which gentle Sister South Wind came.

"What are you watching for?" asked Jimmy Skunk after he had seen Peter sit up and look half a dozen times. "Reddy Fox isn't anywhere around. Old Man Coyote has gone up to the Old Pasture, and Roughleg the Hawk hasn't been around here for several days. I guess he's gone away until next winter. There isn't anything for you to be afraid of just now, Peter."

Every Minute That Peter Rabbit Was Awake He Seemed to Be Watching for Something.

"Oh, I'm not afraid," replied Peter.

"Then what under the sun are you watching for so sharply?" persisted Jimmy.

"I—I—Oh, Jimmy, do you know if anybody has seen or heard Winsome Bluebird?" Peter fairly hopped up and down as he asked this.

"No," said Jimmy shortly. "What difference does it make whether they have or not?"

"Why, if they have, Mistress Spring is almost here, and that's the most splendid news of the whole year!" cried Peter. "She is never far behind Winsome. I—I would like to be the first to see or hear Winsome and that's what I'm watching for. It's great fun to go about telling good news. I think I'd rather be Winsome Bluebird than any one I know of, because everybody is so glad to see him. Excuse me, Jimmy! I think I see something blue up there in the Old Orchard!" Off scampered Peter Rabbit for the Old Orchard as fast as he could go, lipperty-lipperty-lip.

Jimmy Skunk grinned as he watched him. "Peter Rabbit is just as foolish and crazy as ever," he grumbled. "That's nobody but Sam Jay and Peter is running his legs off for nothing. I'll be just as glad as anybody to have Mistress Spring get here because then maybe I can get some fat beetles, but what's the use of getting excited? Winsome Bluebird will come and Mistress Spring will come when they get ready and not before. Meanwhile I'm more interested in getting something to eat. I wonder if it's safe to go up to Farmer Brown's hen house. From the racket those hens made this morning there must be some fresh eggs there."

It was just as Jimmy had said. Peter reached the Old Orchard only to find it was Sammy Jay and not Winsome Bluebird who was there. He pretended that he had come up to see if Jimmy Chuck had waked yet, and as soon as he could he stole away by himself to watch and listen some more. But it was all in vain. Not a glimpse did he get of Winsome, nor a sound of his sweet whistle. That night Peter sat in the dear Old Brier Patch thinking it all over.

"Perhaps," said Peter slowly to himself, "perhaps there is some one else just as eager to be the first to hear Winsome Bluebird and I am a little bit selfish in trying so hard to be the first. I hadn't thought of that before. I guess that tomorrow I'll just go about my business. Then if I do hear Winsome first I'll be glad, and if some one else hears or sees him first I'll be glad too."

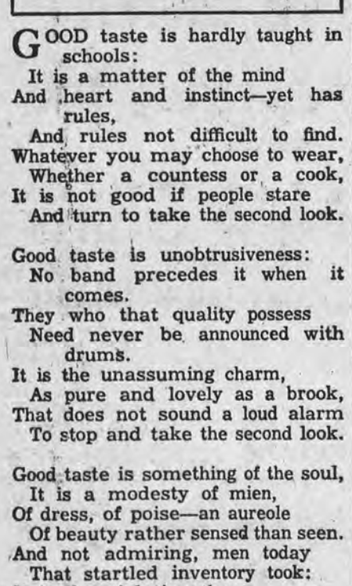
THE SECOND LOOK

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH



GOOD taste is hardly taught in schools:
It is a matter of the mind
And heart and instinct—yet has rules,
And rules not difficult to find.
Whatever you may choose to wear,
Whether a countess or a cook,
It is not good if people stare
And turn to take the second look.

Good taste is unobtrusiveness:
No band precedes it when it comes.
They who that quality possess
Need never be announced with drums.
It is the unassuming charm,
As pure and lovely as a brook,
That does not sound a loud alarm
To stop and take the second look.

Good taste is something of the soul,
It is a modesty of mien,
Of dress, of poise—an aureole
Of beauty rather sensed than seen.
And not admiring, men today
That startled inventory took:
It is the violation they Observe, who take the second look.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL Lesson

© Western Newspaper Union.

Lesson for June 20

JOSEPH'S KINDNESS TO HIS KINDRED

LESSON TEXT—Genesis 46:1-7, 28-30; 50: 24-26.

GOLDEN TEXT—And be ye kind one to another, tenderhearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you. Ephesians 4:32.

PRIMARY TOPIC—When Joseph Saw His Father Again.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Joseph Honoring His Father.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Kindness in the Family.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Mutual Helpfulness in the Family.

A happy ending—yes! Modern writers may look with disfavor on it (and perhaps rightly so, for most of them write about life apart from fellowship with God) but to those who trust God and who seek his will, the story of life has a bright and joyful conclusion.

But someone may object that the lesson for today closes with the last words of the book of Genesis, which are "a coffin in Egypt." Is that a happy ending? It is, because even that forbidding emblem of death pointed in faith toward the day when God was to keep his promise and bring his people into the promised land.

Our lesson centers around the last of our patriarchs, Joseph, and his kindness to his father and his family. The highest official in the land of Egypt (save for Pharaoh himself) proves his inherent greatness by forgetting position and power, except as they enable him to be a loving son and brother. We consider his kindness as it is centered in his devotion to God, shown forth in thoughtful provision for others, expressed in affectionate deeds, and as it imparted itself by faith to others.

I. Founded on Fellowship (Gen. 46:1-4).

Jacob, having heard from his sons that Joseph was in Egypt, and having thus learned of their treachery and deceit, came at last to realize that his beloved Joseph is alive. He has been urged to go to Egypt but he hesitates about leaving Canaan. How shall he know whether to believe in and respond to Joseph's invitation. He asks God, the One who is the joy and center of Joseph's life, and of Jacob's as well, and he has his answer.

Real family life and devotion center around a mutual fellowship with God. There may be little else to share, but "little is much when God is in it." Has God been honored in your home? Has He been made the center of family life? These are vital questions.

II. Evidenced by Thoughtfulness (vv. 5-7).

Joseph had arranged for Pharaoh to send wagons to bring his aged father, the women, and the little ones.

Many men in our day glory in being "hard-boiled." In their relentless pursuit of fame and riches they ignore and even trample on the members of their own families. They are ashamed of the broken bodies, the humble apparel, the uneducated speech of their parents, fearing lest their new-found friends in the circle of wealth and position may ridicule them. There is a crude but apt expression that describes such persons as "stuffed shirts."

III. Manifested in Love (vv. 28-30).

Joseph kissed his father whom he had gone out to meet, and held him close and wept for joy. Again he showed his true greatness by being his natural self.

We are not all demonstrative in showing our affection. Furthermore, we would not plead for more of that sham public expression of affection which is so distasteful to right-thinking people. But may we not suggest that there is room for improvement in our loving consideration for our kindred. Let us ask ourselves how long it is since we did something to show that we really love our mother, our father, or a faithful wife, son, or daughter? How long is it since you wrote home to mother, or went home to visit?

IV. Imparted by Faith (50:24-26).

Jacob had been gathered to his fathers; time had gone on its relentless way, and Joseph is about to die. What shall be the heritage to his family? Money, property, position? No; he leaves them something infinitely more valuable—a forward-looking faith that will keep alive in their hearts the expectation that God will in due season bring them into their own land. Joseph had spent most of his years in Egypt, he had attained high position and great honor, but he never lost his vision of the promised land. He imparts to them by faith that hope.

Hope

Ah, what thoughtful, loving provision God hath made for us in the gift of the angel of Hope! There is no path so dark but we may see the glimmer of her shining wings, no misfortune so heavy but her helpful hand is outstretched to us, and her smile still ready to cheer and encourage us.

The Natural Tone

Peace is the natural tone of a well-regulated mind at one with itself.—Humboldt.

GRAPHIC GOLF

By BEST BALL

HORTON SMITH'S IRON SWING

THERE is no tendency to lift or jerk the club upward in Horton Smith's iron swing illustrated here. It is a swing in its entirety and each stage of the stroke is designed to fit into the swinging scheme. In the first part of the stroke shown above, Smith's left arm is pushing the club back, the clubhead traveling straight back from the ball and close to the ground. This, in combination with the turn of the body, favors a wider, smoother arc.

This turn of the body has enabled Smith to keep pushing the club back with his left to the halfway mark, where the right arm will help swing it further upward. If there were no semblance of an extended left, plus body turn, at this point the arc of the stroke would be greatly curtailed. Furthermore there would be no assurance that the downswing would be accurate for the left, or guiding arm, would no longer be a true gauge of the clubhead's path. At the top of the stroke Smith is in an excellent position to start the downswing momentum with a pull downward of this same left arm. This will start the club downward slowly and smoothly and with gradually increasing momentum. The position, in the last drawing, is one of latent power suggesting at this stage the velocity that can be imparted to the stroke at impact. An important factor is the closeness of the right elbow to the body, insuring a stroke down on an inside line.

Strange Bedfellows

Unable to sleep because his feet were cold, a shepherd in Thy, Denmark, investigated. When he lifted the bed clothes he found two large adders. Further inspection of the bed, an old-fashioned one with heather under the mattress, revealed 11 others.

Charming Panel to Crochet

There's the charm of Grandmother's time in this lacy panel-inset, a luxurious bit of dress-up for your "best" bedspread! In string it measures 24 by 35 inches, but goes quickly, for the background is in lace stitch. It would also be effective as a door panel. The stunning panel running lengthwise of the bolster may also serve as a scarf. Crochet this beautiful design of humble, durable string or in finer cotton for smaller panels. In pattern 5790 you will find detailed instructions and charts for making the panels shown; illustrations of the panel and of the stitches used; material requirements.

To obtain this pattern send 15 cents in stamps or coins (coins preferred) to The Sewing Circle Household Arts Dept., 259 W. Fourteenth St., New York, N. Y.

Please write your name, address and pattern number plainly.

Science and the Home

EAST, West, home's the best. And our enjoyment of home life certainly owes a lot to modern science. Consider our modern comforts. The radio which entertains us, the newspaper which keeps us informed. . . the modern household appliances, and the first aids and home remedies standing by in our medicine cabinets to help us in minor emergencies. All are achievements of modern scientific research brought to us by our local merchants.

A Moral Success

The highest needs must have most care, and the lower needs the least care, and we must so train ourselves that hunger for the ideal things shall chasten and subdue every worldly hunger, fulfil the true ideal of men and women, and make life a moral success and not a moral failure.—John Hunter.

FIRESTONE GROUND GRIP TIRES SAVE YOU MONEY

YOU SAVE in fuel costs. Tests made by leading agricultural colleges prove that Firestone Ground Grip Tires save up to 25% in fuel.

YOU SAVE in time. Ground Grip Tires enable you to drive your tractor faster with greater comfort and efficiency. You save up to 25% in time.

YOU SAVE by reducing breakage and repairs. Ground Grip Tires cushion tractors and farm implements, reduce jolts and jars.

YOU SAVE by doing better work. Ground Grip Tires will not pack the soil and do not injure plants.

YOU SAVE with Firestone Patented Construction Features. Gum-Dipping saturates and coats every cotton fiber in every cord in every ply, counteracting internal friction and heat and providing the extra strength necessary to stand the tremendous stresses and strains of traction pulling. The patented construction of Two Extra Layers of Gum-Dipped Cords under the Tread binds the tread and cord body into one inseparable unit. The patented tread design with deep cut, rugged bars is self-cleaning, providing greatest traction and drawbar pull.

YOU SAVE with the Firestone Cut-Down and Change-Over Wheel Program. By this plan your present implement wheels can be cut down and flat steel rims of uniform diameter welded to the ends of the spokes. Then by use of Firestone Demountable Rims the tires can be taken off one machine and put on another. You need only a few sets of tires to put all your farm implements on Ground Grip Tires.

YOU SAVE in buying NOW as tire prices are advancing. The price of crude rubber has gone up 110% and cotton more than 25% during the past two years. Call on your nearest Firestone Implement Dealer — Tire Dealer or Auto Supply and Service Store today.

THE GREATEST TIRE EVER MADE TO SELL AT THESE LOW PRICES

Come in, examine a cross-section cut from a Firestone Standard Tire. See for yourself how much extra value you get in the deep-cut, non-skid tread. You will agree that never before have you seen so much quality, so much built-in mileage and so much safety at so little cost. The Firestone Standard Tire is made safer from blowouts with the Firestone patented process of Gum-Dipping. The wider, flatter tread with more rubber on the road gives longer mileage and greater protection against skidding. Firestone can give you all these extra values because Firestone Standard Tires are built in such large quantities that great savings are made in production.

WHY IT IS MORE PROFITABLE TO USE JAZZ POULTRY FEEDS

There are several reasons why you should use Jazz Poultry Feeds, but the most outstanding are that you are assured of maximum egg production from every hen of your flock when you feed Jazz Egg Mash and every extra egg means extra profit. Jazz is rich in protein and low in fibre and it contains the right kind of proteins—proteins from an animal source—clean meat scraps, fisle meal and dried buttermilk. No vege table ingredients of high protein count (such as corn gluten feed, linseed oil meal, soy bean meal) are used in the Jazz Egg Mash. Why are these ingredients left out?

For the same reason that no national egg laying contests incorporates any of them in its contest laying mash. These experts know that proteins from vegetable or plant sources do not produce either the number or quality of eggs. Nor do they produce the fertility or hathability—tha tdo mashes that derive their proteins from animal sources. Moreover, they know that eggs produced from vegetable proteins do not stand cold storage as do eggs from animal sources. That is the reason that the principle sources of animal proteins in Jazz Egg Mash are clean meat scraps and dried buttermilk.

Cosby-Hodges Milling Company, who manufacture Jazz Poultry Feeds have been in business fifty years and they stand ready at al ltimes to cooperate with Shelby County in any project that will benefit us.

For further information in regard t opoultry do not hesitate to write Cosby-Hodges Poultry Specialist in care of Cosby-Hodges Milling Company in Birmingham.

ASHLEY-BONHAM IRON WORKS CO-OPERATES IN SHELBY COUNTY

Always willing to cooperate in any project or movement that is calculated to be of benefit to Shelby County Ashley-Bonham Iron Works are unselfishly taking part in this Progressive Shelby County edition of the Democrat.

Both Mr. Ashley and Mr. Bonham have had years o fexperience in their line of work and while their specialty is boiler work and repairing, they also de repair work on all types of excavating equipment, such as cranes shovels, drag lines and buckets

They are equipped with the necessary equipment to do their work and no job is turned out until either Mr. Ashley or Bonham have personally oked it.

Their prices are fair and reasonable consistent with quality work and this writer recommends the Ashley-Bonham Iron Works to the people of Shelby County. They are located at 2307 29th Avenue, North and their telephone number is 3-2428.

S. R. SAVAGE, TRAVEL AGENT ALWAYS CO-OPERATES IN SHELBY COUNTY

SPECIAL TERM OF CIRCUIT COURT CALLED

Judge W. W. Wallace has called a Special Term of the Shelby County Circuit Court to convene the third Monday in July (July19) and continue for two weeks.

The first week will be devoted to the trial of Civil Jury cases.

Criminal Jury cases will be tried during the second week. Several murder cases will be docketed after the Grand Jury convenes, and will likely be tried at this time.

GRAND JURY IN SESSION

The Grand Jury will convene in Columbiana on July 19th, Hon. A. L. Hardegree in charge, assisted by Solictor Paul O. Luck.

The State Supreme Court's ruling that the $2000. homestead exemption law is effective on 1936-37 taxes will mean a saving to Shelby County home owners this year.

The exemption is figured on the state's 65 cent share of the tax. Thus a homestead assessed at $2000. would get an exemption of $13 or 65cents for each $100.

BOARD OF REVENUE HOLDS SPECIAL ROAD MEETING

The Shelby County Board of Revenue met in special session on Monday for the purpose of further discussing the Road Project for Shelby County. Hon. L. H. Ellis, Representative, met with the Board and will take the plan worked out to Montgomery for approval of the Highway Department, and then, if approved, Shelby County will be identified in the March of Progression which other Counties in the State have already begun.

GOOD ROADS are essential for Shelby County's development! Should this Highway be constructed, Florida traffic and as well as inter-State traffic would be turned thru this section and NO MATTER WHAT THE ROAD COSTS—it will be the best investment Shelby County ever made. Should we not see the importance of meeting the requirements which practically every other County in the State has already met—the loss will be inestimable and retard the development of one of Alabama's most important spokes in the wheel of her Forward March Movement! It is not a time for quibbling over any one section of the District. It is a time for concentrated effort on the part of officials who have this important task in their hands to pull together for the good of the whole County. Now and in the Future—Shelby County citizens are behind this movement and are willing to lend their assistance for it. We understand that additional county funds have been appropriated to meet the State's requirements. We hope to announce the culmination of the project and the coveted O. K. from the Highway Department next week—and the happiest words we can coin or write will be WORK BEGINS ON SHELBY COUNTY ROAD PROJECT!

BIRTHS OUTNUMBER DEATHS IN SHELBY COUNTY IN APRIL

MONTGOMERY—There were 32 deaths and 38 births in Shelby County during April, the monthly report of the Bureau of Vital Statistcs of the State Departmen tof Health reveals. The County's death rate for that month was 11 per 1,000 and its birth rate 13.4 per 1,000 population.

The April death rate for the State as a whole was 11.9 per 1,000 population, as compared with 14.2 per 1,000 population for March. Its April birth rate was 21.1 per 1,000 population, while its March birth rate was 22.1 per 1,000 population. The State's April deaths total 2,807 and its births for that month numbered 4,998.

Heart disease was responsible for the largest number of deahts in Alabama during April, 414 persons dying of it. Other leading causes of death, and the number of persons dying from them during the month, were as follows:

Tuberculosis (all forms), 169; Cancer (all forms), 114; Cerebral Hemorrhage, 165; Pneumonia (all forms), 327; Peuhritis, 180; Influenza, 229.

STATE WILL GET FEDERAL FUNDS

MONTGOMERY—Plans to spend $300,000 in federal funds on Alabama's state employment service during the year and arrangements for launching unemployment payments will be completed at a conference in Washington, M. H .Harper, chairman of the Alabama Unemployment Compensation Commission, announced recently.

"With the exception of Wisconsin, Alabama will be perhaps the first state in the Union to begin payment of unemployment benefits to idle worekrs," Harper said. "Wisconsin began payments last year, and now has accumulated a reserve fund of $21,000,000 from contrbiutions by em ployers and employees. Only $1,000,000 has been paid out.

"At the present rate, Alabama will have more than $7,000,000 on hand when we start job insurance payments to the unemployed next Jan 1.'

A total of 4,100 employers and 250,000 workers are contributing to the fund in the state.

Harper pointed out that under the law, a worker will have to wait three weeks after losing a job before being entitled to benefits. After they start he will receive one-half his pay, or a maximum of $15 per week, until he gets a job or until 20 weeks have passed. Should he lose a job twice in one year, the waiting period would not have to be enforced the second time.

PRIZES GIVEN AT FISHING RODEO

An imposing array of expensive prizes, donated by nationally known fishing thckle manufacturers, will be awarded to deep sea anglers at the close of Alabama's ninth annual fishing rodeo August 9, and 10 at Fort Gaines, on historic Dauphin Island in Mobile Bay, Rods, reels, lines, lures, subscriptions to sporting magazines, an outboard motor and dozens of other valuable articles are now accumulating with the rodeo committee.

Last year more than a score of individual prizes were awarded, several of them consisting of rod, reel and line, or a complete deep sea fishing outfit. The actual cost of many of these prizes exceeds the entire amount a contestant expends on the three-day outing.

The new rodeo folder has just been issued by the association. It contains pictures and full information about the Rodeo Association at Mobile or the Conservation Department. Already registrations have begun to come in from all over the country. A new feature this year will be the operation of a ferry from Cedar Point to Fort Gaines, providing regular transportation to and from the mainland to rodeo headquarters. Passenger schedules are contemplated every two hours or less.

HOME DEMONSTRATION CLUBS GO ON EDUCATIONAL TOUR

Fourteen members from the Klein and Columbiana Home Demonstration Clubs accompanied by Miss Nolen, Home Demonstration Agent, and Miss Watson, assistant agent, visited the Avondale Mills and Gantt's Quarry in Sylacauga on last Thursday. As the guests of Avondale Mills, they were conducted thru the various departments of the mills, including the spnining, dying, laboratory, and weaving divisions. Leaving the mill, the group drove to the Avondale dairy farm where they were carried through the dairy and milk house. After a picnic lunch on the mill grounds, the group drove to Gantt's Quarry visiting both the quarry and the finishing plant, where they received interesting souvenirs of marble. A visit to the Cotton Bowl Inn display shop of the Avondale Mills, completed the day's tour. Alabama is proud of its ndustrial progress and Shelby County club women deem it well worth while to be informed as to the state's industrial as well as agricultural situation.

IMPORTNAT NOTICE TO DEMONSTRATION CLUBS

The County Wide Rally for Home Demonstration Clubs for Shelby County will be held at the Court House on June 30th.

Every Hom eDemonstration Club woman of the county is invited. The program will include the Public Speaking Contest, stunts, and exhibits.

Remember to bring picnic lunch as you did last year.

The meeting will be called to order at 9:30 o'clock. You are urged to be on time.

We are looking forward to having you in Columbiana.

Home Agent.

WOMAN APPOINTED STAFF MEMBER OF ATTORNEY GENERAL

Montgomery—Miss Effie Crittenden, pretty Montgomery womanlawyer, has been appointed ai assistant on the staff of Atty. Gen. Albert A. Carmichael.

She is the only woman among the assistant attorneys general, and formerly worked in the office as astenographer. Miss Crittenden recently returned from Washington, where she was a secretary in the office of U. S. Senate Hugo L. Black.

LARGE SUM SPENT BY NEW DEAL ON STATE PROJECTS

The New Deal poured $385,070,141 of Federal funds into Alabama from Morch 4, 1933, to May 10 of this year, according to a report from Orville Rush, Governor Graves' personal secretary.

From April 8, 1935, to May 10, 1937, the President has allocated and warrants have been approved and checks issued for $92,514,140 to Alabama.

Mr. Rush's report included a notation that as a further indication showing returning prosperity, collections from individuals increased from $1,035,843 in 1033 to $1,955,453 in 1936.

Collections from corporations increased from $598,279 to $2,147,791 in the same period.

Alabama bank deposits increased 81 per cent from June 30, 1933, to Dec. 31 1936. At the end of 1936, new passenger car registrations in Alabama increased 143 per cent over 1933.

An increase of 94 per cent was shown in 1936 in residential construction contract awards over 1933. Receipts from the sale of principal farm products in 1936 increased 42 per cent over 1933.

Alabama postal receipts in 1936 increased 27 per cent over 1933.

40 KNOWN CASES OF TYPHOID IN SHELBY COUNTY LAST YEAR

In 1936 there were 40 known cases of typhoid fever in Shelby County with 3 deaths. Any one who has ever seen a case of typhoid fever, particularly in his own home, can fully appreciate the significance of the disease, the prolonged struggle for life, the cost, as well as the tremendous loss of time. The average money cost of a case has been estimated at $250.00.

Sanitation, especially the proper disposal of bod y wastes, is the most reliable method of prevention. The use of typhoid vaccine is a valuable aid in controlling the disease, particularly in preventing its reaching epidemic proportions, but without adequate sanitation the disease will always prove a menace and a lurking danger.

You may ask why sanitation has such an important hearing on the pre valence of the disease. Let us consider the ways in which it is transmitted. There are four factors here —Fingers, Food, Flies and Filfth. The germs gain entrance into the body by only one route, namely, the mouth, the food we eat havng been contaminated by flies or unclean hands or the water we drink has become poluted.

The Shelby County Health Department averages about 4000 typhoid vaccinations per year. In spite o fsuch proceedures we continue to have typhoid fever in the conuty where proper sanitation does not exist, although the average number of cases has been markedly reduced.

Typhoid is preventable through sanitation. Until we reach better standards in it, the use of vaccine is essential to protect the mass of the people. Try to get your immunization at once if you have not done so in the past two years.

J. L. Page and Miss Beulah K. Jones were married at High Noon at Wesley Chapel in Birmingham. The young couple will reside in Columbiana.

Misses Myra and Margaret Browne have rtturned from an extended visit in Tennessee.

Marvin Saxon of Birmingham is visiting in Columbiana.

The Columbiana Bottling Works which burned las tweek has re-opened in the Farmer's Union Warehouse. J. P. Morrow in charge.

Miss Gladys Taylor and Calvin Weldon of Wilsonvillt, were married on last Thursday night in Sylacauga. Mrs. Weldon as Miss Taylor, had started to Erin on a visit, but instead got off in Talladega and was married. They will reside in Wilsonville.

HOME DEMONSTRATION CLUBS HOLD LEADERSHIP SCHOOL ON TUESDAY, JUNE 15th

Twelve clubs were represented at the Leadership School held by the county home demonstration clubs on June 15th in the Home Economics rooms of the Columbiana Hi School. Miss Lavada Curtis, Extension Food Preservation Specialist conducted the demonstrations on canning vegetables and fruit juices.

The school was opened by Mrs. J. C. Brumbaugh, president of the county council, who presided over the meeting. Following the singing of the club song, "Is Everybody Happy." Mrs. Tom Taylor gave the devotional. The business meeting included discussion of plans for the annual rally to be held on June 30 and appointment of a nominating committee for the election of county council officers for next year.

In the morning Miss Curtis gave a demonstration on canning non-acid vegetables. After a picnic lunch furnished by the club members, a demonstration on canning tomato and fruit juices was given. 59 leaders and 4 visitors attended the demonstrations.

Many individuals who celebrated Mother's Day haven't done anything about it since.

SOUR GRAPES

"Were you ever engaged, Mary?"

"You know how I hate the men."

"That's what made me think you must have been engaged."

Construction Costs

"Your teeth are in bad shape," said the dentist to a patient. "You should have a bridge put in at once."

"How much will a bridge cost?"

"About $75."

"Say, doc, can't I get along with a small culvert?"

Two Uses

Teacher — Johnny, what is the function of the nose?

Johnny—To blow and to hold spectacles.

IN THE MODE

"Jane said my new dress looks sensible and comfortable."

"Cheer up, girl. That was a mean thing to say, but I wouldn't mind."

CAP AND BELLS

PROUD FATHER

Two parsons were having lunch at a farm during the progress of certain anniversary celebrations. The farmer's wife cooked a couple of chickens, saying that the family could dine on the remains after the visitors had gone. But the hungry parsons wolfed the chickens bare.

Later the farmer was conducting his guests round the farm, when an old rooster commenced to crow ad lib. "Seems mighty proud of himself," said one of the guests.

"No wonder," growled the farmer, "he's got two sons in the ministry."—Dramatic News.

IN THE GARDEN

"Queer, isn't it?"

"What's that?"

"One plants eyes of potatoes and ears of corn."

Well Known

The vicar had just returned from a visit abroad and a big crowd of his parishioners had collected in the schoolroom to meet him. Beaming with pleasure, the vicar got up to speak to the people.

"My dear friends," he started, "I will not call you ladies and gentlemen, because I know you too well."—Hartford Times.

Snap!

The landlady brought in a plateful of extremely thin slices of bread and butter, which rather dismayed her hungry boarders.

"Did you cut these, Mrs. Brown?" said one.

"Yes—I cut them!" came the stern reply.

"Oh!" went on the boarder. "All right—I'll shuffle the deal!"

Only Incidental

"Do you pride yourself on your oratory?"

"Not especially," said Senator Sorghum. "Politics is something like a radio. In order to get an idea across you need a whole lot of machinery besides a loud speaker."

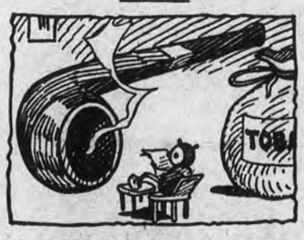
Inconvenient

Mrs. AAA—How do you like your new electric washer?

Mrs.—TVA—Not so good. Every Saturday night when I get into the thing and start to take a bath those paddle arrangements knock me off my feet.

Ahead of Him

Jim—So your new wife has been married four times and you've only been married twice?



Sam—That's right. She's still two chumps ahead of me.

Eggs for All Tastes

Customer—Have you any eggs that have no chickens in them?

Grocer—Yes, ma'am; duck eggs.

PRETTY SOFT

Mr. Bug—Now this is what I call solid comfort—a nice open fire and a big bag of fuel.

Self-Confidence Restored

"You have resumed your study of music?"

"Yes," answered Miss Cayenne. "I used to be diffident, but after listening to some of the radio programs, my own singing seems pretty good to me."

Needed a Rest

Landlady—I see your cup of coffee on a chair, Mr. Boarder. A peculiar place to put it!

Mr. Boarder—Not at all; it's so weak I put it there to rest.

Well Garbed

"Was the defendant expensively garbed?" asked the lawyer of the negro witness.

"Deed she was, sah," answered the witness. "Ah knows expensive garbage when Ah sees it."—Atlanta Constitution.

Simple

Teacher—Can anyone tell me how a stovepipe is made?

Johnny—First you take a big long hole, and then you wrap some tin around it.

Modern-to-the-Minute

AS RIGHT as rain, and as cooling, are these clever young modes for the woman who sews. Each is simple to make, pleasant to wear, and may possibly be the difference between a modern and a mediocre wardrobe for you this summer. Sew-Your-Own wants to help you look your best, to stamp you modern-to-the-minute, and therefore is anxious and proud to present today's trio.

A Two Piecer for Chic.

If he tells you you're just a nice armful you are the right size and type to wear the blouse 'n' skirt shown above, left. The waistcoat idea is very much the thing in blouses. The skirt is terribly young and figure flattering. What more could any little heart desire? You can have this smart ensemble for a song and a minimum of stitches. Think of the countless summer occasions ahead that all but specify this very outfit.

Not Smart Matron.

You should sue for slander anyone who calls you a Smart Matron when you don this gratifying new fashion (above center). You step into an entirely new size range when you step forth in this frock. So simple is its technique—merely a deftly designed feminine jabot, softly draped contours, and a meticulously slender skirt—yet so effective. It will thrill you in marquisette chiffon or lace, and it will keep you deliciously cool.

Play the net or the grandstand in the sports dress at the right and feel perfectly confident in any event. There isn't one among us who hasn't a real yen for a streamlined all-of-a-piece sportster that's on and off in a jiffy, launders easily, and comes up smiling time after time. You can concoct something clever of seersucker or pique and complete the whole thing in an afternoon. Why not order your size today and have all-summer benefit of a really companionable sports dress?

The Patterns.

Pattern 1302 is for sizes 14 to 42. Size 16 requires 2¼ yards of 39 inch material for the blouse, 2¼ yards for the skirt.

Pattern 1286 is for sizes 36 to 48. Size 38 requires 4⅜ yards of 39 inch material.

Pattern 1915 is for sizes 14 to 42. Size 16 requires 3⅛ yards of 35 inch material plus 3½ yards of bias binding to finish edges as pictured.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., Room 1020. 211 W. Wacker Dr., Chicago, Ill. Price of patterns, 15 cents (in coins) each.

Sedative for Fear

If we must undergo danger, the best sedative for fear is familiarity with the danger. Remember when you were desperately afraid to cross an automobile thoroughfare?

If you have to cover the distance, it doesn't lend enchantment to the view.

We don't see the romance in real life; but it's there; and a good novelist finds it.

Old-Fashioned Courtesy

Common highway courtesy, that good old-fashioned kind that existed in the horse and buggy days, will prevent many traffic accidents.

Those who follow evil ways are forever mapping out alibis.

Any species of animals get along together without slaughtering each other except man.

Icebox Rolls.

1 cake yeast
1 cup lukewarm milk
⅔ cup shortening
1 rounded tablespoon sugar
1 cup mashed potatoes
2 eggs, well beaten
1 teaspoon salt

Enough flour to make stiff dough.

Dissolve yeast, sugar and salt in warm milk, add shortening and eggs and potatoes. Mix well, then add flour last. Put in icebox and about one hour before baking make into rolls. This dough will keep in icebox for two or three days.

HELP KIDNEYS
To Get Rid of Acid and Poisonous Waste
Your kidneys help to keep you well by constantly filtering waste matter from the blood. If your kidneys get functionally disordered and fail to remove excess impurities, there may be poisoning of the whole system and body-wide distress.
Burning, scanty or too frequent urination may be a warning of some kidney or bladder disturbance.
You may suffer nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—feel weak, nervous, all played out.
In such cases it is better to rely on a medicine that has won country-wide acclaim than on something less favorably known. Use Doan's Pills. A multitude of grateful people recommend Doan's. Ask your neighbor!

THE HERALD OF MISTRESS SPRING

PETER RABBIT was sitting in the middle of the dear Old Brier Patch. Jolly, round, red Mr. Sun had just begun his daily climb up in the blue, blue sky, and Peter was wondering where he would go and what he would do when he heard a sound that caused him to suddenly sit up very straight with both ears pointing right up to the sky. Peter held his breath for a minute and then he heard it again. This time he jumped straight up in the air and kicked his heels together for joy. It was just the softest, sweetest whistle! It wasn't merry and it wasn't sad; it was just beautiful. And it seemed to come from everywhere and nowhere—just out of the air.

"Oh, Winsome, I'm So Glad You've Got Here at Last; I'm So Happy I Could Sing for Joy."

"Winsome Bluebird!" cried Peter Rabbit. "Oh, it's Winsome Bluebird! I wonder where he is! He sounds a long way off and yet he may be close by. Oh, I do wonder if I'm the first one to hear him!"

"I guess you are, Peter," said a soft voice. "I guess you are, because you see I've just arrived and I came straight to the Old Brier Patch, because I just knew that you would be looking for me and I wanted you to have the pleasure of being the first to see me. Why don't you look up in the little cherry tree over your head, Peter, and say something?"

Of course, Peter felt very foolish, and he looked just as he felt, as he saw Winsome Bluebird sitting right over his head. You see that soft, beautiful voice had seemed to come from everywhere, and Peter hadn't been able to tell just where it did come from.

"Oh, Winsome!" he cried. "Oh, Winsome, I'm so glad you're here at last! I'm so happy I could sing for joy."

"Ho, ho, Peter!" laughed Winsome Bluebird. "Do try it. I should love to hear you sing."

Peter grinned. "Well, anyway, if I can't sing I can dance," he cried and right away began the funniest little dance that ever was. Finally he had to stop to get his breath. "There, that's how glad I am!" he cried. "Now tell me all the news, Winsome."

"Oh, I couldn't, Peter. I couldn't tell you all. There's too much to tell and I haven't got time now. You know there are others waiting for me."

"But do tell me if Mistress Spring is most here," begged Peter.

"Of course she is! Don't you know I am her herald? I've come all the way up from down south just ahead of her to tell everybody that she is coming. You know, that is what a herald is for. I had rather be the herald of Mistress Spring than anything else in all the world." Winsome half lifted his beautiful blue wings as he said this.

"Don't go!" cried Peter. "I guess I know how you feel. It must be perfectly splendid to make everybody glad and happy as you do. I—I wish I could be a herald."

Winsome Bluebird laughed—the sweetest laugh. "I guess you don't need to be a herald to make people glad to see you, Peter," he said. "Besides, you know you can be sort of a herald by telling everybody you meet that I am here."

"That's so!" Peter cried. "That's one reason I like to be the first to see or hear you. It's great fun to see how pleased everybody is when they know that you have arrived. I—I hope nothing will happen to make Mistress Spring late."

LESSON TEXT—Hebrews 11:3-10, 17-22.

GOLDEN TEXT—These all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth.—Hebrews 11:13.

PRIMARY TOPIC—God's Honor Roll.

JUNIOR TOPIC—God's Honor Roll.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Heroes of Faith.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Faith Tested and Triumphant.

The great "heroes of the faith" chapter, Hebrews 11, provides an excellent review summary of the messages in Genesis, which we have studied during the last three months. Fittingly, the entire account, from the Creation to the hope for the future expressed by Joseph, revolves around the word "Faith." The patriarchs had many noble qualities but these were all rooted in the fundamental of all virtues, namely, that faith in God without which "it is impossible to please him" (v. 6).

Our study may well attempt no closer analysis of the text than to note the results of faith as they appear in the verses of our lesson.

I. Understanding (v. 3).

Philosophy and human research frequently bog down in the confused bypaths of unbelief and partial knowledge, but faith cuts right through the clouds and the confusion and "understands" that God is the creator of all things. If you want to know, believe God.

II. Worship (v. 4).

The world abounds with cults and religions of almost unbelievable diversity, and of appalling insufficiency for the needs of man. Only when man does as did Abel, and worships God in accordance with God's holy law will he obtain "witness that he" is "righteous."

III. Fellowship (v. 5).

Here again faith triumphs. The societies and associations of man fumble around trying to establish "good will," "fellowship of faiths," and what not, only to fail. But when a man knows God as Enoch did, then he is ready for true fellowship with his brother.

IV. Assurance (v. 6).

When a man trusts God implicitly the uncertainties of life vanish. It is an easier thing to talk about than to do, but, thank God, it can be done. We must believe not only that God is, but by faith we must recognize him "as the rewarder of them that diligently seek him."

V. Salvation (v. 7).

Saved by faith—that is the story of the Christian, even as it was the story of Noah. The ark is typical of Christ. Only in him is there salvation.

VI. Obedience (vv. 8, 9).

The world has a ribald saying, "I don't know where I'm going but I'm on my way," which represents a dangerous philosophy of life. But faith in God enables one to go with Abraham who "when he was called went out, not knowing whither he went." He knew God and that was enough to call forth unquestioning obedience.

VII. Vision (v. 10).

Men of vision—that's what we need, we are told. Well, then we need men of faith who can see the unseen, who can see "a city which hath foundations" even in the midst of the wilderness.

In the fields both of secular and spiritual achievement vision has marched before victory. Carey, Judson, Livingstone, every great missionary, dreamed dreams and saw visions before they achieved lasting victories in distant lands.

VIII. Resurrection (vv. 17-19).

God gave a promise and the only means of fulfilling that promise was about to be taken away, but Abraham did not hesitate for he believed that God was able and ready to raise the dead if necessary to fulfill his promise. Have all our prospects been dashed to the ground? Is everything hopeless, humanly speaking? God is both willing and able to make all things work together for good and for his glory.

IX. Hope (vv. 20-22).

The forward look—that is the look of faith. Isaac's blessing concerned "things to come." Jacob, too weak to stand alone, leaned on his staff and worshiped, and passed on the covenant blessing. Joseph gave commandment concerning his body, looking forward to God's fulfillment of the promise.

Christian hope is not a wishful desire that an unbelievable thing may somehow occur. That is an unbelieving misuse of the word "hope." To a child of God hope means a well-grounded assurance that God will keep his word.

Right and Wrong

Conscience is that faculty which perceives right and wrong in actions, approves or disapproves them, anticipates their consequenoes under the moral administration of God, and is thus either the cause of peace or of disquietude of mind.

Opportunities

There are people who would do great acts, but because they wait for great opportunities, life passes, and the acts of love are not done at all.—F. W. Robertson.

In as Much as Young Man Qualified for Job, He Got It

"Well," inquired the man in the swivel chair as the seventy-fourth applicant of the day strode into his office, "have you had a thorough education in art?"

"Yes, sir," answered the young applicant confidently, "I have."

"Studied in Europe?"

"Yes. Four years at the Beaux Arts."

"And you're sure you could guide visitors through this place competently?"

"Yes, I am sure."

"Well, we shall see. What were the three Greek orders?"

"Ionic, Corinthian and Doric."

"Good! What are the outstanding features of Gothic architecture?"

"Pointed arches, vertical accent, skeletonal framework with small wall space and large windows. This contrasts with the Romanesque where—"

"Whoa. Whoa. That's enough. And you'd be able to explain reproductions of great painters to inquiring visitors?"

"Certainly. The perspective of Fabriano, the power and religious fervor of Masaccio, the splendid chiaroscuro of Leonardo, the relentless realism of Rembrandt, the brilliant color tones of Veronese, born 1528, died—"

"You'll do. Now go and get your overalls on," concluded the proprietor of the Ducal Filling Station, Inc., "and give that customer out there a few gallons of gas." — Parke Cummings, in Cleveland Plain Dealer.

To the Point

Even a good resolution must have backbone to keep it from getting wobbly.

People who want more than they need have the minds of children.

A skeptic is a fellow who deliberately walks under a ladder just to see if he can change his luck.

Too many men never do a charitable act unless there is somebody around to applaud.

MANNERS OF THE MOMENT

By JEAN

© By The Associated Newspapers

THERE'S enough playfulness going on among adults these days to show them up. Have you run into parties where tin horns and toy guns are used for entertainment? If you have, you know that they usually end up in a nursery brawl, with women whining at their husbands, and men growling at their girl friends because they have had more turns than any one else.

Maybe it's instinct. The minute some one blows a toy horn or bounces a ball once, you want to jump up and say, "Let me try it!" You should have learned that you have to give the other fellow a long turn if you want a long turn yourself.

Maybe you don't go in for childish sports. But if you do, see to it that you know the childish code that goes with them.

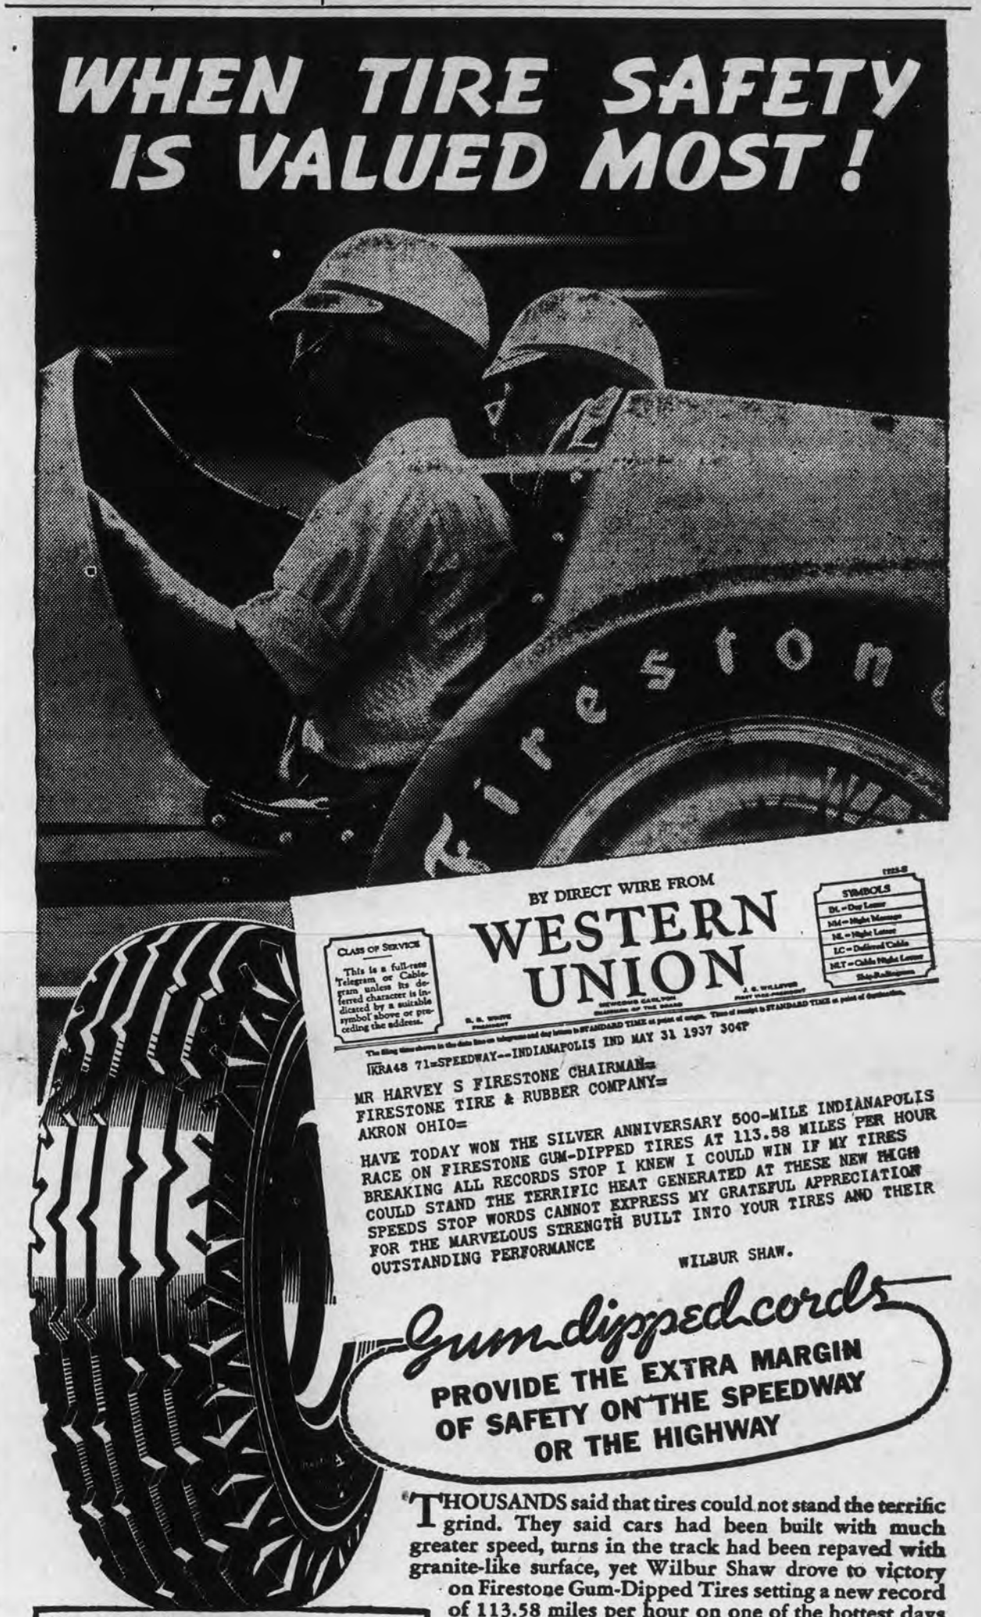
GRAPHIC GOLF

By BEST BALL



GRIPPING THE CLUB

THERE are three ways of gripping the golf club; the overlapping, interlocking and the natural, two handed grip. In the overlapping grip the little finger of the right hand overlaps the forefinger of the left. With the interlocking grip the little finger of the right hand is interlocked with the forefinger of the left. A large number of the good golfers today employ one or the other of these grips and their value lies largely in creating better coordination of movement between the two hands.

The problem is to make the hands work as closely together as possible, to eliminate any tendency toward friction between the two. Good golf is a matter of smooth stroking and there is trouble enough along the swing's path without handicapping the stroke at the start. There are craftsmen in every field who grip the tools differently and golf is no exception. Two of the greatest golfers of this era, Bobby Jones and Gene Sarazen, used different grips, the former overlapping and the latter, interlocking. Most of the good golfers of the present day possess large hands and this makes the problem of which of these two grips to use comparatively simple for both are suitable for big hands and long fingers. Among the rank and file of players, however, there are many with small hands and stubby fingers. Women in particular have a natural handicap in small hands and to overcome this the two handed grip is used. The hands placed on the club in the manner illustrated above, cover a good portion of the shaft and if held on the light side will co-operate together well. Many champions of the past have used this grip. The point to remember is that the hands must work in both directions equally well.

Ellis Mentioned As Formidable Candidate For Governor

We note among prominent Alabamians mentioned in the daily papers as likely contendants for gubernatorial honors Shelby County's own Representative L H Ellis

Mr Ellis, for a number of years, has been prominently identified with the political and educational life of the State—and, during the past session of the Legislature was widely acclaimed on account of his outstanding leadership The successful culmination of the administrative measures which he sponsored, won for him additional recognition.

Ralph Hurst, political writer for the Birmingham News, lists the following names as most likely candidates for the State's highest honor. Ex-Governor B. M. Miller of Camden, who when next year's election day comes around will be 74 years of age, and would be 79 at the expiration of his term of office, if elected. Two other Wilcox Countians are listed by Mr. Hurst as gubernatorial prospects, Senator J. Miller Bonner and the popular sportsman and commissioner of Agriculture, Bob Goode, who is definitely campaigning at the present time, Hon Frank Dixon of Birmingham —and, last, but by no means least, L. H. ELLIS—"the gentleman from Shelby"—prominent attorney of Columbiana, one time Senator, and all time public spirited citizen.

Of our fellow townsman Mr. Hurst states:

"Although the name of Representative L. H. Ellis of Shelby, has been mentioned for several weeks, within the last week Ellis has revealed to friends that he is seriously considering a try for the governorship and is pointing out by a process of elimination that he is the only man what can win. He was the Graves floor leader who put the sales tax through the House."

The writer, in turning the historical pages of Shelby County's Honor Roll, composed of men who have rendered distinguished service, political and otherwise, finds many who rank high in all walks of life—"Gubernatorial timber" may be standing in our midst. Governor Rufus Cobb from Shelby County, once graced the Governor's chair and Hon. L. H. Ellis from Shelby County, may be the next Governor who can and will if elected, write some brilliant pages on the unrolled scroll of future development for Alabama, and should he decide to run, his fellow Countians will, loyally rally to his support and proudly render their allegiance to another one of Shelby County's distinguished citizens.

Attention Shelby County Citizens!

Rarely, if ever, has the Democrat sponsored thru its columns ,any progressive measure of County wide importance that has met with such unanimous favorable comment from practically every Beat in Shelby County, as has been noted in the movement for better highways. The reason, we believe, is so obvious that there is no room for argument against it. Good roads are no longe rluxuries. They are essential. The Highway Project now up for discussion is the paved road from Bibb County Line to St. Clair County Line which will, if completed, bring the greatest boom this section of Alabama has known.

We note in the daily papers that Counties throughout Alabama are eargerly accepting the liberal two way, three way or four way plan offered. Large delegations are daily appearing in the State Capitol and signing the necessary requirements tor their Counties. Even Winston County ,the smallest tax paying County in Alabama, has fallen in line with other progressive Counties in the State. We have recently noted the coveted O .K. on our neighboring Counties, Talladega, Coosa, Tallapoosa, and many others—still we hear "nothing definite" from Shelby County.

With road maps available, good will tours in progress, how much longer shall we merely watch the procession of tourists, traffic, and the traveling public detour around Shelby County on account of ROADS, thereby depriving citizens commercially and otherwise of the recognized benefits derived from this source.

We now suggest that every citizen in his rsepective Beat contact his representative on the Board of Revenue and urge his co-operation in obtaining this permanent development for Shelby oCunty. Regardless of petit ambitions affecting only immediate districts ,it is now a clarion call from the peoplt of Shelby County thru its Board of Revenue to take advantage of one of the plans offered for the good and permanent upbuilding of the entire county. Opportunity may not again knock at your door. We urge that you answer it immediately. Should you refuse to hear the knock, Shelby County will continue to be ostracized!

TERRIBLE!

It's terrible, but, it seems, 'tis true!

The U. S. air force is so inadequate that it can defend the nation on only one front at a time and, if we were attacked on two fronts, one would be defenseless!

So says Maj. Gen. Frank M. Andrews, commander of our General Headquarters Air Force, and he ought to know. What we would like to know, however, is how many fronts does the general expect us to be attacked on at the same time?

The last piece of complex, weather-making machinery is belted in place. Final rigid tests and inspections have been made. And today, after an expenditure of well over a million dollars, months of day and night labor—even a battle with floods —44 L & N trains are ready to move safely along thousands of miles of track—completely air-conditioned from stem to stern!

Today, outside you swelter in the summer sun. Inside our air-conditioned cars you thrill to the cool, fresh air of spring. And they're quiet, too! Add the courteous service of friendly trainmen, fine meals of old south flavor, restful seats, comfortable beds, fares that are lower than ever before, and—well, neighbors, you just can't help but say "Your Home Sweet Home on Rails" is the most completely satisfying form of travel anyone can use.

Come often, then, won't you? Be our guests—and spend delightful hours in our safe, modern "home" we've built for you.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE R. R.

ACROSS rugged mountains, through rich valleys, along highways and by-ways—to you the electrical transmission line may appear to be just a commonplace bit of landscape. . . .

Unless you are one of the initiated!

Then it seems to you to be a great harp, singing noble songs of doing and daring; songs of risk of life and fortune so that ELECTRIC SERVICE MIGHT BE YOURS AT SMALL COST. Or your ears might hear a ballad telling of the contentment in homes where mothers are no longer slaves to household tasks, but who have time for enjoyment of life and the companionship of their children—thanks to the time-saving and youth-extending benefits of electricity.

Or the wires may seem to be singing mighty songs of the workmen in factories who no longer must do tasks that only a machine should do, and thus preserve the spring of youth in their steps, and who can now produce in a few hours what once required many. Perhaps the great harp's strands will seem to be singing to you of new industries which Alabama Power Company has brought to Alabama so there may be greater opportunity for Alabama boys and girls.

Or, if you have the ear for the music of the wind as it touches the great strands suspended between mighty metal towers, you may hear them singing of brave deeds during catastrophes when linemen come forth from the shelter of their homes to make repairs, so your electric service can go on.

The next time you are riding or walking through the country, when you see the gleaming metal strands suspended from great towers as on a loosely strung harp, see if you, too, can hear the martial MUSIC OF PROGRESS they're singing during this

SILVER ANNIVERSARY YEAR

If you listen closely, you may also hear the overtones of the SONG OF HONOR they sing for those who have given their lives "in line of duty."

"THE KICKER"

"I hate to be a kicker, I always long for peace,
But the wheel that does the squeaking is the one that needs the grease,
It's nice to be a peaceful soul, and not too hard to please,
But the dog that's always scratching is the one that has the fleas,
'I hat to be a kicker' means nothing in a show—
For the kickers in the chorus are the ones that get the dough.
The art of soft soap spreading is a thing tha tpalls and stales,
But the guy that weilds the hammer is the guy that drives the nails.
Let us not put any notions that are harmful in your head
But the baby that keeps yelling is the baby that gets fed."

The above poetic philosophy was sent the writer with congratulations on our road articles and the plea for a continuance of our "KICKING" about these ROADS here in Columbiana. Not that we think anyone pays any attention to our idle chatter about this and that—but honest, every day in every way these Roads grow "worser and worser"—and harder to traverse either by motor or by the personal manipulation of pedal extremeties Now that Lord Mayor Harry Gordon is at home, we are looking for some ACTION o nthis much needed improvement for the preservation of Civic Pride—and our own SAFETY and that of each pedestrian and autoist. Brothers — Can't you snare a DIME? We would understand perfectly if you were running a printing shop—but a nice little up and coming city like Columbiana—really should be put into "navigable" shape. So, we are not only KICKING this week—we are lustily YELLING H-E-L-L-O-P-!

WRITER'S CONCLAVE BROUGHT TO BRILLIANT CLOSE AT MONTEVALLO

Many celebrities who attended the Writer's Conclave in Montevallo are richer for this experience. The renewal of old friendships—the joint sharing of "sun splashed dreams," or tear washed memories makes the occasion unforgettable!

Dr. Lang, retiring President, from the University, in his address to the writers ,gave one parting piece of advice to which we heartily subscribe —"DELIVER US FROM A SMALL TOWN MIND". The much beloved Doctor continued, "Many of our brilliant minds came from the Small Towns—BUT they did not retain the liability of a "Small Town Mind." We wished for a copy of this address It would well be worth reprinting—and reading and re-reading!

Mary B. Ward, internationally recognized poet from Birmingham and one of our closest friends and co-writers, was unanimously chosen President. If there has ever been a combination of pulchritude plus personality plus brains, plus tact, Mary B. has it! We shall personally look forward to a brilliant year under her charming and efficient leadership.

ROBERT EARL BETTS

Robert Earl Betts ,grandson of Mr and Mrs. J. B. Pitts, of Bessemer, is livening up their home this week by his presence. Young Mr. Betts was an interesting visitor in the Democrat office on Monday, and we thoroughly enjoyed this typical American Boy who brought along a "bag of tricks" which would do Houdini credit. Sure, we bit every time—and got "stung" —promptly, and duly received the merry "ha-ha" from the embryo magician.

MRS. BERNICE LITTLE HONOREE ON BIRTHDAY ANNIVERSARY

Linger Longer Farm—the Southern Plantation Home of the Curry Family, located near Wilton, was the scene of a happy celebration on last Saturday night, when one of its loveliest members, Bernice Norris Little was the honoree. The spacious grounds surrounding this historic home, redolent with radiant memories ,some of them dimmed by sorrow's poignant sting, came back to life on this happy occasion as members of the family began arriving, bringing baskets filled with Southern delicacies and bearing all good wishts for one of their favorites. Mrs. Little, gracious and charming in manner ,with piquant and happy surprise greeted her guests, but, we'll wager a little bet on the side, she began wondering HOW on earth she would prepare a dinner for the number of guests so unexpecttdly arriving. However, around the festive board were soon seated the honoree,, Mrs. Cage Head, Miss Delilah Curry, Mrs. Jonnie Fancher, Mrs. J. Little, John Little, Sam Curry and others who sincerely wished for "Bernice" a life filled with every happiness she so richly deserves. A joyous occasion honoring a memorable day faded into an unforgettable memory!

LESLIE LONGSHORE VISITS OLD HOME

Leslie Longshore, prominent member of the Anniston Bar, and more recently appointed Referee in Bankruptcy in North Alabama, was a distinguished visitor in the Democrat office on Monday—and what a joy we found in welcoming this old friend back home again, and in recalling many happy occsaions we shared while he was a "beau brummel" on Main Street. Funny how the little old years slip by in review when old friends begin retracing former pilgrimages together! A veritable counterpart of Mr. Longshore was accompanying "Dad" on his first trip to Columbiana—and this interesting visitor was his young son, Frank! Of course, Mr. Longshore choose the DEMOCRAT as his medium of information regarding his former home town, and happily do we travel to his home in Anniston each week where we are assured of a friendly greeting.

RHYTHM 'RISTOCRATS AGAIN SCORE WITH MELODY HITS

The Masonic Hall was gay with swing music on Saturday night when the American Legion presented the Rhythm Ristocrats in the first dance of the summer season. A number of dance engagements are being booked for the ensuing months by this popular dance orchestra. They are avail able fo rprivate or public dances and if interested, you may communicate with Manager Bill Riddle, or call 2751

Friends of Mrs. Emma Miles, Columbiana's oldest and well beloved citizen will regret to learn of her illness at her home here.

Dr. and Mrs. James Crawford have moved into their lovely new residence near "Five Points" and we, as neighhors, extend cordial greetings and a hearty welcome to these cherished friends. We are delighted they live near enough for us to "run in" between jumps!

Miss Beth Wallace, of Auburn, spent the week end with her parents Judge and Mrs. W. W. Wallace.

Mr and Mrs. Bob Mills (Ruth Harbin) spent the week end with Mamie Jo Harbin. The wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Mills of Gadsden, was beautifully solemnized in Montgomery on June 12, and the "newly-weds" were returning to their home in Gadsden Sunday, after a delightful honeymoon trip thru Florida.

Mr. and Mrs. Charlie Tinney and Mrs. Elmer McGiboney spent Thursday in Birmingham.

AL FRESCO PARTY GIVEN BY MRS. W. F. DAVIS

One of the loveliest events of the season was the Al Fresco Party given by Mrs. W. F. Davis on Tuesday afternoon, from five until seven o'clock The hostess entertaining the Culture Club and other friends.

In June, one's thoughts are on flower gardens and woodlands. The beautiful yard and garden of Mrs. Davis combined the loveliest attributes of the two and her guests enjoyed to the fullest the wonderful setting for a most enjoyable garden party.

Rustic seats under spreading trees and a table on which a veritable feast was spread greeted the eye. Barbecued meat, stuffed eggs, salad, buns, and entrees, passed by colored waitresses, brought back the thoughts of ante bellum days. An ice and cake ended the epicurean treat.

Several humorous games were played. Mrs. Knox Woolley winning the prize, a vase of flowers, for the best imitation of the animal she represented in the guessing game.

Those enjoying the hospitality of this gracious hostess, besides the members of the club were: Mesdames Fay Miles Benton, Lena Merrill, A. P. McGhee, Hop Cole, Lida Wood, J. H. Taylor, Rosa W. Teague, and Mrs. Karl Harrison, a charming bride ,who before her marriage to Mr. Harrison, was Miss Milded Bennett of Savannah, Ga.

Mr. and Mrs. W. Bradley of Gadsden, spent the week end in Columbiana visiting relatives.

Miss Irene Bishop, has spent several weeks in Louisville, Kentucky, the guest of her brother. During her stay she visited many interesting places, among them the historic birth place of Lincoln. She also traversed the recent flood stricken area.

Mr and Mrs. Terrell Jackson and daughter, Jean, were guests of Judge and Mrs L. B. Riddle during the past week end.

Gray Goodwin of Heidleberg, Miss. visited his family Sunday. Mr. Goodwin is engaged in Road construction work in our neighboring state.

GRADY CLEVELAND

The most gratifying part of this newspaper business is the pleasure we find in greeting ald friends—especially is this true when the old friend is as brilliant a reconteur and as good company as Grady Cleveland ,prominently identified with the Stat eForestry Dtpartment in Montgomery We are personally indebted to this gentleman for a happy hour which he took 'time out' from his busy schedule to spend with us in the Democrat office, while a guest of Judge and Mrs. Cage Head Tuesday. His refreshing merry banter and inimitable manner of relating some clever jokes brightened an otherwise rather dull day.

"Verbally"—that is the word which has for weeks kept thousands of workers in eight or ten states from returning to their jobs.

The C. I. O. demands that the corporations put their agreement in the form of a written contract. The corporations refuse. And the unions have refused to call off the strikes until they get the signatures on the line.

Union officials have taken the position that if the company officials are willing to agree orally to union demands they ought to be willing to confirm the agreement in writing. Lewis has demanded that President Roosevelt intervene to force the companies to sign. At a press conference the President refused to say officially what was his reaction to the demand. He did say—and emphasized that he was not speaking "officially"—that he could not see why the companies would not make written agreements if they would make the same ones verbally.

Tom Girdler, chairman of the board of the Republic Steel corporation, explained the companies' stand:

"The reason the C. I. O. wants a signed contract is because such a contract would be the first step toward the closed shop and the check-off.

"Under the closed shop every worker has to belong to a union, whether he wants to or not. The closed shop is actually a 'deal' between the employer and the union whereby the employer helps to force every employee into the union. Under the checkoff the company takes unions dues out of the pay envelopes of all its employees and hands them over to the union.

"Does the C. I. O. contract preserve industrial peace? It does not. They have broken numerous contracts."

Federal Intervention Asked

IT WAS virtually certain that there would be some federal action in the steel strikes, with Gov. Martin L. Davey of Ohio and Mayor Daniel J. Shields of Johnstown, Pa., appealing desperately to the President for aid. Governor Davey, in a long telegram detailing the arguments on both sides, declared that the situation had gone far beyond the powers of one state to control. When a worker in the Johnstown steel mills was abducted by six strikers and stripped of his clothing in their automobile (he was later released), following weeks of rioting and bloodshed, the mayor decided that kidnaping was the last straw and appealed to Mr. Roosevelt.

Secretary of Labor Frances E. Perkins named a mediation board of three to meet in Cleveland and hear the cases of the union and the companies. On the board were Charles P. Taft, son of the former President and chief justice, a Republican and lawyer from Cincinnati; Lloyd K. Garrison, who served as the first president of the National Labor Relations board in 1934, and Edward F. McGrady, first assistant secretary of labor, and a known enemy of company unions, spy systems and the tear gas method of quelling strike riots.

In Monroe, Mich., where the C. I. O. union threatened to import thousands of pickets from Detroit, a band of several hundred deputized vigilantes, armed, kept the peace, aided by the police force of twenty. In Youngstown, Ohio, Johnstown and other cities vigilante groups were also being formed.

Steel Wants Its Mail

THE Republic Steel corporation filed in the federal district court in Washington a petition for a writ of mandamus compelling Postmaster General Farley to deliver parcel post packages to steel plants in Ohio which local postmasters have refused to deliver.

The petition charged that the local postmaster at Niles, Ohio, was refusing to deliver packages containing food and clothing and addressed to the loyal workers who were being housed inside the Republic plant. It charged that this refusal was made after the postmaster had reached an "understanding" with two members of the union.

"Having waited a week for a reply to our letter . . . to Mr. Farley and having received none, we have no recourse but to such legal action as is available to us under the circumstances involved," said John S. Brooks, Jr., counsel for the corporation. He said separate suits will be instituted in Ohio against the local postmasters involved.

Court Plan Walloped

THE senate judiciary committee made short work of President Roosevelt's Supreme court packing plan. Its report, in summary:

"We recommend the rejection of this bill as a needless, futile, and utterly dangerous abandonment of constitutional principle.

"It was presented to the congress in a most intricate form and for reasons that obscured its real purpose.

"It would not banish age from the bench nor abolish divided decisions.

"It would not affect the power of any court to hold laws unconstitutional, nor withdraw from any judge the authority to issue injunctions.

"It would not reduce the expense of litigation nor speed decision.

"It is a proposal without precedent and without justification.

"It would subjugate the courts to the will of congress and the President and thereby destroy the independence of the judiciary, the only certain shield of individual rights.

"It is a measure which should be so emphatically rejected that its parallel will never again be presented to the free representatives of the free people of America."

Informed Washington correspondents were of the belief that the bill hasn't a chance of being passed, even with amendments. It seemed not unlikely that, due to the confusion and conflict over White House proposals and statutes, there would be an adjournment of this session of congress shortly, perhaps to reconvene in special session beginning November 1. The breathing spell would give the administration an opportunity to align its majority more solidly behind the President's desired legislation to improve the lot of the underprivileged.

Harry Loses 1st Round

DESPITE the pleas of Harry L. Hopkins, works progress administrator, the full senate appropriation committee approved the Byrnes amendment to the relief bill, 13 to 10. The amendment to the $1,500,000,000 bill requires local governments to pay at least 40 per cent of the cost of all WPA projects, or else sign a kind of civic "pauper's oath." The South Carolina senator's amendment was seen as further evidence of the break between the administration and the conservative Democrats.

Harry Hopkins

In the senate debate on the bill it quickly became apparent that Sen. Byrnes' "40 per cent amendment" would not carry. Sen. Joseph T. Robinson offered a compromise which would require states to pay 25 per cent of the cost of work relief projects. President Roosevelt had repeatedly made it known that he wanted no such rider on his relief bill, and it was Sen. Robinson's first break with the White House on an important issue.

SEEN and HEARD around the NATIONAL CAPITAL

By Carter Field
FAMOUS WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENT

Washington. — There is more to the uneasiness of certain high labor officials to government fixing of minimum wages than is being made known. What some of them think about it down in their hearts would not arouse any enthusiasm if stated in plain English. It would not be good politics, and in politics a man who has become a labor leader is apt to know his way around.

One objection is stated frankly. They are afraid that if the government fixes a minimum wage it will tend to become the standard wage. A good deal of publicity has been given to this. But most of it is just talk. A good many workers suspect that the social security payroll taxes are more menacing to pay advances than any governmental edict that not less than a certain amount can be paid for a definite job in a definite place.

Every once in a while there is a hint that the fixing of wages is a matter which should be left to collective bargaining. That comes pretty close to being the heart of the real objection. The same danger was realized by labor leaders during the NRA regime. Obviously if the government should eventually control all working conditions, particularly hours and wages, the importance of union labor leaders would shrink considerably. There might even come a time when workers would doubt the wisdom of having highly paid union officials with liberal expense accounts. The government would be doing the job that the unions set out to do and have been doing.

There was a small contingent of the original brain trust which saw this very clearly, and welcomed the day when it would mature. They wanted all power lodged in the federal government. This line of thought never triumphed. The time was not ripe for it.

Moreover the election was approaching and the administration did not know then that it could have been re-elected even if all the labor unions had been just as strongly opposed to it as they were in favor of it.

See Danger There

But the dangerous germ of thought is still there. The administration intends to march on its efforts to straighten out the waving up and down curve of business booms and depressions. It intends to control business more and more, especially in the matter of plant expansions.

With the regulation of wages and hours, not a part of the program for the present session of congress, the regulation of business comes closer. Sooner or later may come another move. It has not even been hinted, so far, but as a matter of fact it has lots of advocates, some of them inside the New Deal breastworks.

For if governmental control is to be exercised over business in order to avoid hectic booms and gloomy depressions—with the idea being to keep the curve of prosperity in a straight line, with no ups and downs—it will become important not to have cessations of work due to labor troubles. They are apt to play hob not only with production—bearing in mind that the goal of the New Deal is to have production geared down to the capacity of the market to consume—but with government revenues.

The millions of taxes paid to the federal government out of the annual profits of the steel corporation, for example, and out of personal incomes derived from dividends from that company, might conceivably disappear entirely for one year due to strikes which might turn the black ink figures of that company into red.

All of which has labor leaders a little perturbed as they see the start made on government regulation of wages.

Ohio in Congress

The Ohio delegation is an interesting example of what is happening to the President on the Supreme court enlargement bill, and on insurgency in general. It is typical of most of the delegations from states which are normally Republican, and at present have heavy Democratic majorities in the Capitol Hill contingents.

Ohio now has 22 Democrats and only 2 Republicans in the house, although if there is such a thing any more as a "normal" majority the Buckeye state should have about 200,000 Republicans.

A month ago a confidential poll was taken of these 22 Ohio Democrats. It showed 13 of them were against the President on the Supreme court issue, and only 9 with him. But just a few days ago the 22 Democrats were again polled, and this time there were 15 against the President and only 7 for him!

This does not mean that the two gentlemen who originally favored the President and later decided they would have to vote against him, had changed their own opinions about the merits or demerits of the bill. It means that they had changed their minds about what was the safer thing for them to do.

The point is that most of the Ohio Democrats have discovered, to their own satisfaction, that a majority of the voters in their districts are against the court packing bill; but that a majority of the Democrats in their district are for the President.

Thus they are between the devil and the deep blue sea. If they vote against the President, they are likely to be knocked off in the primaries by a New Dealer who charges them with having betrayed the cause of liberalism, fought our leader, and generally acted in a traitorous fashion. This, especially as the Farley machine is apt to be very efficient in the primaries.

Would Hurt Chances

But if they vote for the President on the court bill, then their chances in the general election are very poor indeed. Their danger there is that the general sentiment in the entire district, among Republicans as well as Democrats, would beat them.

If Roosevelt himself were running in 1938 the situation would be different. The President, they still believe firmly, is simply magical as a vote getter. People would in many instances vote the straight ticket, and thus the Democratic candidates for congress would be pulled through in most of the districts the President carried.

But the President is not running. So they are frightened. They want to keep their $10,000 jobs. They like the perquisites, the feeling of importance. Their wives like the social life of the capital. They do not want to be retired. Most of them, as a matter of fact, could not earn anything like so much money at home.

So they are doing their best to avoid either danger. They do not want this measure voted on in the house, and just because so many of them do not want it voted on, it probably will not be.

They want the bill to stay in the senate until after the election next year, or until present interest in it dies away.

But if they do have to vote against the President, the same political logic will lead them to vote for a great many more New Deal measures than perhaps they otherwise would. It would not do to put themselves forward as too strongly against the President. That is not good politics. So the President may be triumphant after all!

To Rejuvenate G. O. P.

There is a movement on to rejuvenate the Republican party. So far the move is rather shrouded in mystery, but a man very prominent in the last campaign until he was virtually shelved by Chairman John D. M. Hamilton was in Washington a few days ago explaining to some senators he knew what he was trying to do in aiding the movement.

The main point of the idea, it seems, is to organize a large number of huge Republican clubs, starting in the big cities. When campaign time approaches the idea would be for the young Republicans in these clubs to work together, in the various congressional districts and also in the states, for district and state at large delegates to the Republican National convention.

Assuming success in this, the idea then would be for them to take over control of the G. O. P. organization at that time, and make it a live force in the country once more.

There is at least one shrewd idea in the plan, however impractical it may appear to be. This is that the backers are in agreement that they must not try to foist any choice they may develop as to the candidate for the presidency.

Not Like Old Days

It's very different from the good old days, when there were bosses that were bosses. It is just a little bit interesting, since the death of the last of them, J. Henry Roraback of Connecticut, a few weeks back, that some of the young Republicans are wishing the party had a few leaders who had the brains and strategy of the old group headed by Boies Penrose, even if they do think the new party ought to be a little more liberal.

There seems to be no personalities particularly in the new movement, which is just as well at this stage, but there are quite a few gentlemen whose names are anathema. Head and front of this list is Herbert C. Hoover. A close runner-up, for no other reason apparently than that his name is considered bad medicine politically, is Ogden L. Mills of New York, Hoover's Secretary of the Treasury and generally branded as an arch conservative.

It goes without saying that John D. M. Hamilton does not rate very high with the organizers of this movement. If he did they would not be planning so comprehensive a campaign to steal the organization. If they could influence Hamilton to do what they want, the movement would not be necessary. Or, to put it another way, Hamilton would be leading it.

SYNOPSIS

Brooke Reyburn visits the office of Jed Stewart, a lawyer, to discuss the terms of an estate she has inherited from Mrs. Mary Armanda Dane. Unwittingly she overhears Jed talking to Mark Trent, a nephew of Mrs. Dane who has been disinherited. Mrs. Dane had lived at Lookout House, a huge structure on the sea, built by her father and divided into two, for her and Mark's father. Brooke had been a fashion expert, and Mrs. Dane, a "shut-in," hearing her on the radio, had invited her to call and developed a deep affection for her. Mark discloses that Mrs. Dane had threatened to disinherit him if he married Lola, from whom he is now divorced. He says he does not trust Henri and Clotilde Jacques, Mrs. Dane's servants. He says he is not interested in an offer of Brooke's to share the estate with him. Leaving her department store job, Brooke refuses an offer to "go stepping" with Jerry Field, a carefree young man who wants to marry her. At a family conference she learns she must live at Lookout House alone, since Lucette, her younger sister who is taking her job, her brother, Sam, a young playwright, and her mother plan to stay in the city

Through the open transom above the office door came the hum of typewriters. Mark Trent, behind his desk, scowled in the direction of the sound. He had paid good money for those machines on the understanding that they were noiseless. Curious that he never had been annoyed by them before. Must be this confounded note in his hands. He read again:

Dear Mr. Trent—

Many times your aunt has told me of the Thanksgivings you spent with her at Lookout House. Won't you dine here on the coming holiday? My mother, sister and brother will be with me. There are many family treasures which you should have. I would like to go over them with you, and more than all, I want to thank you for pulling me out from under that car. I really wasn't so ungrateful as I sounded. This is a late invitation because I have been bolstering up my courage to ask you. Please come. Bury the hatchet, or accept the olive branch, or however peace between enemies—though I am not for a moment your enemy—is being accomplished now.

Sincerely yours,
Brooke Reyburn

Lookout House

He dropped the note and frowned at the red carnations in a crystal vase on his desk. He lived over the instant he had seen a girl go down in the street, had seen a speeding car almost upon her. How had he managed to save her? Colorless and dazed as she was, he had thought her the loveliest thing he ever had seen as she looked up at him. As for a second he had steadied her in his arms, his brain had fought against her attraction and the live warmth of her body had prompted him to growl at her. No wonder she had been angry, and no wonder — he admitted honestly — Mary Amanda Dane had been taken in by her. Well, one victim in the family was enough. She shouldn't hypnotize him.

He drew letter paper toward him and picked up a pen. He'd settle this question of friendship between them for good and all. Little schemer!

Dear Miss Reyburn, he wrote.

As he hesitated as to how to word his regrets, another picture of the girl as she had appeared between the hangings in Stewart's office flashed in his mind with startling clarity.

He must get along with that note. His frowning regard of the opening door changed to a welcoming smile as a head poked in.

"Come in, Jed. What's on the little mind now?"

Jed Stewart perched on a corner of the flat desk. He pulled one of the red carnations from the vase and drew the stem through the buttonhole of the lapel of his checked coat.

"I'm taking a lady to tea, need a posey to make me look like a million, so combined utility with business and came here. Knew you always had them."

"What's the business? If you've been sent again to ask me to take half of that—"

"Hold everything, that's all washed up. The matter has not been mentioned to me since the day you and Brooke Reyburn met in my office. I guess you killed her interest in you by your infernal sarcasm:

" 'Hope you'll enjoy the house and fortune, Miss Reyburn. Happy landings! Perhaps I'd better say, safe landings,' sez you."

"Oh, you think so? Read that."

Jed Stewart frowned over the note Mark Trent tossed to him. He read it through, reread it. Looked at his friend.

"Going?"

"Going! What do you think?" Mark answered a buzzer. "Who? Mrs. Gregory. Of course I'll see her."

He explained hurriedly to Stewart. "It's an old friend of Aunt Mary Amanda's. She sailed for France a week before my aunt died. She's a martinet, one of those terrible women who don't care where the lash of their tongue falls, and a confirmed matchmaker.

"This is mighty good of you, Mrs. Gregory, and it's a clear case of thought transference; not ten minutes ago I was thinking of you."

A wave of feeling menaced the clarity of Mark's voice as he bent over the white-gloved hand of the woman who had entered the office. She had been a vital part of the life at Lookout House which now seemed so irretrievably far behind him. A smile tugged at his lips as he observed that the floppy wide-brimmed picture hat was the model she had worn since as a boy he had admired the deeply waved blonde hair it shadowed. The hair was still faultlessly marcelled, but it was snow white.

She settled into a chair with the same rustle of taffeta he remembered, and adjusted a diamond brooch of a size and brilliance to make a discriminating thief avidly flex supple fingers. She peered up at him through a jeweled lorgnette, with eyes once a brilliant blue, now the color of faded larkspur.

"Handsome as ever, aren't you, Mark, in spite of the way those two women let you down. First that wife, with a grande amoureuse complex, and then Mary Amanda. I don't wonder that your hair at the temples looks as if it had been touched by frosty fingers, if you are only thirty. Who's he?"

She waved her lorgnette toward Stewart, who, back to the room, apparently had been absorbed in a study of the calf-bound books on the shelf.

"Stewart, of the firm of Stewart and Stewart, attorneys. Jed, come here. I want to present you to Mrs. Gregory, my first love."

"Hmp! Flatterer! You always could coax my heart out of my breast with your wonderful smile and your voice, Mark." She peered through her lorgnette as Jed Stewart took the hand she extended with the air of a sovereign.

"Handsome as Ever, Aren't You?"

"Stewart and Stewart! You were Mary Amanda Dane's lawyer, weren't you?"

The contempt in her voice deepened the color of Jed Stewart's already sufficiently ruddy face.

"I had that honor."

"Honor! Do you call it an honor to help cheat her nephew out of his inheritance?"

"Really, Mrs. Gregory, Jed can't be held responsible—"

"Hold your tongue, Mark. I've started, and now I intend to get rid of a few things that have been boiling and sizzling inside me since the day I heard that Mary Amanda had cut you out in favor of that fashion adviser she'd gone crazy about."

"Forget it, Mrs. Gregory. I don't need the money—"

"Of course you need it. No one has money enough now because no one has a sense of financial security. Didn't you take over all the lame ducks as your share of your grandfather's property so that your aunt wouldn't be worried by them? Aren't you making that ex-wife of yours an allowance? Mary Amanda told me. What's she been doing since she left you for that French count? It was a French count year, wasn't it? They were buzzing round rich girls thick as wasps about a broiled live lobster."

"She has married, I understand."

"Married! After she divorced the count! The third time! Getting to be a habit, isn't it? She isn't entitled to a penny. I don't wonder your aunt was furious when she found out that you were giving her money. Perhaps that's the real reason she cut you off, though I thought it was because she didn't believe in divorce; on that subject she was stuck back in the eighties. However, that wasn't what I came here to talk about. I just wanted to tell you that if I had known what was in that will I witnessed two days before I sailed for Europe—it was just a week before she died—now, Stewart, don't look at me with your jaw dropped as if I were a moron with a Medusa complex—of course, I know that a person isn't supposed to know the contents of the will she witnesses, but I still say that had I known that your aunt was leaving her money away from you, Mark, I would have cut off my hand before I signed."

Mark Trent's heart stopped and galloped furiously on. A will witnessed a week before Mary Amanda's death! The will which had been probated was of a date two months prior. As he opened suddenly stiffened lips to reply, he met Jed Stewart's warning eyes, eyes which seemed like flames in a chalky face. Jed was as amazed as he.

Jed began to speak. "I was fond of my client Mrs. Dane, and your reference to her last will brought back a picture of the delicate woman in her wheel chair with—"

"With that disreputable parrot swearing in the cage behind her. The bird was there when I witnessed the will; I didn't know but that she would insist upon Micawber's being the other witness, but she called in Clotilde and Henri Jacques, it was her nurse-companion's day off. If I had to choose between the parrot and that French butler as my co-resident on a desert island, I'd take Mr. Micawber. After they went out, Mary Amanda and I were alone for a few moments in the firelight. It was the last time I saw her—" Mrs. Gregory dabbed her reddening eyes with a lace-edged handkerchief.

She straightened, demanded angrily:

"Why am I slobbering like that? I love life! I wouldn't give up my place in this problem-logged world for all the starry halos and golden harps you could offer. Thinking of your aunt set me off. The last few times I saw her I had noticed that she seemed distrait, as if something were worrying her. I've wondered since if she would have told me what she had done if I had not had to hurry away. I called Henri before I left. As I looked back, she seemed white and exhausted. As I drove away I saw that girl driving in."

"That girl! You mean—"

"The Reyburn girl, of course, Stewart. You ought to get a position somewhere as an echo. I'd met her several times and I liked her too before I knew what she had done to Mark. She made me forget that I was old enough to be her grandmother. Charming manners. Well, I must run along."

"Thank you for your interest in me, Mrs. Gregory. I'm going down to your car with you. Wait for me, Jed."

The woman turned on the threshold. "I hope, if ever you draw another will cutting out a rightful heir, young man, you'll be swished in boiling oil."

Stewart grinned. "Not boiling oil, madam, not boiling; couldn't you reduce the temperature a degree?"

She smiled. "We'll see, we'll see. You're an engaging boy, if you are a poor lawyer. I'm to spend the winter in my country house—not far from the Dane-Trent property—everybody's doing it this year. Motor down some Sunday for lunch."

"Sure, I'll come. Meanwhile, would you mind not telling anyone that you witnessed Mrs. Dane's will?"

"You don't think I'm proud of my part in that robbery, do you? I wouldn't have mentioned it now, but I wanted to square myself with Mark."

Mark Trent's mind was in a tumult as he chatted with her in the corridor, inquired for her health on the way down in the elevator, told her that he thought of her rich fruit cake whenever he attended a wedding. She looked up at him sharply as they waited at the curb.

"Then you still attend weddings?"

"Why not? I rather like them."

"After your experience, I should think you would shun them. Ever see Lola?"

"No."

"Here's my car. That's Dominique at the wheel. Remember him, don't you? He drove my horses before I had an automobile, and the only thing I have against him is that he recommended his friends the Jacques to your aunt. She made so much of Henri that he got dictator-minded and tried to run the whole place."

Jed Stewart was walking the floor when he entered his office. He stopped abruptly.

"Well," he demanded, "did she talk any more?"

"Not about the will. Why the dickens didn't you ask questions?"

"Didn't dare. Don't you see, Mark? Boy, don't you understand? Someone has snitched that second will she witnessed."

"Did you draw it?"

"Never heard of it. Perhaps your aunt had an acute attack of remorse. I argued with her, as much as a lawyer can argue, against cutting you out; she wouldn't come to me about a new will. Didn't Mrs. Gregory say that she had been distrait the last few times they had been together? She thinks it was because Mrs. Dane was making up her mind to disinherit you; you and I know that the will to that effect already had been drawn."

"You passed up a grand chance to cross-examine her, Jed."

"Didn't dare. She thinks the will she witnessed is the one probated; doesn't know that if it had been she would have been summoned to prove her signature. We mustn't let a suspicion of this second will get out. Where is it?"

"She said the Reyburn girl drove in as she left the place. Do you suppose Aunt Mary Amanda told her what was in it and that she—"

Jed Stewart stopped his restless pacing. His eyes and voice were troubled.

Rush to the Klondike

About twenty-eight thousand persons rushed to Alaska when the news of gold in the Klondike region reached the outside world.

What Irvin S. Cobb Thinks about

Summer Influenza.

SANTA MONICA, CALIF.—In this favored land we are now starting to celebrate the customary seasonal rite of having our summer influenza.

Summer influenza is distinguished from winter influenza by the fact that the former does not set in until September, thereby providing intervals for spring and fall to slip in between.

Irvin S. Cobb

The symptoms remain practically the same. The eyes water copiously, but the nose runs second. The head stops up thoroughly, thus providing proof of the fallacy of the old adage—all sinus fail in dry weather. The patient barks like a trained seal, but the difference here is that the seal stops barking if you toss him a hunk of raw fish.

One could go on at length, but it's difficult to continue a writing job when you're using a nasal inhalent to punctuate with and have a taste in your mouth like moth balls smothered in creosote dressing.

The Art of Cussing.

MY OLD chum Burgess Johnson, once an editor but now a college professor, tells a credulous bunch of advertising men that Mark Twain was the champion all-time all-American cusser—could cuss five solid minutes without repeating himself.

Pardon me, Burgess, but Mark Twain never did any such thing. Once I heard him at his out-cussingest best—denouncing a publisher who had offended him. He swore for five minutes all right, but over and over again he used the same few familiar oaths which the English-speaking race always have used. He didn't introduce a new or an original one.

I studied the art of cussing, both by note and by ear, under such gifted masters of profanity as southern steamboat mates, New York newspaper men, London cab drivers, western mule whackers and north woods timber choppers.

With my hand on my heart I solemnly affirm that not one of these alleged experts ever employed any save the dependable age-seasoned standbys, to wit, seven adjectives, two strong nouns, one ultrastrong noun and one compound phrase—the commonest of all.

Romance for King Zog.

FOR about the fifth time comes a plaintive plea from Albania, one of those remote little border countries of eastern Europe where every now and then peace threatens to break out. They have a king over there. At least they had a king at the time of going to press with this dispatch. His name is King Zog. This is neither a typographical error nor a vaudeville gag. The name positively is Zog, and radio comedians may make the most of it.

For many months he has been paging the world for a wife. The qualifications call for the lady to have $5,000,000. His majesty would also like for her to turn Mohammedan, but the main requirement is that $5,000,000 bank roll.

California's Coastline.

WHILE it's quite a roomy coastline, California has at present only one coastline. This is a source of mortification to patriotic native sons, Florida having two such, one on either side, besides a dampish area in the middle known as the Everglades.

Still, in a way, California's silvery strand continues to excel. Within easy speeding distance we have at least one beach resort where, when Palm Springs folds up on account of the heat, many of our artistic colony go to relax. So wholeheartedly do some go in for this that often you may stand off a quarter of a mile and hear them relaxing.

Occasionally a relaxationist relaxes so completely that it takes weeks for him to get over it. His friends leave him at the seaside only to gather at the bedside.

The Changing World.

IT WAS Susan B. Anthony who dedicated her life to the cause of emancipation for her sex. But it was her grandniece who lately attained the headlines by suggesting that, with the addition of a buckle here and a ribbon there, a nightie would make a suitable evening gown for almost any occasion.

Thus do we see how from one generation on to another is handed down the flame of genius and service to womankind.

But, although the inspired suggestion is already weeks old, there still are no signs that it is finding advocates among the queen bees of the cultural hive. Maybe the reason is that a belle of the Hollywood artistic group would feel so ostentatiously overdressed if she wore a full-fashioned nightie to a social function.

Items of Interest to the Housewife

Cleaning Silver.—Moist salt will remove egg tarnish from silver.

Washing Woolens.—Rinse woolens in warm water to which a little olive oil has been added. This helps to keep them soft.

Washing Linoleum. — Oilcloth and linoleum will dry with a brighter finish if a lump of sugar is dissolved in the scrubbing water.

Removing Spots From Tile.—Spots can be removed from the tile bathroom floor by rubbing with a cloth moistened with kerosene and then polishing with one moistened with paraffin.

Rice, Scrambled Eggs, Cheese.—Have ready a border of rice (boiled) in a dish. Make some scrambled eggs to which cheese has been added. Place the mixture in the center of the dish and sprinkle a little chopped parsley over the top. Serve piping hot.

Clearing the Atmosphere.—Burn a few drops of vinegar on a hot shovel for a quick way of clearing the smell of stale smoke out of a room.

Barbecued Ham.—Fry the required number of thin ham slices from a left-over boiled ham. Arrange them in a serving dish, and pour the following sauce over them; add to the ham fat in the frying pan a teaspoonful of made mustard, half a teaspoonful sugar, three tablespoonfuls vinegar and a tablespoonful of red currant jelly. Warm all the ingredients up together, sprinkle with paprika (optional) and pour over the ham.

Chilling Canned Fruits.—Before placing canned fruits in the refrigerator to chill remove the paper label which acts as an insulator.

Quick Mayonnaise.—The yellow part of an egg is thoroughly beaten up with a teaspoon vinegar. Add some salt and pepper. Pour oil over it and whip the mixture thoroughly. Then add two dessertspoons of vinegar and one tablespoon boiling water.

The Consumer's Privilege

THE term "patent medicine" is a misnomer. Originally it signified a patent of royal favor granted long before there was a United States patent office. In our time, when few medical products are patented, national advertising identifies the integrity of the manufacturer of scientifically prepared proprietary drug products. Advertising enables the public to choose from the world's output, to accept or reject on a basis of merit. This is a greater privilege than royal favor. And it is a privilege that comes to you through the service of your local druggist.

Hot Weather is Here— Beware of Biliousness!

Have you ever noticed that in very hot weather your organs of digestion and elimination seem to become torpid or lazy? Your food sours, forms gas, causes belching, heartburn, and a feeling of restlessness and irritability. Perhaps you may have sick headache, nausea and dizziness or blind spells on suddenly rising. Your tongue may be coated, your complexion bilious and your bowel actions sluggish or insufficient.

These are some of the more common symptoms or warnings of biliousness or so-called "torpid liver," so prevalent in hot climates. Don't neglect them. Take Calotabs, the improved calomel compound tablets that give you the effects of calomel and salts, combined. You will be delighted with the prompt relief they afford. MY TRIP TO AUBURN

My trip to Auburn began Monday May 31st While going through Montgomery we stopped at the Capital and ate lunch on the Capital grounds. Adding more interest to our trip, we visited the negro Institute at Tuskeegee. At the institute we saw much of the work that the girls in Home Ecomomics had been doing during the year.

We reached Auburn about 3:30 P. M. Monday. We registered and went to our cabins to unpaks. Later in the afternoon we went on a campus tour with the College 4-H Club in charge. At 6:30 we were at the Tiger Cafe ready for supper. After supper we went to vespers which is a devotional service. In Landon Hall we heard the welcomed Address given by Dr. L. N. Duncan, President of Alabama Polytechnic Institute. Other interesting talks were given by Fritzie Bolling, President of Alabama 4-H council and Miss Helen Johnston, State Home Demonstration Agent.

Following our good night's rest, we were up and ready for our breakfast at 6:30 A. M. As we had to keep our cabins clean, they would give us about forty-five minutes to get it straightened up. At 8:00 we went to the Animal Husbandry Building to study poultry. Following our study we had thirty minutes of group discussion, which is, reviewing the points which have been completed. After group discussion we assembled in Langdon Hall where we studied Flower Arrangement and 4-H Club organization.

Dinner was served at 12:45 and a period of rest was given us. We met on the steps of Langdon Hall at 1:45 to have our picturs made. Fifteen minutes later we assembled in the hall where we heard a discussion on Personal Health given by B. F. Austin, M. D. When the talk was finished we had an hour of group discussion. As the Clock struck four, we were ready for recreation. After taking part in recreation we were in need of the short rest period. At 6:00 we ate supper and when we finished it, assembled at the Amphitheatre for Vesper. Lots for the Amateur Program.

Just think, two days had passed and there were only two more days for us to remain in camp. Until afternoon we did th esame things as we did on the previous days. Again at 2:00 we assembled at Langdon Hall where we listened to a very interesting talk on Personality given by Miss Sallie Hill. Following the talk we remained in Langdon Hall for an hour of group discussion and at 4:00 we had recreation. We ate supper at 6:00 and went to vespers forty-five minutes later. The Recreation Hall held another great night for us, which was Stunt and song night.

The siren awakened us at 6:00 and we were at breakfast by 6:30. After our rest period we went to the Animal Husbandry Building for another study of Poultry and anoral discussion on Table Etiquette was added. Finishing our study, we had group discussion in the same building. Following this we ate dinner. For the assembly in Langdon Hall we were entertained by Director P. O. Davis and Mrs. Albert Thomas, Commissioner of Girls Scouting, who lectured on "Inspirational Talk", and "Girl Scouting". After lectures were finished we had about an hour of group discussion which was followed by an hour and a half of recreation. Finishing recreatioon we made preparation for supper which was to be served at 6:00 and went to vespers at 6:45. At the close of vespers, we dressed and were entertained with a costume party.

After a good night's rest we were up by 6:00 and ready to begin the last full day at Auburn. Breakfastt was served and finished by 7:15. From 8:00 until 12:00 a number of interesting talks were enjoyed. Another appetizing meal was served at 12:45. From dinner until 2:00 we rested. At 2:00, a very interesting talk on "My Trip To California" was given by Mrs. John Lee. To change from seriousness to humor, we took part in an hour and a hal fof recreation. Our supper was served at 6:00 and we went to vesper at 6:45. To me, the most interesting night was Friday night. We visited Dr. Duncan's home. Other interesting things which took place at r. Duncan's were Dress Revue, Introduction of Bread Contest Winner, Introduction of Health Champions and last, the Candle Lighting Ceremony.

It was hard for us to go to sleep Friday night because we knew this was the last night to spend in camp, At 6:15 Saturday morning, we paid our last visit to the Tiger Cafe and by 7:15 we were on our way home.

A Hint To Club Girls

Work hard and do your best. Try to win this trip to Auburn. You will enjoy it and it will be of help to you in many ways.

Sincerely,
Margarette Coats.
A 4-H Club Girl.

CIRCUIT COURT POSTPONED

Due to the fact, it was necessary to fill the Jury Box before holding Court, the Civil Jury Term of the Circuit Court and the Grand Jury will not convene in Columbiana, until the 4th Monday in July. The Criminal Jury term o fthe Circuit Court, will begin on the second Monday in August (August 9th) allowing one week between the Grand Jury and the holding of the Criminal Court, according to an announcement made by Judge W. W. Wallace Wednesday.

MACEY AND JONES

Messrs Macey and Jones, State Examiners, who have made legions of friends in Columbiana, during their stay here in their official capacity, will likely wind up their assignment in this County and leave next Saturday. Personally, we join a host of friends in sincerely regretting their leave taking. They have become a part of our community life here and we have enjoyed their comradeship, co-operative spirit, and general LIKABILITY! We reluctantly say goodbye — but wholeheartedly wish them continued success and happiness.

CUPID

Cupid continues his activities during the month of June—and 24 wedding bells pealed forth their melody for 24 couples who signed on the dotted line "for better or for worse" in Judge Len C. Walker's license bureau in the Probate office during this romantic month.

FIRST DEMOCRATIC PRIMARY IN 1934

In the first Democratic primary in 1934, there were 305,178 votes cast for the three candidates for Governor Graves received 132,462, Dixon 97,508, and McCord 75,208. In the second primary there were 292,449 votes cast. Graves received 157,140 and Dixon 135,309. In the general election that same year 178,528 votes were cast for Governor. The Democratic nominee received 155,197 votes the Republican candidate 22,621, the Socialist candidate 440, and the Communist 270.

It will be noted that 127,650 more votes were cast in the first Democratic primary than were cast in the general election.

HOME DEMONSTRATION CLUBS OF SHELBY COUNTY MET ON JUNE 30th FOR ANNUAL RALLY

The Home Demonstration Clubs of Shelby County held their annual rally in Columbiana on Wednesday June 30th at the Court House. The meeting was called to order by Mrs. J. C. Brumbaugh, president of the County Council, and the program opened by the singing of "Alabama". Mrs. W. A. Cobb of the Camp Branch Club gave the scripture reading and Mrs. Rogers led in prayer. At this time the meeting was turned over to Miss Nolen who introduced the visitors, including Mr. J. L. Appleton, Superintendent of Education, Miss Mary George Burkes, Resettlement Home Supervisor, Miss Sallie Smoke school attendance officer, Miss Ethel Burkes of Langdale, and Miss Anne Watson, assistant home demonstration agent. Following this the public speaking contest was held, the subject being "Health for Rural America." First prize went to Mrs. J. C. Rogers of the Ebenezer Club, second to Mrs. Thelma Cross of the New Hope Club, and third to Mrs. H. G. Dennis of the New Hope Club. Mrs Rogers accompanied by Miss Nolen went to Auburn on July 2nd to enter the District contest. Following a stunt given by the New Hope Club, the meeting adjourned for a picnic lunch under the trees back of the Court House.

The afternoon meeting was called to order by Mrs. Brumbaugh. A report of standing committees followed stunts given by the Ebenezer and New Hope Clubs. Miss Barron of the Singer Sewing Machine Company talked on home furnishings and demonstrated the new machine attachments. The meeting adjourned at 1:45 in order that all present might visit "open house" conducted by Miss Helen Mitchell, home service director at the Alabama Power Company office, and "open house" at the lovely home of Mrs. Knox Wooley which was thrown open for the occasion. The club ladies also visited the new home demonstration office where they were given souvenirs.

During the afternoon meeting, officers for the coming year were selected as follows:

President..... Mrs. Frank Wyatt Klein Club.
Vice President....Mrs. Louis Tillman Dargin Club.
Secretary .... Mrs. Walter Chancellor Klein Club.
Treasurer ..... Mrs. Leon Baker Wright Club .
Scholarship ..... Mrs. Fred Hillman Camp Branch Club.
Citizenship ..... Mrs. H. G. Dennis New Hope Club.

VARIED ADVENTURES MAKE COBB 'TOPS' AS COLUMN WRITER

Backed by a life time packed with adventure, Irvin S. Cobb can draw both from the storehouse of memories and from his intuitive ability to discern the unusual. Thus he became a writer without peer in America's columnar field — a penman whose regular musings are sought eagerly by an ever-increasing band of humor fans.

Irvin S. Cobb

Cobb, whose Judge Priest stories will always rate as favorites in American literature, started his career as a newspaper man in his native state of Kentucky. Becoming an editor before reaching the age of twenty, his popularity began spreading rapidly. Novels, plays and magazine articles flowed from his witty and prolific pen as the years went by.

He turned to war correspondent work, later becoming a favorite radio star. Recently Cobb entered a new field—the movies. Here again he bids fair to capture a great audience.

But readers of The Democrat need not wait for occasional magazine articles, radio performances or screen features to capture the wit and humor of Irvin S. Cobb. His column of musings on the world's side show is a regular feature of this paper, one that you won't want to miss. Get next to Cobb now. His distinct style and unusual slant on life will be a source of constant delight.

COURT AFFIRMS JACK-POT RULING

MONTGOMERY — The Alabama Court of Appeals held recently that theatre jack pots fall under the ban of our laws.

The jack-pot plan, providing cash prizes for patrons whose names are drawn ,is widely used in Alabama and elsewhere in the South under a 1935 copyright obtained by Foreman A. Rogers, of Auburn, Alabama.

The plan provides persons who register for matinee performances by the purchase of a ticket do not have to be present at the drawing to win, while all others must make their claims two minutes after their names are called.

Judge James Rice said in the unanimous opinion:

"We have no occasion to consider what would be the legal status of appellant's 'plan' without the 'matinee registration' feature. But we do not want to be understood as intimating that it would then be beyound the reach of the law."

Regarding the plan as a whole, Judge Rice wrote:

"The scheme falls under the ban of our laws."

MRS. J. C. ROGERS REPRESENTS SHELBY COUNTY IN CONTEST HELD IN AUBURN ON JULY 2ND

Mrs. J. C. Rogers of the Ebenezer Club was chosen at a recent Public Speaking Contest to represent Shelby County. The District Contest was held in Auburn on July 2nd at which time 14 contestants took part from District 2.

The subject for the public speaking contest was "Health For Rural America." The speeches showed a great deal of time and effort and thought. Shelby County should be proud to have had such an able representative.

CHURCH FEATURE IS PREPARED BY CAPABLE WRITER

Constant contact with young people in church work for many years has made a capable instructor of Harold L. Lundquist, dean of the

REV. LUNDQUIST

Moody Bible Institute at Chicago and author of the "Sunday School Lesson" which is a regular feautre of The Democrat.

Because of this ever present demand for instruction on the part of youth, Dean Lundquist has learned to express himself in the simplest terms. Thousands of Sunday School teachers refer to this syndicated article each week for their texts and explanations. Seldom has any newspaper feature reached such heights of popularity.

Dean Lundquist is a graduate of the University of Minnesota, a member of the bar, a former army man and churchman. These varied experiences enable him to understand human nature much better than the average person. He was schooled at the Princeton (N. J.) Theological Seminary and was graduated with the first class completing the pastors course at the Moody Institute.

But formal training does not account for Dean Lundquist's popularity as a speaker before young people's conventions, on anniversary occasions and at Men's Bible classes. His wide experiences have kept him abreast of the times, a requisite for popularity among youth today.

Lesson for July 11

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 3:1-12.

GOLDEN TEXT—Come now therefore, and I will send thee.—Exodus 3:10.

PRIMARY TOPIC—How God Answered His People's Prayer.

JUNIOR TOPIC—A Leader in the Making.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How to Get Ready to Work for God.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—How God Provides Leaders Today.

God calls men, commissions and uses them to carry out his plans and purposes in the earth. What a great truth that is and how it glorifies the destiny of man to know that it is divinely appointed. As Joseph Parker beautifully points out, the experience of Moses in Midian was a direct dealing with God, whereas we who may not be able to "see the fountain" must "be content to drink at the stream," but should always remember that the stream flows from that same fountain.

"Every man should put to himself the questions—What is my destiny? What does God mean me to be and to do in the world? . . . It is a most pitiful thing that a man should read of Moses being divinely called . . . to a special work" and fail to realize "that God has a special work for every man to do." Let us have a care that we do not "so pervert and misinterpret circumstances as to press them into a justification of self-will," rather than recognize them as "destiny which is beckoning us to duty."

For our instruction and guidance we consider then the story of the call of this outstanding leader of Israel. It presents him as a true servant of God—one who was

I. Personally Equipped.

While it is a blessed truth that God will use any man who surrenders himself to his control and guidance no matter how limited that man's ability and training may be, it is also true that, other things being equal, the man with the best equipment will be the most useful servant.

God gave Moses a unique preparation. He was first of all a Hebrew, born among the people that he was to lead. He knew the luxury and all the cultural advantages of the Egyptian court (Acts 7:22), with the safeguard of training by his own mother as his nurse. He observed at first hand the oppression of his people and made a self-willed and impulsive effort to deal with the problem. The result was that he had a "postgraduate" course of instruction and discipline in the wilderness where he spent forty years in the school of experience.

The leaders of God in our day need training. Some best receive it in schools, in Christian colleges, seminaries, and Bible schools true to the faith. Others prepare in the home, the church, and in the "university of hard knocks"—as someone has called the school of experience. Perhaps the best preparation is a balanced combination of the two, school and experience. But the important thing is to be prepared for God's call.

II. Spiritually Qualified.

Moses was a man who knew God. Had he been a worldly man he would have been but curious of the phenomenon of the burning bush. But note how alert and reverent he was and how immediately responsive to the instructions and the call of God.

All the training and preparation in the world is worse than useless in God's service apart from that spiritual qualification that comes from true regeneration and dedication to him. There is no more pathetic sight than a spiritually powerless church worker "going through the motions" of service for Christ. If we are in that condition we may be sure that we deceive no one but ourselves. Let us seek God in confession and in glad acceptance of his provision for both our redemption and our sanctification.

III. Divinely Called.

Moses was called (v. 4), commissioned (vv.6-10), and clad with divine authority (vv. 11-12) for his great task.

God calls his servants to different responsibilities and in different ways, but the important thing is that we should know that we are in his will and that we are answering his call.

No man or woman has any right to choose full-time Christian service simply as a desirable vocation, for it is a divine calling. Quite unscriptural was the attitude of the man who said that in a quiet woodland nook he had faced life's realities and had decided "to bet his life" on the preaching of the gospel.

On Giving of Alms

In giving of thy alms, inquire not so much into the person, as his necessity. God looks not so much upon the merits of him that requires, as into the manner of him that relieves; if the man deserve not, thou has given it to humanity.

Sense of Humor

A sense of humor enables us not so much to laugh at the people who provoke us, as to laugh at ourselves for being so easily provoked. —Robert Power.

A Few Little Smiles

THE TEXT

A little girl arrived home from her first attendance at Sunday school. Her mother asked her what was the subject the minister spoke about, and she replied, "Six pieces of suet."

"Oh, no, my dear," said the mother, "you've made a mistake."

"Well, mother, that's what he said."

Meeting the minister later in the week the mother asked him if he remembered the title of the text he gave the children the previous Sunday.

"Yes," he said. "Seek peace and ensue it."

"They was in. They is out. Where's your grammar?"

"She's gone upstairs," said the boy, "for a lay-down."—Hartford Courant.

Engagement Rings

"You promised that you would let me give you an engagement ring."

"Jewelry doesn't signify much," answered Miss Cayenne. "When I decide that I wish to be engaged, I'll give you the ring, as feminine independence now has the right to do. And if I give you a ring on the telephone, it'll really mean something."

Barber Ship?

Madge—Don't you sailors have a special ship where you get your hair cut? A sort of floating barber shop?

Sailor—No, there ain't no such ships in our fleet.

Madge—Then what are these clipper ships I've heard so much about?

Stock-Taster

"Your husband isn't working any more?"

"Naw, they fired him from the distillery where he was."

"What for?"

"Staying late to take stock."

In Aberdeen

Father—I want you to quit keeping company with Sandy. For two cents I'd ask him to go.

Scaling Fish — Dipping fish in boiling water will aid in scaling them.

For Scratched Furniture — Furniture scratches may be hidden by painting with iodine and then rubbing with furniture polish.

Washing Flannels — Next time you are washing flannels or woolens put about a taspoonful of olive oil in the water. It will keep them beautifully soft.

A Curtain Tip — Casement curtains will hang in even folds if small bags of silver sand are sewn to the corners of the lower-edge hems. The sand adds just enough weight to the curtains to prevent them rolling at the edges and these "weights" can be washed with the curtains.

Cleaning Silverware — When your silverware becomes tarnished, place it in an aluminum saucepan and cover with hot water in which potatoes have been boiled. Leave for an hour, then rinse and it will look like new, without the usual cleaning.

Double Duty for Soap — When I buy toilet soap I put it away among the sheets and pillow cases, to which it gives an attractive fresh fragrance and, of course, the soap is all the better for keeping.

A Warm Meal—Instead of putting food into the oven to keep hot for late-comers, cover it closely with a tin or basin, and set it over a saucepan of hot water. It will keep hot without drying.

Watch Your Kidneys!

Help Them Cleanse the Blood of Harmful Body Waste

Your kidneys are constantly filtering waste matter from the blood stream. But kidneys sometimes lag in their work—do not act as Nature intended—fail to remove impurities that, if retained, may poison the system and upset the whole body machinery.

Symptoms may be nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—a feeling of nervous anxiety and loss of pep and strength.

Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder may be burning, scanty or too frequent urination.

There should be no doubt that prompt treatment is wiser than neglect. Use Doan's Pills. Doan's have been winning new friends for more than forty years. They have a nation-wide reputation. Are recommended by grateful people the country over. Ask your neighbor!

"LITTLE STORIES FOR BEDTIME"

by Thornton W. Burgess

HOW OL' MISTAH BUZZARD WARMS HIS TOES

OFTEN and often had Peter Rabbit wondered how Ol' Mistah Buzzard and all his other feathered friends who had flown away to the far away south at the first hint that Jack Frost was on his way to the Green Meadows spent the long winter. It seemed to Peter that the South must be a very wonderful and very strange place. He was not at all sure that he would like it. It must be very nice not to have to worry about finding enough to eat, and yet—well, Peter did have lots of fun in the snow. It seemed to him that all those little people who went away certainly missed a great deal. Now, Winsome Bluebird had returned from that far away South with the good news that Mistress Spring was not far behind, and Winsome had promised to tell him all the news of Ol' Mistah Buzzard and the other friends.

"You see," began Winsome, "Ol' Mistah Buzzard was born and brought up in the South, where it is always warm, and he just can't stand cold weather. No, sir, he can't stand cold weather. Why, weather that you and I would call comfortable will make him shiver and shake. That is why he wasn't ready to come up with me. Now, I come ahead of Mistress Spring, but Ol' Mistah Buzzard won't start until he is sure that Mistress Spring has been here some time, and he will be sure not to have cold feet."

"Cold feet!" cried Peter. "Who ever heard of such a thing! Why, I run around on the snow and ice all winter long and I never have cold feet."

"Well, Ol' Mistah Buzzard does," replied Winsome Bluebird. "Yes, sir, he is always complaining about cold feet. You know, he hasn't any shoes or stockings like you, Peter, so between his bare feet and his bald head he has, or thinks he has, a great deal to worry about every time there is a cool day, and they sometimes have cool days even way down South. Then you will always find Ol' Mistah Buzzard warming his toes."

Peter scratched his head in a funny way. "If you please, Winsome, how does he warm his toes?" asked Peter. "I never see him warming his toes when he is up here. He's always sailing round and round way up in the blue, blue sky or else sitting on a dead tree in the Green Forest. I've never heard him complain of cold feet or seen him try to warm his toes."

"Of course, you haven't!" replied Winsome. "He doesn't have cold feet then, because it's summer time. It's just as you say, if you don't see him up in the blue, blue sky you are sure to find him on that old dead tree. But down South it is different. If you want to see him there and he isn't way up in the blue, blue sky trying to get nearer to Mr. Sun so as to warm his bald head, why you just look for him on a toe-warmer."

Peter's eyes seemed to fairly pop out with curiosity. "What's a toe-warmer?" he demanded. "I never heard of such a thing. What does it look like?"

Winsome Bluebird chuckled softly. "Have you ever been up by Farmer Brown's house?" he asked.

Peter nodded.

"Then you've seen that thing on the roof out of which smoke sometimes comes," continued Winsome. Again Peter nodded. "Well," continued Winsome, "if Farmer Brown's house was down South that thing out of which smoke comes would be one of Ol' Mistah Buzzard's toe-warmers."

Peter looked sharply at Winsome to see if he really meant what he said. "Doesn't anybody live in those houses down South?" he asked suspiciously.

"Of course," replied Winsome. "If they didn't how could Mistah Buzzard warm his toes?"

"And he isn't afraid?" persisted Peter, as if it was very hard to believe.

"Afraid!" cried Winsome. "Why, he hasn't anything to be afraid of. Mr. Buzzard is thought a great deal of, a very great deal of, in the South, and no one would hurt him for the world. So every house has a toe-warmer for him, which is very nice for him. And you won't see him back here until it is so warm that he forgets all about cold feet," concluded Winsome Bluebird.

WHO'S NEWS THIS WEEK...

By Lemuel F. Parton

Modern Damon and Pythias.

NEW YORK.—Kid McCoy, at sixty-five, is twenty years older than Harry Bennett, but for many years their's has been a Damon and Pythias friendship. Bennett, commander of Henry Ford's militant home guard against labor unions, learned about fighting from McCoy. He was a sailor when Ford bought some wooden boats from the government.

They threw in Bennett, along with boats, and Ford found it a good bargain. He became a personnel officer at the Dearborn plant, becoming, in time, as the years slipped off the conveyor belt, the head of the Ford "protective" organization.

In 1932, McCoy finished a confinement of seven years for having shot his sweetheart. By this time, Bennett had a yacht and a castle on the Huron. For old times' sake, he gave his friend a $6-a-day job and a gold badge, explaining, plausibly it seemed, that his organization included a limited number of former convicts, and that there was no reason why it shouldn't if they behaved themselves and did their work. McCoy, helping expand and direct the "service men," now enters a serene old age, fit and vigorous, younger than his years, doing the work he likes best.

Bennett was "Sailor Reese" in the years when he was a lightweight boxer in the navy. It was in 1896 that McCoy became world welterweight champion, by defeating Tommy Ryan. It was years later that the young sailor entered his New York gymnasium and told him of his ambitions as a boxer.

McCoy trained Reese, without charge. It has been frequently on record in the newspapers that Reese became lightweight champion of the navy. However, this writer, scouting information among such lightweight navy champs of twenty-five years ago as Sam Robideau, Joe Fisher and Paddy Mills, has been unable to pick up his trail.

Where Sailor Reese knocked off and Harry Bennett took over is equally elusive. A curtain is drawn over the beginnings of this particular Alger story—the story of a boy who makes good by watching a clock—to see that the other lads punch it.

Current news reports reveal Bennett and McCoy as working in a deep, inaccessible basement of the Administration building, deploying an army of "college athletes, former prizefighters and ex-convicts," both ready to wade in with the hired men as emergency swampers if need be.

Bennett is small, agile, muscular and given to direct action. For pastime, he practices pistol shooting, reads mystery stories and goes hunting.

The Troublesome Doukhobors.

The story of the Canadian Doukhobors might make a good study for Robert Allison Parker, author of the recently published "Father Divine," and a specialist in Messianic psychology. They remain shaggy, nude and obdurate, with their leader, Peter Verigin II, again having jail troubles in British Columbia.

He is the head of an organization supposedly owning about $10,000,000 worth of property, but the court confirms his jail sentence for vagrancy. His huge, barrel-chested father, with whiskers like a percheron's uncurried fetlocks, was killed in a train wreck in 1924, and Peter II came over in 1927 to head the sect, the Russians having jailed him for heresy and released him on the condition that he leave the country.

He is big and bewhiskered and commanding, like his father, but parades in the nude and other eccentricities had brought the law on the Doukhobors, and he has done little but fight off writs and processes. He was saved from deportation from Canada by a Halifax judge in 1933.

The Doukhobors, or "spirit wrestlers," as they sometimes call themselves, are a strange hold-out in the modern lock-step. They'll catch step, if they are just allowed to shed their clothes.

Youth on the Bench.

Nine years out of college, Charles Poletti becomes a justice of the Supreme court of New York, at the age of thirty-three. He is the son of a stone-cutter in Barre, Vt. He dickered for an old Ford, traveled and sold maps to get through high school, and tended furnaces and waited on table to get through Harvard. He finished law school in 1928.

Several of his nine years were put in at the Universities of Rome and Lyons and at the League of Nations. Then he got a job in the illustrious John W. Davis law office and became general counsel for the Democratic committee in 1932. A year later, Governor Lehman made him his legal adviser. He is short, sturdy, dark, galvanic, of Italian parentage and boiling over with energy.

Judge Often Handed Down Humor "From the Bench"

Late Lord Darling Livened Drab Scenes With Pleasantries.

Many are the stories told about Lord Darling—better known as Mr. Justice Darling, "England's wittiest judge"—who died recently. He was a poet, with several published volumes to his credit. But it was his humor "from the bench" that made his name almost a household word.

On one occasion, a talesman claimed exemption from jury duty on the ground that he was completely deaf in the left ear.

"You can go," said Judge Darling, gravely; "I cannot have anyone in the jury box who cannot hear both sides."

A lawyer who had the misfortune never to have acquired the ability to use the letter "h" (relates Silvain Mayer in his "legal" reminiscences), was engaged before Justice Darling in a case which had relation to a horse. For some time the lawyer kept referring to the animal as "an orse." After a while, Darling looked down and said:

"Was the animal a large horse or a little one?"

"Oh, a little one."

"Then," said the judge, "may we, for the remainder of the case, call it a pony?"

In another case before Justice Darling—in which a Cockney caterer was suing to recover the cost of a picnic luncheon he had provided for a large number of people—the plaintiff waxed highly indignant, under cross-examination, when it was suggested that his sandwiches were mostly "bread and bread," with the ham conspicuous only by its absence.

"I h'am amazed; I h'am surprised; I h'am—," he sputtered.

"That will do!" interrupted Darling. "I suggest that had you been more generous with your hams on another occasion and a little less liberal with them here, you might not have found yourself in this situation!"—Kansas City Star.

Identifying Houses

Before houses were numbered, London's business streets were lined on both sides by a succession of gay signboards exhibiting an almost infinite variety of blue boars, black swans, red lions, flying pigs and the like. Even with these signs it was often hard to find one's destination, for the signs were often so badly painted that it would have puzzled a naturalist to make out the animal meant.

Think It Over

Mongols! Madam, Barked Sir Howorth

Sir Henry Howorth was taken aback one day when introduced to a gushing lady who declared that she was so charmed to meet him because she wished to talk to him about her little dog.

"But I know nothing about dogs," he protested.

"Oh, how can you say so," she said, "when you have written books about them?"

"Never, madam, never!"

"But surely," she persisted, "you have written a history of the mongrels?"

"Mongols, madam, mongols!" he barked. "Not mongrels."—London Answers.

BODY TURN AND MIS-TURN

THERE is a wide difference between proper body turn and sway but the average player often has a hard time discerning the difference between the two. For instance the player, at the left in the above illustration, is quite sure he is conforming to all the fundamentals that go with a correct body turn but actually the result is an obvious sway. Instead of turning the left hip to the right slowly in co-operation with the straight left arm, the player has lifted the club with his right hand and in doing so has raised the upper part of his body. Naturally the left arm has been extended in the process but the right arm is so far out from the body that it favors a downswing arc from the outside in. The actual downswing will be more of a lurch than a gradual unturning of the bodily muscles because the weight is far off center to the right and the left leg is not in a position to bear the start of the return weight shift with any smoothness. There is a woeful waste of energy too in the inaccurate wrist cock which must depend, in this situation at least, for shoulder power to give any momentum to the downstroke. In direct contrast to this method is the swing of Jones' in the right hand figure. Jones' body has turned freely beneath the head as an anchor, the left is straight, the right arm in close and the full wrist cock plus the bodily windup insures a powerful downward blow.

CREATIVE ability is one of Destiny's most valuable gifts.

The skilled and helpfully minded palmist may often stimulate latent creative ability to constructive activities along worthwhile lines which the fortunate possessor has been indolent in following. Analyze the third finger with a view to explaining, broadly at least, the possible outlets for the creative urge as indicated by its conformation as a type.

The Psychic Finger of Brilliance.

Here is a type of third finger which, unless your analysis is made with thoroughness, may be confused with the Inventive type discussed in Lesson 39. The reason for this is that it leans toward the fourth finger much after the fashion of the Inventive type. In the Psychic Finger of Brilliance this characteristic is far more pronounced, however, and with the hand extended wide, the entire finger is found to lie much closer to the fourth finger. The Psychic type of third finger, despite its tilt toward the fourth finger, is usually quite straight. Its length is marked, and its tip is always even with and sometimes well above the tip of the second finger. The entire finger is rather bony in structure, with knuckles somewhat knotty and the spaces between them bound in or "corsetted." The nail is usually long and somewhat pear-shaped, and is always well set. Under backward pressure, a peculiar resilient tension is felt.

HERE'S WHY FIRESTONE ALWAYS GIVES YOU SO MUCH

More for your Money

Higher Quality Raw Materials! More Efficient Manufacturing! Lower Distribution Cost!

These All Combine to Give You Extra Values at No Extra Cost

FROM the day of its introduction, the Firestone Standard Tire has more than lived up to its name by setting a new high standard of tire values. Hundreds of thousands of car owners have already bought it because they saw in it more value for their money.

"How does Firestone do it? How can they build so many extra value features into Firestone Standard Tires and yet sell them at such low prices?" The answer is simple—Firestone controls better-quality rubber and cotton supplies at their source, keeps manufacturing costs low by efficient factory methods and sells in such huge volume that distribution costs are held to a minimum. That is why Firestone has been able to give you such extra value features as Gum-Dipping and two extra layers of Gum-Dipped cords under the tread.

Make no mistake about this! The Firestone Standard Tire gives you the blowout protection of Firestone's patented Gum-Dipping process. Its scientifically designed tread gives greater non-skid protection and longer wear. And those two extra layers of Gum-Dipped cords under the tread guard against punctures.

Before you buy ANY tire at ANY price, see today's top tire value—the Firestone Standard Tire. Don't risk your life with thin, worn tires on your Fourth of July trip. Join the Firestone SAVE A LIFE Campaign today. Let your Firestone Dealer or Firestone Auto Supply & Service Store equip your car with a set of new Firestone Standard Tires.

THE GATEWAY TO GREATER TIRE VALUES

TODAY, from the jungles of Liberia, there has arisen a great rubber plantation on which the world's finest rubber is being produced.

From the Firestone-owned and Firestone-developed rubber plantations in Liberia there comes an ever-increasing supply of rubber, bringing greater savings to car owners in the form of extra values at no extra cost.

VILLAGE CHATTER FROM SILURIA

Say, did any of you see the 4th lurking around in this place Sunday? They say the old fellow was in town but we failed to see him. Too bad. Personally, we're kinda glad he don't venture out but once a year. By these remarks you'll gather the 4th was somewhat dull in our vicinity this time . . . . Zora Leach has gone and got herself all "prettied" up with a new permanent. We only hope none of these nice compliments passing back and forth in the beauty salon about the color o fher hair have gone to her head. We'll have to admit it is a lovely red . . . . Siluria was well represented at the show in Calera Saturday night. We had a grand time and we certainly have the Floyd's to thank for that—and by the way, we sure would like to know who the nice young man was who went to the trouble to explain a new master dial radio to us . . . We liked the radio just fine Mr. . . whoever you were, but it didn't fit our pocket books so here we are minus that beautiful piece of furniture . . . Muriel and Marie, you looked sorta fagged out along towards the middle of Saturday afternoon. No woner with all those permanents, finger waves, and what nots coming in. What was it that exasperated you all so dreadfully Friday afternoon? Now, now, girls, you must have patience. While we're over at Alabaster what about that dinky little dress shop Joe P. Wagoner has opened up over there? We like it. If Joe P. ever decides to commit suicide all he'll have to do "let himself go". Those steps! will be to open the back door and They're tree top tall . . . Having returned from a delightful trip to Kentucky, Mr. John Denham, like all good business men, rushed down to the store, where he's manager (incidentally his other half was down there too) and as he joyfully entered the door his young son Jimmy announced in no small voice "Here's Old Kentuck!" Think you got something there. Maybe a future radio announcer . . . Any way you look at it, Carlton Keel and Lonnie Maudling got a tough break Saturday in town when some fellow gave their car a nasty bump and turned them over. Lonnie was bruised up considerable and we are very sorry to learn that he is confined to his bed. . . . Two of our young citizens got bit by the love bug recently and the crisis came Saturday night when they got married. Oh, yeah, we almost forgot to tell you but it was Lola Kate Sweny and Jerry Posey . . . . Ella Ree Cost, that girl, took off for Clanton Sunday to the Air Carnival. The new boy friend was————! Can't tell. . . One of the sweetest girls we've ever known came back to her old home town for a spend the day visit with Mrs. Fern Ward last week. Need we say or don't you all know we mean Mrs Polly Winn Shaddix. Even though Pollye now lives in Lincoln, Siluria still claims her for its own and we hope she repeats her visit soon. She says of her little baby boy, "His name is James Thomas, he's the grandest baby in the world nd I just love him to death." All in one breath. Who wouldn't love him if he's like his dear Mater . . . . Tsk tsk, Alvis Bradley, what you got your mind on? We informed Alvis,upo n his giving up a life, that we were headed for "Chuck's" where upon, he very courteously delivered us to church. This, mind you, was in the afternoon when no services were in order . . . . Refering to Sunday afternoons deluge, we can truthfully say, "the bottom fell out" as a result the double header ball game between Buck Creek and Fairfield Sheet Mills was postponed . . . Betty Sue Robinson had on the most darling little pink dress at Sunday School we most ever saw . . . Ocie, we wonder if you really lost your temper the other day when that car balked on you in front of our house . . From all appearances you did . . . Attendance at Sunday School was away below par Sunday on account of it was the Fourth. Everybody left out. . . . We have never in our life seen so many "Gone With The Wind" dresses. We overheard a certain male remark that he wished some one would invent a "Sunset" dress. We wonder what he meant. . . . We were asked the other day if we could give a definition for a husband. Well folks, our version of this would be that a husband is what's left of a Sweetheart after the NERVE has been removed. We also think that a man is proof enough that a woman can take a joke . . . . We believe all the women will agree on that. If any of you men have a complaint to make just let us know and we'll see what can be done about it . . . We are very glad to hear that Mr. Henry Naish is much improved, and we hope he will soon be out again. H ehas been ill at the home of his sister, Mrs Jess Nabors for the past week . . . . Sadie and Lee Esther went down to Faunsdale Monday to visit Sadie's mother. They report a nice trip. . . We certainly did enjoy that spend the night party at Mr. and Mrs. Willie Howard's Friday night . . . . As the Katydids drone a fitting lullaby we feel an urge to drift off to dreamland. So long folks!

The same
Nell and Nelle.

MILDRED WHITE WALLACE, Social Editor

JULY 5th

Echoes of July 4th! Picnic (with ants). Firecrackers! Crowded highways! Wrecks along the way! The scream of an ambulance! Sunburn! Swimming! Drowning! Hikes to the country! Chiggers! Business houses suspending all activities! Record attendance at beauty contests! Airship demonstrations! In spite of safety warnings—many fatalities! Another 4th passes into history.

WATERMELONS!

And it is watermelon time in Dixie Land! A southern picture which we seldom see now, is vividly brought to mind by Clara Calloway Seay in her pen point recollections. She states: "One of the unfading pictures of southern genuineness is of a rickety old wagon, drawn by a mule driven with rope lines, by an old white haired darkey, piled high with lucious green watermelons, two or three pickaninies sitting up behind. The melody that accompanies the picture is the rich, sweet, but tremulous rhythm of the driver, who sings as he holds the lines. "Here's yo watermelon, fresh an' fine, right off the vine. All yo need is a silver dime." However, this is a picture of by-gone days. We now look for truckloads of this southern fruit—and the first we have seen we viewed in the Magic City—but even at this we waggered on whether it was white or black seed—and Yummy-Yummy—was it good? So, here's to the first pop of the rind—the first jab of the knife—into that ruby heart—and ME for the biggest half after it is opened from now on until September 1, which is the dead line for eating the last one.

Robert Earl Betts, who has been vacationing in Columbiana this summer returned with his parents Sunday.

AMELIA

Uncle Sam's daughter, Amelia, who started around the world for fun is costing the old boy plenty of kale in his endeavor to bring her back to the home base. Radio, ships and many official dignataries have turned their attention to this mysterious disappearance—of one of the world's most famous fliers. Here's hoping for a safe and happy landing for the avatrix. Suspense is terrific. Reality not nearly so terrible! We pity th anxious hearts and the loved ones who have been forced to "stand by and WAIT" WAITING can be the most trying of all experiences.

Norman Lefkovits, of Birmingham, was a cordially greeted guest in the Democrat office on Tuesday, returning from Pensacola Beach, with the much sought "Florida Tan." This young business man has many friends in Columbiana, who were delight ed to welcome him home again.

W. M. S. MEETING

The Methodist Missionary Society held its monthly social meeting on Monday, June 28th at the hospitable home of Mrs. E. B. Lyon, with Mrs. Luther Fowler as joint hostess.

The thirsty land was receiving refreshing showers which the members enjoyed as a material blessing. The interesting and well prepared program brought to us spiritual blessings which refreshed our minds and hearts.

Mrs. Hope used Eph. 3: 14-20 as the basis of the worship and meditation on "The Making of a Missionary."

The Christian Social Relations Committee had charge of the missionary program, with Mrs. J. R. White, Superintendent as Leader.

A very interesting review of the leaflet, "Christian Missions and the social Leaven" was given by Mrs. Ed Lovelady.

Mrs. Tom Taylor brought a message from the "World Outlook," "Two McTyiere Graduates," "A Mother and her Daughter." which denicted the changes that have come in education in China in the past forty years; showing also the influence of Christian Education.

Mrs. Fowler announced plans for the Zone Meeting. Mrs. W. L. Christian reported that the Local Committee was making plans for repairing and re-decorating the church.

The hostesses served iced lemonade and cakes.

MRS. HOMER WALTON ZONE MEETING

....Mrs. Homer Walton was the guest speaker at the T. P. Roberts' Zone Meeting in Childersburg last Wednesday, the 30th. The Program theme was: Four Fold Ideals. Mrs. Walton was invited to speak on Physical Ideals or Health.

Her message was logical, practical, beautiful and very helpful. Her pleasing, friendly and understanding personality won for her a number of friends in this new group and her services were greatly appreciated by the entire Zone.

Miss Vivian Booker of Carbon Hill is being cordially welcomed in Columbiana. Miss Booker will be on the official staff of Doris Bender, director of Public Welfare in Shelby County.

CHARLES McGHEE

If you haven't heard Baby Charles McGhee, two years old, sing without missing a single note "Fing Low Sweet Chariot"—and "Boo Hoo?"—you have something in store for your ears—if they are musically inclined. This popular town favorite carries the melody perfectly—and changes keys when he happens to pitch the song too lown for his Baritone voice! Look out for this Master of Ceremonies—some 18 years hence!

Mr. and Mrs. Joe Davidson and two children of Helena, accompanied by Mr. J. B. Pitts have returned from a delightful tour of the West including Sherman, Texas, where they were the guests of relatives. They returned via the Old Spanish Trail.

Mr. and Mrs. Bill Head and Bill Jr., of Bessemer, are the guests of Judge and Mrs. Cage Head in Columbiana.

Clay Lester ,popular Beau Brummel of the Board Walk on Main Street, visited his mother, Mrs. Nora Lester on Wednesday. We acknowledge his thoughtful kindness to us while in the city.

Mrs. J. R. Bolin, after a visit with Dr. and Mrs. James Crawford has returned to her home in Birmingham.

Miss Alice Roberts, who is attending School in Montevallo, spent the holidays with her mother, Mrs. Edna Roberts.

Mr. Mims Roberts spent the holidays with his wife and baby.

Mr. Henry Naish is reported as improving at the home of his sister in Siluria. We hope to see the 'treasurer' back in Columbiana soon.

Miss Beth Wallace spent the past week end at home in Columbiana.

MALICIOUS MISCHIEF

Whoever is responsible for the destruction of the Queen Theatre property on last Sunday night should be made to repay in full the damage caused Manager Shorey. It is a disgraceful blur on the town, and certainly should be investigated. Mr. Shorey, sinc ecoming to Columbiana to take charge of this popular play house, has cooperated with every organization in the town, and has untiringly worked to give to the people of this vicinity a creditable picture show. The crowds which have recently shown their appreciation of the excellent screen offerings have justified his faith in Columbiana's support of a first class cinema house. Just WHY this destructive attitude should have been assumed and carried out is yet an enigma—and the act has cost Mr. Shorey some unnecessary expense which he should not have to pay.

The guilty parties should attempt to make reparation—and at once if the reputation of Columbiana citizens for law and order is to be preserved. There is a statute covering MALICIOUS MISCHIEF—and we personally think it should be enforced!

Fishing is fine, even if you don't catch any fish; its restful when it isn't strenuous.

Once in a while we cling to the idea that men will, some day, be able to live with each other peacefully.

Heart Drifts

THE TIRED MAN

I am a quiet gentleman,
And I would sit and dream:
But my wife is on the hillside
Wild as a hill-stream.

I am a quiet gentleman,
And I would sit and think:
But my wife is walking the whirlwind
Through night as black as ink.

Oh, give me a woman of my race,
As well controlled as I,
And let us sit by the fire,
Patient till we die!

SUCH LITTLE THINGS

The sunlight flickering through a trellised vine,
The firelight gleaming on a polished floor,
Belated roses bursting into bloom,
A golden maple just outside the door;
Long lashes resting on a baby's cheek,
A peal of laughter riging sweet and gay,—
Such little things, such little things are these
To add so much of pleasure to the day.

A search for treasure within orchard bounds,
A quiet walk along a country road,
The sight of corn shocks standing in a field,
A glimpse afar of one's own home abode,
The scent of wood smoke rising in the air,
The smell of supper, sunset glories rife—
Such little things, such little things are these
To add so much happiness to life.

They say we are really not civilized yet;
Perfection is still very far —
Considering what we were started with though
I'm surprised we're as good as we are!

We cramp our lives with laws and styles,
Reforms of little worth.
Sometimes I wish I had a boat—
I'd move right off the earth.

WINDOWS

Friendship entereth not into a man's house
Except it be called.
It taketh its delight in the chambers thereof,
In the galleries it goeth bravely;
If it come to a door that is closed,
It turneth softly aside.

At evening it walketh in the garden of the house,
It singeth sweetly at the windows.

And anon in a window that was dark
There shall appear a light,
On the morrow a closed door shall be open.

P. J. H.

EXILED

When you, sojourning in a foreign land,
Hear from the wireless shouts and loud acclaim,
Do you not feel what boyishly you planned
All come to naught? Your world is not the same,
Though what you wish for now is close at hand—
Marriage, and so-called love, and future ways,
Just to be quiet in one woman's care,
Just t obe shielded closely. Oh, beware!
Passion is but a flame ,a transient blaze,
But memory burns through all the endless days.

—M. B. S.

THE SINGERS

Let me join where there are numbered
Voices mingled in a song.
For a soul has seldom slumbered
In the midst of such a throng:
While each time I hear the blended
Voices in a choir ring,
I feel certain God intended
That His children all should sing.
Sure grim sorrow never lingers,
And there is no room for care
Where a multitude of singers
Lift their notes in song or prayer.

BLASTS HALT STEEL PLANT

Delay Thousands in Return to Jobs . . . President May Act in Labor Dispute . . . Fascists Quit Spanish Patrol

Riots continued as steel plants attempted reopening.

No Water, No Steel, No Jobs

DYNAMITE temporarily stopped a back-to-work movement in the great Cambria Works of the Bethlehem Steel corporation at Johnstown, Pa., scene of the most violent altercations among strikers, loyal workers and the law in recent days. Two explosions crippled the principal water mains supplying the plant just as Cambria once more had thrown open its doors and nearly half its 15,000 employees had filed through Steel Workers' Organizing Committee picket lines to resume their labors. It took several days to repair the damage sufficiently to allow part of the workers to return.

Gov. Earle

The blasts interrupted what had been the nearest semblance of peace—still not very near—since the C. I. O. affiliate called the strike on the big steel independents who refused to sign contracts with what they dubbed "John L. Lewis' irresponsible organization." The strikers committee "deplored" the explosions and "hoped no strikers had caused them."

Two hundred state troopers, part of the state force which had enforced the martial law declared for a few days and then lifted by Gov. George H. Earle, patrolled the Johnstown district in an attempt to apprehend the dynamiters and protect the water supply of the city itself from damage. Mayor Daniel J. Shields appealed to President Roosevelt again, declaring in a telegram that the majority of his citizens were opposed to the C. I. O. violence and, if provoked much more by the minority, "might take the law into their own hands," adding to the toll of deaths, injuries and destruction that already has been rolled up. He said the strikers were openly declaring that they had the support of the President.

As the plants re-opened before the blasts it had seemed that the real grip of the strike had been broken, although there were still some 250 pickets on hand. The day before the re-opening, the C. I. O., in a last-minute attempt to save its cause, promised a mass meeting, near the city, of 50,000 miners who would then aid the steel strikers in keeping the plants closed. Only about 1,500 showed up, and after listening to speeches by union leaders they dispersed peaceably.

F.D.R. Waxes Impatient

IT WAS believed that the pressure of public opinion in the steel strikes had driven President Roosevelt close to supporting federal legislation similar to that of the amendments proposed by Sen. Arthur H. Vandenberg of Michigan for the national labor relations act. The President indicated at a press conference that he was as much put out at the C. I. O. for forcing organization upon the steel workers as he was with the corporations for refusing to negotiate in terms of a signed contract.

After a talk with Charles P. Taft, who had been chairman of the mediation board that failed to effect a settlement, the President said: "Mr. Taft and I talked over the whole steel situation and came to the conclusion that the nation as a whole, in thinking of the strikes, was saying just one thing—'a plague on both your houses.'"

Senator Vandenberg's proposed amendments were designed to broaden the rights of employers under the Wagner act, forbid "sit-down" strikes and other "unfair" union practices, and provide severe penalties for unions which violated contracts with employers. His amendments:

1.—To give employers the same right which only employees now enjoy to appeal to the national labor relations board for an election to determine the representatives of employees.

2.—To require agreements in writing and to permit strikes only after a majority vote of all employees. Any group which broke its contract and did not repair the break after being ordered to do so by the board would be suspended from representation.

3.—Establish a code of practices for labor. This would:

Prohibit compulsory political assessments on union members.

Require that all union officers, agents and representatives be United States citizens.

Forbid union organization by coercion.

Prohibit damage to property, strikes intended to force any person to violate a contract or federal laws, and violations of "any person's rights in real or personal property."

Der Fuehrer Scores Neutrals

"FROM now on," Adolf Hitler told 200,000 Nazis at a party rally in Wurzberg, "we will prefer . . . to take the freedom, independence, honor and security of our nation into our own hands and protect ourselves alone." Disgusted, Germany withdrew from the non-intervention patrol of Spain, as Italy did likewise. Der Fuehrer warned that the Nazis would take independent action to protect themselves from attacks by the Spanish government. He described how Germany had been condemned for shelling Almeria after a Spanish airplane had bombed the cruiser Deutschland, and how, when the cruiser Leipzig was attacked by a submarine while on patrol duty, the non-intervention committee had done nothing about it.

Adolf Hitler

A remedy suggested by Great Britain and France was that the patrol duty be left entirely to them, with Italian observers on French patrol ships and German observers on British ships to "judge the equitable, impartial working of the system."

Germany and Italy lost little time in refusing to accept the proposal. Sir Neville Chamberlain called the British cabinet in to see what might be done, but it was generally believed that if the Fascists continued in their policy of refusing to co-operate with the non-intervention patrol, Great Britain would scrap her entire neutrality policy. She might extend the right of belligerents to Gen. Francisco Franco and his insurgents, thus for the first time recognizing that a state of war exists in Spain. This would be regarded as a bit of sugar for the Fascist nations, who recognize the insurgent government as the government of Spain.

Montagues and Capulets

WITH all the family blessings save those of a political classification, Miss Ethel du Pont, daughter of Eugene du Pont, and Franklin Delano Roosevelt, Jr., son of the President of the United States, were married at Christ church near Wilmington, Del., in a "simple" wedding attended by a "handful" of about 400 picked guests. Bitter political hatreds were buried temporarily.

Mediation Board Gives Up

THE mediation board of three, named by Secretary of Labor Perkins to sit in Cleveland and attempt to negotiate a settlement in the steel strike, gave up in despair. Its chairman, Charles P. Taft, of Cincinnati, and the other two members, Lloyd Garrison, former president of the national labor relations board, and Edward F. McGrady, trouble-shooting assistant of Mme. Perkins, were unable even to persuade Tom Girdler, Eugene Grace and other steel officials to sit around a conference table at which union leaders were present. The board explained its failure, "The only hope of settlement lies in such a meeting."

In criticizing the companies for their stand the board said, "Nothing can be made clearer today than that management and organized labor, when it really represents the wishes of the men, have got to learn how to live together, to reach agreements and to abide by them when made."

Steel officials handed Taft a written resume of their stand, that they would not make any agreement with Lewis' "irresponsible" C. I. O. They admitted that the Wagner act might force them to negotiate with the union, but declared another law provides that no one need make a contract he doesn't want to make.

Budget Trouble, U. S.

TREASURY figures indicated that the end of the fiscal year would find the President's economy program missing its mark by about $200,000,000. Last April he warned all departments that expenditures would have to be drastically cut, and revised his budget to $295,000,000 less than the forecast in January. His revised budget estimated that expenditures from July 1, 1936, to June 24, 1937, would be $7,781,000,000; actually they turned out to be $7,883,000,000, or $102,000,000 above the estimate. It was believed that, at that rate, there would be a difference of about $200,000,000 in the budget and actual spending for the entire fiscal year.

Budget Trouble, French

BUDGET trouble is bothering France in a serious way; in fact it led to the resignation of Premier Leon Blum and his People's Front government, to be succeeded by Camille Chautemps. One of Chautemps' first acts was to appoint Georges Bonnet, ambassador to the United States, as minister of finance, with orders to begin attempts to balance the budget.

Premier Chautemps

Bonnet's first moves were to close the stock exchange and suspend foreign exchange and commercial payments pending a decision on whether or not he would be made an economic dictator temporarily.

Because the senate refused him this power, Blum and his cabinet resigned; the chamber of deputies twice had approved giving it to him. The senate finance committee approved virtually the same thing for Chautemps, 20 to 3, ten days after he had become premier. It would authorize the new government to promulgate decrees "tending to assure suppression of attacks on government credit, fight against speculation; promote economic recovery, control prices and balance the budget.

France, like the United States, operates on two budgets—ordinary and extraordinary. France's deficit in her ordinary budget, as estimated by retiring Finance Minister Vincent Auriol, is about $200,000,000, and the deficit in her extraordinary budget approximately $1,600,000,000. Rene Brunet, Bonnet's undersecretary, said they could be balanced in three years.

Most of the expenditures from the extraordinary budget are for defense.

Pen for Jersey's Parkers

WHEN Paul H. Wendel, former Trenton, N. J., lawyer, "confessed" to the Lindbergh baby kidnaping, the execution of Bruno Richard Hauptmann was delayed three days. Now Ellis Parker, sixty-five, chief of the Burlington county detectives, and his son, Ellis, Jr., twenty-six, have been sentenced to serve six and three years, respectively, in the federal penitentiary by Federal Judge William Clark in Newark. They were convicted of conspiring to seize and torture Wendel to extract from him the false confession. Their attorneys announced an appeal would be filed with the United States Circuit Court of Appeals.

Rebels Again Eye Madrid

HAVING taken Bilbao after months of siege, Gen. Francisco Franco, rebel commander, turned his guns once more upon Madrid and the sector north of Guadalajara. New troops were moved into the sections about the western and southeastern limits of the city.

The loyalist government set out at once to strengthen its own lines, although it was not believed Madrid was in much danger of attack before the insurgents have "cleaned up" the northern provinces. Since the capture of Bilbao the Basque and Asturian forces have been virtually isolated from those of the Madrid-Valencia government.

SEEN and HEARD around the NATIONAL CAPITAL

FAMOUS WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENT

Washington.—Elaborate maneuvering is going on to put Elliot Roosevelt, son of the President, in the house of representatives from the twelfth Texas district, now represented by Fritz Garland Lanham.

Under the Texas law, a special election to fill a vacancy is more or less a free-for-all. There is no primary, there is no runoff. Everybody who wants to enters, and the high man takes the prize. Once in, the incumbent has a big advantage at the next regular primary, and of course a Democrat has no trouble in the election if he weathers the primary.

Lanham has been in the house since Woodrow Wilson's last congress and has been elected at regular elections beginning with 1920, which makes him rather a veteran. He has developed quite a streak of insurgency, being out of sympathy with a good many New Deal measures. In short, he is more of a Garner man than a Roosevelt man.

Nobody is claiming the honor of having first thought of the plan to put young Roosevelt in his place, but it has been taken up with some enthusiasm by the Texas delegation, and has not exactly been frowned on by the White House.

Texans on the inside of the maneuver want Lanham "promoted." They say he has had a splendid record, but has become slightly fed up with service in the house.

Just a few days ago the Texas delegation voted to endorse Lanham for president of the University of Texas, which post is vacant because of the death of the former president.

That would be much simpler than the original idea, which was to have the administration give Lanham a more important job. Among the jobs considered for him are that of assistant secretary of state, made vacant by the promotion of Sumner Welles to under-secretary of state, and a post with the Communications commission.

Some Embarrassment

But there is a slight embarrassment on the part of the White House to make an appointment so obviously to clear the way to putting the President's son in the house. Kicking a man upstairs to get rid of his vote is something else again. It is one of the most often used political devices. Sometimes it does not work, as when President Coolidge "promoted" Senator William S. Kenyon to be a judge at a time when Kenyon as a progressive senator was a thorn in the administration's side. But Kenyon was shortly thereafter—at the next regular election—replaced by Smith Wildman Brookhart, which was more or less like jumping out of the frying pan into the fire.

So the White House would be very pleased at having the way cleared for Elliott by some other method than by giving Lanham a political "promotion." Especially as there is always more or less feeling that this would not be good for party discipline—handing plums to insurgents.

If the scheme works out Elliott should land the job handily, Texans say. They predict that a large number of candidates would enter the "free-for-all" with the result that the opposition would be divided, and enough people would vote for the magic name of Roosevelt to pull Elliott through. Elliott has been living in Fort Worth for several years, and is reported to be popular.

Seek U. S. Help

The German drive to have the United States join in development of dirigible transatlantic travels continues, but it seems unlikely to be authorized this year. Dr. Hugo Eckener, most successful navigator of dirigibles so far, is most persuasive. He has met most of the arguments against the idea. But two of the arguments he has met most effectively promise to stay the hand of congress for this session.

One of the objections, of course, is the shock still remaining from the Hindenburg tragedy. Every one, including our naval experts, agrees that this would not have been a disaster at all had the big bag been filled with helium instead of explosive hydrogen. But the fact remains that so many people throughout the country were and still are shocked at the Hindenburg disaster, and still remember that this ended the last delusion about lighter than air transport—the delusion that the Germans at least had solved the problem—that there is no popular demand for action.

So when a senator or representative opposes doing anything about it, or, as is more usual, when he simply makes no move to cause action, there is no unfavorable reaction against him among the voters he must face when he comes up for re-election.

The other argument is wrapped up in the neutrality propaganda. When Doctor Eckener was before the congressional committees he was grilled closely about the danger of helium, sold to Germany by the United States or possibly in United States dirigibles while they might be abroad and seized during a war, being used for war purposes.

Dirigibles in War

Doctor Eckener made two most effective answers, so far as logic is concerned, according to army and navy officers who have been studying the situation since. One was that the dirigible would not be an effective weapon in war today. He said they would be easy victims of airplanes and antiaircraft artillery. In fact, this stage had really been reached, he said, before the close of the World war.

But—and this was much more convincing—if nations did want to use dirigibles in war, they would not be deterred by the lack of helium. They would use hydrogen despite the greater danger.

Doctor Eckener's remarks along this line have been closely studied by our army and navy aviation experts. Their thought is that the nation which would decide to use a dirigible in war would probably prefer to use hydrogen. The advantage would be that the lifting power of hydrogen is greater than that of helium. Therefore the same gas bag could carry a heavier load of bombs, more defensive guns, etc.

A dirigible supported by hydrogen could rise more quickly in an emergency, thus escaping antiaircraft guns.

New Dealers Worry

Two of the groups of the "submerged third" of our population which are giving the New Dealers the most gray hairs are the small farmers, particularly the mountaineers, and the folks who work in very small stores and factories, and hence do not come under the wage and hour legislation now pending.

The mountaineers are particularly troublesome. In the first place they do not seem to appreciate what is done for them. They want, apparently, to retain their "rugged individualism." None of the resettlement projects which were the apple of Rexford G. Tugwell's eye, and which so intrigued Mrs. Roosevelt, have been notably successful. Quite the contrary.

Yet they are being hit and will be hit by most of the New Deal legislation harder than most folks. While they do not buy much, naturally payroll social security taxes, and state sales taxes necessitated by the social burdens the states have assumed, boost the cost of everything they buy. Thus not only is their buying power reduced but their lot made just that much harder.

A group of congressmen and their wives who just returned from a trip to the Smoky Mountain national park, on the border of North Carolina and Tennessee, brought back a vivid impression of how the social welfare legislation, both state and national, is hitting this particular segment of the submerged third.

"We didn't go off the beaten track," said the wife of one. "We weren't looking for anything but scenery. But we were shocked at the living conditions of the mountain folk living right along the main highway. Women were working in the fields, just as animal-like as in the most backward sections of Europe. We didn't see any hitched to plows, as in the recent disgraceful case which figured in the newspapers, but we could imagine they often were.

Pitiful Conditions

"It was pitiful — the scrubby, rocky land they were tilling, the squalid, dirty cabins they called homes, and the cruel grinding daylight to darkness labor they were putting in so futilely.

"Yet we knew by our own purchases that when those folks went down to the store to buy something they not only paid a higher price because of payroll taxes to give somebody else old age and unemployment insurance, but they were, in North Carolina, paying a three per cent sales tax. When we got up into West Virginia, we found, incidentally, that there were no exemptions, as in many states, from this sales tax, which here was two per cent.

"My state of Illinois has a three per cent sales tax, but when a poor man buys a sandwich and a cup of coffee—anything not more than 15 cents—that purchase is exempt. But in West Virginia the sales tax on a ten cent purchase is ten per cent, not two per cent, because they do not have tokens to split pennies."

The difficulty the New Deal anticipates with small, local groups of employees is a matter of constitutional law. Some believe that is why President Roosevelt is so determined about his Supreme court enlargement bill despite the recent liberality of the present court. He wants, they say, to be able to reach the little store or plant which employs three to fifteen men or women. Political danger in such a move would be very real, but it is these employees who work longer hours, and for less pay, on the average, than the workers who by union activities better their conditions, and who will be affected by the wages and hours bill when that measure has become law.

Favorite Recipe of the Week

Red Raspberry and Strawberry Jelly.

4 cups (2 lbs.) juice
7½ cups (3¼ lbs.) sugar
1 bottle fruit pectin

To prepare juice, crush thoroughly or grind about 1½ quarts each fully ripe raspberries and strawberries. Combine fruits; place in jelly cloth or bag and squeeze out juice.

Measure sugar and juice into large saucepan and mix. Bring to a full rolling boil over hottest fire and boil hard 2 minutes, stirring constantly. Then add bottled fruit pectin, bring again to a full rolling boil, and boil hard ½ minute. Remove from fire, skim, pour quickly. Paraffin hot jelly at once. Makes about 11 glasses (6 fluid ounces each).

SYNOPSIS

Brooke Reyburn visits the office of Jed Stewart, a lawyer, to discuss the terms of an estate she has inherited from Mrs. Mary Armanda Dane. Unwittingly she overhears Jed talking to Mark Trent, nephew of Mrs. Dane who has been disinherited. Mrs. Dane had lived at Lookout House, a huge structure by the sea, built by her father and divided into two, for her and Mark's father. Brooke had been a fashion expert, and Mrs. Dane, a "shut-in," hearing her on the radio, had invited her to call and developed a deep affection for her. Mark discloses that Mrs. Dane had threatened to disinherit him if he married Lola, from whom he is now divorced. He says he does not trust Henri and Clotilde Jacques, Mrs. Dane's servants. He says he is not interested in an offer of Brooke's to share the estate with him. Leaving her department store job, Brooke refuses an offer to "go stepping" with Jerry Field, a carefree young man who wants to marry her. At a family conference she learns she must live at Lookout House alone, since Lucette, her younger sister who is taking her job, her brother, Sam, a young playwright, and her mother plan to stay in the city. Jed and Mark are astounded when they hear from Mrs. Gregory, a family friend, that she had witnessed a hitherto unknown will with Henri and Clotilde two weeks before Mrs. Dane died. Brooke had arrived just as she was leaving. Jed suggests that Mark open his part of Lookout House, get friendly with Brooke and try to find out about the will. Jed agrees to stay with him. Mark accepts Brooke's invitation for a family Thanksgiving dinner at Lookout. Mrs. Reyburn announces on Thanksgiving eve that she has been invited to England. Sam and Lucette decide to move in with Brooke and Sam plans to produce a new play locally.

Brooke noticed Mark Trent's quick glance about as he entered the dining-room at Lookout House. She felt an instant of self-consciousness as she took the seat against the variegated yellow background of tall mimosas and acacias which filled a broad bay-window, which her mother refused with a quick shake of her head and a smile. She immediately forgot herself in pride of her sporting family. Each one was so gay, so determined to do his or her share to make the party a real festivity. Holidays were hard days since her father's death, but always someone who was alone had been invited to keep the feast with them. Thinking of others helped immeasurably to bridge the sense of loss, Celia Reyburn argued.

The dinner was a success. Brooke breathed a little sigh of relief as she rose from the table. This Thanksgiving dinner had been the first entertaining in her own home. Of course the guests had been her family and Mark Trent only, but she had felt pride in having it a success.

As she served coffee from the massive silver tray in the living-room, she glanced at Mark Trent standing before the fire. With his elbow on the mantel, he was talking to Celia Reyburn seated in a corner of the couch. The orchids he had brought her added the perfect touch to her amethyst frock. Orchids for her mother, gardenias for Lucette, and deep fragrant purple violets for his hostess. He had said it with flowers. A lavish gentleman. Had Henri turned chalky as he had announced dinner, or had she imagined it? He had stared at Mark Trent as if seeing an unwelcome apparition.

With a groan of repletion Sam pulled himself out of a deep chair.

"Boy, let's get out and walk! I feel like a stuffed, trussed turkey. Why do we eat so much more on Thanksgiving? Because we haven't any sense. Notice that I'm acquiring the analytic method, question and answer. Anybody here got the energy to take the shore walk?"

"I'll go with you, Sammy." Celia Reyburn smiled at her tall son. "Elaine Jaffrey is a great hiker; she will probably walk me all over the British Isles. I must get in practice. Just wait until I change my shoes."

"Boy, I'm glad we have one sport in the family. I'll bet Lucette has a heavy date, and is expecting someone. Coming, Brooke? Coming, Mr. Trent?"

"Mark to you, I hope, Sam. Do come, Miss Reyburn," Mark Trent urged. "It's a grand day. After hours of storm, there is enough wind to make the surf worth looking at."

"Worth looking at" were colorless words to express the grandeur of the shore, Brooke thought, as, standing on a jutting crag, holding on her beret with one hand, skirts blowing, she looked down at the driving current, cold and stealthy in places, in others foaming and tossing white-edged green waves against ledges transformed by the magic of the slanting sun into ruddy copper, dark brown in the crevices. Spray, diaphanous as a mist from a giant atomizer, iridescent as jeweled malines, shimmered in the light. Beyond the surf a dozen lavender winged gulls floated on the water. An amber green wave outlashed its predecessors, hissed, roared, broke against a ledge, and showered Brooke with crystal spray.

"Oh!" Instinctively she clutched Mark Trent's arm. "It—it took my breath!"

He drew her back to the path, pulled out his handkerchief, and wiped her wet face.

"I should have known better than to let you stand there."

"It wasn't your fault. I adored it. It made me feel as if every inch of me had been electrified. Why is it that when we are together I need to be rescued from difficulties? I want to thank you for—"

"Please, don't."

She wondered at the embarrassed fierceness of his voice.

"I won't, except to add that I know I owe my life to you. There, that's over. I promise never to mention it again."

Spurred by the stimulating air, she took her courage in both hands and plunged.

"Won't you please be friends? I didn't know Mrs. Mary Amanda Dane had any money, really I didn't, Mr. Trent."

In the instant that she waited for his answer, sun, sea, the roar of the surf were blotted out. Only his straight-gazing eyes meeting hers were real. They touched her heart, quickly, passionately. Then Mark Trent thrust his handkerchief into his pocket.

"Forget that Mr. Trent stuff. Being legatees in the same estate—my aunt left me a bank account, you know—ought to make us friends, oughtn't it?" His voice was light, but she sensed a tinge of irony. "We'd better keep going if we are to walk around the point before dark. Your mother and Sam went on some time ago. What did she mean when she spoke of hiking over the British Isles?"

"She is going to England to visit her college classmate. Of course, I'm crazy to have her go, but—but I didn't realize how precious she was until I thought of her being so far away."

"Are your brother and sister going?"

"No. They are to be with me while Mother is away. I am so glad. It will give me heaps to do. I'm not used to this poison-ivy leisure that looked so alluring before I had tried it. My life was so full before—"

"Neighbor!"

"Before you had Lookout House stuffed down your throat, you mean? I don't see why the dickens Aunt Mary Amanda tied that string to her legacy, forced you to live in this house."

"It wasn't a string, and she didn't force me. I like old towns, and I love Lookout House."

"My mistake." Trent's laugh turned to a frown. "What are the town fathers thinking of to allow a gas station stuck out on this road? Has that house been sold?"

Brooke promptly defended the brilliant equipment in front of a small white cottage.

"I don't know who owns the place, but doubtless the town fathers were thinking of giving the poor man who has started the filling-station another chance. I heard that he had money, lost it, began to drink too much, and that a friend set him up in business here hoping to steady him."

"Who told you the story of his life?"

"Henri."

"Henri! Does he know the man?"

"He will have to answer that question. He asked me to buy gas at the new filling-station, and I do to encourage the poor fellow to keep on trying to make good."

"How about encouraging honest Mike Cassidy who started the garage at the end of the causeway years ago and has served the public faithfully and unselfishly? He has a wife and five children to support."

Why did his voice rouse opposition in her, Brooke wondered. She had doubts herself lately as to the permanency of the filling-station owner's reform. Twice when she had stopped for gas, a young Irish girl had reported the boss as "sick" and she had wondered if he were backsliding. Mark the Magnificent need not know that, however.

"Don't you believe in helping a man to come back?" she asked crisply.

"I do, most decidedly, but I believe also in helping an honest hard-working man like Cassidy, who has had the strength of character to leave drink alone, to keep his kids in shoes. Come on. We are almost quarreling. Why should you and I fight over a filling-station owner?"

"You're right, when we have so many other things about which to disagree."

Brooke's brown eyes met his, intent and darkly gray; wistfulness tinged her voice as she urged:

"Speaking of disagreeing — will you please behave like a sensible person and take the family treasures which belong to you?"

"Aunt Mary Amanda left them to you."

"I know, but it isn't right for me to have them, and what's more, I don't need or want them. I'd rather go without rings all my life than wear one of those gorgeous things she left, which are rightfully yours. Mr. Stewart has put all the jewelry in a bank vault for you. I have Mother's lovely china and glass and furniture which have been in storage since our home was broken up. I've had everything which belonged to your family moved to the chauffeur's apartment over the garage. There seems to be very little silver. Perhaps your aunt gave it to you?"

"Silver! Very little silver! She had the Trent service which came originally from England and any number of beautiful pieces. That silver is a family tradition. Where is it? She didn't give it to me. What does Stewart say about it?"

"He thought that because of the epidemic of crime reported in the newspapers, Mrs. Dane might have become timid about keeping valuables in the house and had it stored in a bank. But he found no receipt for it among her papers. Do you think she sold it?"

"Sold it! No. I'll bet—" he broke off abruptly. "See that great rock sticking up off shore? I used to imagine it the peak of a submerged island rising from the sea."

"Perhaps it is. 'Islands arise, grow old and disappear.' That isn't original. Sam has taken the title for his comedy from it. The first night I spent at Lookout House I was kept awake by the wailing of that distant siren. Now I don't notice it."

"You'll notice it if you stay here during the winter as Jed told me you were planning to do. There goes the sun behind the city!"

They walked in silence back to Lookout House. On the threshold of the living-room she stopped in startled unbelief. Jerry Field stood by the fire talking to her mother. Who was the brown-haired girl in blue beside Lucette?

"Couldn't wait for you to send out At Home cards, Brooke," Jerry Field greeted jauntily. "You remember that you said I could come to Lookout House when you were settled, don't you? I wanted to meet your family, wanted them to know that I'm in your stag line for sure."

His eyes flashed beyond her to Mark Trent on the threshold. There was laughter in his voice and a hint of challenge. Before she could answer, he commanded:

"Come hither, Daphne, and meet our neighbor. This is my sister."

"Neighbor!" Brooke smiled at the brown-haired girl as she welcomed her with a cordial handshake. "I would know that you were Jerry's sister, you look so like him; but is the neighbor stuff a joke?"

"No, Miss Reyburn, we really are staying on the Point."

Daphne Field's smile disclosed small teeth as perfect in color and size as a row of matched pearls. She turned to Sam.

"I've heard that you are the coming playwright, Mr. Reyburn, that you have a touch of O'Neil's tragic outlook, a seasoning of Kaufman's humor, and a hint of Coward's sophistication."

Sam grinned. "Is that original, or did you get it from the Times?"

The girl pouted:

"Of course it's original. Why, Mark!"

Daphne Field's breathless exclamation, the radiance of her face revealed so much that Brooke had the embarrassed sense of having looked for an instant at a naked heart. Trent came forward. Was the firelight playing pranks, or had his face gone dark with color?

"Where did you drop from, Daphne? How are you, Field?"

Why didn't someone say something and smash the strained silence, Brooke wondered impatiently. It was as if the firelight had cast a spell and tied all their tongues. Her mother's eyes were on Daphne Field as she thoughtfully pulled her gloves through her hands. Sam, back to the room, was poking at the parrot. He hated emotional scenes—off the stage. The atmosphere fairly quivered with things unsaid. Lucette came to life.

"Turn on the lights, Sam, this gloom may be artistic, but it gives me the merry-pranks. This has turned out to be meet-your-neighbor day, hasn't it? Who's the dame in the floppy hat, Brooke, who looks like a super-animated Bo-peep, and carries a cane which easily could be mistaken for a shepherd's crook? There's the chance of a lifetime for you to get in a little missionary work as clothes adviser; you'd better begin with a streamline diet. She thinks everything here, including Mother, 'charming.'"

What Irvin S. Cobb Thinks about

Comfort in Traveling.

LATELY, on a cross-country prowl, two of us invaded one of the remotest corners of the desert.

Until our car broke down we crawled along some of the roughest backways in creation, then escaped on what by quaint irony was called an accommodation train over a side-spur of a prehistoric railway line.

Irvin S. Cobb

When we hit concrete high roads and air-conditioned fliers, I caught myself saying our forefathers put up with plenty of misery in order to move about. And then I realized that what we had endured did not date back to former generations. So soon have we grown accustomed to luxury with speed we forget that most of America, fifteen years ago, lacked what we now accept as common traveling comfort.

Why, less than two decades ago, for my sins, I rode on a certain jerkwater railroad in the deep South. The last work done on its tracks was in 1864 by General Sherman—he tore 'em up.

I made the mistake of trying to shave while en route. When I got through, I looked like one of those German student duelists.

But, nowadays, even those who use homemade trailers seem almost happy at times.

Diplomatic Busybodies.

WHO'LL be the next member of our diplomatic corps to open his mouth and put his foot in it clear up to his hip-joint?

It has been nearly two months now since our ambassador to Germany had a bad dream and before nursie could quiet him was proclaiming that a certain billionaire was willing to put up one of his loose billions to buy a dictatorship for this country. He failed to furnish the name and address. Maybe they got left out of the nightmare.

Hardly had paregoric wooed this distinguished sufferer back to hush-a-bye-land when our new representative in the Philippines began demanding that, when it came to drinking official toasts, his name must come higher up on the wine list or he wouldn't be responsible for the consequences. However, the excitement subsided before he could summon the Pacific fleet to bombard Manila. There's a rumor that Washington sent him word he needn't worry about being appropriately saluted—there'd be a nationwide Bronx cheer awaiting him on his return home.

Since then there's been a lull and the American public is getting impatient. We do so love a free show and especially when it's amateur night.

Hard-Bitten Females.

TOURING about over certain Western states where open gambling either is by law permitted, or by custom winked at, I noticed this:

Generally speaking, the feminine patrons are the steadiest drinkers, the most persistent gamesters, the most reckless betters of all. And frequently their manners are the rudest and their faces the grimmest—determined seemingly to disavow the theory that their sex is the gentler sex.

On the other hand, the men patrons—descended, many of them, from old gun fighters, old prospectors, old path-finders—grow increasingly docile and subdued, absorbing less than their share of the hard liquor—maybe because they fear there won't be enough left for mama and the girls—and risking their dimes where the gallant ladies plunge with dollars.

Sometimes a fellow, watching the modern processional from the protection of the sidelines, gets to longing for the bygone days when, as Kipling might have put it and, in fact, almost did, a woman was only a woman, but a good cigar was ten cents.

These Candid Cameras.

ONCE a citizen had a right to object to the publication of a flashlight view showing him beating his wife or exhibiting his appendicitis scar or taking out his uppers or something.

That was before they began printing magazines for those who've abandoned the old-fashioned habit of reading and writing. And it's doing glamorous movie queens no real good when these betraying close-ups prove that maybe the glamor is only paint-deep.

Thus the last strongholds of our one-time personal liberty crumble. I used to think a passport picture was about the frankest thing we had in the line of intimate likenesses, excepting, of course, the x-ray.

But this candid camera business which catches you unawares—and often without your underwears either—is the most fiendish attack of all against our practically vanished privacy.

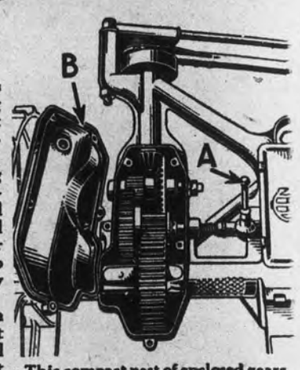
McCormick-Deering Mowers Have Always Been Good and the No. 7 Enclosed Gear Mower Is the Best Yet



Come in and go over the entire mower. You'll agree that you have never seen anything like it.

WE are anxious to have all our friends see the new McCormick-Deering No. 7 Enclosed-Gear Mower. We think it is one of the finest pieces of farm equipment we have ever sold!

For example: The entire operating mechanism, including drive gears, differential, and countershafts, is assembled compactly in an oil-tight gear housing and runs in a bath of oil. There are four high-grade roller bearings. Operation is so smooth and noiseless that you can scarcely hear the light hum of the sickle!

Special oil seals at the ends of the main axle and fly-wheel shaft, and the oil-tight gear box prevent leakage and protect all working parts against the entrance of dirt and other abrasive materials. Floating action of cutter bar provides ample play without disturbing knife registration.

This compact nest of enclosed gears runs in a bath of oil—a full gallon. The cover, B, makes the gear case dust-proof and oil-tight. Clutch is thrown in and out by lever, A.

VOLUME SIX — COLUMBIANA, ALABAMA, THURSDAY, JULY 15th, 1937 — NUMBER FIFTEEN

UNDER THE COURTHOUSE DOME

M. W. W.

Henry Naish, popular Treasurer of Shelby County, is being sincerely missed by the Courthouse official family and by his many friends in Columbiana who regret his continued illness in Siluria.

The second allotment to the counties of receipts from the sales tax amounted to $100,000. The Counties get one fourth of the net amount collected. This was for the month of May.

Of the 2,288 State Convicts received at the State prisons last year 416 were under 20 years of age; 672 were between 21 and 21; 470 were in the class of 26 to 30; 260 from 31 to 35; 180 from 36 to 40; 105 from 41 to 45; 87 from 46 to 50; 46 from 51 to 55; 19 from 56 to 60; and 33 over 60 years of age.

Tennessee's Bonded Debt is $128,500,000. Only $3,500,000 has been retired during the past twenty-two years. Albaama ha spaid $14,302,000 during the past ten years. Of this amount $1,800,000 has been paid during the present year. This is at the rate of $4,931.78 per day, assuming that no other bonds will be retired before the end of the fiscal year, September 30, 1937.

Alabama's new Automobile Tags for 1938 wil lbe crimson and blue. The numbers will appear in crimson on a blue background.

The average daily prison population of Alabama for the past year was 5,736. Of this number 667 were county convicts. While there was an increase of 549 in the number of State convicts, there was a decrease in the number of County convicts. This does not include county convicts from Jefferson County. They are not handled by the State.

The Circuit Court docket was set by Judge W. W. Wallace on Wednesday morning. The Civil week will begin on July 26th. The Criminal week on August 9th. The Grand Jury will be in session during the week of July 26th. Hon A. L. Hardegree in charge.

Solicitor A. L. Hardegree of Ashland, spent Wednesday in Columbiana attending to professional duties.

STATE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE TO MEET THURSDAY, JULY 22

ALEXANDER CITY, July 14—The third meeting of the officers and directors of the newly formed State Chamber of Commerce was announce dtoday by President Benjamin Russell ,of Alexander City, for Thurs day, uly 22nd, at 10:00 a. m. Jefferson Davis Hotel, Montgomery. Completion of the organization and perfection of plans of operation were announced as objects of the scheduled meeting.

Headquarters were opened last week in Montgomery Chamber of Commerce Building, South Perry Street, with Dr. H. G. Dowling, Tuscaloosa educator, acting manager, in charge of the office. Dr. Dowling is on leave as city superintendent of schools at Tuscaloosa.

A slogan of "Supplement Farm With Factory" was announced by President Russell as indicating the state's greatest need at the present time. Immediate plans of the state-wide organization call for a county-by-county survey to determine the natural resources available and the industry most suited to the various communities of the State.

President Russell stated that the Chamber will embrace in character the general development of Alabama and will include in its membership goal of 200,000 representatives from every county and precinct of the State.

STATE JACKPOT CURB DEFERRED BY RICE ORDER

Montgomery —Enforcement of a recent court of Appeals decision declaring theatre "jackpots" illegal in Alabama has been held in abeyance by a motion for rehearing, court records revealed today.

The motion was filed by Cecil B. Grimes, Tuscaloosa theatre manager, who was finded $200 in Tuscaloosa Circuit court for conducting a "jackpot".

The court of Appeals. before recessing June 30 for the sumemer, upheld the lower court and declared "jackpot" constituted a violation of the state lottery laws.

Appeals Court Judge James Rice, who wrote the decision, said today effect of the application for rehearing would be to hold the case in status quo until the court reconvenes October 1. The application will be taken under advisement then.

In spite of the Appellate Court,s decision, theaters in some cities have continued to conduct "jackpots" and the district manager of one company which operates several theatres in Alabama has announced the practice would continue pending final decision in the Tuscaloosa case.

STATE 4-H CLUB SHORT COURSE, AUBURN, JULY 5-9

Under the supervision of W. M. Clark of the County Agent's Office, four boys of the 4-H Clubs of Shelby County attended the Short Course at Auburn during the past week.

The boys making the trip with Mr. Clark were: Raymond Robinson, Dewey Clark, Jr., and Frank Wolf, all of the Wilsonville Club, and Frank Wyatt, Jr., of the Vincent Club.

This is a very valuable course for Club boys, and we hope that next year every club in Shelby County may have one or more boys to attend thi smeeting.

The mornings were devoted to training in the different agricultural departments by College professors, which was very helpful to all the boys.

The Afternoons and evenings were given to recreational activities, such as swimming, baseball, volley ball, horse-shoe throwing, etc.,

Shelby County boys won frist placings in the following: Best stunt; tied with Chilton County for Best Campers.

Highway fatalities are increasing but nobody seems to be concerned about the matter.

GAIN SHO STATE REVENUE

Registered In Chancery 7-3-36

MONTGOMTRY—Total collections of $12,668,526 for the first seven months this year exceeded by $3,290,967 for the same period in 1936, the state tax commission reported today.

The 25.97 per cent gain in collections paid directly to the tax commission ,represented taxes from gasoline tobacco and income, Henry S. Long, commission chairman, said, but did not include taxes on ad valorem levies automobile tags and amounts received by probate judges or tax collectors

Tobacco taxes were listed at $1,361,897 against $1,238,965; income tax collections $1,284,047 compared with $669,191.

AVERAGE WAGE FOR THE SOUTH IS 46.3 CENTS P. H.

NASHVILLE—The Southern States Industrial Council made public today the results of a survey showing that the average wage in southern manufacturing plants is 46.3 cents an hour.

"The average wage rate has increased 46.5 per cent since 1933 as compared with an increase of only 29 per cent for the country as a whole," the statement said.

It added that "weekly wages have increased more than living costs" with the average weekly wage listed at $18.71."

"Strikes and labor difficulties," the report continued, "are noticeable retarding the rate of increase in employment in the South."

MILLION AND A HALF TREES ANNUAL GOAL OF ALABAMA POWER COMPANY

The above pictures are of the Alabama Power Company Forest Nursery, located on U. S. Highway No. 31 about ¼ mile south of Verbena. The nursery, started in the Spring of 1937, is the outgrowth of experimental plantings by Alabama Power Company during the past three years. According to Gomer Evans, forester for the Company, the nursery is to supply 1½ million seedlings annually to "reforest company lands adjoining its reservoirs, reduce soil erosion and supply pine for Alabama industries".

Although due to weather conditions, and inability to secure a supply of good seed, the planting was late this year, nearly a half million seedlings are already under way. These will be transplanted during the late fall. Present seed beds contain 80,000 long-leaf pine seedlings, 350,000 slash pine seedlings and 50,000 black locust seedlings. Next year's plantings will include some hardwood trees, to be used as cross sectional plantings in reforested lands, to assist in fire protection and control. Ultimate capacity of the nursery will be 1½ millions seedlings annually.

Picture 1 shows the nursery being seeded with a Hudson garden planter; No. 2 is the sign by which travelers on U. S. Highway No. 31 may identify the nursery; No. 3 shows the sprinkler system used in dry weather (water supply is from a nearby branch); No. 4 shows the mulching operation to help retain moisture until the seeds sprout (this is later removed); No. 5 should be a familiar scene to all truck and flower gardeners—the inevitable hand weeding of the seed beds.

STEEL GOES BACK TO WORK

Two-Thirds of Idle Have Returned . . . Riots Kill Two In Aluminum Strike . . . Siege of Madrid Gets Setback

C.I.O. Steel Grip Loosens

THE grip of the C. I. O. continued to loosen in the steel strike as three big independent steel corporations—Republic, Bethlehem and Youngstown Sheet & Tube—reported more than two-thirds of their idle mill hands had returned to work. This covered plants in Ohio and Pennsylvania. Inland, the fourth of the steel independents, announced that it was operating with its normal force of 13,000 in Indiana since it and the Steel Workers' Organizing Committee signed a compact with the state labor commission. Steel production in the Youngstown, Ohio, area, one of the principal scenes of strike violence, climbed to 76 per cent of capacity, 3 per centage points above the operating figure before the start of the strike.

Strike Riot Kills Two

ONE striker and one policeman were killed and twenty men were injured at an aluminum plant in Alcoa, Tenn., when rioting broke out as 3,000 strikers started a back-to-work movement. The plant, belonging to the Aluminum Company of America, had been closed since May 18, when the strike was called by the Aluminum Workers of America, an affiliate of the American Federation of Labor. Difference in wages paid at Alcoa and at the company's plant in New Kensington, Pa., was the issue in the strike. State troops were on hand, but Adjt.-Gen. R. O. Smith, in charge, said that they were there merely to protect rights, and no martial law had been declared.

Lewis Scans the Sea

JOHN L. LEWIS sought to expand the scope of his Committee for Industrial Organization by invading the maritime industry. With Harry Bridges, west coast longshoremen's leader, he sought to unify scattered maritime unions in one big industrial organization dominated by the C. I. O. The American Federation of Labor already has two strong unions in the maritime field, so this action brings Lewis into another point of friction with William Green's organization. The nation has 250,000 marine and coastal workers.

'Compromise' Takes Bow

SENATOR M. M. LOGAN, Democrat, of Kentucky, presented the "compromise" version of the President's Supreme court bill to the senate, apparently with the blessings of Majority Leader Joseph T. Robinson and the chief executive. In form an amendment to and substitute for the old Ashurst administration bill, the new draft authorizes appointment of one new justice to the court each year for every justice remaining on the court after reaching the age of seventy-five years. Under its provisions the President would be permitted to name one new justice this year (besides filling the vacancy left by the retirement of Justice Willis Van Devanter) and assure him of at least one new appointment to the court in each remaining year of his present term of office. All of the appointments would hinge on the decision of justices seventy-five or older on retirement.

Sen. Robinson

The opposition immediately charged that the new bill was as offensive as the old one. Sen. Burton K. Wheeler, Democrat, Montana, said: "The compromise is not going to get through. The new bill is just as objectionable as the old, because it seeks to pack the Supreme court just like the original bill did." Sen. Edward R. Burke, Democrat, Nebraska, said the 43 senators would vote against any kind of measure that would increase the Supreme court.

Some of the other provisions of the new bill were:

Authority for 20 additional appointments to lower courts in the event that judges over seventy fail to retire. The old bill would have permitted 50 new appointments altogether.

Speedy intervention by the government in cases involving constitutionality of federal laws, and speedy appeal to the Supreme court.

Rebels Fall from Madrid

SPANISH rebel forces which took Bilbao after the city's first successful siege are still finding Madrid a tough nut to crack. In a two-day battle the loyalist forces broke through the siege lines about the city, captured the villages of Villaneuva de la Canada and Brunette, and threatened to cut the besieging rebels off from their main forces. So nearly successful was the attempt to rout the rebel forces that the latter were forced to admit new troops might have to be withdrawn from other fronts, delaying temporarily the drive on Santander, next rebel objective on the Biscayan coast.

Amelia: Lost in the Pacific.

Meanwhile, the fall of Bilbao was expected to add 150,000 refugees to the constant stream pouring into loyalist Valencia. Although some of the refugees remained in France, where they were first taken, the vast majority preferred to go to Catalonia, where the government takes care of them at its own expense. Nearly 1,500,000 have arrived in Valencia since the start of the war and 300,000 have remained there.

Bingham's 4th of July

ROBERT WORTH BINGHAM, United States ambassador to London, became the third prominent American to bring down the fury of Nazi Germany's officialdom and press when, in an Independence day speech before the American society in that city, he declared Uncle Sam had been forced by the dictator countries to join Britain in an armament race. Mayor LaGuardia of New York and Cardinal Mundelein of Chicago had been other recent Nazi targets.

The ambassador was quoted as saying: "There must be some (of the dictatorships) who realize that they have imposed upon the British commonwealth and the United States an armaments race.

"We did everything in our power to avert it, but it is a race, and the British and ourselves must inevitably win. I admit the strongest arguments that can be made for dictatorships—they offer a better method of preparing for war. But I am sure that democracies provide a better way to finish a war."

The Nazis charged that the ambassador had insulted Germany and Italy with his "arrogance and ignorance." Voelkischer Beobachter, the official newspaper, added: "If there is any talk of defense, then we should speak of defense against the arrogant and teacher-like attitude of the defenders of western ideals."

Navy Hunts for Amelia

FOUR ships of the United States navy, with attendant airplanes; two ships of the Japanese navy, and a British freighter scoured the vast wastes of the South Pacific in an effort to find and rescue Amelia Earhart Putnam, America's No. 1 woman flyer, and her navigator, Fred Noonan. The pair had been forced down before completing the 2,570-mile hop from New Guinea to Howland island, a "leg" of their 'round-the-world flight.

Signals received from the hapless flyers were so weak that it was impossible to tell whether they were afloat at sea or marooned on some tiny island, and as the days passed it became doubtful that many of the radio messages which served as clues for the searchers were from the two at all. Storms over the area of the sea in which they were believed lost hampered searchers and minimized possibilities of a rescue.

So alarmed was the world at the loss of Amelia and her companion, the United States even sent out the giant aircraft carrier Lexington with 98 planes aboard, which, it was said, could explore an area of 36,000 square miles in five or six hours.

Mae West Tells All

IT SEEMS Mae West, buxom blonde cinema menace DID marry Frank Wallace in Milwaukee on April 11, 1911, after all. After stoutly denying the marriage which aroused the whole nation when it was revealed in 1935, she did an about-face and confessed it, although denying she had ever lived with the vaudeville player as his wife. Her admission was necessitated when she answered Wallace's suit for declaratory relief in a Los Angeles court.

Nation Finds More Jobs

NEARLY 35,000,000 persons are now employed in non-agricultural pursuits, the federal reserve board has announced. This is only 1,000,000 or 1,500,000 shy of the average in 1929 and 8,500,000 to 9,000,000 more than in March, 1933.

SEEN and HEARD around the NATIONAL CAPITAL

By Carter Field

Washington.—There is no disposition to laugh off Governor George H. Earle's opening gun in the fight to nominate Franklin D. Roosevelt for a third term among shrewd Washington politicians. Very privately nine out of ten men on Capitol Hill will tell friends that they think the probability is Roosevelt will break this precedent, as he has broken so many others.

There are plenty of people who knew Calvin Coolidge fairly well who believe that he wanted to break that precedent. "Ike" Hoover in his memoirs leaves no doubt as to his own judgment on that point, and made a very interesting case to prove it.

Coolidge, according to "Ike" Hoover's theory, expected too much. He wanted to keep on declining, in more and more forceful language, but to have the nomination forced on him. Roosevelt, observers think now, is not going to make any such mistake.

The two situations are interesting chiefly by contrast rather than by similarity. Right up to that day in the Black Hills of South Dakota when Coolidge said he did not "choose" to run, every one assumed he would be the candidate. There was not a hint of opposition. There was no prospect of a fight against his nomination. There was not even much discussion of the third term idea. Coolidge was popular, the country was prosperous. When the topic did come up in conversation most folks said the less than two years of President Harding's term which Coolidge had served before becoming President in his own right would not count as making another election a third term.

As a matter of fact, Coolidge never mentioned any prejudice against the third term idea. He just made it partially clear that he did not want to run again. And the Republican convention took him at his word. Whereas in the present case Governor Earle and some of the union leaders have come out flatly for a third term for Roosevelt, more than two years earlier, comparably, than Coolidge announced he would not be a candidate. Coolidge's announcement was more than seven months after the 1926 election had returned majorities in both houses of congress to uphold his hands. Everybody knew the Democratic party was split so wide open by the religious battle which had come to its climax at Madison Square Garden, that there was virtually no hope of its being really formidable at the following election. The national conventions were barely a year off.

Time Inopportune

The opening gun of the Roosevelt third term campaign is fired more than a year before the mid-term congressional election. It resounds when there is a revolt against the President on the part of conservative Democrats so pronounced that a harmony conference between the President and the national legislators was to begin two days later at the Jefferson Island club.

It came at a time when nobody really knew whether the revolt on Capitol Hill had much popular backing or not. One point about it, however, was rather obvious. Governor Earle, whose declaration attracted the most attention, was in rather a hot spot. It was obvious that no matter what might happen later, the Pennsylvania governor had made plenty of enemies by his action in declaring martial law at Johnstown. He had acted operly when the President was aiding the same side without any such frank avowal. So lots of important folks figured they could shoot at Earle in safety, whereas they might not dare shoot at the President.

Earle's action tended to make the President the target for all such shots at him, and for this reason his timing did not make such a hit at the White House as his subject matter might have on some other occasion.

Tariff Hearings

The same group of interests in this country which so successfully obtained the independence act for the Philippines, long after the armed insurrection of Aguinaldo, the moral appeal of William Jennings Bryan and the shrewd lobbying of Manuel Quezon had failed, is now on the job to prevent being deprived of the fruits of their victory.

What has happened is that a joint committee, consisting of experts appointed by both the United States and the Philippines governments, is conducting hearings with a view to determining the tariff policy which shall exist between the two countries after independence is actually achieved.

At first this independence date, being fixed in 1946, seemed far off to the business interests affected. Moreover, at first there was a tendency among those who knew about it to discount its importance. They figured that there would be only recommendations—that when the recommendations reached congress would be time enough to make a fight. They knew they had won when the test came in congress. By shrewd log-rolling they had won enough votes to give the islands the independence act. So they thought the same log-rolling would be sure to work next time, which would be, they thought, when the recommendations are formally taken up in congress.

Also, a considerable group of those interested actually knew nothing about the hearings. There was too much going on in Washington for the newspapers to get excited about hearings on something which would have no effect until 1946.

But several things have happened to change all that. First, there is quite a movement to move forward the independence date. The same interests affected by the tariff hearings were concerned in that, and this made any present hearings much more significant.

Important Factor

But much more important is another factor. The prospect now is that there is not going to be any repeal of the reciprocal trade treaty powers of the President—that this power will be extended indefinitely. This will mean, if true, that if and when the report of this joint committee comes up, immediately after independence is achieved or immediately before, it may not be possible to ignore its ideas simply by having enough votes in congress to prevent action on Capitol Hill.

For it is certain that any recommendations such a committee will make would have a great deal of effect on the State department, and naturally on the Philippine government. So that, under the reciprocal treaty making power, it could easily be that a lot of tariff duties on Philippine products coming into the United States might be sliced in half—fifty per cent being the extent of the change in any duty which can be made by the State department without further reference to congress.

For instance, if the duty on sugar should be two cents a pound, under the reciprocal treaty power the State department could make a treaty with the Philippines which would cut that duty to one cent, or boost it to three cents.

Sugar is picked for an illustration chiefly because it is simple, and was one of the big reasons why the islands obtained the present promise of independence. There are plenty of others, notably coconut oil.

Future of G. O. P.

Despite the "harmony" meeting of Democratic senators and representatives with President Roosevelt at the Jefferson Island club there are growing signs of cleavage as between what might be called the old line Democrats and the New Dealers.

So much so that certain important Republicans, more interested in economic principles than in party organization, are quietly putting forth a new thought with respect to future G. O. P. activities.

In short, they would have the national Republican organization voluntarily disband, shut up shop, and announce to the country that as a national party the Republicans were through.

While most of those talking about it do not want their names used for the present, it is said that Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg of Michigan, regarded by many as the outstanding Republican in the country since the last election, is not out of sympathy with the idea.

The plan is so far advanced that the effect on individual senators and members of the house now bearing the Republican label has been considered. There are still many districts which send Republicans to the house regardless of Democratic landslides and New Deal tendencies. At least two states, Vermont and Maine, still promise to send Republican senators to Washington.

The idea would not be to deprive the Republicans representing these districts and states of their label. They could run as "Republicans," just as Senator Robert M. La Follette runs as a "Progressive" or Senator Henrik Shipstead runs as a "Farmer-Laborite." These gentlemen seem to have little difficulty getting elected, despite the fact that there is no real national organization of their parties to back them.

Might Be Help

Representative Bertrand H. Snell of New York comes down regularly from the Potsdam district of the Empire state, no matter if Democratic national candidates do carry the state by more than a million. The same is true of Representative Allen T. Treadway and Representative Edith Nourse Rogers of Massachusetts.

Some of the advocates of the plan say that actually it would be a help to such Republicans not to have any national Republican organization cluttering up the situation. Of course, in Mr. Snell's case it would deprive him of the leadership of the Republicans in the house—perhaps—and it might play hob with committee assignments in both house and senate.

But the real objective, of course, is to encourage the split in the Democratic party—to permit the country to have two real parties again. Nor is it an answer, say those advocating it, to say that the Republican party polled more than 15,000,000 votes in the last election, and that anything as strong as that should be preserved.

Fashions at Vacationland

HURRAY for dear old Johnnie Two-Weeks! He's recently given the nod to these three sweet young laborers and now they're off reaping the rewards. Yes, they're vacationing — and how! But, of course, Sew-Your-Own had them dressed right up to the hilt. There was a luscious array of sports togs, including a trig sun 'n' fun suit, all occasion dresses, and charmingly young informal dinner frocks, and — well, just about everything a girl could wear.

Miss M, picturesque blonde, above, left, knows what glamour is and how to have it. That's why she chose this softly feminine frock with its swirling skirt and delicately slim waist. You should see her of an evening in the outdoor terrace. She's a picture in black gossamer chiffon trimmed with white satin. And to think, she made it all herself!

Miss B, above, center, and center of attraction at the Surf club, has everything under perfect control as she strolls along the boardwalk. With not a care in her pretty head, and lots of streamlining in her natty little sports dress, she walks with confidence and pride.

Miss Y, the sports enthusiast at the right, says that her three piece ensemble is so very very and practical she wears it almost to the exclusion of her other frocks. Her idea is to soak up as much sunshine as possible, and that's pretty easy to do when she wears the halter and shorts sans dress. Take a tip from Miss Y. Make your version of this ensemble in duplicate for all summer wear. Have one in seersucker, the other in acetate.

Pattern 1241 is for sizes 14 to 20 (32 to 44 bust). Size 16 requires 4⅝ yards of 39 inch material plus 1½ yards of ribbon, and 3 yards of trimming.

Pattern 1316 is designed for sizes 12 to 20 (30 to 38 bust). Size 14 requires 4 yards of 39 inch material.

Pattern 1335 is designed for sizes 12 to 20 (30 to 38 bust). Size 14 requires 4¾ yards of 39 inch material for the dress and shorts, and 1 yard for the topper. The dress alone requires 3⅜ yards.

SYNOPSIS

Brooke Reyburn visits the office of Jed Stewart, a lawyer, to discuss the terms of an estate she has inherited from Mrs. Mary Armanda Dane. Unwittingly she overhears Jed talking to Mark Trent, nephew of Mrs. Dane who has been disinherited. Mrs. Dane had lived at Lookout House, a huge structure by the sea, built by her father and divided into two, for her and Mark's father. Brooke had been a fashion expert, and Mrs. Dane, a "shut-in," hearing her on the radio, had invited her to call and developed a deep affection for her. Mark discloses that Mrs. Dane had threatened to disinherit him if he married Lola, from whom he is now divorced. He says he does not trust Henri and Clotilde Jacques, Mrs. Dane's servants. He says he is not interested in an offer of Brooke's to share the estate with him. Leaving her department store job, Brooke refuses an offer to "go stepping" with Jerry Field, a carefree young man who wants to marry her. At a family conference she learns she must live at Lookout House alone, since Lucette, her younger sister who is taking her job, her brother, Sam, a young playwright, and her mother plan to stay in the city. Jed and Mark are astounded when they hear from Mrs. Gregory, a family friend, that she had witnessed a hitherto unknown will with Henri and Clotilde two weeks before Mrs. Dane died. Brooke had arrived just as she was leaving. Jed suggests that Mark open his part of Lookout House, get friendly with Brooke and try to find out about the will. Jed agrees to stay with him. Mark accepts Brooke's invitation for a family Thanksgiving dinner at Lookout. Mrs. Reyburn announces on Thanksgiving eve that she has been invited to England. Sam and Lucette decide to move in with Brooke and Sam plans to produce a new play locally. After the Thanksgiving dinner Brooke tells Mark that little of Mrs. Dane's silver collection is left. Jerry Field and his sister Daphne drop in and announce they will be neighbors for the winter.

"It must have been Mrs. Dane's friend Mrs. Gregory; they call her the Empress here. So she has called. That means, if she likes us, that we shall be admitted into the inner social circle. Jerry, I was so dazed by your appearance that I forgot to ask what you meant by that word 'neighbor.'"

"Sure, we're neighbors. Daphne and I have taken a house here for the season."

"Season! What season?"

"This winter, of course. Didn't you say that many of the houses were to be kept open?"

"Ye-s. But why — " Surprise crisped Brooke's voice.

"I've been wanting for years to paint snow. Found I could hire a house with a studio here. You don't mind, I hope?"

"Don't be foolish, Jerry. Of course I don't, only—"

"No matter what Brooke thinks, I'm all for it, Mr. Field," Lucette encouraged. "It will be grand to have someone kind of young in the neighborhood—and—Oh, Sam, two more recruits for the cast of your play! Line of applicants for parts will please form on the left."

"Play! What play? I adore dramatics." Daphne Field's voice and eyes were eager.

"We've been talking about producing Sam's comedy, 'Islands Arise,' for charity. Of course it's a terrific job. We always paint our own scenery—"

"Hold! Jerry the boy artist will paint the scenery;"—Field's enthusiasm cooled—"afraid my box of a studio wouldn't be big enough though."

"There is a large empty room on the second floor next to Lucette's. Couldn't decide just how to furnish it, so I've waited. We can use that. Won't it be grand, Sam?" Brooke explained and demanded in the same breath.

"Yeah, but what does that prove? How do I know whether the Field team can act, or whether they'll gum up the show?"

"Don't be a grouch, Master Reyburn," Lucette jibed. "You'd better page the family Lost and Found Department for your manners. I adore neighbors. I'm pleased purple that we are to have two such snappy ones."

Mark Trent straightened and flung the cigarette he had but a moment before lighted into the fire. He kept his eyes on Lucette as he announced:

"Newsflash! Not two new neighbors, but four, lady. I'm opening my house next week. Jed Stewart and I will keep bachelor hall there. My announcement doubtless lacks the romantic overtones of Field's, but we'll do our best to make you Reyburns neighbor-conscious."

In the firelit library of his house, Mark Trent was perched on the corner of the large flat desk. As he filled his pipe he compared the old-fashioned air of dignified restfulness of the room with its deep chairs in the smoking-room manner and its two-story book-lined walls, divided half way up by a gallery, with the charm of its twin on the other side of the brocade hanging which screened the door connecting the two houses.

Jed Stewart, lounging in a crimson leather chair, hands in his trousers pockets, legs outstretched, was staring at the blazing logs, watching the blue and yellow, copper and green tongues of flame lick at the chimney. The faint thunder of waves dashing against ledges, the ceaseless crying of sea gulls stole through the heavy hangings drawn across the long windows. Impatiently he sat up.

"We've been here a week, Mark, and we are not the fraction of a degree nearer finding that last will and testament of Mary Amanda Dane's—if there is such a thing."

"And the silver; don't forget the silver, Jed. I can account for the will being lost—if there was one—but what has become of the silver? I've had it so much on my mind that I consulted Bill Harrison."

"Who's he?"

"The inspector in charge of police headquarters across the causeway. He's been on the force here since I was a small boy."

"What did he say about the silver?"

"He didn't say, he doesn't talk much. He asked a few questions about the Jacques and said he would drop in here this afternoon to take a look around. Mrs. Gregory is coming later—hope they don't meet—I asked her to have tea with us. Met her yesterday on the street, and she let it be known that her feelings were hurt that I had not invited her before. I—I asked her to bring Miss Reyburn."

Mark Trent slid from the desk and absentmindedly twirled a globe which showed the countries of the world as they had been before the Treaty of Versailles had remade the map of Europe.

"Do you think Brooke Reyburn suspects that we are here as amateur detectives, Jed?"

"Amateurs! We may be, but you've called in a professional on the job, haven't you? You can't tell what that girl thinks, but why should she suspect our reason for being here more than Field's, and one couldn't suspect that lad of ulterior motives. He always looks to me as if he were on the verge of kissing a lady's hand. Why didn't you accept the lead in Sam's comedy? It was offered to you, wasn't it?"

"It was, but long ago I outgrew dramatics. What do you think of 'Islands Arise'—that's the name of the play, isn't it?"

"That it will get a fair hearing, at least. The theater-going world isn't so cocky and hard-boiled as it was some years ago and it may appreciate Sam's ideas and ideals. You'd be a knock-out in the lead, fella."

"I wouldn't take part in the play if I were aching to act. I see the Reyburns as seldom as possible. Thanksgiving day when Brooke started to thank me for pulling her from under that car, I burned with shame when I remembered why I had accepted her invitation. I don't care for this spy stuff, even if I do believe that the girl by some hocus pocus hypnotized Aunt Mary Amanda."

"You show it. Getting to be the strong, silent type, aren't you, Mark? If you feel that way about her, why did you ask Mrs. Gregory to bring Brooke here this afternoon? You never have been fair to that girl. You started with the idea that she's crooked, and you're sticking to it like honey to a glass dish."

Trent blew a shrill whistle through his fingers. Stewart laughed.

"I get you, the stop signal. I'll toss her a posy, then I'll quit. I'm supposed to be stage manager of Sam's play, but I'd sure make a mess of it without Brooke as my property woman. She's executive and then some. She never forgets."

"When does the play come off?"

"First Thursday in January. Sam thought of New Year's eve but gave that up for fear he couldn't lure a producer away from New York festivities."

"That isn't far off. We'll have a grand celebration here for the cast and friends who come from town. We'll invite the neighbors to supper and dance after the show. Have you a speaking part?"

Mark Trent stopped speaking to stare at the ceiling. Had a door banged overhead, or had he imagined the sound? The servants, Taku and Kowa, were in the kitchen at this time of day; they wouldn't be on the third floor anyway, he had not had that opened up, plenty of room below for Jed and himself.

A man entered the room with a purposeful stride. He was ample of jowl, slightly opulent at waistline; he had the flinty eyes of an eagle who can stare straight at the sun. A sense of force was his outstanding characteristic.

"Here I am, Mark. That Jap outside wanted to bow me in, but I shooed him off." Inspector Bill Harrison's voice was surprisingly soft with a persuasive inflection.

"Glad you've come, Inspector. This is my friend Jed Stewart."

Inspector Harrison nodded. "How are you, Mr. Stewart. Does he know about the silver, Mark?" He lowered himself into a deep chair and accepted a cigar.

"Yes, he's staying here to help me—us solve the mystery."

"What else have you lost?"

"Why do you think we've lost anything else?"

"Would you two city guys come to this burg to stay just to find a lot of silverware?"

"It's more than mere silverware; the pieces are antiques of great value."

Inspector Harrison pulled himself from the enticing crimson depths to his feet.

"All right, Mark, have it your own way, but I ain't mixin' up in a case where folks are holding out on me. I work best when the interested party works with me. Get that?"

Mark's laugh was quick and disarming.

"Hold everything, Bill Harrison; you can't walk out on us like that. Sit down again. Jed, tell him what Mrs. Gregory told us about the will she witnessed. You understand, Inspector, that there may be nothing to it—so it's off the record."

"Say, Mark, do you suppose I climbed up on the force by talking my head off? I play the rules. Spill it, Mr. Stewart."

Stewart repeated Mrs. Gregory's astonishing announcement that she had witnessed a will of Mary Amanda Dane's of a date later than the will allowed; told of the decision of Mark and himself to turn detectives and of their absolute unsuccess to date.

Inspector Bill Harrison blew a perfect smoke ring.

"Did Mrs. Gregory say there was anyone else present but Mrs. Dane and the other witnesses when she signed?"

"No."

Mark Trent's answer was nothing short of explosive. The inspector's soft grudging laugh, in such marked contrast to his bird-of-prey eyes, brought guilty color to his face. It wasn't keeping back information not to tell that Brooke Reyburn had driven in that afternoon just as Mrs. Gregory had driven out from Lookout House, was it?

Inspector Bill Harrison rose. With a cigar tucked in one corner of his mouth, he nodded.

"I'll be going. Guess I've got all the dope. Don't give that Henri Jacques and his wife the idea that you've missed the silver. Let it drop out of their minds. When you have any news, come to headquarters, don't phone. That reminds me. Know anything about the people who've started the filling station here on the point?"

"No. But I understand that Henri Jacques is recommending them."

"Oh, he is? That Henri's just naturally helpful, ain't he? Well, I must get back." He added in his soft persuasive voice:

"Whenever you're ready to come across with the name of the other party who was in the neighborhood of Lookout House the day that last will of Mrs. Dane's was signed, Mark, I'm just across the causeway. I'll be seeing you."

"Don't go yet, Bill!"

He mustn't leave thinking that he and Jed were holding out on him, Mark realized.

Jed Stewart grabbed Mark's shoulder.

"Hold on, Mark. See who's here!"

Mark Trent turned. Surprise brought him to his feet, wiped the smile from his lips. That couldn't be Lola on the threshold! It was. Hunt, her name was now, Lola Hunt, he must remember.

"Say, Mark, I'll be making my get-away."

He nodded response to Bill Harrison's mumble. Knew when he opened the door which led to the print room and vanished. Evidently the inspector didn't care to meet Lola. Who did? With the question Mark thrust his hands hard into his coat pockets and took a step forward.

"Well?"

The sound was more a growl than a word, he realized, as he looked steadily at the woman who had been his wife. Had been. At last he had come to think of her in the past tense. It had taken three years to accomplish that. The shame, the humiliation, the unbearable heartache he had suffered in the years they had lived together swept over him in a sickening tide. What did she want now? She was the type of woman who constantly and everlastingly wanted something. Wasn't he giving her enough? There had been no justice in his giving her anything, but when she had written him that her current husband was out of a job and that she was hungry, what could he do but make her an allowance till the man found work? Her clothing had a cheap smartness; the dark brilliance of her eyes was intensified by artificial shadows; her skin was thick and flushed; her short black hair needed trimming; her mouth drooped at the corners. She pouted lips which resembled nothing so much as a bloody smear.

"Don't stare at me as if I were a ghost from out a purple past, Mark. I told your Jap that I was an old friend, that I wanted to surprise you. I hate to keep the gentlemen standing. Won't you ask me to sit down?"

Without waiting for an answer, she sank into the large chair before the fire.

"Still pals you two, aren't you? Funny how much longer friendship lasts between men than love between a man and woman. Mark, I came here to talk to you. Jed, you may go."

Mark Trent's hand closed on Stewart's arm with a grip which turned his nails white.

"Jed will stay and hear what you have to say. Surely we can have no secrets from the man who saw us through the divorce court."

She shrugged. "All right with me. I've nothing to lose. Thought you might object to having what I say get on the air."

"Methinks the lady is implying that I'm a gossip."

MILDRED WHITE WALLACE, Social Editor

AMELIA EARHART

We have been greatly interested in listening to the various opinions regarding the tragic trip of Amelia Earhart begun some weeks ago in an attempt to encircle the globe. We have not found one masculine opionion that contained any "patience with such foolishness". The masculine gender have been loud in their denunciations of this adventurous spirit on the part of one member of the "weaker sex" who risked her life and—we fear, lost it—to satiate her ambitious spirit. However, personally, we glory i nher daring endeavor! Her death has dignified the tragic loss in failing to reach the coveted goal of achievement but in our somewhat vivid imagination, we believe Amelia Earhart in flying on wings to greet the Dawn of the Great Tomorrow, is probbaly far removed enough from this mundane sphere to care what the majority of self appointed arbiters of anothers fate thinks of it. We agree most heartily in the understanding article which one of our favorite columnists has written regarding the Flight of Amelia Earhart—and reprint it as the best solution to her mysterious exit. Walter Lippmann says:

"Miss Earhart needs no justification. The world is a better place to live in because it contains human beings who will give up ease and security and stake their own lives in order to do what they themselves think are worth doing.

"The best things of mankind are as useless as Amelia Earhart's adventure. They are the things that are undertaken not for some definite, measurable result, but because someone, not counting the costs or calculating the consequences, is moved by curiosity, the love of excellence, a point of honor, the compulsion to invent or to make or to understand . . . .

"Such energy cannot be planned and managed and made purposeful or weighed by the standards of utility or judged by its social consequences It is wild and it is free. But all the heroes, the saints and the seers, the explorers and the creators, partake of it. They do not know what they discover. . . .

"No preconceived theory fits them. No material purpose actuates them. They do the useless, brave, noble, the divinely foolish and the very wisest things that are done by man. An dwhat they prove to themselves and t oothers is that man is no mere creature of his habits, no mere automaton in his routine, no mere cog in the collective machine, but that in the dust of which he is made there is also fire, lighted now and then by great winds from the sky."

MILDRED CURLEE

Legions of Mildred Curlee's friends regret to learn of her continued illness in her home in Columbiana. It is sincerely hoped Mrs. Curlee will soon be able to continue her many worthwhile activities in Columbiana. She is sincerely missed from many circles, social, civic, educational and religious where, for a number of years, her vivacious personality and gift for leadership has been valuably expressed.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN

Every citizen in Columbiana is interested in an attempt to get some action on the deplorable condition the roads within the incorporated limits of Columbiana are in. Not since the "memory of man runneth thus" can we recall such a condition of the main streets. It is almost impossible now to traverse them in any direction leading into Columbiana without breaking a spring on the auto—or cutting a tire into.

We understand that the County is supposed to turn over a part of the Road and Bridge Fund for the upkeep of the Town's thoroughfares—and we also understand that there are other resources from which some relief could be granted. Civic pride as well as the safety of the inhabitants should be considered. We do not ask that you take our word for it—but if you are in doubt about it—please turn your auto or pedal extremities in any of the fiv e directions leading into the City—and pronounce your own verdict. It is a time to CALL ALL CARS — ALL HANDS—ALL TRUCKS — and do something about it!

Dr. J. M. Kimmey, former Health Officer of Shelby County was in Columbiana Wednesday greeting old friends who so happily remember him.

Miss Clara Pitts of Washington, D. C. and Chapman Pitts of Starkville, Miss., were distinguished guests in Columbiana on Tuesday.

Mrs. L. H. Ellis left Columbiana Thursday morning for a visit with her daughter, Mrs. Bill Mullin in Dothan, after which she will spend her vacation on the Florida Coast and in Pensacola Beach.

Mr. and Mrs. E. B. Turner and E. B. J. are spending several days with Mrs. Turner's parents in Cahaba Valley.

Mr. and Mrs. G. R. McNeil, Mr. and Mrs. Claude Matthews of Birmingham and Misses Odell and Idell Turner and Buck Clark and Powell Blair of Columbiana, spent the past week end at Blue Creek.

James and Francis Leonard of Birmingham, spent the week end in Columbiana.

Mrs. George Holcombe spent Tuesday with her parents in Shelby.

AN EXPRESSION OF GRATITUDE

To many of you who have, during the past week, renewed your allegiance to the Democrat by paying up your subscription, we want to express verbally our deep appreciation. To those of you who did not see fit to take the Democrat for 1937-38, we express regret over your absence from the large circle of weekly readers. We hope you will "pull up a chair" and join us later. We again ask that you let us know if you care to have the paper continued—with the "pay later" clause! We are necessarily having to cull the list as materials have gone "sky high" and in short—we figure IF we are not worth "2 cents"—"No tokens" per week to you—"We ain't much!" What do you think? Say it with a little American Eaglet! Thanks, one fluttered in the door just as we finished this paragraph.

Distinguished visitors from Calera who brightened the office last week with gay repartee and merry banter included Mr. and Mrs. R. B. Luther, Mr. Norwood Mr. and Mrs. Bud Norwood, Dave Norwood and Miss Norwood. Friends who are always joyously received in this little laboratory of verbs, adverbs, adjectives, nouns et cetera!

Mr. and Mrs. Byrd Curry of Wilton were guests of Judge and Mrs. Cage Head Thursday.

Charles Benton, who holds a responsible position with the Liberty National Life Insurance Company in Birmingham, is the guest of his mother, Mrs. Fay Benton. We are personally indebted to Mr. Benton for a thoughtful call in our little journalistic emporium on Monday.

Miss Charlie Verne Tinney has returned to her home in Columbiana, after spending a vacation on the Florida Coast and in Sampson, Ala.

Rux Carter, who holds an important position with the State Highway Department in Birmingham, is spending his vacation at home with his mother, Mrs. Grace Carter.

Mrs. E. P. Lightcap, charming guest of Mrs. D. S. Lightcap, who hails from New York, but who once made her home in the Deep Southland, has returned to Broadway where she is a stylist of note for an exclusive hat shoppe. Mrs. Lightcap won many friends in Columbiana during her stay and was the recipient of many social courtesies while in this friendly little burg we call home.

Mrs. J. H. Taylor is spending this week in Birmingham, the guest of her brother, Dr. Sam H. Wallace.

Mr. and Mrs. William Teague of Kingsport, Tenn., are the guests of their Mother, Mrs. Rosa Teague.

Beth Wallace, after spending six weeks in Auburn, has returned to Columbiana.

Norman Lefkovits spent several days at home during the past week.

Miss Mamie Jo Harbin had as her guests Sunday, Misses Katherine Arnold and Julia Pope, Jack Burleson, Mr. Lacey and Mr. Kirksey of Sylacauga.

AWNINGS TO FIT

Old Mattresses made new. Furniture repaired and upholstered. Draperies and Curtains. Write Sanitary Mattress and Awning Co., 431 Norton Ave., Sylacauga, Alabama. Trips made to Columbiana twice monthly.

Mr. and Mrs. Elmer E. Todd of Birmingham were the guests Sunday of Mr. and Mrs. Mims Roberts.

Dr. H. Krause, who is holding the office of Commissioner of Deeds for the State of Florida in Illinois, was among the mid-summer visitors of Columbiana last week while returning to Pensacola from Chicago, where the climate was getting too uncomfortably hot for him. Dr. Krause finds the situation of the disordered steel areas in the North presents a picture of insurrection. It is his belief that continued strike disturbances north of the Ohio river by reckless labor leaders will drive many northern businessess and industries to the South. Unbothered by labor disputes, Alabama business leaders already have noted some remarkable success, especially in Birmingham.

Guests in the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Curlee during the past week end included Mrs. Minnie Acker, Avis and Clayton Aeker of Birmingham.

Mrs. W. B. Hope and nephew, Jack Ryland, spent last week in Birmingham.

Doris and June Luttrell of Griffin Georgia, are the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Paul O. Luck this week,

Mrs Elmer Davis and Avis Payne are in Anniston this week attending the Methodist Sunday School Conference.

Dorothy Wood spent last week in Birmingham with her mother, Mrs. Dottie Woods.

Doris Merrell and Wayne Lauderdale after spending two weeks in Camp Seatone, North Carolina, have returned to their home in Columbiana.

T. R. Walton, prominent merchant of Columbiana, has joined a group of friends and is taking a much needed vacation along the Guf Coast.

Mack Freeman of Wetumpka, was the week end guest of Mr. and Mrs. L. H. Ellis.

Mrs. Wade Lawless (Alice Bird) and attractive daughter, Alice Nelson accompanied by Miss Marie Hadaway of Jasper, are the guests of Mrs. Pauline Bird in Columbiana.

Heart Drifts

FROST ON OPALS

I like gray days . . . they dim life's harsh designs
When tired eyes crave respite from the stark
Cruel patterns of the years and draw the dark
Kind draperies of dreams across the lines.

I like gray days . . . when happy memories pass
As drifting leaves that Autumn winds have stirred
To transient joy in gallant colors blurred
Like ash on embers, frost on opal glass.

I like gray days . . . then weary hearts keep tryst
With half-forgotten loves that wak again
In gentle hues of gardens glimpsed through rain
And sorrows are but ruins veiled by mist .

—D. B.

WHEN JESUS CAME

When Jesus came to Golgothaa they hanged
Him on a tree.
And drove great nails through hands
And feet and made a Calvary.

They crowned Him with a crown of thorns—
Red were his wounds and deep;
For those were crude and cruel days
And human life was cheap.

When Jesus came to America
They simply passed him by;
They never hurt a hair of him;
They only let Him die.

For men have grown more tender
And they would not give him pain.
They only just passed down the street
An dleft Him in the rain.

Still Jesus cried, "Forgive them,
For they know not what they do,
And still it rains the Winter rain
That drenched Him through and through.

The crowds went home and left the streets
Without a soul to see,
And Jesus crouched against a wall
And cried for Calvary.

—Selected.

DAWN

Dappled dawn,
One sta rabove it;
A bird sings on—
O Love, I love it!

STILL DOMINION

When a great tree bends low above a roof
The seasons make a pattern on the eaves—
Winter gives way to Spring's eternal proof
Of Summer's airy canopy of leaves.

So tempering the sun, its winds endow
Each tremor with a gentle, rustling cry,
And through the night it stands with outstretched bough
To brush the moon as it goes drifting by.

And slowly on the heart there is impressed
A still dominion. Who can stay aloof
From earth's wide majesty, whose home is blessed
When a great tree bends low above a roof?

—H. F. S.

A BIRD MAY SING AT TWILIGHT

A bird may sing at twilight, or a gypsy
Violin, and old wounds made by music, wake
Again.
Are these the songs the morning stars all sing,
The wild and wandering strains of long ago;
Songs that tug at the heart of man
Like autumn leaves caught in a net of branches?
But never will music fall to earth like leaves
And moulder in forgetfulness, though sometimes it blow thin
As a wind at dusk, whistling lean wraiths of snow.
A bird may sing at twilight, or a gypsy violin,
And old wounds made by music
Wake again.

—M. E. U.

PETER RABBIT ASKS AFTER OLD FRIENDS

NO SOONER had Winsome Bluebird finished telling how Ol' Mistah Buzzard warms his toes on the chimneys of the houses in the far-away South than Peter Rabbit was full of questions about other friends who had been spending the long winter in the land of sunshine.

"Where is Little Friend the Song Sparrow?" he asked eagerly.

"Little Friend of All is not very far away," he replied. "In fact, I think he will be here in a few days, Peter. You see, Little Friend loves the Green Meadows and the Smiling Pool so much that he cannot bear to go any farther away than he has to. I guess he feels just as I do. And so he doesn't go way, way down South as some do, but just far enough to be comfortable and to be sure that he will be able to get enough to eat. I heard him singing only a few days ago, and he said to tell his friends up here that he is on his way."

Cheerful Robin.

"My, but I'll be glad to hear him again," said Peter with a sigh. "Somehow I always feel better when I hear the voice of Little Friend. I hope nothing will happen to him on the way."

"Oh, I guess not," replied Winsome Bluebird. "You see, everybody loves him so that nobody wants to harm him. He hasn't any beautiful suit. He's just the plainest little fellow. I guess he is just loved because—why—because he's always so cheery and lovable."

"Yes," said Peter, "I guess that's the reason. It must be beautiful to be loved like that. I suppose you've seen Cheerful Robin this winter."

"Oh, my, yes! Cheerful and I have been together a great deal this winter. He's coming right along, and if I don't watch out and get about my business Mistress Spring will be making him her herald instead of me. He looks just as fine as ever, and he really is very well and in splendid spirits, considering the hard time he has had ever since he left here."

"What do you mean? Doesn't Cheerful find enough to eat down South?" demanded Peter, pricking up his long ears.

"Plenty, plenty!" replied Winsome Bluebird. "It's the way people treat him down there. Men and boys are altogether too fond of Cheerful."

Peter looked up quickly to see if Winsome was joking, but he didn't seem to be. Indeed, he seemed to have a kind of sorrowful look, as if thinking of the hard time Cheerful Robin had had made him feel bad. "If they are so fond of him I should think that Cheerful would have the best kind of a time," said Peter.

"They are fond of him in the wrong way," replied Winsome sadly. "They are fond of him to eat, and Cheerful has to be watching out all the time for dreadful guns. I wish he had come along up with me. I won't feel quite easy until I see him. Don't you think guns are dreadful things, Peter Rabbit?"

"Yes, indeed! The most dreadful things in all the world," replied Peter promptly. "But I didn't suppose that Cheerful Robin ever had anything to fear from them. I don't see what he goes down South for, if that is the way they treat him."

"He has to get enough to eat," replied Winsome Bluebird, "just as I do. If it wasn't for that we wouldn't either of us go, because you know we love the Green Meadows and the Smiling Pool and the Old Orchard so. Now, I have sat here gossiping with you just as long as I can. I must be spreading the glad news that Mistress Spring is coming."

"I'll help you," said Peter happily, and made ready to start right away for the Green Forest.

FIRST AID TO THE AILING HOUSE

By Roger B. Whitman

SHINGLE STAINS

FOR wood shingles it is generally considered advisable to use stain rather than a paint. With the exposed surface sealed by paint, moisture does not dry out readily, and rotting of the under side of the shingles is likely to take place. Stain penetrates the shingle, and does not interfere with the drying out of moisture.

New shingles should be dipped in stain before being laid, to cover all surfaces. The restaining of an old roof must, of course, be with a brush or spray.

Shingle stain can be bought in a variety of colors. However, excellent shingle stains can be made at home. The following formula can be relied on, and is easily prepared—4 gallons raw linseed oil, 2 gallons coal tar cresote oil, 1 gallon Japan drier. This stain is clean and dark. If color is wanted, color-in-oil should be mixed with linseed oil to the consistency of paint; 2 gallons of the mixture should be used with the foregoing for a stain to be brushed on.

Coal tar cresote oil has a preservative effect and checks rotting. Its use in a shingle stain is always advisable. Its color is dark, however, and it cannot be used for stains of light tone.

A good treatment for shingles and also for dried-out and weather beaten wood is a mixture of 2 parts of raw linseed oil and 1 part of turpentine, to be applied liberally. The effect of the turpentine is to draw the linseed oil deeply into the wood. This has but a slight darkening effect. When color is desired, color-in-oil can be added.

In dipping new shingles before laying, a small barrel or other container is filled with stain, and the shingles are dipped into it, butt-end first, for three-quarters of their length. They are then thrown in a loose pile for drying. There are advantages in buying shingles ready-stained. In the first place, the shingles are inspected one by one before dipping, and imperfect ones are thrown aside. Dipping is under pressure, so that the stain is forced into the wood much more deeply than is possible with dipping by hand. Also the colors are more permanent and less likely to fade.

GRAPHIC GOLF

By BEST BALL

LENGTHEN THE BACKSWING

ONE of the most flagrant faults of the average golfer is jerky, hurried hitting. This is most apparent on the short shots around the green where the player, apprehensive over the success of this shot hits down hurriedly and raises his head in the same motion to see where the ball is going. There is not quite the same anxiety displayed on the longer shots but the tendency to stroke hurriedly is there none the less. As a rule it is the result of lack of confidence in the actual golf stroke. Most players like to get the job of stroking over with as soon as possible once they have started the motion. For them the long, gradually accelerated back and downstrokes are fraught with dangers and invite errors of every description. The real trouble is largely mental and it is through this channel that the fault must be combated. One method of cure suggested by Billie Burke, the former Open champion, is to teach the golfer to force his stroke back further in the backswing than he is inclined to do. This will take a little will power at first but, once the ice is broken, the player will find it increasingly easier to increase the width of the backswing arc. As a result he can bring the clubhead down slowly, increasing the momentum gradually and make the stroke a swing instead of sharp hit.

"Say, dad," said Willie, "what does it mean when people talk about the hey-day of youth?"

"I don't know about the hay-day," came the reply, "but I guess it's when we're in clover."

what Irvin S. Cobb thinks about:

Seeking Contentment.

SANTA MONICA, CALIF.—Out in the desert country I met kindly, hospitable folk bravely making the best of things on remote, small homesteads.

On little far-away ranches, on reservation trading posts, they are educating their children by resolute self-sacrifice; keeping in touch with the world through radio, through books and magazines and newspapers; and almost invariably content with their lives and proud of their struggles and living comfortably — yes, and happily—within their means, however meager.

Irvin S. Cobb

Then I come back to crowded cities where wealth seems only to make the inmates dissatisfied because somebody with greater wealth puts on a gaudier show of ostentation and extravagance. And I see the man who feverishly is striving after riches so that when he breaks down he may afford the most expensive nerve specialist. And the spoiled woman who was born with a silver spoon in her mouth, but judging by her expression the spoon must have been full of castor oil—and the flavor lasts. And the poor little rich children who have everything now and so will have nothing—except maybe dollars—when they grow up.

Curious, isn't it, that so little buys such a lot for some people and such a lot buys so little for the others?

The Return of Prosperity.

I CAN'T help gloating over what appeared in this space when I predicted that the temperamental and fickle bird of passage known as prosperity was winging its way back. Because the Better Business bureau reports that sellers of no-good stocks are showing increased activity.

Moreover, I hear that for the first time in years practically all the veteran bunco-steers are off relief. The lean times when the locusts of depression gnawed away our substance must indeed be over if the customers begin to nibble more freely at the same dependable old baits.

So, as he thumbs his copy of the sucker list against the morrow's campaign, I seem to hear Mr. Henry J. Slickguy (late of Leavenworth but now opening offices in the Wall street district) murmuring to himself:

"Happy days are here again! Drouth may kill the corn, Rust rots the wheat. Boll weevils destroy the cotton. But, thanks be, there's one crop in America which never fails!"

Have you a little gold brick in your home, dear reader? Well, don't worry, nobody's going to be slighted. Ere long you'll get your chance to invest in one.

Making Mental Slips.

THE most incredible thing has come to pass. Here I go along, year after year, building up a reputation for invariably being right, the same as George Bernard Shaw and Mme. Secretary Perkins. Then—bango!—I make one little slip and the trusting reader is shocked from pit to dome.

The other day I suggested taxing salaries of governmental employees. Now from all sides I'm told federal employees are subject to income taxes; only the vast majority of them, and probably the hardest-worked ones, draw such small wages that they owe Uncle Sam nothing when March 15 rolls around.

So far as I recall, this is the second time in my life I've been wrong. I can't cite what the other instance was—some very trifling matter, no doubt—but it must have occurred because I remember the nation-wide excitement which ensued, with people going around in a daze muttering: "Can it be possible?"

I now admit that early error and the recent one, too, and humbly beg pardon of my devoted public—all eight of them. It'll never happen again.

Conquered Champions.

IT HAS been brought to the attention of Mr. James J. Braddock that something happened to him a while back. Probably, by now, he has quit wondering whether many others were caught in the earthquake, but is reported to be still saying "Ouch!" at intervals.

And now, as is customary, his backers will insist he demand a return engagement—or disaster—with the Brown Bomber. But if I were Mr. Braddock—game though he be—I think I'd pattern my reply on the example of the gentleman who was knocked galley-west by a hit-and-run motorist.

As the dazed pedestrian was trying feebly to ascertain whether he was all in one piece, a kind-hearted citizen hurried up.

"Have an accident?" he inquired, brightly.

"No, thank you," said the victim; "just had one."

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL Lesson

Lesson for July 18

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 3:13-16; 4:10-16; 5:1.

GOLDEN TEXT—The Lord will give strength unto his people.—Psalm 29:11.

PRIMARY TOPIC—When Moses Was Afraid.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Moses Made Ambassador.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—God Stands by His Workers.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Strong in the Strength of God.

Never in a hurry! Who? God. He needed a human leader to bring his chosen people up out of the bondage of Egypt and he spent 80 years getting him ready—40 years learning all the wisdom of Egypt, and 40 years learning the lessons of God, patience and humility, on the back side of the desert.

Infinite and omnipotent is God, and he may move with faster-than-lightning speed. But usually we find him working out his blessed purposes, normally, quietly, but always "on time."

Our lesson brings before us the meeting with God which preceded the appearance of Moses as the head of the nation of Israel in its mighty conflict with Pharaoh. We find him first proceeding with commendable care but then going on in unfortunate humility which amounted almost to unbelief and which resulted in the substitution of his brother Aaron as his spokesman, but eventually we do see him going about his difficult task with resolution and courage.

I. Justifiable Caution (Exod. 3:13-16).

Neither God nor man dare entrust a high and difficult commission to a foolish man who brusquely "rushes in where angels fear to tread." The fact that one feels fully and unhesitatingly qualified to take over such a responsibility is almost a certain indication that he is not the man to assume it.

The ambassador must have credentials. God's representative has them. When "they shall say"—what an important and difficult situation that creates. The one who speaks for God must expect not only the scornful bitterness of God's enemies, but also the unbelieving questions of those he seeks to serve.

"What shall I say?" asks Moses, and God answers that he may say that "I AM" had sent him. This name of God reveals him as the eternal, independent, self-sufficient, self-existent, immutable, personal being. Consider, Christian brethren, whose we are and whom we serve. Here indeed is "inspiration in excess of duty," real equipment for Christian life and service.

But Moses seems to be unable to see beyond his own human infirmity even in the light of such a glorious revelation, supplemented as it was by miraculous powers, and we find him showing an

II. Unjustified Humility (Exod. 4:10-12).

When God calls a man he knows his limitations—why then should one plead them as an excuse for not serving? The excuse of Moses that he was not a fluent speaker has been the stand-by of unwilling workers all through the ages. When asked to lead a prayer meeting, teach a Sunday School class, conduct a young people's meeting, thousands have lamely thus excused themselves and missed a blessing.

The perfect answer of God in v.11 merits attention. God made your mouth and mine. He gives us the power of speech. He asks not the eloquence of polished rhetorical periods, or the flights of man's imagination. He wants but the incomparable eloquence of his own words on our lips. Dr. Richard Ellsworth Day in "Bush Aglow" rightly points out that this was the secret of the power of D. L. Moody.

III. Unnecessary Substitution (Exod. 4:13-16).

Loving and patient is our God, but there is a boundary line to that patience. Moses went too far in his humility and reflected on the ability of God, who promptly substituted Aaron as the spokesman.

Gracious was He in thus providing a helper for Moses. But one wonders what Moses missed of blessing and power because of his slowness of heart.

IV. "And Afterward" (Exod. 5:1).

Commissioned, bearing credentials from the infinite and eternal "I AM," and with a strong and eloquent brother by his side, Moses stands before Pharaoh to say in God's name, "Let my people go."

Preparation and the holy privilege of fellowship with God are to make us ready for service. While it is folly to go unprepared, it is double folly to prepare and then fail to go when God commands.

WHO'S NEWS THIS WEEK... By Lemuel F. Parton

Doctor of Gold.

NEW YORK.—When Secretary Morgenthau calls in a money doctor, he sends for Dr. Jacob Viner of Chicago, currently summoned to Washington to diagnose gold troubles. Gold, the experts tell me, keeps getting out of bounds, one way or another. Burying a few billions of it in Kentucky doesn't seem to help and there's no knowing how long Uncle Sam can go on borrowing money to buy and impound it. Offstage, financiers and governments are worried about gold, and it is understood that our Treasury department is shaping a policy. Hence Dr. Viner's presence in Washington.

Dr. Viner, of the faculty of the University of Chicago, was chief adviser to the Treasury in 1934, loaned by the university, and returned to Chicago with the understanding that he would be standing by if they needed him badly. Oddly enough, this trusted consultant in our vast experiment in managed economy belongs to the back-to-nature school of finance. He has vigorously opposed artificial wage and price stimulants as aids to inflation and at the depth of depression, when the cry everywhere was for higher wages, he was for lower monetary wages—also prices—but for higher real wages.

He says all this parallel jockeying of prices and wages comes to nothing, and possibly something worse; the real wage, determined by its purchasing power, is the only important consideration, and, that, Dr. Viner believes, rises only with the free and normal flow of credits and goods around the world, with low tariffs or no tariffs at all—this being his pet idea. He is definitely placed as a liberal, but he doesn't think we will get anywhere by strong-arming economic laws.

He is Canadian born, forty-five years old, naturalized in 1914. He was graduated at McGill university, took his doctorate at Harvard, and has been teaching, lecturing and writing since—at one time adviser to the shipping board and expert for the tariff commission. His eminence is in the field of scholarship. He is the author of some profound and, to this department, quite incomprehensible monographs on money and credit. He is visiting professor at the Graduate Institute of International Studies at Geneva, and has a towering reputation in Europe.

Communist Bogey Man.

PUDGY, bristling little Bela Kun, who once seized and ruled Hungary, may or may not have been executed in Russia. Reports are meagre and conflicting. A few weeks ago, a wayfarer back from Europe told me Kun was suspected of working with the Trotskyites. But that was just rumor and there is no explanation of what has happened—if anything did.

In the main ports of entry in South America and Europe, they turn in a riot call and burglar alarm every time it is whispered that the squat, swarthy and mysterious Bela Kun is in the offing.

For some reason, international police have put him down as the chief spreader of the communistic virus, although he has figured in no main events since Admiral Horthy chased him out of the pink and white Rococco palace at Budapest.

Born in Kolozsva, Transylvania, he acquired a law degree at the University of Vienna. He fought in the Hungarian army, was taken prisoner by the Russians, converted to Communism and joined the Red army. He easily topped over the mild Karolyi and for a brief period ran Hungary. Europe has been steadily pegging him from one country to another in a lot of fast triple plays—Portugal to Spain to Brazil, it was last summer.

Military Politician.

QUICK to act at the first sign of Russian weakness, the Germans renew their drive to break the Franco-Russian pact and to further their planned coalition of European powers against Russia. General Ludwig Beck, German chief of staff, makes a courtesy call on General Marie Gustave Gamelin, French chief of staff, officially noted as a courtesy call, but promptly interpreted by French newspapers as politically inspired.

General Beck, a shrewd political strategist, has been called the head of the German army "brain trust." He has been an advocate of "totalitarian" war, insisting that "economic and spiritual" forces were as important as the force of arms. He was elevated to his present post October 15, 1935, in an impressive ceremony by which he became the successor of Moltke, Schlieffer and Von Hindenburg. He is of the old army caste, formerly a monarchist, and his present activity with that of General Von Blomberg, is another indication of the rising power of junkers and army leaders.

Happiness That Counts

Versatile Isles of Bermuda Now Enter the Air Picture

"Opening of regular passenger air service between the United States and Bermuda throws the aviation spotlight on the tiny, semi-tropical British colony out in the open Atlantic," says a bulletin from the National Geographic society.

"Versatile Bermuda thus adds to its role of health, pleasure, and yachting center, an important function as a 'stepping stone' on the projected southern transatlantic air route," the bulletin continues. "At present, only the 770-mile section between Port Washington, N. Y., and Hamilton, Bermuda, is in operation, and the traffic is being shared by Pan American Airways and the British Imperial Airways.

Once Scene of Many Shipwrecks.

"Although Bermuda is such a tiny pinprick on the map of the Atlantic ocean that radio directional beams are needed to guide modern flying boats to its shores, in earlier days it was a thorn in the side of mariners. Since its discoverer, Juan de Bermudez, piled his ship up on its treacherous coral reefs in 1515, Bermuda has been the scene of countless shipwrecks, extending down to last year when the Spanish liner Cristobal Colon was lost off North Rock.

"Channels dredged through reefs, powerful lighthouses and other navigational aids, however, have virtually eliminated hazards to navigation, and today thousands of tourists from the United States, Canada and England visit the little mid-ocean island group annually."

"Industries are generally barred in the islands, yet Bermuda has some of the largest and finest resort hotels in the world, numerous shops and stores, and a perfume factory. Of increasing importance is its export trade of Easter lilies and early vegetables.

"Across St. George's harbor an imposing new steel and concrete bridge now links St. David's, the arrowroot isle, with St. George's."

Sentinels of Health

Don't Neglect Them!

Nature designed the kidneys to do a marvelous job. Their task is to keep the flowing blood stream free of an excess of toxic impurities. The act of living—life itself—is constantly producing waste matter the kidneys must remove from the blood if good health is to endure.

When the kidneys fail to function as Nature intended, there is retention of waste that may cause body-wide distress. One may suffer nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—feel tired, nervous, all worn out.

Frequent, scanty or burning passages may be further evidence of kidney or bladder disturbance.

The recognized and proper treatment is a diuretic medicine to help the kidneys get rid of excess poisonous body waste. Use Doan's Pills. They have had more than forty years of public approval. Are endorsed the country over. Insist on Doan's. Sold at all drug stores.

DOAN'S PILLS

Hot Weather is Here—Beware of Biliousness!

Have you ever noticed that in very hot weather your organs of digestion and elimination seem to become torpid or lazy? Your food sours, forms gas, causes belching, heartburn, and a feeling of restlessness and irritability. Perhaps you may have sick headache, nausea and dizziness or blind spells on suddenly rising. Your tongue may be coated, your complexion bilious and your bowel actions sluggish or insufficient.

These are some of the more common symptoms or warnings of biliousness or so-called "torpid liver," so prevalent in hot climates. Don't neglect them. Take Calotabs, the improved calomel compound tablets that give you the effects of calomel and salts, combined. You will be delighted with the prompt relief they afford. Trial package ten cents, family pkg. twenty-five cts. At drug stores. (Adv.)

VILLAGE CHATTER FROM SILURIA

To the best of our hearings, quite a crowd turned out to see the ball game at Buck Creek Ball Park Sunday afternoon. Buck Creek vs Alex City. Our boys licked 'em up, hot dog! Margaret Tilley was treated to a Coco-Cola bath during the progress of the game . . . . We'll have to give John R. credit for being a pretty good sort of fellow. Maybe thoughtful would be a better word for it. That ice cream sure hit the spot. . . . Hermie Glass you better handle that cow a bit more careful in the future. Judging by the tumble she took she'll probably give churned milk for the next day or two . . . . The Bookers had relatives visiting them from Texas Sunday. We noticed a yard full of company at the Fallon's too. They were all indulging in a bit o fdelving into "ye olden days" and they appeared to be quite merry. The Tilleys not to be out done, had week end guests also. They were Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Bowles and daughter, Margie, and Miss Marie Dulin, all of Georgia . . . . Mrs. Chris Peeples was the guest of the Floyds on a picture show party at the Alabama Saturday night. By the way, folks, we had some sort of a dream about you'al. It's all so confused though we wouldn't attempt to tell it . . . . Something about starting in the wrong theatre. It's all just a dream and we never did believe in dreams, but somehow this one seeme so REAL . . . . We enjoyed to the fullest that hour's chat last week with an old friend and Pal, Chester Jones. Chester says he's doing fine in the Magic City. We wish him all manner of luck. Mrs. Thorpe and Mrs. Hatfield did you'al have a nice time Sunday afternoon on your trip to the Municipal Auditorium? We hope so . . . . We've heard many hair raising accounts of smash-ups bu t the latest one in which Braxton Bradly's goat played havoc with his wagon is about as good as we've heard. Braxton himself had a sort of narrow escape . . . Standing on the John Allen bridge one afternoon shortly before sun set we saw the prettiest picture. A string of freight cars strung across that open space in the late sunlight. Well with a little imagination it was "just like a movie." . . . . One comforting thought about having the blues is the fact that they can't last always. . . . Raymond (Runt) Amos has purchased himself an automobile. Judging by the elevation of his chin he is some proud of it . . . . David Owens, could it be possible that you had been imbibing too freely the day you took that head-on dive just back of Mr. Glasses. We hope not. Anyway you better quit pitching up packages and trying to catch them. . . . This summer weather leaves us so lazy we can't do a thing. One thing we'd like to do is ramble so we're off.

'Till we meet again,

Nell and Nelle.

There are a large number of people in the United States who do not believe in democracy. They think that they belong to the favored few with brains enough to govern the rest of the population.

Mild, mellow, old Southern tobacco tamped in your companionable pipe—a careful lighting—and you settle back to mull over a knotty problem, count your blessings—or just dream.

Deep, satisfying pleasure, isn't it, neighbor? But look into the curling smoke again. See those long lines of freight cars gliding through space on gleaming steel—through blistering heat or numbing cold—storm or fair weather? That's the L & N, my friend, bringing from all sections of the South the choice tobacco you enjoy so much.

Perhaps it has never occurred to you what an important part the L & N plays in keeping your pipe filled, your home warm in the winter, your corner grocer stocked with meats and garden-fresh vegetables. But 28,000 loyal L & N employees know, and they constantly strive to make the service you receive safe, dependable and satisfactory.

Supplying the needs of your daily life is just one of the hundreds of ways in which the L & N tries to be of friendly service—a good neighbor in all that the term implies.

UNDER THE COURTHOUSE DOME

M. W. W.

Judge Arthur Glover of Wetumpka will arrive in Columbiana Monday to open the session of the Circuit Court. Judge Glover will be the presiding Judge during Civil Week, on account of the disqualification of Judge W. W. Wallace in the cases to be tried.

The Grand Jury will assemble in Columbiana on next Monday. Hon. A. L. Hardegree in charge, assisted by Paul O. Luck, County Solicitor.

Attorney Sam A. Lokey attended the Legion Convention in Gadsden during the past week end.

Hon. Frank Head, former Editor of the Democrat, was a cordially greeted guest in the office Tuesday, after an absence of several weeks. The popular, capable and likable attorney stated he was doing business "at the same old stand." Of course this bit of interesting information will be gratefully received by his many friends. We, personally welcomed into our journalistic emporium the distinguished guest—and enjoyed his optimistic desk chatter.

Henry Naish, Treasurer of Shelby County, we regret to report, continues ill at his home in Siluria.

Only a few days remain before August 1st, at which time all Shelby County citizens are holding their "ears close to the ground" for the sound of the pick and shovel chorus which will proclaim the long coveted Road project "on its way". This decidedly progressive move on the part of the Board of Revenue which will allow Shelby County to take her rightful position in the line of Progress March with the other Counties in Alabama, is an outstanding achievement. And the Highway, when completed, will be an everlasting monument to their wise undertaking as custodians for the Countys upbuilding and development.

Dog Owners! Last notice of Shelby County Rabies Inspector.

I will be at Columbiana from 2:00 P. M. to 4:30 P. M. on Wednesday, July 28th, 1937 for the purpose of inoculating dogs for rabies. A cash fee of 50 cents will be charged.

The state and county law requires that every owner of a dog shall cause such a dog to be inoculated against rabies by the Rabies Inspector.

ALL HE WANTED WAS TO PROTECT HIS OWN MONEY

MONTGOMERY—Four pistol shots cracked in rapid succession from the front of the largest bank in town.

"It's a bank robbery!" shouted a bystander, and the citizens ran for cover.

William Bryant, Negro, found his wife and Chester Johnson, A Negro from Chicago, trying to draw out $307. he had in a savings account. He pulled his pistol, forced the couple to the street and fired on Johnson who is in serious condition in a hospital.

MAN BECOMES HIS OWN GRAND FATHER AND GIVES PROOF

HORSENS, DENMARK—Jens Jensen, 53, has become his own grandfather, he claims ,as follows:

"Some years ago I married a widow with an adult daughter. My father paid us a visit and became attracted to my step-daughter, whom he married. Thus my father became my son in law and my step-daughter became my step mother.

"She gave birth to a child who is at the same time my brother and my grandson. My wife became my grandmother, since she is the mother of my step-mother.

'Consequently I have become both husband and grandchild of my wife and, as the husband of my grandmother, my own grandfather.

SEVERAL MILES OF HIGHWAYS BUILT

MONTGOMERY—A total of 584 miles of "three-way" paving in 40 counties had been completed June 30, a State Highway Department report to the WPA revealed.

The paving program was carried out by the Alabama Relief Administration and WPA in co-operation with the Highway Department and county governing authorities. The report said the purpose of the "three-way" program was to provide all weather highways between county seats, important rural communities, and to give farmers easy access to markets.

A Spendthrift And His Girl

BY MILTON BIRD

Since childhood Edd Simton had guarded his pennies. On his fourth birthday his father had given him a red, mule-shaped bank, and that night just before he went to bed, his mother had said: "A penny saved is a penny made, Edd, don't forget it."

Then, six years later, his father had died. After the funeral, when all the friends and relatives had gone, he had slipped away, behind the door that opened into his mothers clothes closet, and opened his bank for the first time. "Twenty dollars and nineteen cents," he had whispered breathlessly. And over his shoulder, his mother, who had followed him, said: "See, you have made a lot of money."

Still, he recalled, she hadn't wanted him to bother it. Instead she had closed it back up, being very careful, he remembered, to put the key on the highest mantle in the house. And through all the years until he was twenty-one, in high school and later at the University, she had never wanted him to open his bank. "There's plenty now from your father's bank," she had said one day when he got anxious about the finances, or as on one occasion, when he had wanted to pay his way through his last year of college. "We can open it later, Edd, when the wolf gets really near to our door."

And it was just as well too, he thought, as he walked down the crowded street to his office, passing ever so often some shiftless, unkempt victim of an age that was beyond his grasp. "Yes, sir," he whispered under his breath, "you are indeed lucky, Edd."

He turned in through two glass doors and went into his office on the first floor of the Second National Bank. On his desk, by the side of a picture of his mother, dead three years now, was the tiny mule-shaped bank, looking—the thought stabbed at his heart—as though pleading for all the change in his pocket.

Then, breaking in on his thoughts, the telephone rang. It was a woman's voice on the other end and her words almost took his breath away.

"Edd," the words came, can you come down tonight? We're going to the river."

Edd Simton, accepting the invitation, felt something strange and ecstatic shoot through his breast. From somewhere, out of reach of offices and desks and mule-shaped banks, came the memory of another trip to a river and the girl he had met there, Elaine Stevens, who had laughed her way into his heart with he rsimple loveliness; and of two very blue eyes that fairly sparkled when Elaine talked. He had never noticed a woman's eyes before, particularly the way they sparkled. He hadn't had time. That is, he thought he hadn't.

Edd arrived at the river just as the party was preparing supper. He said, "Shall I sing, or do I just get in on my looks?"

Elaine Stevens looked up deliberately. "Please", she begged, "Don't sing."

"But I can sing splendidly."

"So can the frogs and we already have them engaged."

Edd listened. From down the river came the dull, monotonous chorus ofinnumerable frogs crying for rain. Suddenly he felt strangely excited. She was too beautiful, with her upturned face shining in the fire light. Funny, he thought, that he hadn't met her long ago. When he was building himself up to where he was in the world. She could have helped . . .

A shadow of perplexity wrinkled his brow. What, he thought suddenly, would she be like as a wife in his home? Though he loved her sincerely, completely, could she settle down to the real and important things of making two people's happiness sound and endurable? There life together, ecstatic as it had been, had never even bordered on the serious, always, as it were, nibbling at the exquisiteness of the moment. He loved her, still . . .

Elaine got up from her seat and interrupted hi sthoughts. "The man" she said, "is thinking, Mama."

"Yes darling," Edd answered, "about you."

"Something nice?"

"Very." He could feel his seriousness slipping away. it always did when he had Elaine. Always. He said: "Let's slip away after supper.'

"Where?"

"Anywhere except Spain. My forefathers were puritans."

Elaine laughed. "Don't be so definite, mister, I can't stand it."

Supper was ready and they sat down around a long table. After a while someone said: "Let's go to a roadhouse and dance."

The whole party went, crowding into three cars, laughing hilariously. The nickel machine was playing "Girl Of My Dreams." Edd thought "Now with this music, I should tell her." He fumbled in his mind for the right words, forgot them, swallowed, said hurriedly: "I love you, Elaine, dammit, and can't help it."

Elaine stopped, threw up her head sighed: "And do I get ice cream too?'

They passed a door and went out, beyond the lights where Edd's car was parked under the trees. Snuggled up in her corner, Elaine said: "We have known each other two whole months" And to herself she whispered: "Two months, and we haven't ever just sat still and enjoyed ourselves."

The motor buzzed, caught up, purred quietly. "Birmingham?" Edd asked.

Elaine sat back in her corner wearily. "All right." she answered. But she didn't want to go to Birmingham. She didn't want to go anywhere. Oh, she thought, why couldn't they just sit under the stars, like other people did who were in love, and enjoy each other. But no. They would dash off somewhere, anywhere, where they could spend a lot of money.

Edd's voice broke in on her thoughts "We have fifty dollars," he said, "to throw to the winds. Anyway you like." He laughed. But to himself he said: "Funny what love will do to a fellow." He thought of the mule shaped bank? snug on his office desk, out of reach of this exquisite young thing that was changing his life so completely. He thought: "Will we ever settle down and just be ordinary people. We" have to."

Getting to Birmingham they went to a show where the hero, ruined by dissipation, was living on the earnings of his wife. He was a desolate figure, and Elaine, slipping down in her seat, pictured her own life, if Edd were directing it, travelled the same road to disaster. She said: "It's awful, Edd." But to herself she added: "You can't give way, Elaine, no matter how much you love him!" Deep down in her soul stirred the memories of her past, a happy daughter of a small town spendthrift, who, early in life, had killed himself through dissipation. The whole town had shared their suffering those first few years after her father's death. Then her mother had come into a small fortune from a distant relative, but it hadn't erased the suffering from her mind.

s They came out of the show and went to a small night club where stiff waiters brought them sparkling wine and very expensive food, and where the music was so soft and enchanting that Elaine was carried away with the moment. She whispered, over her wine: "It's all so wonderful!"

Edd smiled, "Happy?"

"Yes," she answered. Right now she was. And it frightened her. She mustn't let herself be too happy . . . that way lay . . . .

A funny, house-shaped clock on the wall struck three. They danced near an exit and Edd said, "Shall we go, Sweet?"

Yes, they must go She knew it. But somehow, deep down in her heart she wasn't ready. She felt as though something very beautiful was slipping through her fingers.

Outside, in Edd's car, they rode over the road in silence. Edd said after a while: "We only spent forty, sweet. We're getting worse." Then in a different tone he added to himself: "You got to come down to earth Eddie. You're tearing down everything they taught you."

Then, out of the debris of their misshapen lives, Edd found a spark of hope. With a sudden thrust of his brake pedal, he brought the car to a quick stop.

"Edd," Elaine screamed, "what is it?"

Edd was silent a moment, looking ahead. Elaine thought: "This is the moment. Now, thi svery minute, he will ask me!" She felt her heart leap up, turn over. To herself she whispered: "Oh, it would be heaven for a while. Then without our really knowing it would be over. Just as it had been that other time . . . .

Edd began talking: "There's something I must tell you Elaine," he said. Then, but no, i-it couldn't be, she was dreaming . . . but his voice went on, slowly, carefully, until it was all out: " . . . if we could just come down to earth, and live on our income, with a home and each other."

Elaine waited breathlessly for him to continue. Her throat was getting heavy, and she knew that in another moment she would be crying.

Then from far away: "It's just that I love you Elaine. Don't you see."

Elaine laughed happily through her tears. "Edd," she whispered, "just kiss me now and hold me real tight. We'll talk later."

And Edd Simton, beginning to realize his tremendous fortune, felt something warm and soft and fragrant against his lips, something that moved ever so slightly, then seemed to melt before his kiss.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL Lesson

Lesson for July 25

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 12:21-28.

GOLDEN TEXT—The Lord thy God hath chosen thee to be a special people unto himself.—Deuteronomy 7:6.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Ready for the Journey.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Ready to Start Home.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How God Prepares a People.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Equipped for a New Era.

"Let my people go"—such was the word of the Lord to Pharaoh through Moses and Aaron. "Who is the Lord, that I should obey his voice to let Israel go? I know not the Lord, neither will I let Israel go" — thus hardened Pharaoh his heart. The issue was so drawn for one of the great struggles of history. On one side was a bold and mighty monarch with all the resources of the empire of Egypt, and on the other an unorganized multitude of slaves. No, wait, on the other side was Almighty God! The outcome was never in doubt and through the unspeakable horror of the plagues we come to consider the last of the ten, the death of the first-born, with which is joined the establishment of the Passover.

The Passover is of sufficient importance to justify careful study simply as the perpetual feast of Jews, but to the Christian it is also a most blessed and instructive type of Christ who is, according to Paul, "our passover" (I Cor. 5:7). Let no one who studies or teaches this lesson fail to point to "the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world" (John 1:29).

I. A Lamb Slain (v. 21).

The sacrifice appears, a gentle, submissive lamb, a male without blemish, which is separated for the giving of its life that the first-born in Israel might be saved.

Notice that God's instructions were explicit, and were to be obeyed if there was to be redemption. There are those in our day who would substitute any and every other method of salvation for God's revealed plan. They talk about character development, the redemption of the social order, peace and politics, and forget the Lamb of God.

II. A Blood Salvation (vv. 22, 23).

The act of faith in marking the lintel and the doorposts with the blood, brought salvation to the families of Israel. Had they waited until they could reason out the philosophy of their promised redemption, or had they shrunk from the blood as their covering, their first-born would have been slain. It was when the destroying angel saw the blood that he passed over them.

Many there are in our time who speak disparagingly of the blood of Jesus Christ, but it is still the only way of redemption. "Without shedding of blood there is no remission."

It ill befits an age that is so blase and sophisticated as ours to attempt to cover its dislike for God's way of redemption by suddenly becoming too cultured and sensitive to hear of the blood of the Lamb of God shed on Calvary's tree for our cleansing from sin.

III. A Perpetual Memorial (vv. 24-28).

God wants his people to remember. We, like Israel, are to remember the bondage from which we were delivered. Down through the ages the Jews have kept the Passover. Our Hebrew neighbors do it today. Let us honor them for their obedience to God's command and at the same time seek to point them to the One who is the true Passover, Jesus Christ.

IV. Christ Our Passover (I Cor. 5:7).

Let us add to the assigned lesson text this New Testament passage which speaks of our Lord Jesus Christ as "our passover . . . sacrificed for us."

The bondage in Egypt was terrible in its afflictions and sorrows, but far more serious is the bondage in which men find themselves under sin and the rule of Satan. Surely there is need of divine redemption, and there is none to bring it to us but the Lamb of God. He was the One who without spot or blemish (I Pet. 1:19) was able to offer himself in our behalf that in him we might find "redemption through his blood" (Eph. 1:7, Col. 1:14).

"Is the blood upon the house of my life? Is the blood upon the doorpost of my dwelling place? Have I put up against the divine judgment some hand of self-protection? Verily, it will be swallowed up in the great visitation. In that time nothing will stand but the blood which God himself has chosen as a token and a memorial. 'The blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth us from all sin'" (Joseph Parker).

Labor and Patience

CAP AND BELLS

TIMES HAVE CHANGED

"Do you really think times have changed, my dear?" said a young woman to her grandmother.

"I think they have," said the old lady. "Why, when a husband returns home from the office on the 5:17 now and discovers his wife sewing away on a tiny garment, it means only one thing—she's making a new evening dress."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

FIRE! FIRE!

"I understand the speaker delivers his talk with burning eloquence."

"Well, the one I heard yesterday was incendiary."

Simple

A traveling salesman, detained in a certain village overnight, was introduced in the town's hotel to a crazy little billiard-table and a set of balls of a uniform, dirty-gray color.

"But how do you tell the red from the white?" he asked.

"Oh," replied the landlord, "you soon get to know them by their shape."—Newark Firefax.

Sharing Discomfort

Doctor (who has been sent for at 2 a. m.)—Madam, send at once for the clergyman, and, if you want to make your will, for the lawyer.

"Good gracious! Is it so dangerous, doctor?"

"Not a bit of it; but I don't want to be the only one who has been disturbed in his sleep for nothing."—Stray Stories Magazine.

Quite So

A comedian was trying to impress the manager of a music hall by telling him of the magnificent offers he had had from American managers.

"Yes," he said enthusiastically, "they want me over there if I can spare a few weeks, and I'm to have $10,000 per—"

"—Haps," said the manager quietly.

Worse

"Your husband has been ill," said the caller.

"Yes," replied the little, worried-looking woman, "he has been feeling very bad. I do my best to please him, but nothing seems to satisfy him."

"Is his condition critical?"

"It's worse than critical," she answered with a sigh, "it's abusive."

Fellow-feeling

Mrs. Brown has a new Swedish maid, who said one day after the holidays, "Mrs. Brown, where bane your son?"

Mrs. Brown said, "Oh, he has gone back to Yale, and I miss him so much."

The maid said: "I know yoost how you feel. My brother, he bane in yaol sax times since last April."

MUST BE TRUE

"I suppose Jane's going to wear men's clothes now."

"What makes you think that?"

"I hear she's accepted Paul's suit."

Haven of Refuge

Small boy (on arrival at country cottage)—Mummy, where is the bathtub?

Mother—There isn't any bathtub, dear.

Small boy—Good! This is going to be a real holiday.—Edinburgh Dispatch.

Very Useful

"Tommy, can you tell me one of the uses of cowhide?"

"Er, yes, sir. It keeps the cow together."

Easy to Rehearse

First Friend—What part in the play are they giving you?

Second Friend—I'm to be the heroine's father.

First Friend—What does he do?

Second Friend—He dies five years before the curtain rises on the first act.

Potent Stuff

Customer—Can you guarantee this anti wrinkle cream?

Chemist—Madam, it would smooth corrugated iron.

Loopholes for Statesmen.

NEW YORK. — Statesmen frequently may be found on this or that side of the loophole. In June, 1933, Guy T. Helvering, now unrolling the government's roster of alleged tax-dodgers, was the subject of a bitter senatorial debate. Certain senators fought his confirmation as commissioner of internal revenue.

They charged that, as an income tax lawyer, he had procured a reduction in the tax bill of the Slim Jim Oil & Gas company from $1,211,000 to $451,000. However, he was confirmed, and, discharging his official duties, puts the finger on the "wealthy evaders" for the congressional investigation committee.

Prof. Roswell Foster Magill, author of the tax-avoidance report, wrote books giving pointers on legal loopholes, before he went to Washington. No moral turpitude has been charged. It just means that Dizzy Dean may be pitching for Washington next year instead of St. Louis.

Commissioner Helvering is a shrewd, portly, ruddy, white-haired Kansas politician who wears good clothes, carries a shiny malacca cane, smokes good cigars, knows his way around and says little. He was in congress from 1913 to 1919, a tax income lawyer thereafter, according to the somewhat heated and vehement charges of Senators Hastings, Couzens and others.

He has been a close friend of Postmaster General Farley for many years and it was understood that he was the President's personal choice for the internal revenue post.

He has been active in Kansas politics for many years, a former superintendent of public construction under Governor Woodring, and campaign manager and chairman of the Democratic state committee. He was born in Felicity, Ohio, in 1878. His family removed to Kansas when he was eight years old. He studied law at the University of Michigan, and was county attorney of Marshall county, Kan., before he went to congress. He is one of the hardest men in Washington to see and correspondents have mainly let it go at that.

Middle-of-the-Roader.

DR. JAMES ROWLAND ANGELL, retiring president of Yale, is an aggressive middle-of-the-roader, which seems not such a bad idea, considering the plight of extremists, right and left. He will receive a salary of $25,000 a year as educational counsellor of the National Broadcasting company.

L. R. Lohr, president of the NBC, says it will be full time work, adding that "broadcasting has a mandate to operate in the public interest, convenience and necessity." All this will presumably be in Dr. Angell's department.

It would be difficult to think of Dr. Angell as a mere emeritus. He said he was retiring at sixty-eight "because of obvious and offensive senility," at the same time demonstrating the contrary by some lusty swings at the New Deal. He will need no time out for road work before taking on the radio engagement. When he retired as dean of the University of Chicago in 1921, the Carnegie foundation snapped him up at a fat salary, but, before he got his chair warm, Yale was after him. He is always in demand.

Baccalaureate orators used to see "the orb of Rome sinking in a sea of blood" and warn us that we were getting that way, too. Now we are heading "down the same abyss which has engulfed Europe," which was Dr. Angell's phrase in his farewell address at Yale. That is, unless we do something to check the slide.

He has struck out vigorously against the Supreme court reorganization, sit-down strikes and insidious collectivism as he sees it exemplified in the present administration. Conservative, and "middle-of-the-roader" is an apt term only in denoting his adherence to traditional cultural and governmental patterns. He was a professor of psychology for 26 years before becoming president of Yale, his father having been president of the University of Michigan for 38 years —until 1909.

His notable achievements at Yale have been administrative. He effected sweeping reorganizations and during his incumbency endowments rose from $30,000,000 to $100,000,000. The value of university properties scoring a parallel rise. He was the first president of Yale who was not a Yale graduate.

Mr. Lohr says, "In joining us he is only changing his base of educational endeavor from New Haven to New York, from a university to the air." Erasmus never got a break like that. Nor even Nicholas Murray Butler. It will be interesting to see how the radio fans take to the new curriculum.

Sweet Potatoes in China

Sweet potatoes were cultivated in ancient China.

Bowling on the Green Is One of the Favorite Sports in New Zealand.

New Zealand Is Country of Scenic Wonders and Many Odd Paradoxes

Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

ON DECEMBER 16, 1642, Abel Tasman stood on the deck of the Heemskirk in the South Pacific and gazed out toward an unknown "great, high, bold land." At the hands of an unimaginative cartographer the new wavy lines added to the map became New Zealand, after the Netherlands Province of Zeeland, to which it bears not the least resemblance. The inappropriateness of its name, however, is not the only paradox of this British dominion of the Far South.

Captain James Cook, who first explored the islands a century and a quarter later, took possession of them for his country only to have his claims rejected. Britain still later hoisted the Union Jack over the land to prevent French immigrants from settling in the place they cherished. The country's capital bears the name Wellington, but the Iron Duke stood firm against the annexation.

Many New Zealanders who have never been away from the island's shores, and whose parents likewise were born in the Dominion, still speak of England as "home."

Here in an area approximately the size of Colorado are grouped the snow-mantled peaks of Switzerland, geysers of a Yellowstone, volcanic cones of Java and Japan, and the lakes of Italy; the mineral springs of Czechoslovakia, fiords of Norway, seacoasts of Maine and California, and waterfalls higher than Yosemite.

Largest and Smallest Pines.

Glaciers slip down sharp mountainsides from vast snow fields into subtropical bush. A short ride through a pass in the southern Alps will take one from impenetrable evergreen forests into barren tussock-covered lands.

New Zealand is the home of the massive kauri pines, some of which measure 22 feet in diameter and have reached hoary ages that rank them next to the sequoias. It also is the home of the smallest known representative of the pine-tree family. Giant fuchsias grow to the height of 40 feet; a white buttercup has blooms four inches in diameter; flax is produced from a lily; man has imported all of the mammals, and many of the native birds cannot fly.

The Maoris were the first-known colonists of these southern islands. Guided only by the stars and a knowledge of the winds and ocean currents, they boldly piloted their slender double canoes from their homeland of "Hawaiki" (probably Tahiti and the Cook islands) to the shores of New Zealand in the Fourteenth century. Legend credits them with having followed the sailing directions of the famous Polynesian navigator, Kupe, who is said to have preceded them by 400 years.

To the new land they gave the lilting, vowel - studded name Aotea-roa, which is variously translated as "The Long White Cloud," "The Land of Long Daylight," and "The Long, Bright Land."

Here they lived, increased, warred against each other, and cultivated their taro and the more important kumara, or sweet potato, which they brought with them. Then came whalers, missionaries, and traders; and colonists arrived with gunpowder, conflicting social standards, and the desire to carve out new homes.

Principal City Thrives.

Protracted Maori wars, contested land claims, the discovery of gold, land booms, and a heavy depression—New Zealand passed through them all before she settled down to economic equilibrium.

With its 221,300 people Auckland today has more than twice the British population of the whole country in the early 60's of the last century. As a ship nears the end of its 6,000-mile journey from the west coast of the United States, or the 1,200-mile span from Australia, it skirts the islands that stud the cobalt waters of Hauraki gulf, enters Waitemata harbor, and finally ties up at the very foot of the thriving city.

The early colonists chose well when they staked out this harborside settlement that once served the country as capital and now is the largest city in New Zealand.

Long ago Nature's forces, not man's industry, reigned in this locality. Within a radius of ten miles there are more than 60 burnt-out volcanic cones. Stand on the top of Mount Eden, one of the best-preserved of the craters, which rises like an observation post near the center of the city, and you see the once-fiery throats bulging or forming symmetrical cones on the landscape.

From this same vantage point it is apparent how narrowly North island escaped being divided in two. The isthmus upon which Auckland sprawls, between the Waitemata harbor, looking out toward the Pacific, and the Manukau harbor, opening westward to the Tasman sea, is only eight miles wide. River estuaries and other indentations narrow it in places to a scant mile. Veritably, water seems almost to encircle the red- and green-roofed maze of the city's business blocks and suburban residences.

Abounds in Flowers.

Business hovers close to Queen's street, which leads up from the wharves, and in its adjacent narrow, twisting thoroughfares. But if the people responsible for the city's growth have failed somewhat in town planning so far as the streets are concerned, they have more than exonerated themselves in providing broad park spaces.

The parks seem almost numberless. To them the flush of the subtropics gives perpetual freshness and color. Flowers luxuriate all the year round. Even the race course has an avenue of palms and extensive beds of blooms that would do justice to a botanical garden.

One cannot move about Auckland long without the new War Memorial museum claiming attention. It stands out boldly, a massive white Grecian building, above the wide greensward on the heights of the Domain. Here are housed treasures from many lands, but most interesting of all is the comprehensive collection of Maori objects on display—the homes, elaborately carved storehouses, war canoes, war implements, and handicrafts of that powerful native race.

Rolling southward in January from Auckland on the ribbon of concrete and asphalt, you pass soon into smiling open country, checkered with fields. Men are haying and herds of sleek cattle and sheep graze on a hundred rolling hills.

Agriculture was the task to which the New Zealand colonists first directed their efforts, but in the passing years they have come to rely more and more on pastoral enterprise. An experimental shipment of frozen meat sent to England in 1882 pointed the way out of a pinching depression that had followed the collapse of a land boom.

Historic Battle Scenes.

Today New Zealand butter and other dairy products have attained world-wide distribution. Of more than 4,300,000 cattle pasturing on the land, nearly half are dairy stock. More than 28,600,000 sheep also range North and South islands, making New Zealand the world's seventh largest sheep - producing country and the fifth largest in wool production.

Near the little town of Mercer was the old frontier between Maori and colonist. The whole region is historic ground, for here in 1863-4 the Maori warriors tested the best mettle of the British troops and long made pioneering a perilous venture.

Today, instead of a battleground, the district is a peaceful, English-flavored countryside. Upon a hill now stands the St. Stephens Maori Boys' college, where Maori youths are being trained for useful pursuits.

Just beyond Hamilton, the largest provincial town in Auckland province, you may run into peat fires that are smoldering and eating into the black soil in many places. The continued dry, hot summer weather causes an outbreak of many of these destructive fires.

A few miles to the west of the main road that leads to Te Kuiti are the fascinating Waitomo caves.

Interest in the caves hinges on a tiny worm—an unusual carnivorous glowworm—scientifically, the Boletophela luminosa.

The Glowworm grotto is a magically uncanny spot. Floating along in a boat on the stillness of a subterranean stream, one looks up at myriads of these tiny creatures, with their lamps alight, that cover the roof of the cavern like a dense, greenish-blue Milky Way.

"LITTLE STORIES FOR BEDTIME"

by Thornton W. Burgess

BOBBY COON WAKES UP.

BOBBY Coon, curled up in his warm house in the hollow chestnut tree in the Green Forest, opened his eyes and yawned. Bobby had been asleep a long time, a very long time. In fact, he had slept most of the winter. Once or twice he had waked and crawled out to stretch his legs on warm days, but there had been very few warm days, and so Bobby had been content to sleep and sleep and sleep.

Now, as he lay there yawning and looking up at a sunbeam which had crept in at his open door, he wondered if it was worth while to crawl out to have a look about. "I suppose it's just another warm day in the middle of winter, and if I crawl out I'll just be uncomfortable and shivery," he thought. "I might as well stay right where I am and keep comfortable."

You see, Bobby Coon had slept so much that he didn't have any idea how time had been flying. So now he just closed his eyes again and tried to go to sleep. But somehow he couldn't get to sleep. That sunbeam seemed to be trying to tell him that it was time to be up and out. "Go away!" said Bobby crossly, and rolled over so as not to see that warm, bright, merry little sunbeam. But then something else began to tell him that it was time to get up. It was his stomach. Yes, sir, his stomach began to tell him that it was time to get up, and he just had to listen. Shutting his eyes and rolling over wouldn't keep his stomach still. No, indeed! The truth is, there isn't anything that will keep an empty stomach still.

Now, when Bobby Coon had begun his long sleep he had been very, very fat. All through the fall, when there was plenty of food and to spare, Bobby had stuffed and stuffed himself until he was so fat that he could hardly run at all. He didn't know why he had stuffed so, except that everything tasted so good, but if he had taken the trouble to ask Old Mother Nature about it she would have told him that she had given him that great appetite so that he would get fat and that while he slept through the cold, cold weather that fat would keep him warm and would take the place of food, because while he was asleep, of course, he couldn't eat. And that is just the way it all happened.

But now that fat had been used up, just exactly how, nobody knows, for that is one of Old Mother Nature's secrets. But it had, and this is why Bobby's stomach would give him no peace. Of course, this was Old Mother Nature's way of telling Bobby that it was time to get up, that she had taken care of him all winter, and now he had to get out and take care of himself. But Bobby didn't know this. All he knew was that he was dreadfully hungry and at the same time he hated to think of going out into the cold to hunt for food that he just knew would be hard to find.

So he twisted and turned and rolled over uneasily, trying to forget that inviting little sunbeam and to think that he wasn't dreadfully hungry. He muttered and grumbled to himself and was as uncomfortable as could be. And then quite suddenly he stopped muttering and grumbling and lay perfectly still, with both little ears cocked wide open. He had heard something. At least he thought he had, and he wanted to make sure. So he lay and listened and listened, and after a little while he heard it again—the softest, sweetest whistle.

"Winsome Bluebird!" cried Bobby Coon. "It is time to get up after all, for Mistress Spring is almost here!"

He kicked off his bedclothes of leaves and scrambled up to his doorway. A dozen warm, merry little sunbeams shone straight in his face and made him blink so that at first he could hardly see at all.

"Hello, old lazybones! It's time you were up. Don't you know that Mistress Spring is almost here?"

Bobby looked down. There at the foot of the big chestnut tree sat Peter Rabbit grinning up at him. And while he looked he heard again that soft, sweet whistle. And then Bobby knew for sure that the long, cold winter was over and that Peter Rabbit was right—it was time, high time, to get up.

THE LANGUAGE OF YOUR HAND

By Leicester K. Davis

© Public Ledger, Inc

WE ALL know men and women whose creative urges seem always to be expressed in activities which have objectives so highly idealized that they are next to impossible of attainment. Examine the third fingers of such individuals and you will very likely find a similarity that is quite striking.

Idealistic Finger of Brilliance.

Several very marked characteristics are found in third fingers of this type. Perhaps the most outstanding one is the beautifully symmetrical taper of the finger, from root to tip. This and the closeness of the finger to the fourth finger when the hand is opened wide.

The length of this finger is medium. With the fingers pressed together, its tip is found to fall quite a bit below that of the second finger, and well above that of the fourth. The knuckles are smooth and never prominent, and although well fleshed, this type is never overfull or pudgy. The nail tip is rather pointed and this is emphasized by a long and delicately ovaled nail, extremely well set.

A third finger of this kind invariably belongs to the man or woman of poetic temperament, one which longs for expression but is never content until it is found in form, color, words, or music of the most ethereal variety. Such people are apt to be unhappy indeed in environments or with associates of the workaday world because they fail to "harmonize" with hyper-exacting tastes.

GRAPHIC GOLF

By BEST BALL

POSITION OF LEFT HAND

THE hand on the end of the shaft is the guiding hand of the actual golf stroke which, in case of people who swing right handed, means the left. This is the hand which starts the clubhead moving in the backswing and provides the initial downswing motion. For a portion of the stroke in both directions it provides the sole motive power to the club, aided by muscles of the hips, midsection and legs but independent of the right hand. It is essential therefore that the grip of this hand be firm and at all times in control of the situation. One should be able to actually feel the position of the clubhead through this member, to sense and achieve true swinging motion through it. To carry out this broad assignment it is necessary that the hand be placed in a position that best suits the task. Tommy Armour and Bobby Jones above think that this position is one where the left hand is well on top of the shaft. This gives one a free powerful sweep with the left arm both up and down. Some idea of the tremendous power available can be visualized by studying Jones' cocked wrists and left hand in the small illustration at the top right. While the term, firm grip, may be taken by many to mean tight it is easy to overdo it. A tight grip means tautened muscles and a halty stroke. If anything it might be better to err on the side of an easy grip for loose-wrists give a snap to blow that is far more desirable than a stilted stroke.

For Discriminating People

NOW is the time for all smart women to come to the aid of their wardrobes. Sew-Your-Own wants to lend a hand, Milady: hence today's trio of mid-summer pace makers.

At The Left.

A trim little reminder that careful grooming is an asset anywhere, anytime, is this frock. It features simplicity. Its forte is comfort. Make one version in cotton for all purpose wear, another of sports silk for dressy occasions. You'll praise the cool cut of its short sleeves and softly rolled collar. Yes, Milady, you'll enjoy making it.

In The Center.

Here you have a light and breezy ensemble that's the perfect attire for Society. It has cosmopolitan dash, refinement, and engaging charm. Once more you'll be the subject of complimentary tea table talk with your delightfully slender silhouette. Make it of sheer chiffon or more durable acetate. You'll have a hit in either.

At The Right.

The little lady who likes unusual touches in her frocks will go for this new dress and pantie set. It has the chic of mommy's dresses plus a little-girl daintiness that is more than fetching. Wrap around styling makes it easy for even the tiniest girl to get into and it's quite a time saver on ironing day. A splendid idea is to cut this pattern twice and be assured of little sister's all summer chic.

The Patterns.

Pattern 1237 is designed for sizes 34 to 46. Size 36 requires 4⅛ yards of 35 inch material plus ⅝ yard contrasting for collar.

Pattern 1333 is designed for sizes 36 to 52. Size 38 requires 7⅛ yards of 39 inch material. The dress alone requires 4¾ yards. To line the jacket requires 2¼ yards of 39 inch material.

Pattern 1322 is designed for sizes 4, 6, 8, 10, and 12 years. Size 6 requires 3¼ yards of 35 inch material plus 5½ yards of ribbon for trimming as pictured.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., Room 1020, 211 W. Wacker Dr., Chicago, Ill. Price of patterns, 15 cents (in coins) each.

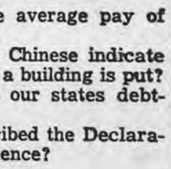
Ask Me Another



A General Quiz

1. How much does it cost the United States to turn out each piece of paper money?
2. What are the dimensions of Big Ben on the House of Parliament, London?
3. What is the average pay of state governors?
4. How do the Chinese indicate the use to which a building is put?
5. Are any of our states debt-free?
6. Who transcribed the Declaration of Independence?

Answers

1. Each piece of paper money made by the bureau of engraving and printing costs Uncle Sam around six mills, and for the same amount he can turn out 100 postage stamps.
2. The dials are 22½ feet in diameter; hour figures, 2 feet; minute spaces, 1 foot square; pendulum, 13 feet; weight, 700 pounds.
3. Gubernatorial pay in the various states ranges from $3,000 in South Dakota to $25,000 in New York. The average is about $7,500.
4. In China the use to which a building is put is not indicated by its design but by the color of the tiles used for the roof, etc. Green indicates an official place, yellow a commercial place and brown a place where people live.
5. Nebraska, Florida, Ohio and Wisconsin have no debt. Nebraska has a balance of over $21,000,000 in her treasury.
6. The actual work of transcription was done by Timothy Matlack.

Senator Robinson

If it could ever be said of a good soldier in the ranks of party regularity that he died with his boots on, in the thick of battle, that epitath belongs to Joseph T. Robinson of Arkansas. Only a week ago he was opening the debate in the Senate on the new Supreme Court bill. As recently as Tuesday morning he was at the Capitol, planning the strategy of its advancement. Now ,in circumstances which are as dramatic as they are tragic, death has taken him at the very crisis of the most important and most significant controversy into which the Roosevelt administration thus far has thrown its strength.

Probably it takes two kinds of men to make a party. There are the men who give the party spirit and the men who give it shape. In the first group belong the dreamers and the independents: the men of vision who are years ahead in their conception of the party's opportunities; the men of fire who never lack willingness to speak out ringingly in protest when they believe their party to the wrong. In the second group are the stalwarts who hold the line as the line is drawn in party conference; the veterans accustomed to the ways of party discipline and to the practice of pooling individual preferences for the sake of party unity.

In this second group Senator Robinson had been pre-eminent not alone because of his official rank as leader of the Democratic party in the Senate, but because the directness of his methods, the warmth of his personality and the integrity of his personal standards had won for him the respect and affection of his colleagues. In public office since the age of 22—successively general assemblyman, member of Congress, governor for a brief period then, Senator, chairman of the minority conference, vice presidential candidate and chairman of the majority conference—few men in contemporary politics have had a longer and more varied experience in the ways of popular government. In this case experience molded a rugged democrat inwhom an intense fidelity to party and a habit of orthodoxy were combined with qualities of leadership and a personal loyalty which was best displayed under the fire of an unfair attack. It is cheering now to remeber, after the passage of nearly a decade, the forthrightness and the vigor with which Senator Robinson denounced those in his own party who sought to introduce the religious issue into the campaign of 1928.

It is certain the administration will feel heavily the loss of the captain of tis forces in the Senate. Time and again that indefagitable searcher after votes had given the desire of the administration preference over his own personal opinions and worked valiantly for a cause which was not essentially his own. Probably only his colleagues know how many times his advocacy of a pending bill tipped the scales decisively in its favor, and how many times his willingness to "go along with the President" was used to bolster support for some experimental measure, Mr. Robinson's death takes out of the councils of the administration not only its leader on the Senate floor but a sage and moderating influence in the shaping of its plans. — New York Times.

VILLAGE CHATTER FROM SILURIA

How many of you have noticed that love-sick couple drifting aimlessly in and around Siluria? First they're seen at the "Y" then on the road to Alabaster. They are sorta young but boy, oh boy, they got it bad. Who is it? Ah, you know . . . . Mrs. Tom Knight and little daughter, Tommie Lou, is giving our fair village a try out this week, by way of a visit with her daughter, Mrs. Walter Horton . . . . Evidently Helen Johnson's car has an ambition to "get somewhere" on its own. She left it parked around back of the house the other day and directly it eazed off down the road. Luckily there ws a post near by into which it gently bumped. No damage reported . . . . The Rasco reunion held at the Walton's Sunday was something to write home about. Good company, good cheer, and good things to eat all contributed to the making of a perfect day. Dinner was served out under the trees. Memories of the day were preserved with the kodak. The brothers and sisters whom this day re-united were: Mrs. W. L. Walton, Mr. Hugh Rasco, Mr. Ordis Rasco and Mr. John Rasco. Besides the wives an dhusbands of these others present were: Mr. and Mrs. Harold McCarty and baby son of Sylacauga, Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Peeples and baby daughter of Siluria. Mrs. Laura McConathy of Sylacauga Lloyd, Grace, Dorothy, T. H., Johnny Fay and Ramona Rasco all of Sylacauga; J. C. and Donald Rasco and Lewis Blackerby of Wilsonville and Roy Rasco of Calcis. Nelle and W. L. Walton, Nell Hughey, Ella Ree Cost and Joe P. Wagner all of Siluria. This day, no doubt, will live forever in the memory of those whom it concerned. Plans were made to repeat this day next year at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Rasco in Sylacauga. . . . Tapawingo, Tapawingo, yo uare calling, cause you're really the tops for a place to swim. We'll have to hand it to Joe P. and Reese for a swell time. We like to go riding around in the rain too, especially if its over towards Sylacauga. One thing we don't like is a flat tire, but when you can't help yourself you gotta make yourself like it. So much for that. . . . Oh, Janie, where is your bravery? How can you hear so many things? Maybe your mind was in a sort of upset condition because of the fact that Allison had ogne to Alex City for the week end . . . Mr. J. T. Phillips, president of Buck Creek Cotton Mills, is being missed very much this week, he has gone to New York to attend to business matters . . . . There's a familiar face among us in the person of Nell Maudlings, little neice, Alice. We're glad to have found you Alice. . . Our team found a stiff opponent in the Mignon team Sunday afternoon, comout only one score ahead . . . Johnnie Mae and Ralph Lowery, old pals, were down to see us all over the week end . . . . We were glad to see Mr. Henry Naish able to sit out on the porch last week. Mr. Naish is steadily improving from an illness of several weeks . . . . Mr. and Mrs. Sam Huddleston and children, old residents of Siluria, who now reside in Birmingham, were visiting in and around Siluria last week. A group of happy kiddies were scheduled to take off with their Sunday School teacher, Mrs. Thorpe on a watermelon cutting Monday afternoon at the time of this writing we're only hoping the rain don't break into their plans . . . . Hazel Mauding returned home Sunday from a visit with her sister in Montevallo, she reports a nice time . . . . If you ever want to draw a crowd let a house catch on fire, you ought to have seen the crowd gathering at Mr. Horton's on Monda ymorning when their house caught on fire. It's very exciting but not such a lot of fun when your knees get all wobbly. Due to a neighbors timely warning the fire was hurriedly extinguished before any damage was done. . . . As we are in very much of an excited state we'll say adieu.

'til next week,
Nell and Nelle.

Social and Personal Mention

MILDRED WHITE WALLACE, Social Editor

TRANSIENT GUESTS

Columbiana, for the past week, has been the mecca for visitors who have graced the social circles, and who have been distinguished guests whom many friends have delighted to welcome. Among those we happily recall are Sam A. Benton, Chief Announcer of WAPI, Beatrice Tate Wright, Production Manager of WAPI, who were guests of Mrs. Fay Miles Benton; Dr. Sam H. Wallace, Jr., brilliant young physician of Birmingham, who has recently fniished his Medical course in University of Alabama, and who will leave for St. Louis, Mo., the latter part of August for further study of his profession.

Mr. and Mrs. W. Teague of Kingsport, Tenn., spent their vacation with Mrs. Rosa Teague.

Will Parker, who holds a position with the U. S. Mail Service in Birmingham, spent the week end with his mother, Mrs. W. A. Parker.

Mr. and Mrs. Fern, Mr. and Mrs. John Benton and son Jack, were guests of Mrs Fay Miles Benton on Sunday.

Burl Brasher, prominent citizen of Chelsea, was a cordially welcomed guest in the Democrat office on Wednesday.

Mrs. L. F. Armstrong, after a delightful vacation spent in the Tennessee Mountains, has returned to her home in Columbiana.

Mr. and Mrs. Gary Luttrell, Doris, June and Gary Luttrell, have returned to their home in Griffin, Ga., after a visit with Mr. and Mrs. Paul O. Luck.

BIBLE CLASS ENJOYS FISH FRY ON COOSA RIVER

"It's always fair weather when good friends get together" proved literally trus on last Thursday afternoon, when Judge W. W. Wallace and 45 members of his Bible Class enjoyed a delectable fish fry on Coosa River. Boat riding, swimming and an out of doors supper served at Lokey's Ferry completed the memorable occasion. All members unanimously agreed Judge A. P. Longshore, aged 85 years young, held the spotlight of sporting approval. Elderly, but not old, the Judge states he "had the best time I ever had in my life." He also paid glowing tribute to the excellently prepared viands, et cetera.

Beth Wallace, after completing a summer course in Auburn, has returned to her home.

Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Childs are spending a delightful vacation motoring thru the Southern part of Alabama.

YOUNG MATRONS CLASS TO SERVE SANDWICHES, ETC.

On next Tuesday, on the Court House Lawn, the Matrons Class of the Methodist Church will serve cold drinks, sandwiches, ice cream, cake, ets. Proceeds will be donated for the purpose of redecorating the interior of the Church in Columbiana.

ICE CREAM SUPPER TO BE GIVEN AT CHAPEL CHURCH

On Saturday night, July 24th, there will be an Ice Cream Supper given, the proceeds from same to be donated to the F. F. A. boys of this community which will be used by them to help defray the expenses of their educational tour of the Texas Centennial and other interesting points. Among the many attractions offered is a Beauty Contest. All are cordially invited to attend.

Mr. and Mrs. Dick Holcombe, Mrs. Jessie and Louise Thompson have moved to the residence built by Carl Groubie on the Wilsonville Road.

Hop Cole, who has been quite ill at his home in Columbiana, for the past three weeks, we are delighted to report is convalescing. Good news also comes of the steady improvement of another town favorite —Mildred Curlee, who has been ill for several weeks. Mrs. Curlee, to the delight of her many friends, is much better.

Paul O. Luck and Max Lefkovits were "belles" at the Exchange Club Barbecue and Ball held at Pineview Beach on last Friday night. Both gentlemen extended us a cordial invitation to accompany them, but not until the motor was purring and they were safely "on their way"—without me. So much for a thoughtful (?) brother-in-law, and a life long friend.

Enjoying the Gulf breezes this week are: Mr. and Mrs. Mims Roberts, Harry Jr., Gerald Fulton and Jack Letson, who are spending a few days in Panama City.

Mayor and Mrs. Harry Gordon are prolonging their vacation on Miami Beach.

Mr. and Mrs. John McGiboney and Miss Florence McGiboney who have spent a month's vacation in Kentucky returned to their home Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Bolin Cooper and Ina Claire Cooper have returned home after spending several weeks in Miami, Florida. Mrs. Brunson of Elba, returning with her daughter, Mrs. Cooper for a visit.

Alvin Lefkovits, who holds a responsible position with a large Department house in Atlanta, is spending a few days with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Max Lefkovits.

Mrs. Harry Harper of Birmingham is the guest of her mother, Mrs. Nora Lester this week.

The most congenial foursome we know—Mr. and Mrs. Mason Edwards of Columbiana and Mr. and Mrs. Carl Edwards of Alabaster, left Columbiana Sunday for a tour thru the West which includes Old Mexico, Texas and other interesting points, returning by New Orleans. They will be away for about ten days.

Gray Davis Goodwin, 6 year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Gray Goodwin, entertained a group of his friends on Monday afternoon in honor of his birthday anniversary. Games and varied contests furnished the amusement program for his many little friends who enjoyed sharing the happy occasion with him.

Milton Bird Receives Notice Of Acceptance of Short Story For Magazine Section, Birmingham News

The "South's Greatest Newspaper" will receive a doubly cordial receptio nover the "coffee-cups" on next Sunday morning when the Magazine section is unfolded, and Columbiana citizens will have the pleasure of reading something "DIFFERENT", from the fluent pen of gifted Milton Bird, native of Columbiana, and versatile journalist.

The Democrat takes a special pride in telling its readers of this recognition of Mr. Bird by the Birmingham News, for we have had the privilege of presenting many of his short stories for our readers, which have been happily received by our weekly circle of subscribers.

The announcement made in last Sunday's News tells that "DIFFERENT", by Milton Bird, will occupy the honor place in Alabama's gallery of Short Story writers. We personally await with eagerness the issue —and offer heartiest congratulations to Mr. Bird—whom we predict can and will go far in the field he has chosen as his profession.

Miss Alice Roberts has returned to Montevallo after spending the week end at home.

Norman Lefkovits, of Birmingham spent the week end with his parents in Columbiana.

Messrs Francis and James Leonard of Birmingham, spent the week end with their parents.

Miss Estelle Cross of Vincent, is the house guest of Miss Sara Neil Stinson.

Miss Dorothy Casin has returned home after spending several days with Miss Odell Turner.

Wales Wallace, Jr., and Miss Elizabeth Taylor spent Friday in Birmingham.

Douglas Holman and Gene Edmondson of Attalla, spent the week end in Columbiana.

Mr. and Mrs. G. R. McNeil spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. J. B.

Mr. and Mrs. E. B. Turner have returned to Columbiana after having spent several days with Mrs. Turner's parents in Cahaba Valley.

FLOWERS FOR NELLE

It is not uncommon to see somebody tenderly weaving a wreath or a spray for some friend who has crossed the river but how seldom do any of us ever think of presenting flowers to our loved ones while they are alive to enjoy them. This is my way of showering down all the blossoms in my heart on my dear friend, Nelle Walton, for her birthday. Since last August, Nelle has been "out of things" as far as the usual activities of a young person were concerned. After she fell and hurt her leg she spent three long weeks in the hospital. For a time she could not walk at all and then for months a pair of crutches played the leadin grole in her existence. Only recently has she been able to discard her crutches and even at that its slow going with her.

In September she goes back to the hospital for another operation on that knee. The doctor promises her a "good" leg by Christmas. Nobody wishes her more luck than I. We have been the closest companions for some time and she has truly been a lesson to me in patience. Gallant is the word for her. Through all the dark days she has never lost hope, and though at times she has been a bit down cast, she has mostly been of good cheer.

By these few remarks I hope to bring out the fact that I am her sincere friend and that I think she is a swell person. Here's to happiness on your birthday, Nelle, and on and on and on.

Nell Hughey.

MR. AND MRS. HOMER WALTON ENTERTAIN AL FRESCO

In the lovely out door living room of Mr. and Mrs. Homer J. Walton were gathered twenty friends on last Thursday night to enjoy a Fish Fry. Congenial falk, delectable menu and delightful c o m panionship marked this social courtesy as one of the most delightful of the summer season.

Week end guests who were delightfully entertained by Miss Mamie Jo Harbin in her attractive apartment, included: Misses Lucille Roper Anne Boone, Al Breedlove of Athens, Jack Burleson and Katherine Arnold of Sylacauga, Charles Benton of Birmingham and Aurelia Walters of Montgomery.

DICK MILLER

One of my favorite Little Pals is Dick Miller, formerly of Columbiana but who now resides in Boothton, Alabama. This friendly young fellow has been the guest of relatives in Columbiana for the past week, and will return to his home in Boothton, Thursday. We acknowledge a thoughtful phone call from Dick, and assure him we remember him from our "Radio Pilgrimages" when he was a constant little listener who often ordered just the melody he wanted—and got it, too! Nothing quite so sincere as the friendship of a child! We treasure it as one of our most priceless possessions.

Mrs. Y. Moore and daughter, Mickey, are visiting Mr. and Mrs. Beston Robertson in Opp, Alabama.

Mrs. W. E. Harrison, after a visit with her daughter, Mrs. Ed Lovelady, has returned to her home in Montevallo.

Mrs. Jim Fulton is visiting her daughter, Mrs. Williams in Oxford—and from Oxford will visit relatives in Atlanta before returning home.

PHILATHEA CLASS

The Philathea Class of the Columbiana Baptist Church met on Tuesday night, July 14th at the home of Judge and Mrs. L. B. Riddle for the purpose of electing officers for the year.

The following officers were elected
Teacher ..... Judge L. B. Riddle
Assistant Teacher..... Mrs. Walker Houlditch.
President ..... Miss Ethel Walton
1st Vice President....Miss Lena Cox
2nd Vice-Pres...Miss Gertrude Bishop
3rd Vice-Pres. ..... Miss Era Pitts
Sec.-Treas. ..... Miss Dolly Jones
Group Captains:—
Mrs. Dixie B. Shealy, Mrs. P. P. Anderson, Miss Irene Bishop.
Reporter ..... Mrs. Homer Bearden

At this meeting, plans were made for increasing both the membership and attendance of the class.

After the business of the meeting was concluded, a social hour was enjoyed during which delicious refreshments were served.

Messrs Fred and Jake Jones of Virginia, were the guests of Miss Odell Turner several days this week.

.... NEIGHBORS AND FRIENDS ....

We are delighted to welcome as "across the way"—neighbors and friends Mr. and Mrs. Clayton McGhee and the adorable Master Charles McGhee. It isn't nearly so lonesome with Sir Charles in this vicinity to awaken us with his matin melody —or to chant a good night little song —and, if you do not think this little two year old can sing anything he takes a notion to warble—just stop and as khim—he is not a bit backward regarding his presentations.

Mrs. Claude Fore, June and Harvell Fore left Sunday for Chattanooga, Tennessee, for a week's visit with relatives.

Miss Eleanor Atchison, Ray Atchison and John Rush left Friday for Ridgecrest, N. C., to attend the Southwide Baptist Training Union Assembly for ten days.

Oscar Martin, who is playing ball with the Buck Creek team in Siluria, spent the week end in Columbiana with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Martin.

FARR REUNION

There will be a Farr Reunion held on July 28th at the home of John Farr at the old Homestead near Wilsonville. This is an annual affair, and members of the Farr family will be reunited on this happy occasion.

AWNINGS TO FIT

Old Mattresses made new. Furniture repaired and upholstered. Draperies and Curtains. Write Sanitary Mattress and Awning Co., 431 Norton Ave., Sylacauga, Alabama. Trips made to Columbiana twice monthly. Leave your old mattresses at the Democrat Office and your new mattress will delivered.

Mr. O. F. Lokey of Mardis Ferry will hold his annual barbecue and colt show on July 29th. The business firms ofWilsonville are offering a number of worthwhile prizes in addition to those offered by Mr. Lokey. If you have a mule colt bring it to the show. There are no fees or charges.

BILLIE JOHN MARTIN

Columbiana happily greets her newest citizen this week and offers sincere congratulations to Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Martin upon the arrival of a little daughter, who was born last Thursday, and whom they have named Billie John Martin.

Mr. Weems, prominent Insurance Agent of Montevallo, was a distinguished citizen who thoughtfully called by the Democrat office on Wednesday, while in Columbiana.

DR. AND MRS. HUGH NICKSON

Dr. and Mrs. Hugh Nickson have returned from a vacation spent in Panama City, Florida, and will leave Columbiana on August 1st for their home in Ragland, Alabama. The good wishes of the entire County follow this charming little couple, as they leave the town in which they have made their home for the past two years, while Dr. Nickson creditably performed the official duties of the County Health Officer.

Bale Your Hay to Keep it Good

McCORMICK-DEERING
Hay Presses

WHETHER you use all your hay or sell part of it, baling offers many advantages. Baled hay takes up much less storage space than loose hay, is easier to handle, more economical to feed, and usually retains its feeding value longer. Only in baled form can hay be shipped profitably.

Any way you look at it, a McCormick-Deering Hay Press is a good investment. And when you finish your own work you can do custom baling. We can supply you with 1 and 2-horse hay presses, and with power presses which can be operated by your own tractor or with an engine mounted on the press.

Ask us for further information on baling and on the size of McCormick-Deering Hay Press best suited for your farm.

SEN. 'JOE' ROBINSON IS DEAD

Falls 'Face to Battle'

WHEN Sen. Joseph T. Robinson of Arkansas dropped dead of a heart attack in his apartment across from the United States capitol, the President's plan for securing new appointments to the Supreme court bench, even in its amended form, died with him.

Senator Harrison

That is the belief of close observers in Washington. For "Joe" Robinson was the President's tower of strength in the legislative branch of the government. He had served the Democratic party well in the senate since 1913, and as the majority leader in the upper house since 1932.

Joe Robinson's job it was to keep a smooth balance between the conservative democrats, largely of the South, and the more radical members of the party from the North and West, so that the objectives of the New Deal could be turned out of the legislative mill.

Robinson never fought harder than he did in his last battle. As he worked hard and long in an attempt to get the "compromise" court plan passed, often raising his voice and exerting himself mightily in senate arguments, it was apparent to his colleagues that he was not well. Sen. Royal S. Copeland, the only physician in the senate, had several times asked him to calm himself lest he hasten his own death.

While the senate was adjourned for Robinson's funeral, administration leaders sought to rally support so the court bill could be passed, even without the late senator's leadership. But the opposition forces were equally determined to take advantage of the psychological aspect of the senate following Robinson's death—the desire to effect a peace, finish the session's business in a hurry and get away from the capital.

The forces opposed to the bill believed that when the issue came up again they would be successful in recommitting the substitute bill to the judiciary committee, an effective way of killing it. The indication of opposition greater than had been expected in the house of representatives was another factor pointing to the eventual fall of the bill.

Another battle was not long in getting under way: to decide who the new majority leader of the senate should be. Conservative Democrats were anxious to wrest a measure of control from the White House by backing Sen. Pat Harrison of Mississippi, who has been faithful to the President, but is fundamentally conservative. The more radical senators backed Alben W. Barkley of Kentucky, Democratic national convention keynoter, who had been Robinson's assistant as floor leader. Another prospect was Sen. James F. Byrnes of South Carolina, but it was believed his strength would eventually be transferred to Harrison.

Another thing that had Washington guessing as a result of Robinson's death was the vacancy on the Supreme court left by the retirement of Justice Willis Van Devanter. Robinson, it was generally believed, was to have received the appointment.

Struggle in the Senate

TWELVE Democratic senators and one Farmer-Laborite were believed to hold the fate of the administration's substitute for the original bill which would increase the number of Supreme court justices to 15. The administration was certain that the bill would receive at least 38 votes, with 48 necessary to a majority since Senator Robinson's death. Forty-three senators were definitely committed against it. Thirteen were still uncommitted as the battle raged on the senate floor and in the cloakrooms.

The twelve uncommitted Democrats were: Andrews (Fla.), Bone (Wash.), Brown (N. H.), Caraway (Ark.), Duffy (Wis.), Johnson (Colo.), Lewis (Ill.), Murray (Mont.), Overton (La.), Pepper (Fla.), Russell, Jr. (Ga.) and Wagner (N. Y.). Lundeen (Minn.) was the Farmer-Laborite.

The substitute for the original Ashurst bill provides for appointment of one new justice each year to every justice remaining on the court after reaching the age of seventy-five years.

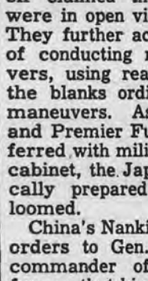
New Sino-Japanese Conflict?

WAR between China and Japan was believed almost inevitable as hopes of settling a new outbreak of hostilities by diplomatic means faded out. The fighting ensued as Japanese gendarmes attempted to take over the policing of Yuanping and Lukowkiao, two villages in the Peiping area, near Marco Polo bridge. This, the Japanese said, was provided for in the North China truce. According to the assertions of the Japanese war office, Chinese soldiers fired upon the gendarmes and opened up with trench mortars against the Japanese contingent at the Yuanping station. This action allegedly compelled the Japanese to make a night assault, costing 20 lives, in order to occupy the towns of Lungwangmiao and Tungshinghwan. It was said the Chinese troops had also advanced into these points.

Emperor Hirohito

Officials of the Hopei-Chahar council claimed the Japanese moves were in open violation of the truce. They further accused the Japanese of conducting night army maneuvers, using real bullets instead of the blanks ordinarily employed in maneuvers. As Emperor Hirohito and Premier Fumimaro Konoe conferred with military leaders and the cabinet, the Japanese people frantically prepared for the war that loomed.

China's Nanking government gave orders to Gen. Sung Cheh-yuan, commander of the North China forces, that his army was not to retreat for any reason, but was to be prepared to make the "supreme sacrifice" to hold its position until Gen. Chiang Kai-shek should arrive over the Peiping-Hankow railroad with 50,000 fresh troops.



As the fighting continued in the Peiping area, with no hope of an effective compromise on the two nations' demands, war seemed the probable result.

Although an agreement was reported to have been made between local Chinese and Japanese authorities at Tientsin, settling the dispute to the satisfaction of both, the national government at Nanking has continued to insist that no agreement reached locally would be observed.

Mrs. Roosevelt's Taxes

WHEN Representative Hamilton Fish (Rep., N. Y.) sought to demonstrate the unfairness of the tax invasion investigation committee, he demanded that the committee investigate the income of the wife of the President from radio broadcasts, charging that she was not paying a cent of income taxes upon those earnings. She had turned over $39,000 to the American Friends Service committee, a Philadelphia charity, kept $1 per broadcast for herself and paid nothing whatever from her radio earnings to the government.

Rep. Fish

Assistant Attorney General Robert H. Jackson replied for her, explaining to Chairman Doughton of the congressional committee that the bureau of internal revenue had advised Mrs. Roosevelt she need pay no tax on the receipts from the broadcast. He declared the responsibility "is not that of Mrs. Roosevelt, but that of myself and others who were treasury officials at the time."

Loyalists Widen Front

THE Spanish loyalists' drive to push back the rebel forces to a safe distance from Madrid continued, with the government forces widening the front by expanding both flanks several miles. The main line of advance was in a southerly direction, slow but steady. It had progressed as far as a point halfway between Brunete and Navalcarnero. Loyalist forces were attempting to acquire control of the Quernales river banks, there to dig in and protect the right flank while the main drive continues south.

Rebel military strategists were not particularly distressed over the government advance, for they believe that if they can draw the major part of the Madrid garrison out into the open country and destroy it the advance will benefit them more than it will the loyalists. Artillery of both sides worked overtime as the rebel reinforcements came in to make the struggle more equal.

The government was reported to be using dozens of Russian tanks. They are heavier and clumsier than the rebel tanks, but they carry field pieces of great accuracy and potency. Still, a new kind of anti-tank gun developed by the rebels stopped a number of them.

Government planes were reported doing serious damage to rebel forces on the Basque front to the north. In the east Gen. Sebastian Pozas, commander of the government forces in the Saragossa-Teruel sector, claimed that Albarracin "not only has been completely surrounded, but also government troops now are fighting in the streets of the town."

Mr. Eden Has a Plan

PLANS to maintain the non-intervention patrol of Spain in a fashion that will satisfy all the nations concerned and insure against the spread of the conflict beyond the Spanish borders have blown about like papers in a storm. And when you get right down to it, that is about all they have amounted to.

Anthony Eden

Now Anthony Eden, Britain's foreign secretary, has come up with a new one, as deft and perhaps as futile as any which have gone before it. It provides for the full re-establishment of land and sea control of movements of men and arms into Spain. French and British warships would patrol the coastline with German and Italian observers aboard (the Fascist nations, indignant over the Leipzig incident, have withdrawn from the patrol.) This arrangement would operate only until a permanent scheme could be worked out, placing observers for the non-intervention committee in all non-Spanish seaports and airports from which men and supplies might leave for Spain, and in all Spanish ports to see that none landed there. After that, the sea patrol would be abolished.

Upper Silesia Still Puzzle

BEFORE a new accord could be reached, the 15-year-old Geneva convention designed to reconcile the interests of both Poland and Germany in Upper Silesia, expired. Upper Silesia was once part of both Germany and Austria, but after the World war it was split between Germany and Poland. The people of the two sections have since that time mingled freely with one another, carrying on a live commerce unhindered over the boundary lines set by the League of Nations.

The diplomatic difficulties occurred when no solution was forthcoming for the problem of what to do with the Poles who wanted to remain in the German section and the Germans who wanted to remain in the Polish section.

6,625 Miles in One Hop!

WITH the world still thrilling to the recent flight of three Russian aviators from Moscow to the United States via the North Pole, three more Russians did it again, completing the longest non-stop flight in history.

After flying 6,625 miles from the Russian capital, Pilot Michael Gromov, Co-Pilot Andrei Yumoshev and Navigator Sergei Danilin, made a forced landing in a cow pasture near San Jacinto, Cal. A leaking gasoline line had exhausted their fuel supply as they battled heavy fogs which hung over the west coast region. Their flying time was estimated at 62 hours and 17 minutes.

Obituary in Blue

GEORGE GERSHWIN, composer who lifted jazz music up to the level of the classics, died suddenly in Hollywood after an operation for brain tumor. He was thirty-eight. His "Rhapsody in Blue" was famous among the world's music lovers, his opera, "Porgy and Bess" one of the most individually American of all musical works. His "Suwanee" sold more than 2,000,000 copies, his musical comedy score, "Of Thee I Sing," was a Pulitzer prize winner, and some of his compositions, such as "Strike Up the Band," "Soon," and "Somebody Loves Me" were sung and danced to by millions. Many prominent critics called him the most original force in American music.

SEEN and HEARD around the NATIONAL CAPITAL

By Carter Field
FAMOUS WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENT

Washington. — Republicans in the house and senate are receiving an astonishing number of letters from lifelong G. O. P. voters insisting that practical expediency dictates the breaking up of the Republican party as a national institution.

The writers almost without exception take the ground that the important thing, both from their own selfish interests—which they generally construe as the good of the country—and the carrying out of the old Republican economic ideals, is not only to prevent the re-election of Franklin D. Roosevelt in 1940 but to prevent the election of any one chosen by Roosevelt who will carry on the New Deal policies.

The only thing that holds the Democratic party together at the moment, many of these writers insist, is the presence on the field of battle of their enemy, the Republican party. Some of them make the point that the old truism that there are more Republicans in the United States than Democrats—that this is a Republican country—is no longer accurate. A new generation has come of voting age, which has no party ties rooted in the old tradition, they insist, and apparently a very large majority of the younger folks have very definitely affiliated with the Democratic party.

Even the often made statement by Republican Chairman John D. M. Hamilton about the tremendous number of Republicans who voted in the last election, nearly seventeen million, is the bunk, many of these writers go out of their way to assert. They point to the fact that a tremendous number of these "Republican" votes were actually cast by Democrats who have no love whatever for the Republican party, its traditions or leaders. They instance Alfred E. Smith, John W. Davis, Bainbridge Colby, former Senator James A. Reed of Missouri, and though he never made a public statement that he was going to vote for Alfred M. Landon, many writers also mention Newton D. Baker.

Would Scrap G. O. P.

There is no way of telling how many Democrats, unhappy about the New Deal tendencies of their party, voted for Landon. But every one of the folks writing in recently and asking that the Republican party be scrapped in order to open a clear road for an effective conservative opposition to the New Deal seems to think a great many.

Yet the opposition to being classed as a Republican, or to giving aid and comfort to a revival of the G. O. P., the writers point out, deterred literally millions of Democrats from jumping party lines. Many of the letters mention such well-known Democratic leaders as Senators Carter Glass and Harry F. Byrd of Virginia, Millard E. Tydings of Maryland, Josiah W. Bailey of North Carolina, and Walter F. George of Georgia as among the Democrats who supported Roosevelt, some tepidly and some strongly, merely because he was the Democratic nominee, running against a Republican.

Without the national Republican party opposition to hold it together, many of these letter writers believe, the Democratic party would almost immediately split into two parties, giving the country the conservative and progressive division on economic lines to which it is entitled, and getting rid of bygone issues, labels and prejudices which should no longer be permitted to becloud our presidential campaigns.

Holding Corporations

Not many votes are involved, so there is no telling what congress will do about it, but there are a great many individuals on Capitol Hill who think the personal holding corporation, in many instances, is perfectly moral and justified.

The best demonstration is one that did not happen. But let us take the case of the author of "Gone With the Wind." That book came out just over a year ago. It is generally estimated to have earned one million dollars for Margaret Mitchell. All of that million was earned in two calendar years, most of it in the first. And the government will take approximately half of that!

Now no one would object to the government taking fifty per cent of an income of half a million dollars a year—if the income came every year—if it was interest on invested capital or earnings from a going concern.

But here is a case where an author, certainly from a comparative standpoint, eked out an existence during the ten or fifteen years in which this major opus was under construction. Furthermore, while this statement may be confounded later, most authors think it is extremely unlikely that the writer of "Gone With the Wind" will produce another highly profitable work. As a matter of fact, there is no indication to date that she will attempt it.

Now to apply the corporation idea. If Margaret Mitchell had incorporated, the government would have taken fifteen per cent of that one million dollars—the normal levy on corporation earnings. The rest could have remained in the surplus, save what part she drew out for spending. On that part drawn out in dividends she would have to pay income taxes, of course, but she would escape the enormous surtaxes that an income of half a million dollars rates. She could distribute the taxes over the rest of her natural life, and the government would be lucky to get $200,000 instead of the $500,000 it gets with Margaret Mitchell unincorporated.

How It Works

The point here is that there are a great many people who have brief periods of very high earning power, sometimes coming toward the end of a lifetime, and sometimes very early. It is just possible, for example, that Shirley Temple will never earn a dollar after she is ten years old. Or nine for that matter.

Often a comedian or more serious actor will struggle in comparative poverty for twenty years, as did the late Frank Bacon, and then have a wonderful three or four years. Sometimes it is only one year.

There are other forms of occupation where the same thing works out, with plenty of ups and downs, mostly downs. But the only way to prevent the government taking half or more of the profits in good years, although not helping out in bad years, is to incorporate.

To hear the testimony of the government experts before the house committee, and to read the newspaper articles about their testimony, the casual reader might assume that the person thus incorporating actually dodged all taxes in that particular directon. Let's look at what the government actually does to corporations!

In the first place, it takes fifteen per cent of all net earnings. That is a fair sized tax in itself, more than one dollar out of eight. In the second place, the corporation pays two additional taxes to the federal government, on its capital stock and on excess profits. In the third place, when the corporation pays out dividends, they become the income of the person receiving them, and are subject to all income taxes, even including the normal tax, from which previous to the last March returns they were exempt.

May Be Long Session

Only a surprise move by President Roosevelt, which may come but is not expected, can prevent the present session of congress running into October.

Actually congress can adjourn within two weeks of any Tuesday on which the President lets the leaders know that he is willing for certain legislation to go over until next session. This legislation includes of course the Supreme court enlargement measure.

The legislation which would have to be put over until next session also includes much of the government reorganization proposal made by the President. Mr. Roosevelt can get part of this without any delay whatever, notably the half dozen additional secretaries he wants. But certain phases of it would be fought to the death by senators and representatives, some of whom are in entire sympathy with the President on most of his proposals.

But if Mr. Roosevelt should take the advice given him by Vice President John N. Garner before that astute gentleman left for Texas, it would amaze every one how quickly congress could clean up its odds and ends, clear its calendars of everything to which there is no real opposition, and scatter.

It has been apparent to every one with the slightest interest in looking beneath the surface that congress has been stalling for months.

Time Not Wasted

But meanwhile the time is not being entirely wasted. There are reactions from the constituents of the congressmen. They gradually find out enough about home sentiment to determine whether they dare support or oppose certain measures. They can appraise the value of trades they contemplate making.

This year, however, this watchful waiting process has come pretty near to breaking all records, largely because of the two major pieces of legislation. One of them, the Supreme court proposal, is a major issue. The other, government reorganization, involves personal politics.

And while they have hung back on this, with the senate adjourning for British week-ends, and meeting only a few hours—sometimes minutes—when it does actually convene, the labor issue has become more important than anything actually on the agenda.

In holding congress in session to break the filibuster that is certain if the President pushes his Supreme court plan, Mr. Roosevelt is acting against the advice of most of his friends and party colleagues.

CITES RULES FOR TRUCK OPERATION

Full Loads, Backhauls, Are Important Points.

By R. C. Ashby, Associate Chief in Live Stock Marketing, University of Illinois.—WNU Service.

Full loads, steady use, high percentage of backhauls and careful handling are four essentials in successful operation of motor trucks.

These facts are pointed out in a study which the department of agricultural economics, University of Illinois, college of agriculture, has completed in co-operation with 15 truck operators who kept records of their activities in hauling farm products over a one-year period.

Three general laws of business are demonstrated by the data obtained, even in the small number of trucks on which records were kept. In the first place, costs decrease with the volume of output, in this case miles covered. Second, lower costs tend to result in lower prices or charges for hauling, and, third, total earnings increase as volume increases.

The greater the number of miles driven, the less the operating cost a mile and hour because the fixed costs are distributed over more units. Cost of operation a mile for trucks with 25,000 miles or more of use was 38 per cent lower than for the group with 15,000 miles or less.

Return loads mean more profits. Trucks which brought back a high percentage of return loads consistently were among the group having the lowest operating costs. Although there was not much correlation between costs a mile and average weight hauled, it was found that a fully loaded truck reduces the ton-mile costs considerably. In the cost of hauling live stock, the mileage required to pick up a full load is an important item.

For the 15 trucks the average cost including operating labor was 7.2 cents a mile. Omitting operating labor, driver and helper, the average cost was 4.78 cents a mile. The trucks averaged 9.1 miles a gallon of gasoline, 519.6 miles a gallon of oil, 27.3 ton-miles a gallon of gasoline and 15.2 miles an hour of operation.

Rations Protect Birds' Health, Expert Explains

In spite of high feed prices and low returns for eggs, experienced poultrymen are using well-balanced rations instead of cheaper feeds that lack essential nutrients, says Dr. H. S. Wilgus, Jr., poultryman for Colorado State College Experiment station.

These poultrymen have learned that many of the cheaper rations do not provide necessary vitamins and proteins which protect the health of the birds and of the chicks and poults.

Poults require a higher percentage of protein, vitamins and minerals than chicks. The needs of chicks or poults for these nourishing elements in certain feeds are highest during the first week of life, and gradually decline until the birds approach sexual maturity.

More of certain vitamins are needed in breeder rations than in laying rations in order to insure high hatchability and vigorous chicks or poults. It therefore is more economical and desirable to use rations adapted to these specific purposes.

Calf Feeding

Creep-fed calves started on grain before they go on grass will continue to go into the "creep" to eat, even though they run with the cows in the pasture, according to the College of Agriculture, University of Illinois. Equal parts by measure of shelled corn and whole oats make a good feed for calves. About 20 bushels of grain and 200 pounds of hay may be eaten by a calf up to weaning time in the fall, when they are usually sold at weights of about 700 pounds at nine or ten months of age.

Young Turkey Ration

The Missouri College of Agriculture reports good results from this economical ration for growing poults: For the first 8 to 10 weeks, supply a mixture of 210 pounds of yellow corn meal, 75 pounds of bran, 50 pounds shorts, 25 pounds alfalfa leaf meal, 50 pounds meat scrap, 50 pounds soy bean meal, 25 pounds dried milk, 5 pounds salt and 10 pounds cod liver oil. This ration is kept before them all the time, with water and granite grit.

Oats for Hay

In cases where oats are to be used for hay this season, the Missouri experiment station recommends cutting with a grain binder rather than a mower. Oats cut with a mower lose color under the sun's rays and considerable trash may be raked up with them. If a binder is used, adjust the mechanism so that loose bundles are made. When shocking, set up not more than three bundles in a place. Small shocks make for rapid curing.

SYNOPSIS

Brooke Reyburn visits the office of Jed Stewart, a lawyer, to discuss the terms of an estate she has inherited from Mrs. Mary Armanda Dane. Unwittingly she overhears Jed talking to Mark Trent, nephew of Mrs. Dane who has been disinherited. Mrs. Dane had lived at Lookout House, a huge structure by the sea, built by her father and divided into two, for her and Mark's father. Brooke had been a fashion expert, and Mrs. Dane, a "shut-in," hearing her on the radio, had invited her to call and developed a deep affection for her. Mark discloses that Mrs. Dane had threatened to disinherit him if he married Lola, from whom he is now divorced. He says he does not trust Henri and Clotilde Jacques, Mrs. Dane's servants. He says he is not interested in an offer of Brooke's to share the estate with him. Leaving her department store job, Brooke refuses an offer to "go stepping" with Jerry Field, a carefree young man who wants to marry her. At a family conference she learns she must live at Lookout House alone, since Lucette, her younger sister who is taking her job, her brother, Sam, a young playwright, and her mother plan to stay in the city. Jed and Mark are astounded when they hear from Mrs. Gregory, a family friend, that she had witnessed a hitherto unknown will with Henri and Clotilde two weeks before Mrs. Dane died. Brooke had arrived just as she was leaving. Jed suggests that Mark open his part of Lookout House, get friendly with Brooke and try to find out about the will. Jed agrees to stay with him. Mark accepts Brooke's invitation for a family Thanksgiving dinner at Lookout. Mrs. Reyburn announces on Thanksgiving eve that she has been invited to England. Sam and Lucette decide to move in with Brooke and Sam plans to produce a new play locally. After the Thanksgiving dinner Brooke tells Mark that little of Mrs. Dane's silver collection is left. Jerry Field and his sister Daphne drop in and announce they will be neighbors for the winter. Sam adds them to the cast of his play. Later Inspector Harrison of the local police visits Mark and is informed about the missing will and silver. As Harrison leaves, Lola arrives.

"I don't like the twist you gave that 'lady,' Jed Stewart. Don't shake your head at the Jap, Mark. Why shouldn't I have a cup of tea with you? I'm famished. Place it here."

The servant looked at Mark Trent before he pressed the springs which released the legs of the tray he was carrying and set it before the woman. He brought in a muffin stand with sandwiches and cakes.

"You needn't wait," she dismissed the man as if she were the mistress of the house. Mark nodded confirmation as the Jap's eyes sought his. Did he know that the woman so dictatorially giving orders had been his wife?

Side by side the two men watched her, watched her restless hands. Once she had been told by a stag that her hands were like pale butterflies, Mark remembered, and they had fluttered ever since. In the silence the tick of the clock set the air vibrating; the fire snapped and blazed cheerily; the tide against the ledges boomed a dull undertone.

Lola Hunt flung a crumpled doily to the table.

"Now a cigarette, Mark, and I shall be ready to proceed with my story."

"Sorry, haven't any."

She raised brows which had been plucked to a thin arch.

"You do want to get rid of me, don't you. Well, I strive to please." She rose and crossed to the desk. With a glance over her shoulder, she opened a box of Chinese lacquer.

"You see I still know my way around. Oh, by the way, your aunt's legatee is living at Lookout House, I hear. Henri wrote me—"

"Henri!"

"Yes. I always got on with Henri, perhaps because he knew that I detested your aunt as much as he did. He wrote that Miss Reyburn evidently didn't like his wife and himself, asked if I would give him a reference in case they lost the position."

Was that all Henri Jacques had written, Mark wondered. There was a hint of mockery in Lola's voice and eyes. What was behind that letter? He watched her thoughtfully as he perched on the corner of the desk, crossed her knees and lighted a cigarette. She blew a ring of smoke toward the two men standing back to the fire.

"Forgot these were in the box, didn't you, Mark? You really should do something about your memory; it's slipping." Her eyes and voice sharpened. "Well, here's my news. Bert Hunt—he's my present husband, in case you've forgotten—is planning to go into business in the residential part of this town, has gone, in fact. I shall help when he's rushed or—indisposed. When I heard that you'd opened this house, I thought perhaps you wouldn't care to have your former wife working—I've been warned that I've been taking chances with my heart—that perhaps you'd like to buy us off. With $20,000 we could go abroad and stay for a time. Don't stand there like a bronze Nemesis ready to swoop. Nothing shameful about any kind of a job these days, is there?"

Mark Trent laughed. It was not an especially merry burst of sound, but it would serve.

"Do you call extortion a job? Nothing doing, Lola. Your heart! You've used your weak heart as an excuse to get what you wanted for years. Why should I deprive the town of Hunt's business ability and so charming an assistant?"

She slid to her feet. Her face, which had been blank with amazement at his laugh, went white with anger.

"You mean that you don't mind my working—here?"

"If it's what you like, why should I? But," his face was as colorless as hers, "if you do stay in this town, the allowance I am making you—which, you may remember, is purely voluntary—will stop."

"Are you threatening me?"

"Not for a minute. I'm merely reminding you—"

"Then I'll remind you that it may cost you more—"

"Mrs. Gregory, Miss Reyburn," murmured Kowa at the door.

Mrs. Gregory registered amazement and anger when she saw Lola. Her skin mottled, her eyes flashed as she thumped her cane on the rug and went into action.

"What are you doing in this house, Lola?"

"I might ask you that." Lola Hunt's eyes moved insolently from her to the girl beside her. "Matchmaking mayhap? As I remember it was one of your passions." Her glance brought color to Brooke Reyburn's face.

"Just as cheap in your answers as ever, aren't you, Lola? Wisecracking, I believe they call it now. Don't tell me you have taken her back, Mark."

"Taken me back! That's the joke of the week. He couldn't get me back."

Lola Hunt pulled the silver fox cape about her shoulders and drew on the fabric gloves.

"So glad to have met you here, Mrs. Gregory. It will save sending you a card."

Anne Gregory's face took on a purple tint. She thumped her cane on the rug.

"A card! A card to what, you brazen hussy?"

Lola Hunt shrugged. "Don't try to stop her, Mark. She would call a woman who chose to live her life

"You Do Want to Get Rid of Me, Don't You?"

according to modern ideas of marriage, a hussy. You'd know that from her clothes, they're so deliciously Victorian. I really must go."

She stopped on the threshold. "Dear Mrs. Gregory, I didn't answer your question, did I? The card to which I referred is an invitation to patronize the business which we have started in my old home on the point. You remember that house, I am sure, remember how you and your friends tried to freeze out the girl who came there to live. She didn't freeze, did she? She burned up a few of the husbands and all the lads. Is it any more shocking for me to go into business than for some of your pet socialites to sponsor cigarettes, soap, or bedding in every magazine in the country?"

She turned to Brooke.

"You are Miss Reyburn, aren't you? I'll give you a tip. Had I been left the late, not too lamented, Mary Amanda Dane's money, I would be wondering why her rightful heir and his lawyer had camped down in the house next to mine, why they were hob-nobbing with Inspector Bill Harrison."

She looked back over her shoulder.

"Think over my proposition, Mark, darling. It may be cheaper for you—in the end."

CHAPTER V

Lola Hunt's malicious laugh lingered eerily in the silence which followed her theatrical exit from the room. Somewhere a door closed with a bang which clanged through the house.

Her spiteful warning struck like an irritating burr in Brooke Reyburn's mind. She glanced at the two men standing back to the fire: Stewart's eyes, still on the doorway, smoldered with anger; the tortured look in Mark Trent's hurt her unbearably; even with his pride knifed, his courtesy had been invincible. The woman had warned him also. Why think of him, she asked herself angrily. Better have her mind on what Mrs. Hunt had insinuated. Had those two men come to live in this house because they suspected her, Brooke Reyburn, of dishonestly influencing Mary Amanda Dane? If so, what could they do about it? Drag her into court? Was that why Inspector Harrison had been with them? It was fantastic, incredible, yet hadn't she wondered times without number why they, city men so obviously, should have come to this village for the winter?

As if her thoughts had drawn his eyes to her, Mark Trent regretted: "Sorry, Miss Reyburn, that you should have been bored with a scene."

He pressed a bell beside the fireplace. With a little snort of anger, Anne Gregory settled heavily into a chair and flung back her sable cape. The color of her face suggested a red-hot balloon. Temper and voice blew up.

"How about me, Mark? Do you think I liked meeting that shameless woman here? Shameless! Perhaps I'm too hard on Lola. She was right. We old residents did our best to snub her when she came here to live, and she did have every man in the place parking on her doorstep sooner or later. And what did Lola mean, she hoped I'd patronize the business she and her husband were about to start?"

"She didn't say what sort of business, did she? Let's forget her. Let me take your coat, Miss Reyburn." Trent stood behind Brooke as the servant appeared in the doorway.

"Kowa, take out the tray and bring fresh tea."

Mrs. Gregory removed her gloves and resumed cross-examination.

"Did Lola really mean that she and her present husband are going into business in this village?"

"What's strange in that? It's being done every day." Mark Trent crossed his arms on the mantel and stared at the fire.

In spite of her suspicion of his motive in coming to live next door to Lookout House, Brooke's sympathy surged out to him. Why didn't Mrs. Gregory drop the subject of the Hunts? Couldn't she see that he was sick at heart over the whole sordid situation? With more kindness than finesse, Jed Stewart plunged into the breach.

"Has that pair of Japanese goldfish I ordered for you arrived yet, Mrs. Gregory?"

Anne Gregory looked up at him with eyes made shrewd by years of living, by joys, by uprooted affections, by hopes unrealized. She shook her head.

"You can't sidetrack me, young man, even with goldfish. I mean to get at what Lola is after—not merely customers, I am sure of that, she was here to hound Mark, I know her. I'll see that she doesn't get a license to carry on business on this point. I still have influence. Miss Reyburn will pour the tea," she directed, as Kowa approached her with the replenished tray.

Involuntarily Brooke looked at Mark Trent. He smiled.

"Please. Stewart and I have given up cocktails, they're too effeminate. We have become tea-minded since we came here. The cup that cheers offsets to a degree the pound of the surf outside. Have a sandwich, Empress?"

"You haven't forgotten that nickname, have you, Mark? I like it from you. You use your mother's silver, don't you? By the way, what became of that gorgeous antique service of your aunt's? I haven't seen any of it at Lookout House, Brooke."

The girl felt as if the eyes of both men were regarding her with suspicious attention. She finished filling a cup, added a slice of lemon and two lumps of sugar.

"For Mrs. Gregory, Mr. Stewart. Will you have yours the same strength? Oh, about Mrs. Dane's silver. There isn't any."

"Isn't any! You say there isn't any silver? Where is it, then? Did your aunt relent and give it to you, Mark?"

"No. Miss Reyburn and I were wondering about it on Thanksgiving day. Glad you brought up the subject. Aunt Mary Amanda didn't speak of having disposed of it, the day you wit—the last day you saw her, did she?"

Why had Mark Trent floundered in his question? What had he meant by "The day you wit—"? Why change the end of the sentence? Witness was the word he had started to use. What had Mrs. Gregory witnessed?

Even while she was driving Mrs. Gregory home, under a sky already freckled with stars, making what she hoped were intelligent responses to her monologue of question and answer, Brooke was weighing and disposing of conjectures as to the meaning of the Hunt woman's warning. It was with a sense of strain lifted that she helped the older woman out of the car. Mrs. Gregory laid her hand on her arm.

Massed Horse Races

Up to 150 years ago most race tracks around the world permitted all spectators on horses to enter the course and to ride, during the races, directly behind the thoroughbreds. Consequently, says Collier's Weekly, few of these horses ever had their minds on the race. Their only thought was to save their lives—from the thundering and howling mob at their heels.

what Irvin S. Cobb thinks about:

Third Term Ballyhoo.

SANTA MONICA, CALIF.—After a president has been re-elected it's certain that some inspired patriot who is snuggled close to the throne will burst from his cell with a terrible yell to proclaim that unless the adored incumbent consents again to succeed himself this nation is doomed.

Incidentally, the said patriot's present job and perquisites also would be doomed, so he couldn't be blamed for privately brooding on the distressful thought. You wouldn't call him selfish, but you could call him hopeful, especially since there's a chance his ballyhoo may direct attention upon him as a suitable candidate when his idol says no to the proposition. He might ride in on the backwash, which would be even nicer than steering a tidal wave for somebody else.

Irvin S. Cobb

Political observers have a name for this. They call it "sending up a balloon." It's an apt simile, a balloon being a flimsy thing, full of hot air, and when it soars aloft nobody knows where it will come down—if at all. It lacks both steering gears and terminal facilities.

There have been cases when the same comparison might have been applied not alone to the balloon but to the gentleman who launched it.

So let's remain calm. It's traditional in our history that no president ever had to go ballooning in order to find out how the wind blew and that no volunteer third-term boomer ever succeeded in taking the trip himself.

Modern Prairie Schooners.

WE'RE certainly returning — with modern improvements—to prairie schooner days when restless Americans are living on wheels and housekeeping on wheels and having babies on wheels. Only the other day twins were born aboard a trailer. And—who knows?—perhaps right now the stork, with a future president in her beak, is flapping fast, trying to catch up with somebody's perambulating bungalow.

So it's a fitting moment to revive the story of early Montana when some settlers were discussing the relative merits of various makes of those canvas-covered arks which bore such hosts of emigrants westward. They named over the Conestoga, the South Bend, the Murphy, the Studebaker and various others.

From under her battered sunbonnet there spoke up a weather beaten old lady who, with her husband and her growing brood, had spent the long years bumping along behind an ox team from one frontier camp to another.

"Boys," she said, shifting her snuff-stick, "I always did claim the old hickory waggin' wuz the best one there is fur raisin' a family in."

Pugs Versus Statesmen.

IT'S confusing to read that poor decrepit Jim Braddock, having reached the advanced age of thirty-four or thereabouts, is all washed up, and, then, in another column, to discover that the leading candidates to supply young blood on the Supreme court bench are but bounding juveniles of around sixty-six.

This creates doubt in the mind of a fellow who, let us say, is quite a few birthdays beyond that engendered wreck, Mr. Braddock, yet still has a considerable number of years to go before he'll be an agile adolescent like some senators. He can't decide whether he ought to join the former at the old men's home or enlist with the latter in the Boy Scouts.

Quiescent Major Generals.

SOMETHING has gone out of life. For months now no general of the regular army, whether retired or detailed to a civilian job, has talked himself into a jam—a raspberry jam, if you want to make a cheap pun of it.

Maybe it's being officially gagged for so long while on active service that makes such a conversational Tessie out of the average brigadier when he goes into private pursuits and lets his hair down. It's as though he took off his tact along with his epaulettes. And when he subsides there's always another to take his place.

You see, under modern warfare the commanding officer is spared. He may lead the retreat, but never the charge. When the boys go over the top is he out in front waving a sword? Not so you'd notice it. By the new rules he's signing papers in a bombproof nine miles behind the lines and about the only peril he runs is from lack of exercise in the fresh air.

May be, in view of what so often happens when peace ensues, we should save on privates instead of generals.

Storing Brown Sugar.—Brown sugar will not become lumpy if stored in an airtight jar.

Cooking Cabbage. — Cabbage should be cooked only until tender when tested with a fork. Too much cooking results in changed color and an indigestible product.

Browning Biscuits.—Biscuits can be given rich brown tops by brushing the tops with a pastry brush dipped in milk before placing them in the oven.

To Clean the Piano.—Use the suction cleaner to remove dust from the inside of the piano, and clean the keys with a soft cloth moistened with methylated spirit. Polish with a chamois leather.

Meat Pinwheels.—Biscuit dough, left-over meat chopped with onion, carrot and parsley. Spiced tomato gravy. Make your favorite biscuit dough and roll out fairly thick. Spread the meat mixture over the surface, leaving an inch margin of dough uncovered. Then roll up dough and meat together, and slice off pinwheels. Grease a shallow pan and lay in the pinwheels. Bake in moderately hot oven until done, about 30 minutes.

Turnips Au Gratin.—For this tasty dish half-cook turnips in boiling salted water, then cut into fairly thin slices and drain well. Arrange in layers in a buttered fireproof dish, and cover each layer of turnip with grated cheese, a seasoning of pepper, and some little dabs of butter. The last layers should consist of breadcrumbs sprinkled with grated cheese and dotted with butter. Bake in a moderate oven until well browned.

Heating the Oven.—Open the oven door for a minute soon after the gas has been lit and you will find that the oven will get hot much quicker. By doing so you let out the moisture that always collects when the oven is not in use.

Disagreeable Odor.—The smell of new paint has a very bad effect on some people. To minimize it, fill a pail of water and sprinkle in it some hay and one or two onions, freshly sliced. Stand this in a room newly painted, and much of the smell will be neutralized.

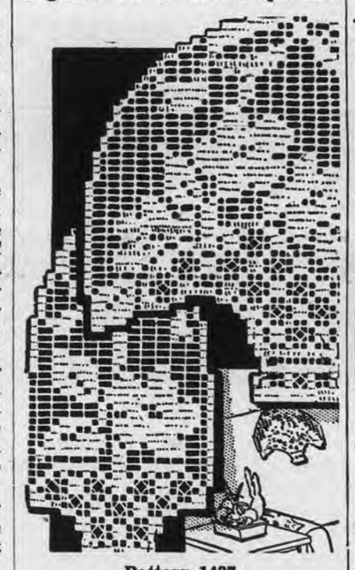
Favorite Recipe of the Week

Freezer Ice Cream.

1 quart milk
1 package ice cream powder (vanilla, strawberry, lemon, maple, or chocolate* flavor)

Add milk very gradually to ice cream powder, stirring until dissolved. Pour into freezer can; place in freezer and pack mixture of cracked ice and salt around can (use 8 parts ice to 1 part salt). Turn slowly for 3 minutes, then rapidly and continuously until frozen. Makes 1½ quarts ice cream.

Any of the following may be substituted for milk in this recipe: 1 quart rich milk or light cream, 1 cup cream and 3 cups milk, or 2 cups evaporated milk and 2 cups milk or water.



*With chocolate ice cream powder, add ¾ cup sugar.

There Must Be A Reason For This

FOR the 12 months ending May, 1937, residential customers in 75 per cent of the towns and communities served by Alabama Power Company used electricity in amounts substantially greater than the national average.

In March, 1937,* the national average annual electricity consumption per residential customer was 743 kilowatt hours. In June of 1937, the average annual use of electricity per Alabama Power Company residential customer was 1,222.3 kilowatt hours, or almost two-thirds more than the national average!

What Can Be The Reasons For This?

Is it, perhaps, the dependable, reliable service furnished our customers? Or, possibly, the low rate at which they have for years been able to buy electricity? Or is it likely that the company's policy of constantly introducing new electrical appliances to lighten household tasks played some part?

Or is it a combination of all these things that have created among Alabama Power Company customers that degree of satisfaction with electric service and its cost that has made Alabama outstanding in the large amount of electricity used by her residents and the low price they pay for it?

BUN WHITE, CHIEF DEPUTY FOR 14 YEARS, RESIGNS

Bun White, popular Chief Deputy of Shelby County for the past 14 years tendered his resignation to Sheriff Claude Fore on Monday morning to accept a more lucrative position with the Brown Lumber Company in Shelby. Mr. White enjoys the confidence of the entire County. His efficient ,courteous and conscientious discharge of his official duties has won for him an enviable official record. The writer, when informed of his resignation in a one minute interview with him, learns he will likely be a candidate for Sheriff of Shelby County next year. Mr. White states it is one of his cherished ambitions and having served in the above named capacity for the past 14 years, he feels he is peculiarly fitted to wisely discharge the duties incumbent upon this responsible position which he will likely seek. We feel sure the above item will be of interest to his legions of friends.

JUDGE GLOVER OF WETUMPKA HOLDS CIVIL TERM OF CIRCUIT COURT

Judge Arthur Glover arrived in Columbiana on Monday morning and opened the Civil Week of Circuit Court, Judge W. W. Wallace having disqualified on account of former interests in cases to be tried. The Gunn case, which has been tried five times, was compromised by Attorneys Ellis for the Plaintiff, and McCullough for the Woodmen of the World. The case grew out of some insurance involved, after the death of Mr. Gunn.

GRAND JURY IN SESSION

The Grand Jury for Shelby County Circuit Court assembled on Monday morning, with Hon. A. L. Hardegree of Ashland, in charge. L. C. Taylor was appointed Foreman. A number of witnesses have been summoned for the week for investigation of cases.

HOMEMAKERS WILL MEET AT ALABAMA COLLEGE AUG. 6 - 7

MONTEVALLO— Young homemakers of tomorrow, members of the Future Homemakers of Alabama, will hold their annual meeting at Alabama College here August 6-7, according to announcement by Miss Mary Ling Hayley, state advisor.

Outstanding girls from the home economics departments of many Alabama high schools will be initiated into the organization, which is sponsored by teachers of vocational home economics and is dedicated to the encouragement of girls, to a "better use of homemaking training in their personal development and in their home and community life."

Officers of the association are Muriel Killingsworth, Jemison, president; Gladys Fuller, New Blocton, vice-president; Hazel Cox, Holtville, secretary; and Margaret Sells, Collinsville, treasurer.

In addition to the examination of candidates for the state degree, and the initiation ceremonies, addresses will be made by Dean T. H. Napier, of Alabama College, and by Miss Katherine Forney, Montgomery, state supervisor of home economics education.

FARM TENANCY IN ALABAMA

A recent survey shows that there are 273,455 farms in Alabama. Of this number 176,247, or 64.5 per cent are being operated by tenants. Only five counties have less than fifty per cent tenant farm operators. Three of these, Baldwin, Mobile and Washington are in extreme South Alabama while the other two, Walker and Winston are in North Alabama. Mobile has the lowest percentage. Only 24 per cent of its farmers are tenants. Baldwin has 25 per cent, Washington 35, Walker 43 and Winston 46.

The highest percentage of tenant farmers is in the Blackbelt where the land is owned in large tracts by white people and is cultivated by negroes. Dallas leads in the number of tenant farmers with 86 per cent. Green and Lowndes each have 85 per cent, while Bullock has 83, Sumter 81, Wilcox 80. Other Blackbelt Counties that run high in tenancy are Macon 79, Marengo 78, Hale Perry and Montgomery 77 each. The highest in North Alabama is found in Madison and Limestone with 72 per cent each and Lawrence with 70 per cent. All other North Alabama Counties drop below seventy, most of them ranging between 50 and 60 per cent.

Tenant farming in Alabama has been steadily increasing since the beginning of the present century.

In an effort to encourage home ownership the Alabama Legislature at its 1936-1937 session passed a law exempting homesteads up to the value of $2,000 from all State Ad Valorem taxes.

Not a white County Convict was certified to the State Convict Department last year from Bullock, Lowndes, Macon and Marengo Counties, and not a negro convict from Cullman, Dekalb, and Marion. The total number of County Convicts received by the convict department last year was 2952. Of this number 1633 were negroes and 1319 were white.

It cost the State $252,487.74 to feed the prisoners confined in the County jails during the past fiscal year.

Messrs D. G. Ewing, White E. Gibson and Bill McCullough, attorneys from Birmingham, were seen circulating "Under the Dome" while transacting legal business in the Circuit Court Tuesday.

Sheriff Fore announces no appointment will be made to fill the Chief Deputy-ship, recently vacated by Bun White, before October 1st.

Chairman J. M. Lyon, is looking hale and hearty again after a few days illness at his home in Columbiana.

HOME DEMONSTRATION CLUBS TO HAVE A CIRCULATING LIBRARY IN COUNTY

Beginning August 1st, the members of the Shelby County Demonstration Clubs will have access to a circulating library established and controlled by the County Council of Home Demonstration Clubs. A special library committee composed of Mrs. J. C. Rogers, Ebenezer Club, Mrs. Fred Hillman, Camp Branch Club, and Mrs. Walter Chancellor, Klein Club, selected ten books which were paid for by the County Council. These books together with several others donated by interested supporters comprise the library at present.

The purpose of the library is to provide a source of good reading material for our rural people who do not have an opportunity to use the libraries in our larger towns and cities.

The clubs will appreciate any good books you might have to offer and any magazines that you have finished with. You may leave these at the Home Demonstration office in Columbiana, with any member of the library committee or with any of the club presidents. The Home Demonstration Agent will be glad to come by your home for the books and magazines if you do not have a way to get them to the proper person. Call 2651.

Anne G. Watson,
Assistant Home Demonstration Agent. Shelby County.

4-H CLUB CAMP

The Annual 4-H Club Camp has been scheduled for August 10th, 11th and 12th at Blue Creek Camp near Clanton since there is no camp in the county that will accomodate the group. The Home Agent and the County Agent have arranged to take both boys and girls at the same time. The program will include boating, swimming, nature study, hikes, games, both in-door and out-door and stunt night. There are about 20 boats and there will be life guards on duty all the time. The boys and girls will be quartered in separate cottages with a counselor for each cottage. Meals will be served by the camp cooks and supervised by the manager, Mrs. Billingsby. Transportation in school busses will be arranged according to the number of boys and girls going.

NOTICE

The American Legion Auxiliary will meet at the home of Mrs. Frank Head Friday, July 30th at 3:30 P. M. The Legion Commander will meet with us. Please Come.

At the close of the last fiscal year September 30, there were 134 County Convicts in the State prison camps who could neither read nor write. Of the total number of county convicts on hand at that time 363 were employed at the time of their arrest and 303 were unemployed.

COUNTY COUNCIL OF HOME DEMONSTRATION CLUBS INSTALL NEW OFFICERS

New officers for the coming year were installed at a special meeting o fthe County Council for Home Demonstration Clubs on Friday morning, July 23rd at the Home Agents Office in Columbiana. Mrs. J. C. Brumbaugh of the Harpersville Club outgoing president, conducted the installation service at which time she turned over her duties to Mrs. Frank Wyatt of the Klein Club. Other officers were installed as follows: President, Mrs. Frank Wyatt, Klein Club; Vice-President, Mrs. Louis Tillman, Dargin Club; Secretary, Mrs. Walter Chancellor, Klein Club; Treasurer, Mrs .Leon Baker, Wright Club; Scholarship Chairman, Mrs. Fred Hillman, Camp Branch Club; Citizenship Chairman, Ms. H. Rogers, Montevallo; Fair Committee Helpers; Mrs. Walter Chancellor, Vincent, Mrs. S. M. Tatum, Camp Branch Club.

During the business meeting which followed, Mrs. Louis Tillman was elected as voting delegate for the council for next year. At the recommendation of one of the council members a new office was created, that of Parliamentarian. Mrs. J. C. Brumbaugh was elected to fill this place. The Counril also elected telegates for Farmer's Week which is to be held in Auburn August 2nd to 7th. The following people will accompany the Home Agent on this thrip: Mrs. Frank Wyatt, Klein Club, Mrs. J. W. Cohron, Midway Club; Mrs. E. W. Bell, Vincent Club; Mrs. Will Finley, Shelby Club; Mrs. Fred Hillman, Camp Branch Club and Mrs. J. C. Brumbaugh, Harpersville Club.

Plans were made for the Home Demonstration Clubs Annual Camp which is to be hel don August 25th and 26th at Bonner's Camp near Chancellor's Ferry. Mrs. Walter Chancellor of the Klein Club was appointed chairman of the Housing Committee, Mrs. J. C. Rogers, chairman of the Recreation Committee and Mrs. J. C. Brumbaugh as chairman of the Foods Committee. Further announcements concerning the camp will be made as soon as the committees have made their plans.

In 1930, sixty percent of all State and County taxes collected in Alabama were derived from the general Ad Valorem taxes. Only four States Vermont, South Carolina, Virginia, and Deleware, derived a smaller percentage of total tax revenues from the general property tax. By the enactment of the homestead exemption law Alabama property taxpeyers are placed in a more favorable position than the property taxpayers of any other State.

We know a man who made up his mind to get up early during the summer and work before the day got so hot; the only trouble was that he found it was hard work to get up early in the morning.

DIRECTORS OF STATE CHAMBER COMMERCE COMPLETE ROSTER

ALEXANDER CITY—The Alabame State Chamber of Commerce completed its roster of officers and directors at a meeting held in Montgomery Thursday, July 22nd, when a representative of each of the 67 counties of the state was elected to the Board of Directors of the Statewide organization, fixed membership fees, and perfected plans for the operation of the office recently established at 211 Dexter Avenue, Montgomery.

W. A. Steadham, Birmingham Telephone executive, was elected as a member of the executive committee, with F. W. Stanley, Greenville publisher, and Tobe Hamilton, Anniston manufacturer, being added as vice-president for the state at large. James S. Brown, president of the Junior Chambers of Commerce, and Paul Fuller ,president of the Alabama Association of Commercial Organizations, were elected organization directors.

Individual memberships were established at $10.00; business firm memberships $25.00, and "sustaining memberships" $100.00 and up.

President Benjamin Russell stated today that the organization has been completed, offices established, personnel secured, and a program in support of the organization's slogan, "Supplement Farm with Factory," has been adopted and work has already begun on a four point objective recently outlined.

Congressional district vice-presidents announced at the Montgomery meeting that meettings of county directors will be held at an early date to plan a county-by-county membership drive.

DID YOU KNOW?

Did you know that Alabama is first in the world in production of cast iron pipe?

Or that our state is first in the United States in deposits of crystalline graphite?

Or that Alabama is second in production of yellow pine in the United States?

And third in production of iron ore . . .?

Fourth in production of marble . .

Fifth in production of coke . . .

Fifth in development of water power . . . .

Sixth in production of lime . . . .

Sixth in production of pig iron . . .

Seventh in production of coal . . .

Ninth in production of fire clay . .

Eleventh in production of cement.

Well, it's so, according to no less an authority than the U. S. Bureau of Census.

NOTICE

F. F. A. BOYS, CHAPEL COMMUNITY, EXPRESS APPRECIATION

The F. F. A. Boys of Chapel Community take this privilege to express their appreciation of the kindness and splendid cooperation shown them by the ladies of Chapel Community in helping make their Ice Cream Supper on Saturday night a success. The ladies have taken a keen interest in the boys of their community as was shown by their untiring work and cooperation.

Everyone present at the cream supper enjoyed themselves and carried on an evening of cheerful entertainment. A beauty contest was also sponsored; Miss Evelyn Whorton winng first choice as the prettiest girl present. She was presented with a large delicious cake which she returned as a donation to the boys. The cake was sold to the highest bidder.

Mr. Joe W. Stone, the F. F. A. boys advisor, gave an interesting talk on F. F. A. work and an outline of the educational tour to be took by the boys in August. Speaking for the boys a sa whole, I am sure in saying that the money will be spent for a worthwhile purpose and at any time we boys can help return the favor, we stand ready at hand to do so.

SENATE KILLS COURT BILL

Votes 70 to 20 to Recommit . . . Elect Barkley New Majority Leader . . Spanish War Enters Second Year

'Glory Be to God!'

DYING for weeks, the scheme to add to the number of justices of the Supreme court finally choked its last gasp and left this world. On a roll-call vote the United States senate voted to recommit the Robinson substitute for the President's original bill to the judiciary committee. The vote was 70 to 20, the most crushing defeat the President's legislation has yet suffered at the hands of a house of congress.

In an agreement made at a session of the judiciary committee earlier, it had been decided to let the opposition senators write their own bill, an innocuous measure for "judicial reform" not dealing in any way with the Supreme court. Senator Barkley, the new majority leader, attempted to save the President's face by having the bill left on the calendar, but he never had a chance. When the roll-call came, even Senators Ashurst of Arizona and Minton of Indiana, two of the Supreme court bill's chief supporters, voted to recommit.

"Glory be to God!" said Sen. Hiram Johnson (Rep., Calif.) when the results of the roll call were made known. The applause that bellowed forth from the senators and gallery alike left no doubt that the veteran from California had voiced the sentiments of the great majority.

Low Interest for Farmers

BY A vote of 71 to 19, the senate overrode the President's veto of a bill extending for a year low interest rates on loans to farmers. It was a defeat even more crushing than the recommission of the court bill, and made the bill a law without the President's signature, for the house had previously passed it by a two-thirds majority over Mr. Roosevelt's veto.

Senator Barkley made a half-hearted attempt to stave off the overwhelming vote, and the defeat was accepted by many observers as an expression of resentment over Barkley's having been elected majority leader instead of Sen. Pat Harrison of Mississippi.

Barkley, 38; Harrison, 37

SEN. WILLIAM H. DIETERICH of Illinois changed his mind at the last minute and today Alben W. Barkley, hard-fisted, blustering senator from Kentucky, is the majority leader of the United States senate, succeeding the late Joseph T. Robinson of Arkansas. The vote was 38 for Barkley to 37 for Sen. Pat Harrison of Mississippi.

VicePresident Garner

The conservative Democrats in the senate had been assured of 38 votes, enough to elect Harrison, on the eve of the secret election. But that night Dieterich, apparently under pressure from the Democratic party organization in Illinois, begged Harrison to release his pledged vote, in order that the President's choice might head the party in the senate.

The slim victory by no means patched the obvious party rift. Even the administration admitted that the President's Supreme court bill was virtually dead, even then. Vice President Garner visited Sen. Burton K. Wheeler of Montana, leader of the opposition forces, and invited the opposition, which it was believed had enough votes to recommit the substitute court bill to the judiciary committee, to draft a new bill.

President Roosevelt then told Senators Barkley and Harrison at the White House that four measures "must" be passed before the January session: The minimum wage, maximum hours and child labor bill; the new AAA and ever-normal granary bill; the Wagner housing bill, and legislation to plug loopholes in the federal tax laws. Congress was all for quick adjournment, the President was told. The possibility of adjourning congress, then recalling it in special session in the late fall, with committees continuing to function in the interim, was then discussed, but what agreement had been reached was not announced.

A Citizen Takes His Pen

CRUSHING blow to the President's court program, delivered at the time it hurt most, was a letter written by Gov. Herbert H. Lehman of New York to Sen. Robert F. Wagner of that state. The letter, made public, revealed Governor Lehman's opinion "as a citizen of the state of New York" that the bill would be "contrary" to the "interests" of the people of the state. "Its enactment," the governor wrote, "would create a greatly dangerous precedent which could be availed of by future less well-intentioned administrations for the purpose of oppression or for the curtailment of the constitutional rights of our citizens."

Bloody Anniversary

THE Spanish civil war entered its second year. For the populations of rebel cities, the occasion was one for joyous celebration, with fiestas, bull fights and concerts the order of the day. Gen. Francisco Franco, commander of the insurgent forces, publicly proclaimed it a "year of triumph." He ordered that all communications and public documents for the next twelve months be dated as of "the second year of triumph."

In the first "year of triumph," more than a million persons, including women and children, were killed. The insurgents claim to have taken 34 of the 50 provincial capitals of the country, and all of its colonies. They have captured six of the eleven cities of more than 100,000 inhabitants: Seville, Malaga, Bilbao, Saragossa, Cordoba and Granada.

The rebels lost little time in attempting to regain their losses around Madrid. Franco unleashed the full power of his main army of 160,000 in a drive to recapture Brunete and other suburbs of the loyalist stronghold; they were met by at least 250,000 defending government troops. Every weapon of war except gas was used. There was hand-to-hand fighting in the trenches and the greatest use of artillery since the World war as the fiercest battle of the Spanish conflict raged. The battle was opened by as spectacular an aerial fight as the world has seen in years; insurgents were reported to have lost 27 planes against only four for the loyalists.

If there were any definite gains made in a week's fighting, they were probably on the side of the insurgents, observers reported, although the government estimated the rebels had lost 10,000 men.

Japs Maul U. S. Women

ASSAULT upon two American women by sentries in the Japanese embassy in Peiping brought vigorous protests, both orally and in writing, from the United States embassy. The two women, Mrs. Helen R. Jones of Detroit and Miss Carol Lathrop of Washington, D. C., were walking through the embassy when sentries charged them from behind sandbag barricades. While one sentry kicked Miss Lathrop in the side, another held off Mrs. Jones with the flat of his bayonet. When the women were released they were roughly shoved, Mrs. Jones being forcefully kicked from behind.

Sino-Japanese Crisis

JUST after a verbal agreement between Chinese and Japanese military commanders had appeared to have prevented an impending renewal of the Sino-Japanese war, the Japanese government officially announced that heavy concentration of Chinese troops had been made at Peiping, constituting a direct act of aggression against Japan.

At the same time the Nanking government claimed that 17 Japanese troop trains, carrying 30,000 soldiers, were en route to North China from Corea and Manchukuo. Earlier, 12,000 Japanese troops were said to have arrived in North China to supplement the regular garrison of 7,000.

At Tientsin, Gen. Sung Cheh-Yuan, chairman of the Hopei-Chahar political council and commander of the Chinese forces in North China, had complied verbally with the Japanese ultimatum for peace, although he refused to sign anything. In a talk with Lieut.-Gen. Kiyoshi Katsuki, the Japanese commander, he apologized for the clash between Japanese troops and the Chinese Twenty-ninth army at Lukowkiao July 7, the incident which perpetrated the new crisis, and expressed the regrets of the Hopei-Chahar council. He said that he would dismiss several of his officers as a punishment.

Gen. Sung assured the Japanese he would evacuate the area west of Peiping, and would do his utmost to suppress communism and anti-Japanese activities.

Part of the agreement was that both Chinese and Japanese troops should be withdrawn from the walled city of Wanpingshien, suburb of Peiping. But Chinese troops refused to withdraw when, they alleged, it became certain the Japanese had no intention of withdrawing, either. In the midst of many conflicting and confusing reports the outcome of any truce was problematical to say the least.

Europe Short on Grain

EUROPE began to worry about the possibilities of a hungry winter as early threshing indicated a serious grain shortage.

Germany's shortage was estimated at 3,000,000 tons. The deficit will be met partly with increased consumption of potatoes and sugar beets, and partly with cheap, plentiful corn from southeastern Europe. It is expected, even so, that Germany will have to buy 1,500,000 to 2,000,000 tons from other foreign countries. Experts estimated that the German harvest for 1937 would be 10 to 20 per cent below the average for the years 1930-35.

Poland, from which Germany has been able to buy grain in the past, will not be able to sell any this year, while Hungarian, Rumanian and Jugoslavian crops will be smaller than last year, because of drouth.

It was believed that if the current drouth continued the farmers of Great Britain would likewise suffer; rainfall in the past month has been about one-fifth normal.

Of the Baltic countries only Lithuania, it is believed, will have a crop equal to her needs. Crops suffered badly in Latvia, Esthonia and Finland. Only Spain, in all Europe, with an increase of 15 per cent over last year's grain harvest, appears likely to enjoy a well-filled bread basket.

De Valera Is Re-elected

IF HIS party, Fianna Fail, can keep in power that long, Eamon de Valera will be president of the executive council of the Irish Free State for another five years. He was elected to the nation's highest office by a vote of 82 to 52 in the dail eireann (parliament). De Valera, in favor of severing all ties with Great Britain, won even the vote of the labor group, which does not endorse his party.

It was believed that De Valera would go ahead with legislation necessary to implement the new constitution approved in the plebiscite of July 1. He would in that case set up a senate and elect a president by popular vote, as the constitution provides. If De Valera is elected president, to serve seven years, political experts say he will virtually disappear from politics and his party will break up.

Static Wrecked Hindenburg

THE spectacular crash of the Zeppelin Hindenburg, killing 36 at Lakehurst, N. J., last May 6, was probably caused by an unseen spark of static electricity which jumped from the atmosphere to the frame of the dirigible. At least this is the theory of the board of inquiry which investigated the accident and reported to Secretary of Commerce Daniel C. Roper.

The experts considered every other possible cause—fire, sabotage, brush discharge of electricity from sharp points on the ship, broken propeller blade, radio transmitter spark lightning and structural failure—and decided that their theory most nearly fitted the circumstances attending the disaster.

Inventor of Wireless Dies

GUGLIELMO MARCONI, who altered the lives of all of us when he invented the wireless, died suddenly of a heart attack at his home in Rome. He was sixty-three years old, had been in good health and was planning the construction of a new radio station in the Vatican at the time of his death. Premier Mussolini paid homage to the great inventor, kissing the dead man's forehead in reverence.

SEEN and HEARD around the NATIONAL CAPITAL

By Carter Field

Washington. — There is more then a possibility that the wages and hours bill will go over until the next session of congress. The probability right along has been that it would be enacted, in some form, but the difficulties are great, the lines of thought which must be reconciled are wide apart, and the number of men in both houses who would like to see the thing put over is very large.

It includes the new chairman of the house labor committee, Mary T. Norton of Jersey City, who succeeded to the chairmanship on the death of William P. Connery of Massachusetts.

If it were not for the Supreme court enlargement bill fight in the senate, the situation might be different. But all house members know that the senate is not going to have much time this session to fool with the wages and hours bill, and they know perfectly well that the senate is not going to rush through any bill which the house may agree on without extensive debate.

The thought of the house, therefore, is that if they do a tremendous job, surrender principles and opinions in compromises to get something through and perhaps put themselves on record on things which may prove very embarrassing later—the whole thing may be wasted. The senate just might decide not to take the bill up this session.

The house members know that the wages and hours regulation bill is a subject on which there will be widely varied opinions back in their districts, with more than a probability that there may be considerable numbers of their constituents to whom it just is the most important measure on which congress will vote. By the same token, some one of these groups may be so outraged by their congressman's vote on this bill that they will be inclined to vote against him at the next primary and election regardless of anything else he may have done or failed to do.

Danger Multiplied

There is always the possibility of this sort of thing on any controversial legislation. But in the wages and hours measure this danger is multiplied. It is a thing which touches the lives and pocketbooks, in one way or another, of a far larger proportion of people than the average measure. In fact, there is probably more selfish interest in it than any other legislation which congress is called upon to consider at this session.

Voters ought to be equally interested in a tax bill, for of course every one's pocketbook is affected by that, but there is quite a large percentage of voters who do not believe that their pocketbooks are affected by a tax bill.

In the case of this wages and hours bill it is not the outright opponents of the measure who threaten to postpone action on it. As a matter of fact, the number of outright opponents is so small as to be futile against the steam-roller tactics possible, especially in the house. It is just people who do not want to take any unnecessary chance, if they are sure that taking the chance at this time will do no particular good.

Moreover, there are a lot of members of the house who think that the sensible thing for them to do while the senate is wrangling over the Supreme court enlargement bill is to take a nice long recess, with a gentlemen's agreement that nothing will be done and no roll calls forced before a certain day. That would give a lot of them a chance to go home, or to the seashore, or perhaps even to Europe.

Deep, Dark Stuff

Two jobs are going on under the surface at Capitol Hill while the senate engages in a debate on the merits and demerits—or at least that is what the debate is supposed to be about—of the Supreme court enlargement bill.

One of these is an attempt to compromise that measure itself. One of the compromises being talked about might easily be acceptable to most of the opponents of the measure—but the administration is not ready to accept that yet. It may never accept it, for the odds would seem to favor the administration's being able to break the filibuster if it continues to press for such a consummation, with no regard whatever for consequences.

The other job is determining, in private conferences between senators and representatives, the fate of several other important measures, which, under the stringent rules being enforced in the effort to break the cloture, cannot be discussed seriously on the floor. That is, under the strict letter of the rules it cannot. Actually no attempt has ever been made, during past filibusters, to enforce the rule that a speaker must confine himself to the subject.

The answer is simple. It would not make any difference. Filibusters are not broken because those taking part in them run out of things to say. They are broken for two reasons. Sometimes the physical strain on the participants becomes too great. They give out physically—not for lack of ideas. The other is when the country becomes aroused against the endless talking, shows plainly that its sympathies are the other way, and thereby deprives the filibusters of an incentive to go on.

No Good Anyway

There is no hint of either of these things yet. So it would really do no good for the administration group to clap down on some time-killing speaker with a demand that he stop discussing, for example, the wages and hours bill.

For that is one of the things that is being talked about under the surface more than anything else. So far no accord has been reached. Some of the participants in the conferences are still worrying about regional differentials—whether employees can be worked longer hours and paid smaller wages in the South than in the North. Others are worried about exemptions, the latest decision of the administration apparently being that there are to be none.

Then there is always the government reorganization bill. There is general agreement among congressmen that President Roosevelt can have his additional secretaries. There is a willingness to give him several other things he wants. But the measure is not going to pass in toto as the President wants it—far from it.

Just for instance, the army engineers are not going to have their powers even jeopardized, much less threatened. And that is only one. There are a lot more. There may be one more cabinet position, but not the two more the President wishes.

But the details of both the government reorganization and the wages and hours bills are still under discussion — in the cloakrooms, in offices, and even at parties. That is usually the rule during some big filibuster which has reached the stage, as this has, where no other business will be permitted by the side trying to break the talkfest.

And it still looks like an October adjournment!

Make Up! Not Yet

John L. Lewis and William Green are not going to kiss and make up before Christmas, no matter what authentic sounding gossip you may hear to that effect. Neither is Franklin D. Roosevelt going to repudiate Lewis, no matter how much he quotes that "Plague on both your houses." Neither is on the cards.

Eventually, the probability is that the American Federation of Labor and the Committee for Industrial Organization will unite. But not for some time to come. Not this good year of 1937. It is much too soon. There is too much face-saving to be done first, and the time for the face-saving gestures is not yet.

For either to make any gesture now would be construed by too many of their followers as a sign of weakness. For Lewis to make the move would deter certain important unions which are thinking of jumping the old organization to one that promises more action. It would cool the enthusiasm of so many budding unions about to affiliate with C. I. O.

For Green to make the move would be construed by too many as not merely a sign of weakness, but virtually as a surrender.

But even the die-hards on both sides know that inevitably something must bring about peace. For the time being there is considerable advantage in the present setup—from the standpoint of organized labor.

Reminiscence

Actually the present situation is reminiscent of the bitterness which raged, back in the Wilson administration, between the two groups of women who were fighting for woman suffrage. In this comparison the C. I. O. is like the Woman's party, headed by vibrant Alice Paul, the American Federation being like the dignified but rather ineffective association headed by Carrie Chapman Catt. Mrs. Catt's group had just as many arguments and a great deal more money, but it was terribly sedate. Mrs. Catt worried a great deal about what was the proper thing to do. Alice Paul kept the "cause" on the front pages. She had women picketing the White House, dropping banners over house of representatives galleries when the President was addressing congress, always was exciting.

The Woman's party did things and put things over. It obtained the submission of the woman suffrage amendment and its ratification by three-fourths of the states at a time when any candid observer will admit that the great majority of the country did not care two whoops whether women had the right to vote or not. It literally heckled the thing through.

Most people have forgotten how bitter the feud was between the two groups of women. Most people twenty years hence will have forgotten the present bitterness between the Federation and the C. I. O. No mere difference between the craft plan and the one union for each industry idea is going to keep the two big organizations apart. But personalities will, for many months to come. Though if the feud lasts until the presidential election in 1940 it will surprise most of the insiders.

WHO'S NEWS THIS WEEK...

By Lemuel F. Parton

Foe of Demoniac Forces.

NEW YORK. — Anatole France concluded his "Revolt of the Angels" with the observation that man's only hope lay in "The Conquest of the Demons of Anger and Fear in His Own Soul." The quotation may be a bit awry, since the book is not at hand, but it is pertinent to today's news of the expedition to the arctic in the interest of demon slaying—the first of its kind, barring Siegfried's hunting trip in the land of the ice queen.

The above allusion suggests no over-simplification of the purposes of Dr. George W. Crile, famous surgeon and bio-chemist, who is heading a voyage to the Arctic. Specifically, he fights the demoniac forces of anger and fear which now range the world and which any newspaper reader can recognize on sight. At seventy-three, he hopes to find in the Far North knowledge which will strengthen his arm and temper his sword, supplementing knowledge which he previously gleaned in the African jungles.

Seals and walruses, neither of them particularly angry or scared, will be studied by Dr. Crile—not as examples of dignity and complacency, but as the owners and proprietors of certain unique energy-releasing mechanisms that seem to work better than the human carburetor, the suprarenal gland system. Dr. Crile has dissected and studied about 800 jungle animals in the interest of civilized human behavior, and now, to piece out his mosaic of life energy, he goes North on an expedition—not to the ant but the sea lion.

These researches have enabled him in certain instances to cure chronic anger and fear. He finds that in this day of newspapers, radio and press agents there are high-voltage stimuli loose everywhere which make high blood-pressure the curse of the age. The name "John L. Lewis" will make one citizen apoplectic, while "Tom Girdler" will induce a similar embolism in another.

For aggravated cases of this kind, Dr. Crile has a simple "Denervation" operation, in which he throttles down the too rampant adrenal glands. Judging from the past, he could operate on the opposed principals in a labor dispute and have them falling over each other to sign an agreement.

A resident of Cleveland, he is the founder and head of the Cleveland Clinic, which is carrying through profound studies of the adrenal and thyroid glands, and of bodily metabolisms generally. His researches in the world war vastly widened and deepened the knowledge of the mechanized functioning of the endocrine glands.

These discoveries led him to describe the human body as an automobile, in which the brain is the battery, the suprarenal gland system the carburetor, the liver the gasoline tank, the muscles the motor, and the thyroid gland the gearbox.

In Africa, Dr. Crile shot and dissected hundreds of animals, from the smallest up to lions and rhinocerosi. He finds that lions have a sympathetic gland reinforcing system which enables the adrenals to deal action hormones with a tremendous kick. That's what makes the lion such a good self-starter and the sure winner of any jungle track meet. Lions, tigers and ferocious lone workers in general have this hair-trigger starter.

Herding animals have a less sensitive starting and stimulating mechanism. Less complex, cold-blooded creatures, like crocodiles, with special defensive armament, have an even slower takeoff, but Dr. Crile's main point is that they all have an ignition system which perfectly serves their survival needs.

As Dr. Crile sees it, the maladjustment or malfunctioning of our energy apparatus releases ungoverned emotions, precipitated in body poisons, and helps put the world even more out of plumb than it naturally seems to be. An artificially changed environment—with all the new problems of urban living and an unstable and complex economy—makes people keep on getting mad about things which they can't possibly affect or control, unlike the animals, and renders latterday man a signal failure in the main business of life, which is "continuous adaptation."

At home in the wider generalizations of his subject, Dr. Crile sees here the collective elements of social instability — Fuehrers, mobs, demagogs, kluxers, messiahs, warmongers, and inflammatory and provocative inciters of world dementia in general. He thinks a general all-around job of scientific human reconditioning is possibly the only answer.

He is a native of Chilo, Ohio, taking several academic degrees before completing his medical education in a number of foreign universities.

SYNOPSIS

Brooke Reyburn visits the office of Jed Stewart, a lawyer, to discuss the terms of an estate she has inherited from Mrs. Mary Armanda Dane. Unwittingly she overhears Jed talking to Mark Trent, nephew of Mrs. Dane who has been disinherited Mrs. Dane had lived at Lookout House, a huge structure by the sea, built by her father and divided into two, for her and Mark's father. Brooke had been a fashion expert, and Mrs. Dane, a "shut-in," hearing her on the radio, had invited her to call and developed a deep affection for her. Mark discloses that Mrs. Dane had threatened to disinherit him if he married Lola, from whom he is now divorced. He says he does not trust Henri and Clotilde Jacques, Mrs. Dane's servants. He says he is not interested in an offer of Brooke's to share the estate with him. Leaving her department store job, Brooke refuses an offer to "go stepping" with Jerry Field, a carefree young man who wants to marry her. At a family conference she learns she must live at Lookout House alone, since Lucette, her younger sister who is taking her job, her brother, Sam, a young playwright, and her mother plan to stay in the city. Jed and Mark are astounded when they hear from Mrs. Gregory, a family friend, that she had witnessed a hitherto unknown will with Henri and Clotilde two weeks before Mrs. Dane died. Brooke had arrived just as she was leaving. Jed suggests that Mark open his part of Lookout House, get friendly with Brooke and try to find out about the will. Jed agrees to stay with him. Mark accepts Brooke's invitation for a family Thanksgiving dinner at Lookout. Mrs. Reyburn announces on Thanksgiving eve that she has been invited to England. Sam and Lucette decide to move in with Brooke and Sam plans to produce a new play locally. After the Thanksgiving dinner Brooke tells Mark that little of Mrs. Dane's silver collection is left. Jerry Field and his sister Daphne drop in and announce they will be neighbors for the winter. Sam adds them to the cast of his play. Later Inspector Harrison of the local police visits Mark and is informed about the missing will and silver. As Harrison leaves, Lola arrives. She announces that she and her new husband, Bert Hunt, have started a neighborhood filling station. Mark almost makes a break about the missing will and Brooke is suspicious.

"You're a darling, Brooke. I appreciate now the color, and the sense of 'God's in His Heaven, all's right with the world' you brought into Mary Amanda Dane's life. I had intended to start a boycott against you and your family here because you had cut Mark out of his inheritance, but he asked me to be nice to you. I adore that boy. I would do anything for him. He lived in a nightmare of humiliation with a wife who came home night after night barely able to keep her feet. Why, why can't women realize that it's their privilege to keep up the standards of decency? He stood by her, though, and held his head high, and wouldn't allow his soul to be warped by the experience."

Brooke left her town car in the garage when she reached Lookout House. She was thoughtfully drawing off her gloves as she approached the garden door of her house. A stream of light laid a golden path on leafless shrubs and graveled walk. A woman was at the door! A woman in a fox cape. Mrs. Hunt! Talking with Henri.

Brooke stepped into the purple shadow of a spruce. She could see and she could hear:

"If you keep a level head we can't lose, Henri."

The man's murmur was indistinct. He closed the door softly as the woman went down the steps. She flung a furtive look at the windows of the house before she vanished in the dusk.

"That seems to be that," Brooke said to herself, before she started around Mark Trent's house that she might enter her own front door unobserved by a possible watcher in the garden.

As she entered the living-room at Lookout House, she rang for Henri. The green parrot squawked, "Stop!", ruffled his feathers, and hopped up and down in his cage. She was standing near the fire, letter opener in hand, looking over the mail she had found on the desk when the butler entered.

"Did anyone call, Henri?"

"On the phone, Miss?"

"At the house."

Henri opened the door of the parrot's cage. Mr. Micawber hopped to his shoulder and began tweaking his ear.

"Never mind about the parrot, Henri. Answer my question."

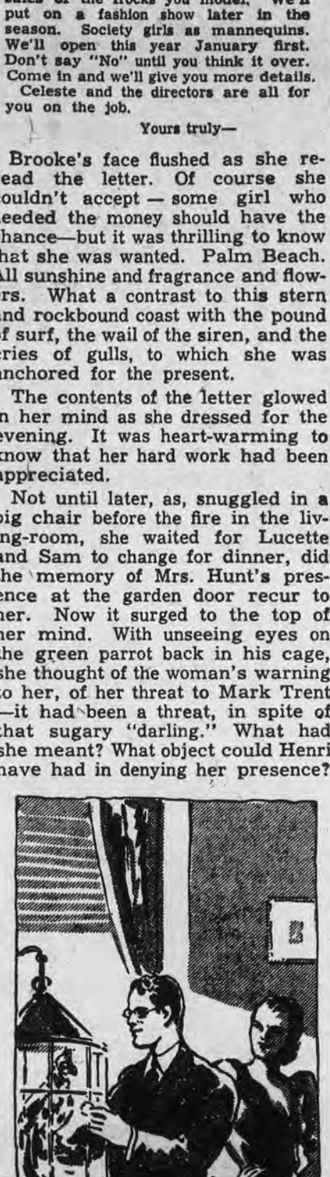
"But I take him out like this for a walk around three times a day, Miss; the old madame wanted him to have a change of scene. Not a person called at this house. Were you expecting someone?"

"Yes, the lady who is to have charge of selling tickets for the play phoned that she might come this afternoon. Probably she couldn't make it. That's all."

Her eyes followed him as he left the room with the green bird muttering on his shoulder. Always she had distrusted the man of whom Mary Amanda Dane had been so fond. Why should he have lied to her about Mrs. Hunt's presence at the garden door of Lookout House? Because the woman was there to see him of course. With her thoughts still on Henri and his evasions, she slit one of the envelopes in her hand and drew out the letter it contained. All thought of the butler fled as she saw that the letterhead was that of the firm for which she had been fashion adviser.

Dear Miss Reyburn,—she read—

Any chance of your wanting a job? We are opening a dress shop at Palm Beach under the name of Carston's Inc. Very swank, very expensive. Celeste will be business manager. We'd like you to be top mannequin—with a salary, of course, and percentage on the sales of the frocks you model. We'll put on a fashion show later in the season. Society girls as mannequins. We'll open this year January first. Don't say "No" until you think it over. Come in and we'll give you more details.



Celeste and the directors are all for you on the job.

Yours truly—

Brooke's face flushed as she reread the letter. Of course she couldn't accept — some girl who needed the money should have the chance—but it was thrilling to know that she was wanted. Palm Beach. All sunshine and fragrance and flowers. What a contrast to this stern and rockbound coast with the pound of surf, the wail of the siren, and the cries of gulls, to which she was anchored for the present.

The contents of the letter glowed in her mind as she dressed for the evening. It was heart-warming to know that her hard work had been appreciated.

Not until later, as, snuggled in a big chair before the fire in the living-room, she waited for Lucette and Sam to change for dinner, did the memory of Mrs. Hunt's presence at the garden door recur to her. Now it surged to the top of her mind. With unseeing eyes on the green parrot back in his cage, she thought of the woman's warning to her, of her threat to Mark Trent—it had been a threat, in spite of that sugary "darling." What had she meant? What object could Henri have had in denying her presence?

"How Perfectly Grand!"

Why should the remembrance of the low voice declaring: "If you keep a level head we can't lose, Henri," send icy prickles crawling up her spine and coasting down?

Brooke thoughtfully smoothed the lace of her dinner frock, lace the very shade of the high lights in her hair. If this were a movie, there might be a trick cupboard in the green paneling in which the silver had been hidden, but there was nothing so exciting here. She had been at Lookout House when the walls and trim were painted.

"Calling car 5! Car 5! Car 5!"

The frenzied call brought Brooke to her feet, set her heart thumping madly. Then she laughed as the parrot with a squawk preened his green and yellow feathers. She made a disdainful face at the chuckling bird

"Mr. Micawber, sometime when you yell like that I'll forget that I'm a perfect lady and wring your neck. Sam, did you teach the parrot that police radio call?" she demanded, as her brother entered the room.

His eyes twinkled behind the lenses of his horn-rimmed spectacles. He pulled a piece of cracker from the pocket of his blue coat.

"Sure, I taught him. I've been at work on that bird ever since I came. Here, stout fella!"

The parrot twisted his head completely round, blinked lidless eyes, before he nipped at the reward which Sam had thrust through the bars of his square cage.

"That bird's a peach, Brooke. You can teach him anything if you try hard enough. Boy, I wish I had him in the play. He'd show some of the stiffs how to speak their lines."

"Who's the biggest problem?"

"Daphne Field. She's pretty enough but dumb. She'll stop the show, all right, but not because she's an actress. Hers is a feed-part for the leading woman. She's one of those darnfool girls who go off their heads in a crisis—in real life, I mean, not in the play. Glad she's not in the lead. Laura Crane, who is, is good; she's got plenty on the ball."

"How is Jerry in his part?"

"Okay, but I don't like the man who is playing the male lead. He's a spotlight hog. I wish Mark Trent would take it. He's just the type and a natural. I think he's great—and—he's darn friendly, but—" Sam leaned against the mantel and faced his sister. "Have you ever thought that he is not particularly keen about the Reyburn family?"

Brooke said thoughtfully:

"Would he be likely to be keen, as you express it, about a family which was spending money that he felt should be his? I think he has behaved decently."

"Who said he hadn't? I have a kind of feeling, that's all. He told Jed Stewart that we might take anything we liked from his house for stage setting. But all things considered, I'll be glad when the show is over; sometimes I think I've written a smash hit and sometimes that the play is just a lot of tripe. I daren't hope for one or two first-string critics to give me the low-down on it. Anyway, a manager who liked those two sketches I wrote for the Workshop is coming for the opening to give it the once-over, and he'll bring a New York producer."

"Really, Sam! How perfectly grand! We—"

"Hi! Soft pedal! Here comes Lucette. I don't want her to know that they'll be in front, it might rattle her."

There was the sound of running feet on the stairs, a gay voice singing. Lucette dashed into the room. Her black hair was silky; her thin frock was only a shade redder than her lips and cheeks and fingernails. She dropped to the rug in front of the fire, hugged her knees, and looked up at her sister.

"How soon do we eat, Brooke? I'm starving."

"Henri waits till he hears you tumble downstairs before he announces dinner. What kind of a day did you have?"

"Hectic. Every woman in the city apparently has gone sports-clothes minded. They've stopped boasting of the extreme age of their frocks and hats and have begun to spend real money. They are buying for themselves and for Christmas gifts in spite of the fact that prices are being stepped up. I should worry. I get a sliver of commission on my sales. The girl who has taken your place had just one of those days, today. Madame Celeste was on the warpath. I brought Jerry Field down in the car. He was a gob of gloom when he came in and you were not here. By the way, who do you think runs that new filling-station in the white cottage?

"Mark Trent's ex-wife and her husband!"

CHAPTER VI

Brooke stood before the fire in the softly lighted living-room at Lookout House. Three days had passed since she had received the letter offering her the Palm Beach position, since she had heard that the Hunts were the proprietors of the filling-station she had been patronizing. She had refused promptly the business offer and had dropped it from her mind, but she couldn't forget the other. Sometimes she wondered if she would ever think of anything else. Questions were everlastingly popping up. Had Lola Hunt gone to Mark Trent's house to tell him about it, or had he known already? Why later had the woman been talking so confidentially to Henri at the garden door of Lookout House? What had she meant by: "If you keep a level head we can't lose, Henri"? What was behind that snapped off "wit" of Mark Trent's?

Why was she spending a moment's thought on Mark Trent's problems? Hadn't she plenty of her own? She frowned at the empty gilt cage. Where was Mr. Micawber? When she had come in this afternoon, Henri had been wringing his hands. He had gone completely French as he chattered, but she had gathered from the jargon that when he had stepped out on the lawn with the parrot on his shoulder, the door had banged behind him and the frightened bird had flown away. It wasn't that she cared for the parrot, she detested him, but Mrs. Dane had loved him and she felt as if she had broken faith with her benefactress.

"Wake up, sister!" Lucette prodded from the doorway. "Sam and I have been staring at you for three minutes, trying thought transference. Nothing doing. We couldn't penetrate your skull. You've been scowling as if addressing a hall full of women who refused to rally to your one-time battle-cry:

"Old age isn't necessary, it is nothing but a germ! Watch out that you don't pick it up!"

Brooke laughed. "I had no idea that the precepts of her elders made such an impression on our little sister, had you, Sam?"

"No. I—Where is Mr. Micawber?"

Brooke told him.

"No kidding, what do you know about that! I'll bet Henri let him go."

"He wouldn't do that, Sam, though he should have known better than to go to the open door with him. Mrs. Dane wouldn't have the bird's wings clipped; of course he would fly when he got the chance. Henri takes all the care of him, thank heaven. I think he adores him, if he can adore anything. Curious, Mr. Micawber likes Henri and you; he doesn't try to conceal the fact that he dislikes Lucette and me. I'm really troubled about the parrot. He may be flying outside, and Mrs. Dane was so careful never to expose him to draughts. Who is calling, I wonder?" Brooke asked, as the butler passed in the hall on his way to the front door.

What Irvin S. Cobb Thinks about

Semi-Nude Fashions.

SANTA MONICA, CALIF.—Clothes may not make the man, but leaving them off certainly makes him foolish. And that goes double for the women.

Whence arises the present-day delusion that going about dressed at half-mast enchances the attractiveness of the average adult? Our forbears of the Victorian era wore too much for health or happiness or cleanliness. But isn't it worse to offend the eye all through the lingering summer by not wearing enough to cover up the blotches, the blemishes, the bulges and the bloats that come with maturity? Sun baths should be taken on a doctor's prescription, not at the corner of First and Main.

Irvin S. Cobb

Women old enough to know better are the worst offenders, seems like. If only they'd stop to consider that the snail, which is naked, would lose in any beauty contest against the butterfly, which wears all the regalia the traffic will stand!

But even though it's for their own good, you can't tell 'em. If somebody started the fad of going at the game while practically nude, inside of two weeks mumblepeg would be the national pastime—until somebody else thought up a game to be played by folks without a stitch on. Or anyhow, just a stitch here and there.

Doctoring Movie Scripts.

USUALLY they lay these yarns on Mr. Sam Goldwyn, who thrives upon them and goes right on turning out successes, his motto being, "What's grammar as between friends so long as the box office shows results?" But, for a change, this one is ascribed to another producer, who proudly describes himself as a self-made man, which, according to his critics, is relieving the Creator of a considerable responsibility and putting the blame where the blame belongs. They also say no self-made man should stop with the job only partly finished. But then Hollywood is full of parties trying to push Humpty Dumpty off the wall.

As the tale runs, this gentleman entered the conference chamber at his studio and as, with a kingly gesture, he laid down a fat sheaf of typewritten pages, said to the assembled intellects of his staff:

"Jumpmen, in all my experience in the picture business this is what you might call unique. Here is absolutely, posstiffly the only poifect script I have ever read in my ontire life. I tell you that before we start altering it."

Strikes Versus Wars.

DID you ever notice how like a war is a strike?

The operator and his operatives are the shock troops that suffer the heaviest casualties. The owner risks his profits and perhaps his market and sometimes his plant. The worker gives up his wages, frequently his job, occasionally his life.

Stockholders see dividends vanishing and investments shrinking. Citizens see their communities disrupted. Women and children go on short rations, many a time go actually hungry. For, as in a war, the innocent non-combatants bear most grievous burdens.

Those who really garner in the spoils—professional agitators; financial buzzards eager to seize on bankrupted industries; lawyers with their writs and their injunctions; imported thugs masquerading, for one side or the other as honest mechanics—these might be likened to stay-at-home diplomats and profiteers and hired mercenaries who induce friendly nations to turn enemies so they may gain their own selfish ends.

After it's over, we realize that almost any strike might have been averted had common sense and common justice ruled, rather than greed and entrenched stubbornness and fomented hate. And the same is true of almost any war. For every real benefit to humanity came out of peace and arbitration.

And here's the final parallel: Ultimately, the supposed victor finds himself the actual loser. Tell me which army won any great strike—or any great war—and I'll tell you who won the San Francisco fire and the Galveston flood.

Never swerve in your conduct from your honest convictions.—Horace Bushnell.

Sew-Your-Own Style News

HERE is something practical, something sweet, and something ornamental for your mid-summer wardrobe.

Simple As Toast and Coffee.

At breakfast time you need the crisp shipshape style of the little model at the left. He'll proffer that eight o'clock kiss with alacrity and fervor when you greet your hubby in this pleasant surprise. Make it of a gay tub-well cotton for greatest usability.

Lines That Live.

For luncheon in town, for cutting up touches on the Club veranda you can't find a more fetching frock than the one in the center. It combines sweet swing with nonchalance. Never has a designer given more flattering shoulder and waist lines than these. "And what about the skirt?" you ask. Obviously it has the most finished flare in town. Chiffon, acetate, or sports silk will do justice to both the flare and you, Milady.

And If Autumn Comes.

It's a help to have a dress like the one at the right around for it gives that feeling of preparedness. Prepared in case a cool Fallish day or evening is slipped in without warning. Then, too, it won't be long before cool days will be the rule rather than the exception. So it would seem a logical as well as a fashionable step to set about making this elegant model right away. Be first in your crowd to show what's new under the fashion sun for Fall.

The Patterns.

Pattern 1354 is designed for sizes 34 to 46. Size 36 requires 4⅝ yards of 35 inch material.

Pattern 1307 is designed for sizes 12 to 20 (30 to 40 bust). Size 14 requires 3¾ yards of 39 inch material plus 7½ yards of ribbon for trimming as pictured.

Pattern 1324 is designed for sizes 14 to 20 (32 to 42 bust). Size 16 requires 3¾ yards of 39 inch material plus ½ yard contrasting, and 1¾ yards of ribbon for the belt and bow at the neck.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., Room 1020, 211 W. Wacker Dr., Chicago, Ill. Price of patterns, 15 cents (in coins) each.

MANY LETTERS
Addressed to You Personally

THINK of the advertisements in this paper as so many letters addressed to you personally. That's what they're intended to be, and, actually, that's what they are. This newspaper is, in effect, a mail-bag which brings you news of events and news of the best merchandise at the fairest prices.

You don't throw away letters unread. You don't read three or four letters carefully and skim through the rest. Treat the "merchandise letters" in this newspaper the same way. Read them all. Read them carefully. One single item will often repay you for the time it has taken to read them all.

Many good housekeepers have formed the habit of reading their newspaper with a pencil and paper, ready to jot down the articles they wish to look at when they start out on their shopping tour. Try this method. It saves time, and saves money, and provides you with the pick of the day's merchandise.

NOT NECESSARY TO HAVE MALARIA STATES BAKER

MONTGOMERY—"The time has come for the people of Alabama and other states to get away from the old idea that malaria is inevitable, like changes in the weather," said Dr. J. N. Baker, State Health Officer, today in urging people of the State to take special precautions against this disease during the summer months, when it is especially prevalent in this part of the country. "As soon as this idea is discarded, once and for all, and people everywhere realize that malaria is a serious, but, fortunately, also a preventable, disease, a real forward step will have been taken toward the elimination of one of the most troublesome aspects of the public health problem in this State.

Dr. Baker ponted out that new cases of malaria reported to the Bureau of Preventable Disease Control of the State Department of Health last month (June) totaled 441, this being an increase of more than 68 per cent over the total of 262 cases reported in May, and predicted, on the basis of the trend in previous years, that the number of reported cases would increase steadily until next October.

"Last year every month from April through October showed an increase in the number of reported cases over the previous month, with the single exception of September," he said. "Last October's total of 2,948 new cases was more than seven times the total for June of last year. In November, however, the number of reported cases dropped to 722, or to only about 25 per cent of the October total."

The State Health Officer pointed out that malaria could be effectively prevented by avoiding being bitten by the malaria-carrying mosquito, known as Anopheles, and urged that breeding places be destroyed and that houses be properly screened.

The get-rich-quick fever is beginning to sweep over the country; it is more dangerous than a plague.

The man who says "yes" is just as as important to progress as the man who says "no".

You can have your own way in developing your own inner spirit; elsewhere other human beings introduce.

The time to loaf if ever is when you have nothing to do.

NELL AND NELLE

Wanted! An adjective that will describe our bitter disappointment over our absence Saturday from the Democrat office when Nell and Nelle journalistic partnership, called by to see us. These two brilliant and original girls have a distinct flair for writing up the happenings of their home town—Siluria, each week which has been one of our most popular presentations. We have long wanted to know them personally—but, so far—only by the postal route have we made their acquaintance. However, better luck next time, Girls. Those who work here with us, state WE really missed something—but we can't turn the clock back or be in two places at the same time—however we DO wish we had arrived from the Magic City a bit earlier so we could have been included in the merry circle. Come again Girls—and we shall try and stay "put" next time.

Among the 80 leading members of the Alabama Association of Future Farmers of America who were awarded the degree of State Farmer at the State Convention held at Auburn recently, three were from Shelby Countl. They are Howard McEwen, Alvie Wolf and J. D. Falkner, Columbiana.

REV. J. W. JONES CONDUCTING REVIVAL AT UNDERWOOD

The Rev. J. W. Jones, Pastor of the Baptist Church in Columbiana, is conducting a series of meetings in Underwood, Ala., but will arrive in time to hold his regular services in his own pulpit on next Sunday. The Rev. T. K. Roberts, universally beloved Pastor of Columbiana, occupied the Baptist pulpit for Rev. Jones on last Sunday night.

The many friends of Mrs. James R. White will regret to learn of her illness at her home in Columbiana.

Miss Ruth Luck is spending a two weeks vacation in Miami Beach, Fla.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Gordan, A. D. and Harris Milton Gordon are continuing their summer vacation along the Florida coast.

Mr. and Mrs. Mason Edwards and Mr. and Mrs. Carl Edwards returned to Columbiana Sunday, after a tour of the Golden West. Mason Edwards well liked and successful Manager of the Columbiana Cash Store, states "Alabama Here We Rest" looks better to him than Old Mexico or any other foreign clime. No place like "home" is an old adage but thru the ages rings true, especially to those who live in that friendly little burg, known as Columbiana.

Friends of Mrs. James Crawford are delighted to learn that she is speedily recuperating at her home in Columbiana, after an absence of several weeks in a Birmingham hospital.

Mrs. J. R. Bolin, pretty, vivacious and charming sister of Mrs. James Crawford, is a guest in the Crawford home this week. Mrs. Bolin and her attractive children of Birmingham have won many friends on their visits to Columbiana, who are always delighted to extend a cordial welcome to this congenial little crew from the Magic City.

Mrs. Lula Polk, who has been ill at her home in Columbiana for the past several weeks, and daughter, Fay Nell, are on vacation with relatives in Georgia.

Mr. and Mrs. Max Harbin and attractive son, Bobby of Chattanooga, Tenn. are feted guests of Miss Mamie Jo Harbin this week.

Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Mills of Gadsden, spent the week end with Miss Mamie Jo Harbin.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Guny of Columbus, Ohio, were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Davis the first of last week. Mrs. Guny is a neice of Mr. Davis, and will be happily remembered as Elizabeth Davis. She was married to Mr. Guny on uly 8th in Ohio. They were on their honeymoon—first going to New York City and then following the coast down to Alabama.

Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Davis, Mr. and Mrs. Levert Christian and Mrs. Lena Merrell spent the week end at Stabler and Martin's Camp on the Cahaba river.

Mrs. Sally Weaver and her father John Pearson have as their guests, their sister and daughter, Mrs. Henry May of Dertoit, Mich. Mrs. May was accompanied by Mr. May, Melba May and Kenneth May.

Mr. and Mrs. Alvin Bird entertained during the past week, Mr. and Mrs. I. J. McDaniel and children, Betty and Billy, Mrs. W. F. Black, and Mr. M. C. Jordan of Gary, Ind.

Misses Gertrude and Mamie Bishop spent last Tuesday in Birmingham.

Mr. and Mrs. Garvin Baker and son Bobbie, spent last week with relatives in Ashville, Ala.

Mr. and Mrs. Charlie Tinney's guests last Thursday included Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Johns of Birmingham and Mr. Clyde Johns of Montgomery.

Mrs. Tony Lyons (Pollye Isbell), returned home Sunday from a Birmingham hospital.

AWNINGS TO FIT

Old Mattresses made new. Furniture repaired and upholstered. Draperies and Curtains. Write Sanitary Mattress and Awning Co., 431 Norton Ave., Sylacauga, Alabama. Trips made to Columbiana twice monthly. Leave your old mattresses at the Democrat Office and your new mattress will delivered.

Mrs. Howard Whitaker and son Billy, of Shawmutt, Ala., are visiting Mrs. Lida Woods.

Myra and Willard Holcombe spent last week in Birmingham, the guests of their brother, Holcomb.

John Jr. Curlee returned home on Sunday after spending a week in Birmingham with his grandmother, Mrs. Minnie Acker.

Clay Moss, former resident, now living in Birmingham, was a guest in the Democrat office on Monday, and remained long enough to state his delight over receiving the Democrat each week. "Just like a letter from home," he states, and happily do we travel the trail especially when we are assured of such a cordial welcome.

Miss Nina Faye Reinhardt spent the week end in Birmingham, the guest of Miss Vercie Butler.

Ed Lovelady has returned home after spending several months in Mississippi, doing road construction work.

Mr. O. P. Head and Mr. Alvis Fitch of Wilton, were the guests of Judge and Mrs. Cage Head Sunday.

Miss Alice Roberts of Alabama College spent the week end at home with her mother, Mrs. Edna Roberts.

Mr. and Mrs. Horsley are visiting their son, Mr. Charles Horsley and Mrs. Horsley in South Carolina.

Frank Head, Homer Bearden, Dr. Lightcap, Alvin Bird, T. R. Walton and M. C. Jordan attended the ball game in Birmingham Sunday.

AN ANNOUNCEMENT

The citizens of the Beaver Creek Community are urged to come to the cemetery on the 9th day of August prepared to clean off the grounds.

LOUISE ELLIS

Poetic recognition was accorded Louise Ellis from W. L. W. on the popular and universally beloved program—MOON RIVER when her lovely lyric COMPETITOR, was beautifully presented with an appropriate musical background on July 26th. The poem-thought was woven around Jealousy and Love—and the pattern each weave in Life. Miss Ellis is, at present. Recreational Director at Camp Seatone, N. C. and holds an enviable record in her chosen profession as Physical Director. She also happily combines the artistic with the "daily dozen" routine. and has received favorable criticism from nationally known publishers regarding her poetic effusions. The presentation Monday night was a credit to the author, and her many friends in Alabama send across the miles to North Carolina, sincere congratulations and best wishes for future successful flights to Mt. Parnassus, to the versatile little artiste.

We shared the beauty of a lovely Night Blooming Cereus blossom with our neighbor Mrs. Hines on Monday night. This was the initial bloom and its loveliness will linger long after the bloom has died. It lives and sheds its beauty—just for one night—but its delicate rose and ivory coloring and its perfection for "Just a Day" warrants its existence.

THE HAYNES FAMILY

Rarely, if ever, has a family left Columbiana, and been so universally retained in the memory of friends here, thru the years as has the family of Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Haynes. Mr. Haynes, for the past 12 years has resided in Montgomery, where he has occupied the responsible position of Assistant Attorney General. We had the privilege of greeting this life long friend on Tuesday as we were racing Under the Courthouse Dome, and he looked quite like "ye olden days" as he stood in the corridor, shaking hands with friends eager to welcome him back to his former home. Lady Haynes and lovely daughter, Mrs. Jasper Holcombe, of Calera. were holding the spotlight of attraction on Main Street as old friends gathered near to extend happy salutations. Personally, we are just selfish enough to wish them back again—as permanent residents and neighbors "for keeps".

The citizens of Harpersville Community will meet Monday. August 2nd to clean off Harpersville Cemetery. All interested citizens are urged to be present and assist in this worthy cause.

J. H. Stone,
W. W. Wyatt, Committee.

Friends of Mr. J. B. Turner regret to learn of his illness in a Birmingham hospital.

Jit Taylor is confined to his home for a few days with the flu.

Tony Lyons and Earl Wood of Gadsden, were visitors in Columbiana on Sunday.

Thomas Minor, J. B. Turner Jr., and L. F. Verchot spent the week end in New Orleans.

Heart Drifts

STILL LOVELY AND UNLOST

The world is full of music and it stays
Sweet in our memories for all our days,
If we but hear:
The deep industrious tune
Of honeybees in June:
A train far off among the midnight hills:
The fire's slot flutter and the kettle's croon:
Speech of a mocking bird beneath the moon,
The notes of a bobolink spills.

A band far down the street
Coming with the cry of bugles and the fall
Of marching, marching feet:
Voices of children singing all together
A ballad for a game in good weather:

Wind in the chimney, soft as aspen leaves,
Light-stepping down the lane,
Low whispering in the eaves:
After a long, hot drouth, ripple of rain,
Ripple o frain against the window ledge;
An Autumn cricket fluting under a hedge:
Lone cowbells clear at dawn; old songs at night
Drifting across still water in the starlight . . . .

The world is full of music, far and near:
Now gay, now clear,
Now solemn, tender, deep:
All lovely and unlost, O listen and hear!
O gather to your memory and keep.

—N. B. T.

TO YOU

You were another of the multitude
Of voyagers upon Life's restless stream,
Until a chance remark of yours imbued
A lonely hour with life, and fired the dream
Of FRIENDSHIP that I deemed could never be:
And now my thoughts look backward to the time
That moment, like a flower, revealed to me
Its hidden gold, and set our hearts in rhyme.

How much of happiness lies in a glance,
Or random word, that like a sudden ember,
Cleaves through the darkness like a golden lance,
Striking old beauty that two hearts remember!
You would have been a stranger still to me
Had not one phrase unlocked infinity.

—A. M. S.

If you take another's gladness
On your life it leaves a scar—
If you share another's troubles
You are happier by far.

SUCCESS?

I once made my life a haven for dreams ,
A harbor of peace and rest;
Safe from alarms from the world outside,
Aloof from the thing called success
I whiled away hours and let my thoughts drift
As ships on a tranquil sea.
And became more than rich with the treasures untold
That my dream-ships brought home to me.

But a pirate craft sought my harbor of dreams,
A ship from the world of men;
It darkened the sands of my ocean of peace—
And I knew not to close my eyes then.
So I ruthlessly tore the song from my heart,
In its place put an adding machine;
Burned all my poems, put love aside,
And blinded my soul to a dream.

The years have slipped by like ships in the night,
Each one hastaken its toll
From the treasure-filled chests that were my heart
When peace was my untimate goal
But the world has enslaved me, no more may I seek
The harbor of peace that was mine
Adieu to the songs and the dreams that I loved—
For now—I haven't got time!

● We're an old Southern family, the L & N. And it's just natural that we have real pride in our home. Guess that's why folks feel so at ease and comfortable traveling with us.

Somehow everything seems familiar—the comfortable seats, so much like your own favorite chairs back home—the breakfasts of Old Southern ham, hot biscuit, fresh golden-center eggs, steaming coffee—the dinners, tender juicy steaks, Southern fried chicken, real cornbread, Pompano or other seafoods fresh from the Gulf Coast—all become memories of haunting goodness.

And then, when that pleasant, yawny tiredness comes—crisp, clean sheets, soft plump pillows—and deep, dreamless, restful sleep.

These and more you'll find in your "Home Sweet Home on Rails"—a home completely air-conditioned (except locals)—a home safer than your own—a home that costs only 1½c to 3c a mile to enjoy. May we have the pleasure of your company soon—the whole family? Any ticket agent will assist you.

FARM TOPICS

LICE, MITES CHECK THE BIRDS' HEALTH

Profits Reduced in Summer by Lack of Care.

By L. M. Black, Extension Poultryman, New Jersey College of Agriculture. WNU Service.

Dealing with the lice and mite menace on the poultry farm is one of the many details which so greatly affect the efficiency, and consequently the profits, of poultry keeping in summer.

When various parasites go unchecked, the birds' feed consumption and productiveness are seriously curtailed. Lice and mites are two species which are easily recognized and on which war should be declared as soon as they are detected.

To find lice, carefully inspect the skin on the abdomen of several birds. When present, lice may be noticed hurrying to take refuge beneath the feathers. Their presence may also be noted by the existence of egg masses on the shorter feathers about the head of the bird or on the fluff feathers on the abdomen.

The easiest and most practical treatment for body lice is to apply nicotine sulphate of 40 per cent strength in a thin stream to the roost tops. Treat the roosts about a half hour before dark and repeat the treatment in a week to 10 days. Two such treatments should protect the flock for the rest of the summer. The principle of the treatment is that the heat of the birds' bodies volatilizes the nicotine, which penetrates the feathers and kills the lice. Unhatched lice eggs are unaffected by the treatment but will have hatched by the time the second application is made.

Mites, unlike lice, do not live constantly on the bodies of birds. Their presence is detected by a close inspection of the crevices about the roosts and nests where they may be observed as a grayish or reddish powder-like substance that moves when closely watched. Hiding in such crevices by day these tiny parasites migrate to the birds' bodies at night and, after sucking blood, return to their hiding places. An application of an approved mite oil, old crank-case oil, or crude oil to the roosts and nests will eliminate all danger from these pests for at least six months, depending upon the lasting qualities of the oil used.

Handle Wool Carefully in Packing for Market

In the preparation of wool for the market, special care should be taken to tie and pack the fleeces properly. Manufacturers discriminate against damaged or dirty fleece because of the excessive shrinkage which takes place when such wool is cleaned. Shearing sheep on a clean floor or canvas will protect the fleece from dirt, grass or straw.

Do not let the animal kick the fleece apart. It is hard to wrap a torn fleece as neatly as an unbroken one. Before a fleece is rolled, all tags, dirt and foreign material should be removed. Then the sides and neck should be folded in and the entire fleece rolled into a compact ball, starting with the tail-end and ending with the shoulders.

Never use binder twine for wrapping up a fleece, because the fibers work into the wool, do not take dye and appear in yarn and woolen fabrics as coarse, colorless material. Buyers object to fleeces tied with such twine. Instead, use standard paper twine. Most fleeces should be wrapped two ways around, especially if the wool is short.—Wallaces' Farmer.

Household Helps

Do you know the proper thing to say when you sit on a wad of chewing gum?

If your suit is washable, here is the correct command—if you want to get rid of the chewing gum and not your garment:

"Bring me an egg white, some soap and some lukewarm water. Then stand back and watch me soften the gum with the egg white—so! And finally wash it completely away with the soapy water."

If your suit isn't washable, the fabric-saving element is carbon tetra-chloride, which will remove all traces of stain.

The authority for these points of chewing gum etiquette is a new booklet called "Handy Helps for Homemakers," which has been prepared by a group of home economics authorities. This booklet is a convenient, compact handbook of practical remedies for the most common household problems. It is divided into four sections: laundering (which includes not only stain-removal formulae, but also detailed advice on the proper way to wash various fabrics); home lighting; heating, and cooking.

The writers of the "Handy Helps for Homemakers" booklet have confined the chapter on "Cooking" to an informative discussion of meat-selection rules, suggestions for improving actual cooking technique and a summary of the merits and problems of home canning.

A copy of the "Handy Helps for Homemakers" book can be secured by sending 5 cents to cover postage and handling to Miss Boyd, 210 S. Desplaines St., Chicago, Ill.—Adv.

"LITTLE STORIES FOR BEDTIME"

by Thornton W. Burgess

MISTRESS SPRING WAKES ALL THE SLEEPERS.

Wake up, wake up, you drowsy heads!
Wake up, wake up, and leave your beds!
The gladdest time of all the year
Has come, for Mistress Spring is here!

CHEERFUL Robin was singing it up in the Old Orchard. Little Friend the Song Sparrow was singing it down along the edge of the Laughing Brook. Winsome Bluebird was whistling it from the top of the Big Hickory over by the Smiling Pool. Blacky the Crow was cawing it from a fence-post on the edge of Farmer Brown's cornfield. Danny Meadow Mouse was shouting it in a funny little squeaky voice down on the Green Meadows.

Blacky the Crow Was Cawing It From a Fence Post on the Edge of Farmer Brown's Cornfield.

Even Sammy Jay was screaming it through the Green Forest. And over in the dear Old Briar Patch, Peter Rabbit was saying it over and over to himself as he thumped and thumped for pure joy.

It was true. Sweet, beautiful Mistress Spring had arrived. Cheerful Robin and Little Friend had come with her, and so had Honker the Wild Goose. It was his voice coming down from high, high up in the blue sky that had told the glad news. He hasn't a sweet voice. Oh, my, no! The voice of Honker is anything but sweet. And yet it is good, wonderfully good to hear after the long, cold days of winter, for every one knows when they hear it that Mistress Spring has arrived. You see, long, long ago Mistress Spring went to Old Mother Nature and asked her for a trumpeter, some one whose voice was strong, to travel up from the far away South with her and tell all the world of her coming, and Honker the Goose was chosen because his wings are strong and he flies high, and because his voice is strong, and the sound of it carries far. And from that day to this when the voice of Honker the Goose is heard, every one knows that Mistress Spring has arrived.

Now, Mistress Spring wastes no time, for she has a great deal to do, and the very first thing is to waken all the sleepers whom gentle Sister South Wind has not already wakened. Peter Rabbit never could understand how she does it because there are so many sleepers—little people who wear fur, little people who wear neither fur nor feathers, but whom we call bugs, and all the little and big plants. There are so many, many of them who sleep all winter long that it has always seemed to Peter as if Mistress Spring must miss some of them. But she never does.

So now that Mistress Spring really had arrived Peter was too happy to sit still. He just had to hurry around and greet his friends as fast as they waked. Bobby Coon and Unc' Billy Possum had crawled out of their hollow trees just after Winsome Bluebird arrived. Now Peter felt sure his old friend Johnny Chuck would be crawling out, and he hurried up to the corner of the Old Orchard where Johnny's house is. Sure enough, there sat Johnny on his doorstep taking a sun-bath. He looked very thin, not at all as he had looked when Peter last saw him. He grinned at Peter and stretched to get the kinks out of his legs and the first thing he asked was if Peter knew where there was any tender young clover. But Peter didn't, because, you know, the clover had only just begun to wake up, and hadn't had time to grow. But he knew where there was some last year's clover that had kept green under the snow, and Johnny said that that would do, because he was so hungry that he could eat almost anything.

While they were talking a merry little voice shouted from the stone and he looked as pert and smart wall. There sat Striped Chipmunk, and saucy as ever. He wasn't thin like Johnny Chuck. You see he had filled his storehouse, which opens right out of his bedroom, with plenty of good things in the fall, and he had waked up in the winter often enough to eat what he needed and now had plenty left over.

"Are you glad Mistress Spring has come?" asked Peter.

Striped Chipmunk whisked round and round after his tail until they all laughed to see him. "So glad that I can't keep still!" he cried.

FIRST AID TO THE AILING HOUSE

By Roger B. Whitman

CARING FOR RUSTIC WORK

NOT long ago I received a letter explaining the purchase of a playhouse built of rustic work; of bark covered saplings. Within a week after it was put up, insects were found flying around inside, and were soon so thick that the children refused to play in it. Little piles of sawdust were found all over it inside and out. I was asked how the insects could be destroyed. There could be but one answer: that wood, so thoroughly infested with boring insects, could not be reclaimed.

Many kinds of insects thrive in wood. There are borers of many classes that develop from eggs to the adult beetle inside of wood, and that as larvae are very destructive. Other kinds of insects make borings just under the bark. Because of these insects, rustic work may not be practical, for there is no sure way to protect it against insect attack. One signal is the loosening of bark. When this is noticed, and borings are found underneath the bark, all the bark should be stripped off and the bare wood given a coat or two of spar varnish.

When there are holes in the wood, an insect killing liquid can be squirted in with a medicine dropper or otherwise; kerosene and carbon tetrachloride are effective. In one case that I know, the framework of a chair was made of heavy sticks which evidently contained borers. A one-inch hole was bored straight down into each timber from the top to a depth of four inches. Carbon tetrachloride was poured into these holes, and the openings were closed with corks. Soaking into the wood, the liquid worked nearly the length of the timbers, killing all worms and eggs that were within.

Garden furniture is usually taken into a cellar for the winter. This is not advisable, for in the warm atmosphere, any borers that may be in the wood will continue their work. There is far better protection in leaving garden furniture outdoors through the cold weather. They should be in a dry place, but exposed to low temperature.

THE LANGUAGE OF YOUR HAND

QUITE the opposite of the individual whose creative ideas and urges must be keyed to an impossibly high ethereal plane are those men and women whose creative faculties are so practical that they are often mistakenly credited with having no creative impulses at all. Yet to these intensely creative folk the world owes some of its most outstanding advances of government, industry and commerce.

Dominant Finger of Brilliance.

Length, strength, straightness, mark the third finger of this type. With fingers pressed closely together, its tip will always be found lying considerably above that of the second finger. The knuckles are large and somewhat knotty, although well formed and without any suggestion of slenderness in the spaces between them. In fact the entire finger has a decidedly stalwart square appearance.

The nail tip is inclined to be rather spatulated on the under side, with the nail square and firmly set. Under backward pressure, there is pronounced resilience coupled with a somewhat resistant feel. With the hand opened wide, the entire finger lies much closer to the second finger than to the fourth.

The possessor of such a third finger has an almost unlimited flow of brilliantly conceived worth-while ideas, which are carried through to very practical objectives by methods which take no heed of time or perseverance required.

Lesson for August 1

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 13:17-22; 14:10 15.

GOLDEN TEXT—And the Lord shall guide thee continually.—Isaiah 58:11.

PRIMARY TOPIC—A Shining Cloud.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Forward March!

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How God Leads Today.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—A Nation Following God's Leadership.

The destinies of the nations are in the hands of God. Mighty are the warriors, learned are the advisors, clever are the diplomats, and when they have exercised all their human ingenuity and have only brought themselves and their nations to "Wits' End Corner," God must lay hold and bring order out of chaos. Happy is that people where rulers recognize God and seek his guidance.

Israel through the human instrumentality of Moses was ruled by God. He had prepared for them a leader and had prepared the people to follow that leader. Now he brings them forth out of their bondage.

I. "God Led Them" (Exod. 13:17-22).

It is significant that he did not lead them by the easy way to Canaan, by the short route through Philistia but rather led them south into the wilderness.

How often it seems to us that we could improve on God's ways. Suffering, sorrow, affliction, we would shun and would go the quick easy road, where all is bright and happy. But God's way is the best way, even though it leads through the wilderness.

His purpose for Israel was that they might not be disheartened by the warlike Philistines (v. 17). Thus it was really his loving-kindness that sent them the long way. See Prov. 14:12, and Prov. 10:29.

Another and equally important purpose of God was that the undisciplined multitude might in the trials and responsibilities of their journey through the wilderness be prepared to enter the promised land.

The miraculous pillar of cloud and fire was God's constant assurance of his presence with them.

Hardly had Israel withdrawn, and the wail over the death of the firstborn in Egypt ceased when Pharaoh regretted that he had permitted his slaves to escape, and set out in pursuit. He represents the world, the flesh, and the Devil in their relentless efforts to hold back those who would follow the Lord. Making a decision for Christ, and experiencing his redemptive power does not mean that the enemy has given up. Temptations, doubts, trials, will come. When you come up out of Egypt do not be surprised if Pharaoh pursues you.

The situation could not have been more difficult. Hemmed in by the flower of Egypt's army, with the Red sea before them—a group of men not trained in warfare—with women and children to care for, and God forgotten in their disbelief and discouragement.

Moses, who was their great leader in the hour of triumph, tastes the bitterness of their hatred and unbelief in the hour of trial. A leader of men for God must know that God has called him and have faith in his almighty power, for in the time of crises he will find those whom he leads ready to condemn him. What is the solution?

II. "Stand Still" (vv. 13,14).

Sublime in his confidence in God, Moses bids the people to cease their petty complaining, to abandon their plans for saving themselves. "Stand still, and see the salvation of the Lord" (v. 13).

Perhaps these lines will be read by some Christian who is fretting and fussing, bearing all the burdens of the universe on his shoulders. Be still, my friend. God is able to care for you, and for all the burdens which you are needlessly trying to bear. Trusting God will result in real spiritual progress.

IV. "Go Forward" (v. 15).

Humanly it was impossible, but "with God all things are possible" (Mark 10:27). When every circumstance says "Stop," when the counsel of men is against attempting anything, when human leadership seems to be lacking—just at that hour God may say, "go forward."

If every true Christian who reads these words will respond to the Lord's command, "Go forward," hundreds of locked church doors will be opened, new Sunday schools will gather children to hear God's Word, men and women will be won for Christ. Let us "go forward." The God who brought Israel dryshod through the Red sea is just the same today!

Enjoyments and Troubles

I make the most of my enjoyments. As for my troubles, I pack them in as little compass as I can for myself and never let them annoy others.—Southey.

Faith

Given a man of faith, and the heavenly powers behind him, and you have untold possibilities.

A Quiz With Answers Offering Information on Various Subjects

1. Has the population of the United States increased or decreased in the last ten years and how much?
2. What is the world's longest airline?
3. How many people have lived since the beginning of recorded history?
4. For what countries did the United States coin money last year?
5. What was the beginning of the motion picture industry in Hollywood?
6. Do the cold waters of the temperate and frigid zones contain more plant and animal life than do the warm waters of the tropics?
7. How does the Maxim silencer work?
8. Why do sharks fight back down?

Answers

1. A census of population was taken in this country in 1930 and the next will be taken in 1940. Any other figures that may be given are simply estimates. The United States had a population of 122,775,046 in 1930; the estimated population on July 1, 1935, was 127,521,000, showing an increase of nearly five millions in five years.
2. The world's longest air line is that between Amsterdam, Holland, and the Dutch East Indies, 9,000 miles away. There are two departures weekly at each end of it.
3. The eugenics department of the Carnegie institution estimates that 30,000,000,000 people have lived since the beginning of recorded history, some 6,000 or 7,000 years ago.
4. For Cuba, Honduras, Mexico, Nicaragua, Venezuela, Costa Rica, Colombia and San Salvador. This coinage totaled 72,180,449 pieces.
5. In 1907 Selig opened the first California studio in Los Angeles. The first picture was the "Count of Monte Cristo" in 1,000 feet. Soon after that time other motion picture studios in New York opened California studios.
6. More plant and animal life per square mile is found in the cold waters of the temperate and frigid zones than in the ocean waters of the tropics.
7. The Maxim silencer is a tubular device attached to the muzzle of a firearm that renders the discharge practically noiseless. The device has an interior spiral which, permitting the ejection of the bullet, retards the explosion of the gases by causing them to rotate before escaping.
8. Because of the peculiar conformation of the shark's mouth, it is necessary for it to turn on its back when attacking an object at the surface of the water. A shark's mouth opens below its snout on the under side of its body and it is, therefore, unable to bite anything directly above it without turning over.

A Refreshing Drink

IN THE summertime, cool drinks are so grateful to parched young throats. Here is a cold cereal drink you can mix in a jiffy. It is very refreshing and nourishing to boot.

2 level teaspoons Instant Postum
1 cup cold milk

Quick Cooler.

Combine ingredients in beverage shaker or in glass jar with tight top. Shake thoroughly until all cereal is dissolved. Sweeten to taste and serve. Serves one.—Adv.

Household Questions

Burnt Saucepans. — If the bottom of a saucepan is burnt, sprinkle salt over it and leave for an hour or two. Then add a little water, rub well, and when washed out the marks will have gone.

Washing Spinach. — When washing spinach, place a generous pinch of salt in the water to make the sand sink to the bottom.

Removing Water Spots.—Equal amounts of turpentine and linseed oil mixed together will remove the white spots from furniture, caused by water.

The Measuring Cup. — Grease the measuring cup before measuring sirup or molasses and the ingredients will not stick to the cup.

Sauce for Meats.—For a snappy and delicious sauce to serve with meats, mix one cup apple sauce, ½ cup horseradish and one cup whipped cream.

Shade for Ferns. — House ferns need a light well-drained soil and plenty of water. They thrive better in partial shade.

Why MORE FARM TRACTORS ARE EQUIPPED WITH FIRESTONE TRACTOR TIRES THAN ALL OTHER MAKES OF TIRES COMBINED

Farmers KNOW Ground Grip Tires PROVIDE GREATER TRACTION INCREASED DRAWBAR PULL SAVE MORE TIME AND MONEY

NOW THE Amazing New Firestone GROUND GRIP TIRE THAT PROVIDES STILL GREATER TRACTION AND SAVINGS

FIRESTONE has done it again! All you have to do is to examine the amazing new Firestone Ground Grip Tractor Tire and you will quickly understand why it provides still greater traction, greater drawbar pull, and makes greater savings in time and fuel. The basic Firestone patented Ground Grip tread design has been retained, but the extra heavy bars of rubber are spaced wider and built higher. The tire cleans itself still better, providing much greater traction.

Farmers everywhere are welcoming this new tire, for tests show that tractors equipped with it consume up to 50% less fuel, as compared with tractors equipped with steel lugged wheels. With this amazing new tire you get up to 30% more available drawbar pull on dry sod — up to 40% more on stubble — and up to 50% more on wet plowed ground, than with any other tire made.

Only Firestone can build all this extra traction into a tractor tire because only Firestone has the patented extra construction features of Gum-Dipped cords which are stronger to resist the strain of heavy pulling, and two extra layers of Gum-Dipped cords under the tread which bind the tread and cord body into one inseparable unit. The tread is made of specially compounded rubber which resists the action of sun, rain, and snow. See this amazing new tire at your Firestone Implement Dealer, Tire Dealer or Auto Supply & Service Store today. You will want a set on your tractor so you can make the savings that only Firestone Ground Grip Tractor Tires provide.

CARMICHAEL GIVES RULING ON LIQUOR

The following article appeared in a Birmingham paper recently:

"Atty. Gen. Albert A. Carmichael rules Thursday liquor purchased legally in Alabama but kept for sale illegally was subject to condemnation "in either a wet or dry county."

The ruling addressed to D. E. Dunn, assistant administrator of the Alabama Alcoholic Beverage Control Board, said vehicles used in the transporting of such liquor "for illegal purposes" also should be condemned.

In another opinion, issued to Sheriff J. Sam Cleiland, of Clark County Carmichael said the sheriff of a dry county was legally justified in seizing liquors found at a filling station, cafe or night club "and arresting the proprietor of such place on a charge of selling, offering to sell, or illegally having in possession, alcoholic beverages contrary to law."

Previously the attorney general had ruled that possession of state-stamped or "legal" liquors by such an establishment in a dry county was "prima facie evidence that same are possessed for sale or distribution contrary to law."

Possession of unstamped alcoholic beverages, not purchased in accordance with the beverage control act is illegal in either a wet or dry county, Carmichael.

Ginners Are Working Toward Better Ginning

AUBURN—Officials of the Alabama Ginners' Association, with the help of the Alabama Extension Service and other leaders, are carrying on a campaign in every section of the State to improve cotton ginning in Alabama. They are emphasizing the following five minimum essentials of good ginning:

1. Good cotton, harvested free of trash and without excessive moisture.
2. Good sharp saws with roughness removed.
3. Good sharp ribs with the rough edge removed.
4. Good, well adjusted brushes or the proper air pressure if the air-blast system is used.
5. Loose seed roll.

"If farmers will harvest cotton properly and bring it to the gin in a good, dry condition, there will be no need for expensive machinery for cleaning and drying," says C. D. Patterson, president, Alabama Ginners' Association.

"The farmers must realize that if this extra machinery has to be installed, additional prices will have to be charged for the extra service," he advises. "The ginners are anxious to improve their plants to meet the needs of a better quality of cotton.

ANNOUNCEMENT

All persons interested are cordially urged to report in the Heaton Cemetery on August 18, for the purpose of clearing and beautifying the grounds.

Farmers' Week Most Successful In History

AUBURN—The Alabama farmers and homemakers' week, August 2-6, was a howling success, the greatest yet held in Alabama, said P. O. Davis director of the Alabama Extension Service, following the meeting.

The farmers applauded Senator Bankhead, Edward A. O'Neal, president of the American Farm Bureau Federation, Dr. Tait Butler, vice-president of Progressive Farmer, Ruralist, and other national speakers as they advocated a crop control program, with "teeth in it," to stabilize reasonable proices for farm products.

During their stay in Auburn the farm men and women also studied displays and demonstrations on agronomy, entomology, home economics horticulture, forestry, agricutural engineering, botany, animal industry and poultry.

The importance of the splendid work being done by daily, weekly, and farm papers was emphasized in a display on the rapid transmission of news by the press association and other news agencies.

The cholera season is here. Farmers should be on the lookout for cholera outbreaks, unless their hogs have been properly vaccinated .

Be sure that your work animals have good shade during rest periods and at noon.

An outside summer laundry shed with a wood or oil stove for heating water has many advantages.

During summer days meals served on a porch are delightful. If you plan to remodel your farm home include a screened-in porch.

Do not work a horse that has a sore shoulder or neck. It may ruin a valuable animal.

NEW HIGH VOLTAGE LINE FOR SOUTHWEST ALABAMA

THOMAS W. MARTIN, President of Alabama Power Company, today authorized the following statement:

"Construction of an additional high-voltage electric transmission line 187 miles long from Mitchell Dam to Mobile, to cost with all equipment over a million, seven hundred thousand dollars, will start as soon as a certificate of convenience and necessity is issued by the Alabama Public Service Commission. The certificate was applied for July 21.

"The new line, which will interconnect with the Company's six hydro electric plants on the Coosa and Tallapoosa Rivers, and with its Gorgas steam plants, will connect at Selma with lines now serving that area, and from there will extend to Mobile. The route will be through Chilton, Autauga, Dallas, Wilcox, Clarke, Washington, and Mobile counties. The line will be a companion to another now serving Mobile at a distance approximately 50 to 60 miles eastward and thus result in a new power 'loop', for South Alabama. In the event of a disturbance on one of the lines, the loop arrangement will permit service to be continued until the localized trouble can be cleared up. This will not only add to the dependability of the Company's service in South Alabama, but will result in a substantial increase in power supply to meet the demand of existing and new industries coming into that section.

"While the new line will operate initially at 110,000 volts, it will be so erected that later it can be changed over to 154,000 volts with a capacity of 60,000 kilowatts at this voltage, which will more than double the present available power in southwest Alabama. The accompanying map indicates the approximate route of the new line, which will be completed about July 1, 1938. The map also shows the present network of Alabama Power Company high voltage lines.

"More than a million dollars will be spent in the construction of the line, and an additional $700,000 for terminal facilities. The Company will follow its policy of using Alabama labor and purchasing from Alabama concerns all materials which can be supplied from local sources, such as poles, timber, steel, cement, etc. These items for the new line will amount to about $500,000 and the payroll will be about $400,000 additional." ●

In announcing the construction of this new line President Martin said that it was a continuation of the fixed policy of the Company to be ready to meet any call for power that the industrial development of the State demanded and that the Company now has a substantial surplus of power. He also called attention to the fact that in the entire program of the Company no industry had ever been lost to Alabama because of its inability to obtain dependable, adequate and low cost power.

"The Company hopes to continue its efforts to locate new industries in Alabama, and will, to the extent of its ability, finance the necessary construction of lines to serve them.

"On account of the threatened competition of the Government through its agent, TVA, the Company has for several years been unable to raise new capital. It has therefore financed its extensions out of available cash resources, but the larger program now ahead will before long make new financing necessary through the sale of securities. Unless this unfair competitive condition is soon changed the Company will be unable to finance the extension of its system to supply power requirements which will be demanded by new industries in many parts of the State.

"Because of its political nature, the the TVA cannot readily solicit industries from other states to locate in Alabama. Therefore, it seems that for the good of Alabama, nothing should be done which will hamper Alabama Power Company in its efforts toward the further upbuilding of the State.

"There are prospects," Mr. Martin said, "of tremendous industrial developments in Southwest Alabama, as well as many other parts of the State, and we will do everything in our power to provide them with ample power facilities; but these are problems of which the public should take note—if Alabama is to get her share of the industrial migration now in progress."

COUNTY SURVEYS BEING MADE BY STATE C. OF C.

Probate Judges in Alabama are demonstrating their deep interest in the welfare of their counties by hearty co-operation with the new State Chamber of Commerce even when it means another task, that of providing certain information promptly.

The State Chamber, which has as its first objective a prompt and comprehensive survey of each county in the state ot ascertain its natural resources and farm products felt that the judge of probate, who is "father" of his county would prove a valuable source of authentic information. Accordingly, this week a questionnaire was mailed to each of the 67 probate judges in the state. Despite the time and thought needed in compiling the required information on farm crops, special resources, existing industries, governmental and civic organizations carefully filled in, arrived by return mail.

Such co-operation is heartening to the State Chamber just entering upon a progressive program to "Supplement Farm with Factory," a vision that may be achieved only through united Alabama Consciousness, a "long pull, a strong pull, and a pull all together!"

THE COLUMBIANA BAPTIST CHURCH

J. W. Jones, Pastor

The regular services will be held at the Baptist Church Sunday, August 15, 1937. A cordial invitation is extended to everyone who will attend. The Associational letter will be read and approved at the evening service. Messengers have already been appointed to represent the church next Tuesday and Thursday at Harpersville. If there are others who would like to go we would be glad to have you.

The Daily Vacation Bible School which has just come to a close was quite a success. The enrollment reached 101 and the average attendance was 75. We wish to thank the workers an deveryone who cooprated to help make the school a success. The children voted for another school next year.

Registration for Trades School Begins Aug. 16

Registration for the new term at the Alabama School of Trades, Gadsden, Alabama, will begin Monday, August 16th. Classes will start on Tuesday, August 17th.

The new buildings will be ready for occupancy by that time. The related class rooms and the library are located in the new Administration Building. The returning students will find well equipped, well lighted, and well heated class rooms this pear instead of the cold dark basement class rooms they have had to put up with for so long. The Drafting Department is also housed in the new Administration Building. It is equipped with new drafting tables and has an excellent indirect lighting system.

The Print Shop is being moved from its present location to the spacious basement under the auditorium. The Print Shop machinery has all been gone over and put in good order and a new cylinder press has been installed.

The Sheet Metal Department has been set up in a shop by itself and several new machines have been bought. This trade will introduce the study of Air Conditioning this year at the Trade School.

The Auto Mechanic Department the Welding Department, and the Electrical Department are all finishing up changes made necessary by the revised program and are about ready for the opening day.

The trades classes are filling up rapidly but there are still openings in the Sheet Metal Department, the Printing Department, and the Drafting Department.

The school maintains contact with the industries over the State and has been unusually successful this year in placing most o fits graduates on jobs in their respective trades.

GREEN SHAPES WAGE BILL

Dictates House Amendments . . . Thousands Flee China, Expecting War . . . Housing Measure Stirs Up Senate

Edward W. Pickard
SUMMARIZES THE WORLD'S WEEK

© Western Newspaper Union.

Where Was John Lewis?

WILLIAM GREEN, president of the American Federation of Labor, emerged as the administration's favorite son in matters affecting labor as he was permitted virtually to write his own amendments to the house version of the wages and hours bill. The senate had passed the bill, 56 to 23, only after President Roosevelt had called Green to the White House and persuaded him to give lukewarm approval to the measure, with the understanding that the house would amend it.

Southern Democrats in the senate, led by Pat Harrison of Mississippi, bitterly opposed the bill, but their motion to recommit it to committee was defeated, 48 to 36. The same vigorous opposition was expected from Dixie's representatives in the house labor committee, but the "Green amendments" (so called because of the federation president's complete domination of the committee meeting) patched up the essential differences.

The bill, as passed by the senate, would create a labor standards board empowered to set minimum wages up to 40 cents an hour and maximum work weeks down to 40 hours. The house committee had intended to extend the limits to permit the board to set wages at 70 cents and hours as low as 35. Under Green's influence the house committee decided to accept the senate provisions on this part of the measure, but the scope of the board was greatly curtailed by an amendment which would permit it to deal only with employers who maintain "sweatshops" and "starvation wages" through fake collective bargaining agencies.

The "Green amendments" in brief are:

1. Board jurisdiction over wages and hours in any industry only if it finds that collective bargaining agreements do not cover a sufficient number of employees or facilities for collective bargaining are ineffective.

2. Acceptance of wage-hour standards established by collective bargaining in any occupation as prima facie evidence of appropriate standards in that occupation.

3. Board cannot alter wage-hour standards already prevailing in occupation in community considered, or establish classification in any community which affects adversely the prevailing standard in the same or other communities.

4. Industries are protected against prison-made goods.

5. "Label provision" of original act is eliminated to protect industry from what is considered a nuisance.

6. Government work is removed from the board's control and placed under the Walsh-Healey act.

Chairman Mary T. Norton (D., N. J.) of the labor committee indicated the bill would be brought up in the house under a special rule and speedily passed.

$700,000,000 for Housing

HAVING disposed of wages and hours legislation, the senate took up the Wagner-Steagall low-cost housing bill. This would authorize the flotation of a $700,000,000 bond issue by a United States housing authority. To meet operating expenses of the program's first year, $26,000,000 would be appropriated immediately. The proposed bond issue was cut from $1,000,000,000 as a compromise with the Treasury department, which objected to so high a figure.

Sen. Wagner

The bill would aid low-cost housing projects in two ways. It would make loans to the full amount of contracted projects, aiding the repayment of the loans by direct grants if the sponsors kept rents sufficiently low; or it would make direct grants not to exceed 25 per cent of the cost of a project. Under this latter method, the President would be authorized to make an additional 15 per cent grant from relief funds, to be used only for the employment of labor. Sponsors would be required to contribute at least 20 per cent of the cost.

The housing authority would also be permitted to spend $25,000,000 on demonstration projects to illustrate to communities the benefits of eliminating slums and providing adequate housing at low cost. The projects would be sold "as soon as practical" to local housing agencies.

Over the protest of administration leaders, including Senator Wagner and Majority Leader Barkley, the senate adopted an amendment by Harry F. Byrd (D., Va.) limiting the cost of the housing projects to $4,000 a family or $1,000 a room. Wagner objected, principally on the grounds that this would not be sufficient for projects in New York city, where it is believed much of the money will be spent.

A. F. of L's WILLIAM GREEN . . . leaves White House with a smile.

Flee from the Rising Sun

WAR was still officially undeclared, but all signs indicated that Japan was making ready to prosecute a long-term conflict in North China and that the Chinese were everywhere preparing to withstand the advance of the Japanese army. Steady streams of refugees pouring out of the area while they had the chance revealed the opinion of masses of people that a great war was inevitable.

Gen. Chiang Kai-shek

Tokyo was hurrying soldiers to the front.

In the Fengtai-Lukouchiao district southwest of Peiping, 30,000 veteran Japanese troops massed for an attack upon five divisions of China's central government army, numbering approximately 60,000. Including the remnants of the twenty-ninth army, driven from Peiping by the Japanese, there were said to be 100,000 Chinese. Both sides were well equipped with airplanes.

Further evidence of Japan's expectation of real war were the sweeping changes in military personnel made after a conference between Premier Konoye and Emperor Hirohito. Four new division commanders were named, as well as a new commander for the island of Formosa. It was regarded as significant that all of the new appointees were soldiers with extensive experience in China. The government was attempting to push through an appropriation of $115,000,000 for operations in North China.

In a desperate effort to stem the invaders, Gen. Chiang Kai-shek, dictator of China and commander of the Chinese army, summoned into conference at Nanking, national capital, the warlords and governors of important provinces. Plans were made to throw hundreds of thousands of soldiers at the Japanese.

The provincial rulers apparently were only too anxious. Chow En-lai, representing 100,000 communist troops, said his men were willing to become an advance guard for the major Chinese offensive. Nationwide military conscription was being conducted apace.

Japanese newspapers reported that a resolution to sever all relations with Japan was before the Chinese political council for consideration. The fear that gripped Nanking was illustrated by the government's publication of warnings against giving away military secrets, and the warnings which were given government officials to get their families out into the hinterlands where they might be safe from enemy bombers.

Civilians in China needed no warning. Thousands upon thousands were lined up at the railroad stations in Shanghai and in Nanking; many were women carrying children and what belongings they could not bear to leave behind. Thousands of Japanese civilians in China packed the docks awaiting ships which would carry them safely back to their homeland.

As columns of Japanese soldiers pressed forward to meet advancing troops from Nanking, there was no doubt that hostilities would continue to spread southward. It was expected a real battle would ensue when the two columns came within striking distance.

Russia protested vigorously to the Japanese embassy in Nanking against the "pillaging of the Russian consulate by White Russian ruffians assisted by Japanese." The Japanese denied that any of their countrymen were implicated and ridiculed the idea that the Japanese planned any future attacks against Russian consulates.

U. S. Keeps Naval Pace

INDICATIONS were that both the United States and Great Britain would embark upon unusually large peacetime naval building programs in 1938.

Britain, according to reports in London, will lay the keels for from three to five battleships, six or seven cruisers and a proportionate quota of destroyers, submarines and smaller craft, to surpass the 1937 total of 664,000 tons, a peacetime record. It was also reported that personnel would be increased ultimately by 125,000.

With the placing of additional 1937 contracts, Britain will soon have 110 vessels under construction. These will include: 5 battleships of 35,000 tons, 5 aircraft carriers, 8 cruisers of 9,000 to 10,000 tons, 5 cruisers of 8,000 tons, 7 cruisers of 5,300 tons, 16 superdestroyers of 1,650 tons, 18 submarines of from 540 to 1,520 tons, 12 sloops and 10 motor torpedo boats.

Armament of the five new battleships will include 10 or 12 new type 14-inch guns, 12 to 16 4- or 4.7-inch anti-aircraft guns and numerous light machine guns. Upper deck armor will be specially strengthened against airplane bombs and bridges and turrets will be gasproof.

Admiral William D. Leahy, chief of American naval operations and acting secretary of Uncle Sam's navy, said in Washington that congress will be asked to provide funds for the construction of two battleships and two cruisers in the 1938 fiscal year. The admiral inferred in a press conference that the United States expects to keep pace with other nations which are planning extensive naval building. The four new ships will cost $170,000,000 and will be ready in 1942. Construction is about to begin on two other battleships, which will cost approximately $60,000,000.

14 Lost in Flying Boat

IT WAS believed 14 persons were lost in the Caribbean sea when the Santa Maria, luxurious new flying boat of the Pan American-Grace airways, crashed 20 miles off Cristobal, in the Canal Zone, after nearly completing a scheduled flight from Guayaquil, Ecuador.

Last radio reports from the pilot indicated he was trying to spiral down to the surface of the sea in a torrential rainstorm. Two United States submarines, cruising the area in the hope of picking up some survivors, found part of the airliner's shipment of mail, an engine casing, a few other parts and a bucket of ice cream floating in the water. It was feared the pilot, copilot, steward and 11 passengers, mostly Americans, were locked in the cabin and lying on the bottom of the sea, which at the point the wreckage was found reaches a depth of 1,000 feet.

Wedge to Split Loyalists

AS THE battle of Madrid continued to rage, Gen. Francisco Franco's eastern army was driving an ever-widening wedge into the territory near the junction of Teruel, Cuenca and Valencia provinces 100 miles east of Madrid. His object is to impose a barrier between Madrid and the loyalist government's capital at Valencia.

Government forces all along the line of advance were reported surrendering or fleeing. Insurgents claimed to have captured large numbers of automobiles and supplies of arms, munitions and clothing.

Latest news from the Madrid front indicated that a rebel attack in the Usera sector southeast of the city had been repulsed by machine gunners and dynamiters.

El Caudillo Is the Boss

INSURGENT Spain has a "head man" and also has a name for him now. In Germany things are bossed by "Der Fuehrer," and Italians scurry to obey "Il Duce." Now Rebel Spain has dubbed Gen. Francisco Franco "El Caudillo." Throughout the realm on walls and fences are signs bearing the motto, "Homenaje el Caudillo"—"Obey the leader." And the people salute him by raising the right arm.

Franco's followers are protesting that he is not a fascist, but he has never announced just what form of government he will propose for the nation. There is said to be a scheme afoot to shape it along the lines of Portugal's corporative government. Since he openly declared on July 19 that he believes the restoration of a monarchy is vital to cohesion of Spain, it is believed that this is what he will eventually effect. Prince Juan, third son of the former King Alfonso XIII, is the likely candidate for the crown.

Women Hear War Cry

ONE of China's chief agitators for war was Mme. Chiang Kai-shek, Wellesley-educated wife of the dictator. She urged women to fight Japan "according to their ability," citing the fashion in which the women of Spain are occupying the fighting lines.

"In the World war the women of every country gave their best," she declared. "The women of China are no less patriotic or capable of physical endurance.

"China is facing the gravest crisis in its history. This means we must sacrifice many of our soldiers, masses of our innocent people, much of the nation's wealth and see ruthlessly destroyed the results of our reconstruction."

SEEN and HEARD around the NATIONAL CAPITAL

By Carter Field

Washington.—There is a distinct possibility that congress, instead of the Supreme court, may prove the chief obstacle next year to President Roosevelt's New Deal program. Close friends assert that the President has not given up his hope for "reform" of the Supreme court—that with the convening of congress in January he will lay his plans to put some sort of legislation through to obtain his objectives, or resort to the constitutional amendment route, which he has always objected to as too slow.

There is no doubt that this is his present intention. But he just may find himself faced with new problems next January. The point is that congress is feeling its oats. It is in no mood for insurgency. Everything on the surface is going to be kept as peaceful as possible. Democrats will be thinking of the primaries and election next summer and fall. They do not want to encourage gentlemen—or ladies—back home to run against them in the Democratic primaries, with "loyalty to the President" as the chief issue. They have a healthy respect for the machine—running into every county of every state—which Jim Farley has built up.

But there are many degrees of obedience—many fine lines where loyalty to the President enters. It certainly does enter into the phrasing of bills, but it is very difficult to make the folks back home understand this.

On a clean-cut question such as whether six additional justices shall be added to the Supreme court there are no such fine lines. One has to be for the President or against him. But most legislative matters are not so clearly defined. And it is easy for a Democratic senator to protest the utmost loyalty to the Chief Executive but insist that Harold Ickes, or Harry Hopkins, or Henry Wallace had deceived the President into taking a very un-Democratic position!

Brain Trusters Out

In the first place, there is no chance whatever, judging from the present temper of senators and representatives, that there will be any more Brain Trust drafting of legislation—much less permitting a Brain Truster to sit in on the meetings of a conference committee seeking to rewrite the senate and house drafts of a piece of legislation into some compromise form that will be acceptable to both. This happened in the famous public utility holding company death sentence bill, but it is not likely to happen again.

Moreover, the struggle to control the party, looking forward to the 1940 campaign, with a view to nominating Roosevelt's successor and writing the platform of that year, has already begun. There is a very strong group of Democrats who do not intend that the Democratic nominee of 1940 shall be a New Dealer. Words of praise for the Roosevelt administration will drip from the platform, if they have their way, but there will be a good deal of hypocrisy and party expediency in them. Their real intention is to carry the Democratic party back quite a step toward the ideals of such men as Carter Glass and Josiah Bailey, rather than forward to those of Felix Frankfurter and Ben Cohen.

So it is possible, if not probable, that Mr. Roosevelt will have a good deal of trouble in getting just what he wants from congress next year, despite the oratory from the very men who will be seeking to block him praising him to the skies. It is the conviction of many disinterested observers that congress next year will pass no legislation which the present Supreme court would not approve. But it looks as if it will be a most interesting session!

Still a Puzzle

The attack of Gov. George H. Earle of Pennsylvania on Gov. Herbert H. Lehman of New York in connection with Lehman's letter to Senator Robert F. Wagner on the Supreme court issue is still puzzling Washington politicians.

Every one here has assumed for a long time that Governor Earle was hearing the buzzing of the presidential bee practically continuously. So they have been trying to fit together the pieces of this jigsaw puzzle and get the picture which must be in Governor Earle's mind.

One phase of it is of course very clear. Earle wanted to curry favor with President Roosevelt. He has lost no opportunity to do that—not only to praise the President extravagantly at every opportunity, but to demonstrate himself, in one way or another, as being even more New Dealish than the President himself. The idea here of course is to show Mr. Roosevelt that Mr. Earl is just the type of man to whom might be safely entrusted the carrying on of the Roosevelt policies.

Whether his course up to the time of the Lehman letter was shrewd or not is open to question. It happens to be a fact that great men have very seldom put themselves out to nominate a successor who was obviously crazy to get the job. Calvin Coolidge was not exactly unstinting in the aid he gave Herbert C. Hoover. The last case of a President's forcing the nomination of his successor was Theodore Roosevelt, when he not only picked William H. Taft but imposed his will to an extraordinary degree to obtain Taft's nomination. But this proves nothing, for Taft was desperately anxious not to get the job. He wanted the job he got long later, chief justice of the Supreme court.

So in a way Theodore Roosevelt had the very normal human thrill of forcing somebody else to make a sacrifice for the sake of the public good. Public good naturally meaning as Theodore Roosevelt saw it!

Called Bad Blunder

But whether or not Earle's strategy was wise up to the time of the Lehman episode, most observers here think he made a bad blunder in giving to the press his blistering attack on the New York governor.

In the first place, he was attacking somebody who was not threatening, in the remotest degree, his own ambitions. Lehman has not given a thought to the presidency. He wants to get out of politics. One might even suspect that Lehman was playing a shrewd game in appealing to the penchant of leaders to get somebody else to make a sacrifice. But certainly Earle did not figure it that way, has never figured that particular bit of psychology, or his course to date would have been very different.

The fact remains that nobody, and certainly not Governor Earle, thinks that Lehman is a candidate for the presidential nomination, or will be considered by the convention. So why hit him? Especially on an issue of very dubious popularity?

There is also the fact that Governor Lehman is tremendously strong in a state that will have a very large block of delegates at the Democratic national convention, and whose delegates are never bound by the unit rule! Men have come mighty close to the nomination, and for that matter to election, as President of the United States, and then been beaten by a mere handful of friends of some popular figure whom the candidate had slighted.

It just so happened that the Roscoe Conkling episode happened in Governor Lehman's state, and is generally credited by political historians with having changed a presidential election.

Such Headaches

"Not a headache in a barrel" was the slogan of a famous whisky maker in the good old days before prohibition. But there have been plenty of headaches in regulating the whisky industry since repeal and right now the federal alcohol administration believes it needs more aspirin than ever before.

The problem is whether to put official sanction on the claim that whisky can be aged just as satisfactorily, both as to flavor and aroma and as to the curtailing of injurious effects on the drinker, by aging it in used charred barrels as in new charred barrels.

Not long ago the administration decided the question, temporarily. It held that whisky aged in second-hand barrels, or more accurately, barrels which had already been used for the aging of whisky, must be labeled "less than one month old"—even if the liquor had been in the used barrels for a couple of years!

This brought loud protests from certain distillers, particularly from one who had been operating for years in Canada, where the law permits the use of charred barrels for aging which had already done service for a previous batch of whisky.

The contention of this distiller is that two very different types of whisky are produced from the same fermented mash by aging in new and old barrels. The new barrel produces a heavy-bodied, dark-colored liquor. The used barrel produces a lighter-bodied, and lighter-colored whisky. Some drinkers prefer one, some the other.

Chemists Worried

But—contended this distiller, who had several supporters—drinkers have been educated up to think that age is the most important thing, and hence the prospective purchasers of whisky set great store by labels. The customer who might prefer a light-bodied and colored whisky would feel terribly cheated if he read on the label of a bottle he had paid a fair amount for, that it was "less than one month old." He would never suspect, this distiller points out with some logic, that the whisky was actually two or three years old, but merely had not been aged in a new barrel. He would recall all he had read about "green whiskies" and "raw liquor," and would have to be very strong-minded indeed if he could bring himself to admit that he liked the whisky—after reading the label.

Government chemists are much worried about the controversy. They do not want to stick their necks out and give some one a chance to crack their heads. Privately they opine that whisky does age faster in a new cask of charred white oak, but they are not prepared to say that whisky aged in old casks is any more deleterious.

What Irvin S. Cobb Thinks about

This Business of Golf.

OAKLAND, CALIF.—As I sit writing this, I look out where elderly gentlemen, intent on relaxing, may be seen tensing themselves up tighter than a cocked wolf-trap, and then staggering toward the clubhouse with every nerve standing on end and screaming for help and highballs.

I smile at them, for I am one who has given up golf. You might even go so far as to say golf gave me up. I tried and tried, but I never broke a typhoid patient's temperature chart—never got below 102. I spent so much time climbing into sand-traps and out again that people began thinking I was a new kind of hermit, living by preference in bunkers—the old man of the link beds, they'd be calling me next.

Irvin S. Cobb

And I used to slice so far into the rough that, looking for my ball, I penetrated jungles where the foot of man hadn't trod since the early mound builders. That's how I added many rare specimens to my collection of Indian relics.

But the last straw was when a Scotch professional, after morbidly watching my form, told me that at any rate there was one thing about me which was correct—I did have on golf stockings!

Congressional Boldness.

WARNING to pet lovers: If you own guinea pigs or tame rabbits or trained seals or such-like gentle creatures, try to keep the word from them that some of the majority members of the lower branch of congress actually threatened to defy their master's voice.

The senate always has been known as the world's greatest deliberative body—and, week by week and month by month don't those elder statesmen know how to deliberate! But these last few years the house has earned the reputation of being the most docile legislative outfit since Aesop's King Stork ruled over the synod of the frogs.

So should the news ever spread among the lesser creatures, hitherto so placid and biddable, that an example had been set at Washington, there's no telling when the Belgian hares will start rampaging and the singing mice will begin acting up rough and the grubworms will gang against the big old woodpecker.

Professional Orators.

WE HAVE in Southern California a professional orator who long ago discovered that the most dulcet music on earth was the sound of his own voice. He'll speak anywhere at the drop of the hat and provide the hat.

What's worse, this coast-defender of ours labors under the delusion that, if he shouts at the top of his voice, his eloquence will be all the more forceful. The only way to avoid meeting him at dinner is to eat at an owl wagon. But the other night, at an important banquet, he strangely was missing from the array of speakers at the head table. One guest turned in amazement to his neighbor:

"Where's Blank?" he inquired, naming the absentee.

"Didn't you hear?" answered the other. "He busted a couple of ear drums."

"Whose?" said the first fellow.

Foes of Nazidom.

THE veteran Rabbi Stephen Wise of New York has been reasonably outspoken in his views on Nazi treatment of his own co-religionists and the practitioners of other faiths as well. And one of the most venerable prelates of the Catholic church in Europe, while discussing the same subject, hasn't exactly pulled his punches, either.

So what? A friend just back from abroad tells me that in Berlin he heard a high government officer fiercely denounce these two distinguished men. About the mildest thing the speaker said about them was that both were senile. Somehow or other, the speech wasn't printed in the German papers—maybe by orders from on high.

Well, far be it from this innocent bystander to get into religious arguments and besides I have no first-hand knowledge as to the Christian clergyman's state of health, although, judging by his utterances, there's nothing particularly wrong with his mind. But I do know Rabbi Wise, and, if he's in his dotage, so is Shirley Temple. And I risk the assertion that he would be perfectly willing to have one foot in the grave if he could have the other on Herr Hitler's neck.

SYNOPSIS

Brooke Reyburn visits the office of Jed Stewart, a lawyer, to discuss the terms of an estate she has inherited from Mrs. Mary Armanda Dane. Unwittingly she overhears Jed talking to Mark Trent, nephew of Mrs. Dane who has been disinherited. Mrs. Dane had lived at Lookout House, a huge structure by the sea, built by her father and divided into two, for her and Mark's father. Brooke had been a fashion expert, and Mrs. Dane, a "shut-in," hearing her on the radio, had invited her to call and developed a deep affection for her. Mark discloses that Mrs. Dane had threatened to disinherit him if he married Lola, from whom he is now divorced. He says he does not trust Henri and Clotilde Jacques, Mrs. Dane's servants. He says he is not interested in an offer of Brooke's to share the estate with him. Leaving her department store job, Brooke refuses an offer to "go stepping" with Jerry Field, a carefree young man who wants to marry her. At a family conference she learns she must live at Lookout House alone, since Lucette, her younger sister who is taking her job, her brother, Sam, a young playwright, and her mother plan to stay in the city. Jed and Mark are astounded when they hear from Mrs. Gregory, a family friend, that she had witnessed a hitherto unknown will with Henri and Clotilde two weeks before Mrs. Dane died. Brooke had arrived just as she was leaving. Jed suggests that Mark open his part of Lookout House, get friendly with Brooke and try to find out about the will. Jed agrees to stay with him. Mark accepts Brooke's invitation for a family Thanksgiving dinner at Lookout. Mrs. Reyburn announces on Thanksgiving eve that she has been invited to England. Sam and Lucette decide to move in with Brooke and Sam plans to produce a new play locally. After the Thanksgiving dinner Brooke tells Mark that little of Mrs. Dane's silver collection is left. Jerry Field and his sister Daphne drop in and announce they will be neighbors for the winter. Sam adds them to the cast of his play. Later Inspector Harrison of the local police visits Mark and is informed about the missing will and silver. As Harrison leaves, Lola arrives. She announces that she and her new husband, Bert Hunt, have started a neighborhood filling station. Mark almost makes a break about the missing will and Brooke is suspicious. Returning home, she sees Lola talking covertly to Henri. "Mr. Micawber," Mrs. Dane's pet parrot, is missing. Henri is ugly and warns Brooke she had better like him and Clotilde.

She reached the question and a door at the same time. As Mark Trent opened it, a slightly musty smell, a blend of camphor and old books and ancient furniture, stole out. He motioned with the flash in his hand. Brooke's eyes followed the light. She set her teeth hard in her lips to keep back an exclamation of astonishment. On a large table, illumined by the spotlight, surrounded by boxes and trunks and storeroom litter, was a massive tea-service and perhaps a dozen dishes and pitchers of silver, tarnished to a light copper color. A scrap of paper drifted to the floor.

"It's a great hide-out, isn't it?

She nodded in answer to the low, amused question.

"When did you discover it?"

"Thought I heard strange sounds upstairs when Jed and I were waiting for you in the living-room the other afternoon. The Japs' rooms are in the L on the first floor, and when I had this house opened I told the caretaker not to touch the third. After you and Mrs. Gregory left, I investigated and found this silver. I've been on the watch ever since to discover who put it here. This afternoon someone slipped a cog, and left both keys; must have been frightened off, or else they were left purposely so that a second party might have access to the loot."

"Who put the loot, as you call it, in that room?"

"That's what you and I will find out."

That "you and I" was fuse to dynamite. Brooke leaned back against the balustrade.

"You will, you mean, you and your sleuth Jed Stewart. You and he are spies, aren't you? Amateur detectives. 'Mark, to you,' you say to Sam, and all the time you are spying on his sister and accusing her of 'undue influence,' of hypnotizing an old woman into leaving her a fortune. I ought to have known what you thought of me when you said that. I do now. Find out who stole the silver. You've put Inspector Harrison on the case, haven't you? I wish you luck."

She jerked her wrist free and ran down the stairs. She stopped at the foot of them. A tirade like that she had just delivered took one's breath for a minute. Why, why had she let Mark the Magnificent know that she suspected his reason for occupying the house? She, who had prided herself on her self-control in business? Why couldn't she be diplomatic? Her outrageous temper was the answer. Thank Heaven she had had sense enough not to tell him of Henri's threat that he could put her out of Lookout House.

A sound! Someone had touched the knob on the other side of the door! Had the person remembered that both keys had been left? Now—now Mark and she would find out who had taken the silver.

Stealthily she touched the button and plunged the top floor into darkness. She raced up the stairs. Caromed into Mark Trent coming out of the storeroom. She clutched his sleeve; whispered:

"Shut the door! Quick! Someone is fumbling at the hall key. Perhaps he'll come for this one."

He held her by one arm as he noiselessly closed the door. In the dark he drew her into another room. Side by side they waited. Brooke's heart shook her body. How could the man so near her help hearing it thump in the tomblike silence?

A spot of light. Creeping up! Creeping up! Her breath caught in a gasp. An arm slipped round her shoulders and held her so close that the scent of the crushed gardenias was sickish.

"Ssch! Mustn't let him know we are here!" Mark Trent whispered.

The spot of light illumined the key in the door, illumined the black-gloved hand which gently turned it and as gently drew it out.

Mark Trent felt the hard beating of the girl's heart as his arm tightened about her shoulders, the softness of her skin against his hand. He didn't dare release her for fear she might make a sound and reveal their presence to the unknown person in the hall. What a good little sport she was. She had followed him into his house with no embarrassment, but with a modern girl's interpretation of propriety, her ignoring of outworn conventions. Just the same, he wished fervently that she was back in her own living-room in that chair before the fire, for there was no dodging the fact that black-gloved fingers had withdrawn the key from the lock. To whom had they belonged? The words on the scrap of paper he had picked up from the floor of the storeroom and replaced on the table teased his mind.

"Make X on cover when—"

That was all. What cover? Much as he wanted to know, he couldn't let Brooke Reyburn get mixed up in the mess. When he had discovered the silver, his first thought had been of her and the thrill she would get from seeing it. If he hadn't brought her, he would be on the man's neck by this time.

It seemed hours that he stood rigid, listening, with the only sound the underground roar of a great city, the faint wail of the distant siren, and the girl's unsteady breathing. He strained his ears. Was a door being closed cautiously, or was his imagination playing tricks? He must find out. He couldn't stay here forever. He put his mouth close to Brooke's ear. He felt the softness of her hair against his face.

"Don't move. Don't speak. I'll come back."

Whenever in after life he smelled the fragrance of a gardenia, he would remember this night, he told himself.

He took a cautious step into the hall. Listened. The house was so quiet that he could hear the tick of the old clock on the stairs. He tiptoed to the door of the room in which he had found the silver and ran his fingers lightly over the knob. The key was gone.

He felt his way down; he didn't dare use the flash. The lamp in the lower hall provided a faint light. Gently he turned the knob of the connecting door. It was locked. Someone had followed him down the stairs! He felt a presence. Fool, not to have suspected that an accomplice might be hidden in the dark. He shouldn't have left Brooke. He must get back to her no matter who was between them.

He wheeled with pantherlike agility. Raised his flashlight to bring it crashing down on a head.

"Mark! Mark!"

It was Brooke Reyburn's voice, her hand on his arm. The stiffening went out of his knees. Relief was submerged in a mighty rush of anger as he gripped her shoulders.

"What do you mean by coming down when I told you not to move? What do you mean? I might have struck you!"

"But you didn't, Mark. I felt like a quitter hiding in the dark while you came down alone, so I crept after you. What did you see?"

"Nothing here—but the door is locked."

"A black-gloved hand did pull the key from the storeroom door, didn't it? I didn't dream it, did I?"

"If you did, I was in the same dream, Brooke. Wonder when they intend to remove the stuff."

"You think someone is planning to take it away?"

"Why else should it be there? It probably was moved from Lookout House to this one, which has been unoccupied for years, before I came back here to live. After Aunt Mary Amanda went, I was the only person who would know about the silver, and I was far away in South America. That's why Henri's face turned chalky when he saw me enter your living-room on Thanksgiving day."

"Then you noticed it too? I thought it might be my imagination."

"He was white, all right. Come on, we can't get back to Lookout House through this door. We'd better beat it downstairs and out that way. Lucky I pocketed your key."

"Hurry! Hurry! Suppose it was Henri who left those keys in the doors? Suppose he remembered that he had left them and stole back from the movies? I told him that you and Jed Stewart would be with us for supper after rehearsal. He may be looking for me now to see if I was telling the truth."

In the lower hall, which was slightly scented by the smoky aroma of open fires, Mark laid a detaining hand on her shoulder.

"Wait! Listen!"

The stillness of the high-ceilinged rooms was accentuated by the low moan of the wind at the corner of the house, by the muted thunder of the sea, by the sharp crackle of a burning log; was haunted by the weird wail of the distant siren, but no human sound intruded.

"Coast's clear. Let's go. Hold on!" Mark Trent frowned at her bare arms and throat, ivory tinted above the lace of her frock. "You need a wrap."

"To go from one door to another! Don't be foolish. If we don't hurry, Henri may get there before us."

In the green-walled living-room at Lookout House, Mark Trent threw a log on the smoldering fire and poked it into flame.

"Come here and get warm, Brooke. You are still shivering."

"If I am, it is from excitement, not cold." She toasted her fingers at the blaze. What do we do next?"

"Watchful waiting seems our best bet."

"You would say that."

"I don't like the implication, but we'll let that ride—for the present. What move would you suggest?"

"I don't know, but let's do something. I hate sitting on the sidelines. I hate waiting. First we must find out who took the key from the storeroom door. If you hadn't held me, I would have dashed at him and found out."

"I had a hunch you would; that's why I grabbed you. Afraid I crushed your gardenia."

Brooke put her hand to her shoulder. "They're gone! Where could I have lost them?"

"Don't make a tragedy of it. I'll get you another."

Mark Trent had never seen brown eyes so flamingly gold, cheeks so red as Brooke's.

"I'm not making a tragedy of it, and I don't want another gardenia. For an amateur detective—amateur is the word with a capital A—you are dense, Mark Trent. Suppose the person in the attic went back for something and picked them up? Wouldn't he know at once that he was being watched?"

"I thought of that so—I brought this along." He held a flower in the palm of his hand. The once waxen petals were brown at the edges, but they had the feel of velvet in his fingers. "You don't want it now, do you?" He slipped it back into his pocket. "I'll keep it as a souvenir of our late dive into the underworld."

"I do want it and the other too."

"Because Field gave them to you? I don't know where the other is; didn't realize that there were two. You dropped this as you came into this house. Better let me keep it. Would you want him to know that it had been crushed out of shape against my shoulder?"

"Just why should Jerry assume that it was your shoulder against which the gardenia was crushed? You are not the only man in my life, you know," Brooke reminded disdainfully.

"I intend—to keep the flower."

Mark Trent felt the color surge to his hair and recede. He had caught back "to be" in time.

"I haven't had a chance, Brooke, to tell you how ridiculous Mrs. Hunt's suggestion was that—that I had any thought of trying to keep Aunt Mary Amanda's money in the family by—"

"Why stumble over it? Why tell me again that you wouldn't marry me? This is the second time. First in Jed Stewart's office and now here. To save a third attempt to impress the fact on me, I'll tell you that I wouldn't marry you if you were the only man in the world. Divorced men leave me cold. Sometime perhaps I'll have the privilege of refusing to marry you."

He knew now the sensation of a knife being plunged into his heart. He drew the gardenia from his pocket and dropped it into her lap.

"Here it is. Water may revive it."

She twirled the stem in her fingers.

"It is past recovery." She flung it into the wastebasket. "I don't care for rejuvenated gardenias any more than I care for warmed-over love. That sounds like a car. Can they have come so soon?"

"Better not speak of what we discovered," Mark suggested hastily, as she started for the hall.

She left the room without answering. He salvaged the flower and thrust it into his pocket. He was not keeping it for sentimental reasons, he assured himself, but as a reminder of how near he had come to forgetting that all he had to offer a girl was "warmed-over" love.

Sam Reyburn entered the living-room and flung his blue covered script to the table. He dropped into the wing chair with a groan. Voices in the hall thinned in the distance. Mark Trent could distinguish Jerry Field's laugh, Lucette's rather high-pitched tone, Brooke's questioning murmur, and Daphne's drawl. He looked at the dejected figure in the chair, at the long legs outstretched.

"What's wrong, Sam? Aren't you home early?"

"What's wrong with you, you're white as a sheet?"

"I'm okay, it's these artistic lights that play the dickens with one's color. Didn't Stewart and the rest of the cast come with you?"

PULLETS FED WELL WILL LAY IN FALL

Careful Summer Attention Pays Good Returns.

By H. H. Alp, Extension Poultryman, University of Illinois.—WNU Service.

Cheapest of all ways to feed pullets this summer will be to feed them well. Egg production next September and October will depend on the summer feeding. Experience has demonstrated that worms and disease thrive best in poorly fed flocks, and that good pullets are never raised by making scavengers out of them during July and August.

Prospects look favorable for egg prices next fall because many people will attempt to economize on feed. Such a practice will make the feed used doubly expensive.

A ration which has given good results with pullets after they are eight weeks old is the one made of a starting mash and ground grain. For each 200 pullets two range feeders are recommended; one containing starting mash and the other a coarsely ground grain mixture of equal parts of corn, wheat and oats.

Grinding the grain has a tendency to insure greater consumption of it and less of the mash. Some poultrymen are making a practice of closing, for a part of the day, the feeder containing the mash, especially if there is a tendency toward too early sexual maturity of the pullets.

This ration in combination with a good clean green range such as alfalfa, plenty of clean drinking water and some protection from extreme heat should go a long way toward developing pullets of normal growth, free from worms and ready to lay next fall when egg prices are expected to be high.

Despite the fact that most laying flocks are laying well at this time of year, the need for careful culling should be noted. Every bird not laying and not having any value as a future breeder will consume about 20 cents worth of feed a month.

Gully Control Varies With Local Conditions

Farmers keep in mind economy, effectiveness, and permanence when they build soil-saving check dams, earth fills or diversion ditches to control gullies, says T. B. Chambers of the Soil Conservation service. Check dams of straw, poles and logs, woven wire, and loose rock serve their purpose well, although they do not last as well as dams of well-laid rock or concrete and earth.

Gullies waste millions of tons of valuable soil every year. SCS men on more than 140 demonstration areas are showing farmers how gullies can be prevented and checked. Control varies because climate, soils, and cropping methods vary in different parts of the country, but farmers will find one or more of three methods effective.

In practically all sections of the country gully sides may be planted to grass, shrubbery, or trees. Once established, the vegetation slows the flow of "little waters" after rains and holds the soil. Choice of grasses, trees, or shrubs for such plantings is a question which may be referred to county agents or SCS specialists on demonstration areas.

When gullies drain a fair-sized watershed, run-off can be retarded by the right crops and contour farming. Terraces or diversion ditches take care of excess run-off.

Where the volume of run-off is high, earth, masonry, or concrete dams may be necessary. These dams are most effective where a gully slope is comparatively gentle and where they can be high enough to prevent further cutting back of the gully head. These dams also create reservoirs for livestock water and irrigation.

With the Farmers

Large eggs do not hatch so well as small ones.

Nearly 900,000 tons of wheat was grown in Great Britain last season.

The University of California conducts a large horse breeding farm.

Poultry raising in America is rightly called "a billion dollar business."

Non-layers of all ages should be carefully culled out of the flock until September 1.

The Department of Agriculture says that the cost of keeping a farm horse, including cost of depreciation, is approximately $100 per year.

A summer shelter provides cheap, comfortable quarters for housing yearling layers at the end of the first laying year.

Eggs are imported into the United States in the form of shell eggs; whole eggs, dried; whole eggs, frozen; dried and frozen yolks; and dried albumen.

Intimate With Chic

THE lovely flower may have been born to blush unseen, Milady, but not you. Anyway, what chance could you have of going unnoticed when you wear one of these exciting new frocks by Sew-Your-Own—not the Ghost!

Cool, Cool, Cool.

The clever new dress at the left is as young as you are, and in dotted Swiss you'll be as crisp, pretty, and cool as though you bloomed always in an air-conditioned room. A little frou-frou here, a little swing-swing there, and throughout a dainty new appeal that's irresistible. You can be certain of success too, because Sew-Your-Own has made everything easy for you in the step-by-step sewing instructions.

We Only Heard.

Maybe we're wrong, Little Sis, but we heard that this is the dress Mommy has her heart set on for you. You know princess lines that flare, and puff sleeves that give you that cunning big-little-girl look go over well with both mother and you. You may have it button all the way if you like—it makes laundering easy and it's smart. Mommy will let you choose the material if you ask. You won't go wrong on gingham, silk crepe, broadcloth or percale. So here's hoping, Little Sis.

Vivacious Version.

Thumbs up on taffeta; eyes right for pattern 1349! It's a picture-pretty frock with a knack for bringing out the best in you and your escort. It's a dream for waltz time; it's supreme for luncheon or afternoon wear. A happy idea is to cut one copy with short sleeves for now, another with the long style in a fallish fabric for that popular season just ahead.

The Patterns.

VILLAGE CHATTER FROM SILURIA

'Tis said that "absence makes the heart grow fonder." We can't say whether it has made our readers any fonder of our chatter but gee whilickers, it has sure made us fonder of chattering. Folks we took off over to Sylacauga for a week and if you knew what a sweet time we had ourselves not a solitary soul of you could begrudge it. On our way over we stopped in at the Democrat office for a friendly little chat with our friend Mrs. Wallace, but to our disappointment, she was absent. We applied the balm of consolation to our hearts thus, "there's always a next time. That's a tall plenty about we-uns and our doings . . . . Monday morning brought to light a tragedy in the peace and quiet of our little village. Some kiddies playing on the bank of the creek discovered a man in the water. And this man, Mr. J. P. Trawick, was drowned. He had been employed in Buck Creek Cotton Mills for only a short time. We extend sincere regrets to the bereaved ones . . . . We have, in the person of Skipper Thornton, one small citizen whom we think can really take it. This conclusion was arrived at after witnessing the little fellows reactions to a gentle spraying from a hose pipe in the hands of his dad. . . . Hey, you all know whats sweet? We know one thing—an August lily. Oh boy, they do have the sweetest fragrance . . . . Margaret Tilley has packed her duds in a little suitcase and down the road she's gone—quiet a piece off too—'way off to Spartanburg, South Carolina. She returned home with her cousin, Miss Clifford Russell, who has been visiting the Tilley's for a few weeks. We wish Margaret a swell time on her vacation. Ask Lexie or Elizabeth what her plans are concerning certain matrimonial schemes . . . We wonder what this is all about that we hear on Lexie and R. E Lee A railroad crossing and a train are involved but we didn't quite ketch it all ,so we are still wondering . . . Have you noticed those new awnings on the Mar kBlankenship's house? Quite nifty, eh? . . . . What could be any more pleasant than to be with some one you like just lots and be in a nice quiet spot like—say, "lover's leap" with a great big moon shining down from above—Ah, sweet memories . . . My, my, at the new automobiles that are springnig up around here like mushrooms after a shower. Among those who have deserted the ranks of the pedestrians are Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Harris (Snow and Margie to you) Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Bradly, Mr. and Mrs. Ocie Langston and a host of others. Make it sorta tough for those who are still traveling by air—"air" you going my way? . . . . Jean Blankenship and her little sister, Betty, seem to be regular puddle ducks. We know they spend a good deal of time in their bathing suits in company with the hose pipe. Betty is not averse to slipping out of her little suit if she can catc hher mother with her back turned . . . . Anxiety hangs over the home of Mr. and Mrs Henry Robinson for Mrs. Robinson is seriously ill. For a week she has waged a fierce battle with pneumonia and other complications. The friends and loved ones are administering to her with loving care. We hope sincerely that she may win the fight . . . . . Gee! We wish everybody could get a peep at those flowers in Mrs. Robert Gardners yard. They are a sight for sore eyes. Those lavendar dahlias are enough to make one sit up and take notice . . . . We have in our town one couple who are undoubtedly victims of cupids darts. They pride themselves upon being very sensible young people but if you start teasing them, they just can't take it. If the young lady sees a dark green delivery truck she tries to look unconcerned but we can plainly see she's all aflutter. The young man thinks it's perfectly good business to deliver one bar of soap at certain homes . . . Was that you Reese, going up the street Saturday night about ten o'clock with such a nonchalant whistle? Was it? . . . . Mr. and Mrs. Walter Horton, Mr. and Mrs. Troy Henderson and Mrs. Bunk Harris made up a party who took off for Birmingham Saturday for shopping purposes . . . . Carlos Tilley isn't a bad sort at all. We really appreciated that lift to Alabaster and back in that swanky new car, Carlos . . . . You ought to have seen those dinky little short trousers of George Thomasons that Mary was exhibiting the other day. We understand they were dress-wear for George some so many years years ago . . . . We saw several young ladies out for a stroll Sunday night at, say about ten o'clock. Yes, folks, they were all five barefooted and you should have seen them run when a crowd of young men appeared. Boys, if you want to know just who those flying feet belonged to, just ask us, we ca ntell you. . . . Quite a cro wdfrom here attended the "shindig" in Columbiana Saturday night. They all report a swel ltime. No, we ddin't go as we aren't in the dancing line now, but boy, oh, boy! It won't be long till we can "shake a leg" again . . . If you would like to know something adorable. Yes, very adorable, make the acquaintance of little Helen Will Honeycutt.

"Twinkle, twinkle, little hair,
How we wonder what you air
Up above that lip so brave
Why in the dickens don't you shave

——This little "ditty" could will be appleid to one of our well known business men about town No harm meant Mister, just a little fun . . . . We enjoyed a short visit with Caryle Weller Saturday. While a puncture was being fixed on his truck he came in and chatted with us for a short while. We don't wish for you to have any more punctures Caryle, but we do hope you come to see us again. . . . . There are three little boys in our town that are really tough. We are speaking of E. B. Odum, Buddy Black and Virgil Glass. They took quite a tumble out of their coaster wagon in front of our house the other day, but they all three got up laughing to try it again. Be careful boys, you might get a broken arm or something. . . . We are glad to see Mrs. Walker, better known as Aunt Cogie, out again after a long illness. Careful is the word, Aunt Cogie, for we sure don't want you back in that bed again. . . Say, we think we'd better be signing off here. We'll see you all in next Sunday's funnies.

Till then,
Nell and Nelle.

A BABY DEFINED

The best definition of Mother's "little anchor"—known as "BABY" comes from London, England. We reprint it for its universal appeal.

BABY: "A tiny feather from the wings of love dropped into the sacred lap of Motherhood.
An inhabitant of Lapland.
A padlock on the chains of love.
A bursting bud on the tree of life.
A human flower untouched by the finger of care.
The most extensive employer of feminine labor.
The only precious possession that never incites envy.
The pulp from which the leaves of Life's Book is made
The morning caller, the noonday crawler, and midnight bawler.
The smartest little craft afloate in home's delightful bay.
A native of all countries who speaks the language of none.
A soft bundle of love and trouble which we cannot do without.
The magic spell by which the gods transform a house into a home.
The bachelor's horror, the mothers treasure, and the despotic tyrant of the most republican household.
A stranger with unspeakable cheek who enteres the house without stitch to his back and is received with open arms by everyone.
A necessity, in order to keep up the supply of readers for the future and the sweetest thing God ever made and forgot to give wings to."

So, do we, with the above definition begin our ramble for this week and first place of honor tender to the sweetest little bundle of lace and lingerie we have seen in many, many moons.

BUNNYE CRAWFORD JR. Aged 5 weeks

Wee, winsome, Little Miss Crawford completely captured all hearts in the Democrat office on Friday afternoon, when she made her initial appearance and was introduced by her distinguished Dad, Dr. J. H. Crawford, to the Democrat and its staff of writers, etc. Personal Mention, of course, had first claim on the adorable little lady, and if you think that Bunnye Jr., did not look us straigt in the eyes for about ten minutes without even a blink—ask her Dad, who with all of his professional knowledge of medicine, failed to diagnose just WHY she was determined to concentrate her blue optics on us. Neither the clacking of the press nor the chatter of many persons surrounding her could detract or divert her attention. She left us still "wondering" what she thought about us, but just before Nursie took her away, she pursed her rosebud mouth into the loveliest of smiles, and with a little wink from "yours truly" Bunnye curled her tiny fingers around one finger, and closer crept into our hearts as together we sealed that "little secret" between us! We felt a keen sense of loneliness after she had gone—but the office was a brighter place for her brief but unforgettable visit.

Hazel Ruth Swann of Pell City, lovely daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Swann fromer residents of Columbiana, was a feted guest in Columbiana last week when she visited in the home of Dr. and Mrs. J. H. Crawford.

ZERA KING WALTON RESIGNS AS SHELBY COUNTY SUPERVISOR OF SCHOOLS

Many friends throughout Shelby County will regret to learn of the resignation of Zera King Walton as Shelby County School Supervisor, which office she has filled with distinction and honor for the past several years.

Mrs. Walton is exceptionally well qualified for this responsible position from an educational standpoint. She is a graduate of the State Teacher's College in Troy, and of the University of Alabama. She is also prominently identified with U. D. C. organization, is a member of the Delta Kappa Gamma, Kappa Delta Pi Sororities, and President of the Elementary Supervisors of the State of Alabama. In Columbiana, she has unselfishly given her time to all civic, social and religious activities of the town. She is President of the Culture Club and is a much sought featured speaker on various programs in the state.

A vivacious personality. A charming, friendly manner, a brilliant mind and a thorough knowledge of her work has made Zera Walton's place one which will not soon be forgotten in the lives o fthose whom she has so faithfully served, nor will it be an easy task for the officials in the Educational Department to fill the vacancy as satisfactorily and efficiently as Mrs. Walton has occupied this important chair in the progressive educational development in Shelby County. Along with officials teachers, children, co-workers and friends, we express sincere regrets over her recent decision to resign.

Mrs. Homer J. Walton is vacationing at Ft. Walton, and we deeply appreciate a card across the miles bespeaking remembrance during her happy, busy social activities.

The many friends of Mrs. Joe Taylor, who spent several weeks in Columbiana this summer with her sister, Mrs. Rosa Teague, will be interested to hear that she has joined Mr. Taylor in Chicago and they will make the "Windy City" their future home.

If you are interested in buying a new or a used piano, drop by the Democrat office, we know of some good bargains, reasonable priced and terms to reliable parties.

Mayor and Mrs. Harry Gordon, A. D. and Harris Milton Gordon have returned to Columbiana from a vacation spent on Miami Beach.

Miss Ruth Luck, after a two weeks vacation spent in Florida, has returned with the much coveted Florida Tan.

Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Christian joined a party in Birmingham last Friday and will spend their summer recreation along the Florida Coast line.

Everybody we know is Florida bound for a vacation—but "the old Rockin' Chair" 's still "Got Me"—and its monotonous rhythm continues to be the theme song down our way.

We have been asked IF we would exchange fruit—or farm products for a subscription. We say SURE—bring 'em in! Glad to do it!

IT PAYS TO ADVERTISE IN THE DEMOCRAT

"It pays to advertise in the Democrat" says Carl Grouby, who ran a classified ad for a Persian Cat on last Thursday—and Thursday night, the little KITTY KAT was brought to his home in an automobile, and left at his door. Baby Joe now has his play mate back—and all is well in the Grouby household.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Middleton of Raleigh, N. C., will arrive in Columbiana Friday to be guests of Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Niven Mrs Middleton will be remembered as Miss Katherine Flemming, who was Director of Child Welfare Work of Shelby County two years. From here they will motor to Mobile, New Orleans and other points. They will be joined by Mrs. Niven and Miss Jeanette Niven on this trip.

Mr. and Mrs. George M. Veazey of Monroeville spent Wednesday with Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Niven.

Mr. J. B. Turner Sr. has returned home after having spent several days in a Birmingham hospital.

BIRTHDAY ANNIVERSARIES

August is the popular month for "happy birthdays" in the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Roberts. On August 9th, many happy returns were showered upon the pretty little little Mater, Mrs. Fay Benton Roberts. On August 14, the little King of Hearts, Herry Jr., will be the center of attraction when he will blow one tiny candle from his birthday cake, and happily chalk up his first milestone. This birthday anniversary also coincided with the wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. John Benton, of Birmingham, brother of Mrs. Roberts. On August 16th, the Senior member of the attractive trio, H. M. Roberts, will receive "best wishes" and many happy returns of the day from his many friends in Columbiana.

LOCAL ORCHESTRA SCORES SUCCESSFUL DANCE HIT ON SATURDAY NIGHT

The Ten Counts of Rhythm scored a hit with followers of the terpsichorean art on Saturday night when they were greeted with the largest crowd of the season in the Masonic Hall. A delightful program of dance numbers and novelty presentations marked the occasion as one of the happiest of the mid summer entertainment offerings.

Mrs. Rosa Teague is spending a delightful vacation with her son and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. William W. Teague in Kingsport, Tenn.,

Friends of Mrs. J. R. White will be delighted to learn she is rapidly convalescing at the home of her sister, Mrs. George E. Mason in Birmingham and will possibly be able to return to her home in Columbiana, Sunday.

Miss Idell Turner is spending a few days this week in Birmingham.

Mrs. D. G. Claytor, Imogene and Roy Claytor of Little Rock, Arkansas are guests in the home of Mrs. Lena Merrell this week. Mrs. Claytor is a sister of Mrs. Merrell. Many delightful social courtesies are being planned for the entertainment of the guests from the Golden West during their stay in the Southland.

Week end guests in the lovely apartment of Mrs. Grace Carter included Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Kindred (Emma Hicks) and son Henry Garrett Kindred of Stuart, Florida. Mr and Mrs. T. B. Hamilton (Hannan Hicks) of Leeds, and Charles Kindred of Birmingham. Both Mrs. Kindred and Mrs. Hamilton are sisters of Mrs. Carter, and will be happily remembered as former residents of Columbiana.

Mr. and Mrs G R McNeil of Birmingham, were week end guests of Mr and Mrs J B Turner

Mrs. J. C. Reinhardt of Pinson, Alabama, spent several days this week with relatives in Columbiana.

MRS. LENA MERRELL ENTERTAINS DISTINGUISHED GUESTS ON WEEK END HOUSE PARTY

Mrs. Lena Merrell was the charming hostess to a group of distinguished guests during the past week end when she entertained a congenial party from the Magic City which included, Drs. Frank Kennedy, Carl Wagner, J .D. Dean, Hunter Brown, Leland Jones and Claude Vardaman of Sylacauga; Misses Mamie Mull, Lillie Mae Dean, Effie Davis and Virginia Pettus who creditably upheld the tradition of Jefferson County's loveliest.

After the dance at the Masonic Hall, an informal reception was held in the Merrell Gardens, honoring the attractive array of Magic City's "brains and beauty," which delightful courtesy was shared by the above named guests and Mr. and Mrs. Joe Stone, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Head, Mr. and Mrs. Karl Harrison, Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Duke, Frank Fulton, Judge and Mrs. W. W. Wallace of Columbiana, and Dr. and Mrs. J. A. Hines of Siluria. The popular guests of honor returning by motor to their homes on Sunday night.

Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Partain of Columbus, Mississippi, after spending a week with their son and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. T. D. Edgeworth, returned home Sunday.

Miss Geneva Brewer of Trussville, Ala., was the guest of Miss Odell Turner Tuesday. On Wednesday Misses Brewer and Turner spent the day with Mrs. B. C. Harris in Vincent and then traveled to the Magic City to spend a few days.

Misses Inez Wallace and Frances Pearson of Calera, spent Tuesday with Miss Dru Brasher

DR. E. F. SLOAN ASSUMES HIS DUTIES AS COUNTY HEALTH OFFICER

Shelby County citizens are to be congratulated upon acquiring the efficient services of Dr. E. F. Sloan as County Health Officer. Dr .Sloan is a native Alabamian, a graduate of Emory University of Atlanta, and for a number of years was connected in a professional way with the Gulf State Steel Co., in Birmingham. During the past few months Dr. Sloan has completed a course in the Alabama State Board of Health Training School located in Opelika and recently supplanted Dr. Nickson in Shelby County as County Health Officer. Dr. and Mrs. Sloan and two children are being cordially received by citizens in Columbiana and are now busily engaged in greeting their friends in the Letson Apartments.

Cullen Morgan, former Editor of the Deocmrat, now successfully engaged in the art of juggling verbs and adverbs in Hale County, was a heartily welcomed guest in the Democrat office on Monday. He tells us we missed "something great" when we failed to appear in Florence to attend the Press Association. If just "one half" the things happened which he interestedly related, we KNOW we missed something we shall always regret. Here's to better luck next time.

Frank Fulton entertained friends at a barbecue at his farm on last Thursday. After supper dancing was enjoyed by Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Duke, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Head, Mr. and Mrs. Hop Cole, Mr and Mrs. Homer Bearden, Mr. and Mrs. Alvin Bird, Mr. and Mrs. Roy Walton, Mr. and Mrs. Karl Harrison, Dr. and Mrs. Hines, Mrs. Lena Merrell, Mrs. Irene Stone, Miss Beth Wallace, Gerald Fulton, Milton Bird, Harold Harlin, Bernard Hines and Frank Fulton.

Betty Jo Black joined her cousins, Doris and Peep Harper of Birmingham on last Sunday for a trip to New Oleans as guests of Mrs. Dora Harper their grandmother.

Helen Lokey of Wilsonville left Sunday for LaFayette Inliana to visit her sister Mary Lokey Revis. Friends of Mrs. Revis will be glad to learn that she and her husband are recuperating from injuries received in an automobile accident.

Mr. and Mrs. Charlie Goodwin and daughter Vonzell, Mr. Gray Goodwin and son, Gray Davis and Mrs. Elmer McGiboney went to Birmingham Sunday to visit Mrs. Gray Goodwin and small daughter, Charlie Ann.

Mrs. Claude Fore and daughter June and Mr. Thomas Fore spent Sunday in Selma. Mrs. A. E. Whittemore went as far as Plantersville where they spent the day with relatives.

CHARLIE ANN GOODWIN

We join the many friends of Mr. and Mrs. Gray Goodwin and offer sincere congratulations upon the arrival of Charlie Ann, who was born on Wednesday, August 5th, at South Highlands Infirmary. We are eager to verify all the gloriously happy things we have heard about Columbiana's newest citizen.

AWNINGS TO FIT

Old Mattresses made new. Furniture repaired and upholstered. Draperies and Curtains. Write Sanitary Mattress and Awning Co., 431 Norton Ave., Sylacauga, Alabama. Trips made to Columbiana twice monthly. Leave your old mattresses at the Democrat Office and your new mattress will delivered.

We have received many new and renewal subscriptions this week for which we are grateful. Next year is a political year, and naturally, things will be a bit more lively—You will want to know what is happening or about to happen when the ingredients for the political pot are being tossed in the ring. If "Boulevard buzz ing" can be relied upon, there will be plenty of candidates in the race. It is up to you to name the winner! Keep informed thru the Democrat!

Billy Jean Young is visiting Mr. and Mrs. Henry Young in Birmingham this week.

The Primary Department of the Baptist Church were entertained by their teachers Tuesday afternooon with a hike and picnic.

H. E. ARCHER OF WESTOVER

We happily welcome H. E. Archer into the circle of readers this week, who is a prominent merchant and a successful one. This young man assumed the managership of the Archer Store, which has been in continuous service to this community since 1907, in 1928, and since that time the growth of his progressive business is a credit to the people whom he so efficiently serves.

Mr. Charlie Tinney and son Tom, Mayor Harry Gordon and P. O. Luck attended the ball game in Birmingham Sunday.

Mr Clayton Acker was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. John Curlee Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Holcombe and daughter, Sara Joy, of Montevallo were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. L. P. Dycus on Monday.

Misses Ethel and Ella Walton are spending a week in Birmingham, the guests of friends and relatives.

We re-welcome "Uncle Jeff Falkner" to our circle of readers this week. He states he, in some way, dropped out for a while, but has miss ed the Democrat and we in turn, have missed him. Joyously, do we travel to his home in Sterrett again this week, and will continue on our way thru 1938.

Hugh and Dickie Miller of Boothton, spent the week end in Columbiana.

Rux Carter of Birmingham, spent the week end with his Mother, Mrs. Grace Carter.

Mrs. R. H. Smith and two lovely daughters, Patsy Irene and Agnes Smith of Teaxs, are the charming house guests of Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Lyon of Columbiana. We acknowledge with appreciation an interesting visit from these guests from the Lone Star State, which we thoroughly enjoyed on Saturday.

Mrs .Ralph Hunt of Decatur, was a wee kend guest of Mr. and Mrs. Mims Roberts in Columbiana.

CLYDE BUTLER

One of the most pleasing personali ties and popular officials of Shelby County, is Clyde Butler of Pelham, Alabama, and we were delighted to welcome him in the Democrat office on Saturday, while he was in Columbiana attending his duties as License Collector for Shelby County. Tactful and efficient, Mr. Butler has made many friends since assuming this important position, and personally, we were delighted to see him again. Sure, he has a reserved seat in the wide circle of Democrat readers each week, and happily do we travel thru these columns, into his home a la journalistic route.

Eddie Watson, Manager of the Strand Theatre in Montevallo, and Dr. Floyd Lacey, Dentist of Montevallo, were distinguished visitors in the Courthouse on Saturday.

Mrs. Rose Pitts and son, John, left Columbiana Wednesday, for Chicago where they will make their future home.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN

Whoever appropriated a carton of cigarettes from a private desk in the Democrat office, on Monday, please return some!

LAST CALL FOR SUBSCRIBERS

This is the last call we shall make for subscriptions thru the paper, and unless your subscription is paid up, your name will, necessarily be taken off the list. Check your standing by the yellow label on your paper, and if you wish to continue reading the paper, send in the remuneration for our efforts to give you the most outstanding weekly in Alabama. We offer each week a complete news service of important happenings in the Nation, your State and your County. We cordially invite comparison, when and if, you find it impossible to take all County papers. If you have never been numbered among our hun dreds of readers, we shall gladly send you a sample copy, free! Let us hear from you, and we again state for the benefit of those who have asked it, we will accept produce, fruits, etc., in exchange for your subscription. Come to see us when in Columbiana.

Heart Drifts

IF YOU RECALL

If you recall—I hardly think you will
And yet you may—a boardwalk by the sea,
And something of the miles of misty dreams
Your spirit walked while you tramped there with me;
Then it may be that you would like to know
The ocean has not quieted, my dear
(Although we find our dreams hold briefer fire,
And less of thunder each succeeding year.)

You told me once the color of the stars
Is varied due to chemical content;
Green, silver, blue—and I believe I smiled,
I thought of it tonight—unchanged, the stars
Shine on the sea and light the dusty sand;
The walk is gone, nor can we take again,
The broken path we traveled hand in hand.

COMPETITORS

Jealousy is a master weaver
Who weaves ugly deeds into a dress
He uses scorn for his mighty loom
And makes life a web of sadness.

Love is a weaver too,
A weaver of a beautiful scheme,
Who uses laughter for his loom,
And makes life a most gorgeous dream.

—Louise Ellis .

SIMILE

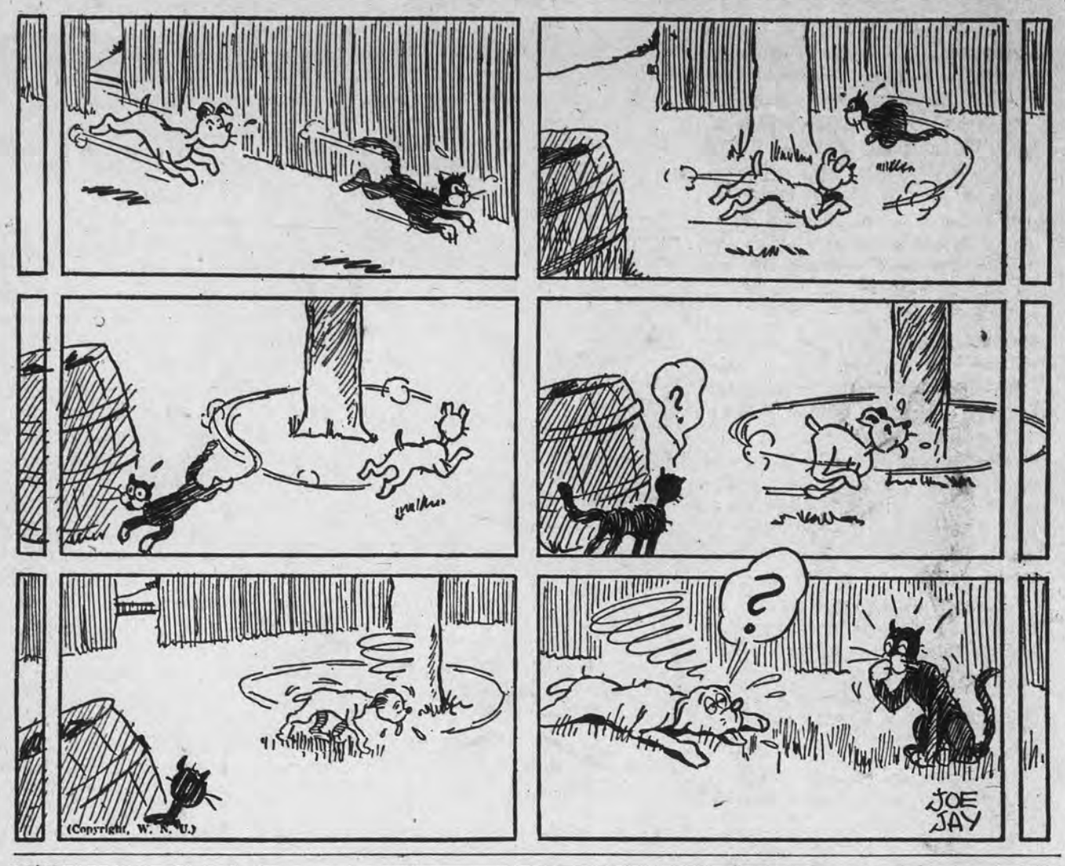
As rust corrodes the substance of a metal,
Gnawing deep until the heart is found;
As spiders suck the sweetness from a petal,
So guilt defiles the conscience—without sound.

OLD SONG

"I have not played in months," you said,
Bending above the instrument your dusky head;
And then with fingers subtle, sure, and strong
You brought to life old melody—old song.
Back from the high-selved walls the echo came,
Much as the fire flings out rose-amber flame;
And in the rustling twilight, dear, I knew
Once more the gracious loveliness of you.

—Contributed.

FIRST STAR



Oh little star that lightly crossed
The bars of dusk, alone,
Lest loveliness so frail be lost ,
I claim you for my own!

—E. F.

Lightning and thunder I love
And rushing wind and rain
Thus nature scolds the world
And starts it fresh again.

ALONG THE HIGHWAY

"A friend in need is a friend indeed."

"I'm a true friend, old man; have you a fiver you can spare?"

Expensive Lesson

Harold—She says she thinks she can learn to love me.

Bill—Well, that seems encouraging—but still you don't look happy.

Harold—No; I took her out last night and the first lesson cost me my whole week's wages.—Washington Post.

Sizing It Up

"This can opener is very popular."

"Seems a trifle large for my kitchenette."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

HIS TRADE-MARK

"Everything he sells smells of smoke."

"Fire-sale merchant, I suppose?"

"No—dealer in bacon and hams."

CAP AND BELLS

NEXT, PLEASE!

"No, sir," said the barber as he lathered his customer's face. "I used to give credit, but nobody asks for it now."

"Oh," said the customer, surprised, "why is that?"

"Well, I got tired of keeping books, and so whenever a man asked for credit I used to put a little nick in his nose with the razor and keep tally that way. Nowadays they all seem to prefer paying on the nail."

The customer fidgeted in his chair, and then felt his pocket.

"I suppose," he said, "you have no objections to being paid in advance?"—Answers Magazine.

HELPED HIM ALONG

"After reading Bob a lecture, Tom kicked him out."

"Added a foot note, so to speak."

In Reverse

He was a congressman, but kindness dictates that he shall remain nameless.

To a friend who had expressed some doubt regarding his policies, he retorted, "I'll have you know, sir, that I am walking in the footsteps of George Washington!"

"I see you are," replied the friend; "but for some reason unknown to me, you are headed the wrong way."

Laissez Faire

"Isn't our friend, the political boss, rather abrupt and dictatorial?"

"Yes," answered Senator Sorghum. "He won't last much longer."

"What are you going to do about it?"

"Nothing. Simply let ill nature take its course."

Hard on Him

Bangs—My wife is reducing by taking exercise. She walks two miles a day and rows a boat a mile.

Rangs—My wife is not reducing but she takes plenty of exercise, the exercise consisting of jumping at conclusions and running up bills.—Florida Times-Union.

Twice Plastered

"You say this house is double plastered?"

"Sure. Once by the plasterers. Once by the mortgage company."—Southern Lumber Journal.

CHEER UP, BOY

Miss Lovely—What's the matter, Mr. Shye? You seem nervous—have you lost anything?

Mr. Shye — Well—er—I—I think I've lost my nerve!

Confidential

Mother—But, darling, you're using the pen without ink.

Daughter (aged nine)—Yes, mummy, this letter is very confidential.

Overheard

Chauffeur—I'll bet you were startled when you heard that the master and his wife were going to separate.

Maid—I was so startled that I nearly broke my head on the door knob.

No Ovation

The actor was visibly downcast.

Wife—Did you get any applause?

Actor—Yes, it sounded like a caterpillar crawling over a Persian carpet whilst wearing rubber shoes.

Association of Ideas

"Last year I was in Ceylon during an earthquake. Everything rocked and rattled, the house creaked, the china flew about."

"That reminds me! I must fetch my wife from the station."

Cynically Defined

"Father," said the small boy, "what is a philosopher?"

"A philosopher, my son, is usually a man who is trying to jolly himself into the belief that he is happy though poor."

WHO'S NEWS THIS WEEK...

By Lemuel F. Parton

"Spiritual Salesman" Aids the Oxford Movement.

NEW YORK.—Word keeps drifting into this office that the Oxford movement is gaining momentum in the trouble zones of labor, diplomacy and incipient war and carnage. The story persists that its emissaries, having converted powerful Chinese, brought about the rescue of Chiang Kai-Shek when he was kidnaped and prevented civil war; that their followers now include high officials of Japan and that they are working zealously, and with hopes of success, to calm the quarrel between China and Japan.

No verification as to specific accomplishment can be obtained, but this writer is reliably informed that they have enlisted powerful political and business leaders in Europe and the Orient and that they are concentrating on certain dangerous situations.

Frankly, they are evangels to the rich and powerful, as they say the hope of the world lies in inducing a spiritual change in those who own and operate it. That possibly may go into the files of history as something new.

In the news this week is Rev. Samuel Moor Shoemaker, who has been talking over in America as Dr. Frank N. D. Buchman, founder of the movement, is busy with the world organization. In London, he is prominent in the proceedings of the convocation of 400 Oxford movement leaders in thirty-five countries. From the conference come stories of employers and labor leaders making concessions under the leadership of the "Christian revolutionaries" and averting strikes.

Dr. Shoemaker is pastor of Calvary Protestant Episcopal church of New York. For the last few years he has been preaching that the old evangelism had failed and that a new dynamic creed was necessary. He became active in the Oxford movement in 1932, since then a vigorous expounder of its faith.

He insists that only by an enlightened and aggressive mobilization of spiritual forces can civilization be saved. He is a good looking, highly urbanized cleric, usually wearing a modish gray business suit. He calls himself a "spiritual salesman." This might convey the erroneous idea that he is an "Elmer Gantry." He is quite the contrary, never seeking personal publicity, and building a reputation as one of the church's leading scholars, with his authorship of nine books in the field of religious research and polemics.

He was born and reared in Baltimore, attended Princeton university, later taking his doctorate in theology. In his earlier years he was a teacher and evangelist in China and it is understood that this experience has made him particularly effective in the peace and regeneration activities in China.

Soviet Liquidator.

IN ONE way, at least, Soviet Russia is like traditional America. The postmaster is the patronage dealer. Nikolai Ivanovich Yezhov, receiving the order of Lenin after his management of the recent "liquidations," has a three-fold office which includes control of posts and telegraphs, the selection of personnel for important posts and command of the secret political police.

He is regarded as second only to Stalin in power and the prevailing conjecture among many observers is that he may be Stalin's successor.

His predecessors in office were grim, scowling men. He was elevated in September, 1936, with national acclaim as "a man who knows how to smile." Forty-two years old, he has been tagged by the correspondents as a "mystery man," just now unveiled by the newspapers as a handsome, personable citizen who looks as if he had just been picking daisies, rather than doing a rush job of "liquidating."

He is a certified proletarian, a factory worker at fourteen and military commissioner with various Bolshevik units in the revolution. In 1929 and 1930 he was vice-commissioner of agriculture, and in 1934 became a member of the central committee of the Communist party and of the powerful party control commission.

But, for the most part, he has worked quietly behind the scenes, rarely seen, saying little, adroitly gathering strands of power. His control of posts and telegraphs dates from 1928, his other offices having been added later. He is one of the party's five secretaries and a candidate for membership in the Politburo, the high peak of power in the party organization.

City in Great Britain

A town in Great Britain or Ireland is not called a city unless there is a cathedral in it. But occasionally a place in which there is no cathedral is made a city by royal order, as, for example, Plymouth, England, with a population of 220,000, in which there is no cathedral, was made a city by order of the king.

Watch Your Kidneys!

Help Them Cleanse the Blood of Harmful Body Waste

Your kidneys are constantly filtering waste matter from the blood stream. But kidneys sometimes lag in their work—do not act as Nature intended—fail to remove impurities that, if retained, may poison the system and upset the whole body machinery.

Symptoms may be nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—a feeling of nervous anxiety and loss of pep and strength.

Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder may be burning, scanty or too frequent urination.

There should be no doubt that prompt treatment is wiser than neglect. Use Doan's Pills. Doan's have been winning new friends for more than forty years. They have a nation-wide reputation. Are recommended by grateful people the country over. Ask your neighbor!

"LITTLE STORIES FOR BEDTIME"

by Thornton W. Burgess

SAMMY JAY CALMS DOWN

EVERYBODY on the Green Meadowns and in the Green Forest who heard Sammy Jay thought he had gone crazy. He certainly acted as if he were crazy. He couldn't sit still long enough to answer questions, but flew here and flew there, and flew everywhere, all the time screaming so fast that he mixed his words all up. It was no wonder that his neighbors thought Sammy Jay was crazy.

But he wasn't. No, sir, he wasn't. He was just excited, terribly excited. And it was all because of what he had seen deep in the Green Forest. But his little neighbors didn't know anything about this, and so they thought that something was wrong with Sammy's head, and they said to each other: "Poor Sammy

He hunted up Unc' Billy Possum and asked him what all the fuss was about.

Jay. Isn't it too bad? What could have happened to make him go crazy?"

Now, all this made Sammy worse than before. You know, when you try to tell a thing and people cannot understand you, you are very apt to grow impatient. Most people are, anyway. And it was so with Sammy Jay. He tried to tell what he had seen, but was so excited that his words tumbled over each other and were so mixed up that no one could understand what he was trying to tell, and this made Sammy more excited than ever, so that his talk was more mixed up than ever. Worse still, he began to lose his temper, and he quite lost it when he happened to overhear some of his neighbors say that he certainly was crazy. For the time being he quite forgot everything else and just told everybody what he thought of them, and what he told them wasn't at all nice.

Now, about this time along came Sammy's cousin, Blacky the Crow. He heard Sammy calling his neighbors bad names, and he heard the other little people saying that Sammy was crazy. He hunted up Unc' Billy Possum and asked him what all the fuss was about. Unc' Billy told him how Sammy Jay had come screaming about something he had seen deep in the Green Forest, and how nobody could make any sense of what he said. "He told us that it had great, big claws in its mouth," said Unc' Billy, grinning at the memory. "Do you wonder, Br'er Crow, that we uns think he is foolish in his haid?"

Blackie said he didn't wonder at all, and then flew away to look for Sammy Jay. He had no trouble finding him, for he had only to listen to hear Sammy's angry voice. He flew right over to where Sammy was.

"You come over to the Lone Pine with me!" said he, sharply.

Now if there is any one in all the Green Forest or on the Green Meadows for whom Sammy Jay has respect it is for his big cousin, Blackie the Crow. You see, smart and sly and clever as Sammy Jay is, Blacky the Crow is smarter and more sly and more clever, and Sammy knows it. So when Blacky told him to come to the Lone Pine with him, Sammy went.

"Now, Sammy, tell me all about it," said Blacky, when they were comfortably seated in the Lone Pine. So Sammy began at the beginning and told his story, and this time he told it quite straight, for every time he began to get excited Blacky would fix his sharp eyes on him in a way that made Sammy feel uncomfortably, and he would at once calm down. It was a queer story Sammy told, and when he had finished Blacky the Crow looked as if he didn't believe a word of it. Poor Sammy saw this.

"You don't think I am crazy, too, do you, Cousin Blacky?" he asked.

"I don't know," replied Blacky. "I really don't know what to think."

Lesson for August 15

GOD GIVES LAWS TO A NATION.

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 20:1-17.
GOLDEN TEXT—Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind . . . Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thy self. Matt. 22:37, 39.
PRIMARY TOPIC—God's Good Laws.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Before the Mount of God.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Why a Nation Needs Laws.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Basic Laws for a Nation's Life.

Basic laws have been laid down by God for the orderly administration of his universe. Men see them clearly in the physical universe, although at times they do not recognize the One who created all things.

Physical laws are of great importance, but of even deeper significance are the moral and spiritual laws which control the human life. There is in the world a moral law—a distinction between right and wrong—which man may ignore only to his own sorrow, and which he cannot abrogate or destroy. All laws of men which are true and right are founded on this underlying moral law, and are in reality simply a development and interpretation of "God's Code of Morals"—the Ten Commandments.

These commandments given to Israel at Mt. Sinai are worthy of careful study on the part of every reader. They may be grouped under two divisions.

I. A True View of God (vv. 1-11). The first and most important question to be asked regarding any law is, "By whom was it established?" Legislation by an unauthorized person or organization has no power over others. Who gave the ten commandments? Verse 1 tells us "God spake all these words."

Men sneer at theology as being out - moded, but the fact is that Christian doctrine is the only safe foundation for Christian character. Unless my view of God is right, my life will be wrong. Until I know him I will not appreciate the authority of his law.

1. Whom to worship (vv. 2-5). There can be but one true God, and he alone is to be worshiped. He is a personal being, ready to enter into communion with each one of us. No image can take his place.

2. How to worship (vv. 6, 7). We are to love him and keep his commandments. There is to be no sham about this, for no matter how sweet and pious may be the praise and prayer of a man, he has taken the Lord's name in vain unless he keeps the Lord's commandments by holy living.

3. When to worship (vv. 8-11). God has ordained that man should not incessantly bear the burden of toil. He is to have a day of rest and a time for worhip, undisturbed by the duties and responsibilities of daily labor. America needs a mighty stirring up about the desecration of the Lord's day.

II. A Right Relationship to Man (vv. 12-17).

To be right with God means that we will also be right with our fellow man.

1. Family life (v. 12). The fifth commandment has to do with the relation between child and parent. There is a plain and direct command that father and mother should be honored. Only in respect and obedience to parents can the child possibly find true and proper development.

2. Physical life (vv. 13, 14). God is interested in our bodies. Already we have noted his provision for a day of rest each week. Now we are reminded of the sanctity of human life. "Thou shalt not kill," and remember there are many other ways to kill a man than by shooting him. Dr. Wilbur M. Smith makes a telling point by reminding us that we may kill others by selling them tainted food, intoxicating liquors, or "dope;" by neglect of duty, by careless driving, by failing to provide employees with sanitary and healthful surroundings.

There is another way that the body may be destroyed—by its misuse in adulterous living.

3. Social life (vv. 15-17). "Thou shalt not steal" — and remember any dishonest appropriation of what does not belong to you is stealing—call it what you will. And "false witness"—how it has honeycombed our very civilization. Not a little of it is found within the church, more shame upon us! Lastly, we come to "covetousness'—which has been called one of "the respectable sins of nice people." It is subtle and often hidden. Let us root it out of our own lives by God's grace.

Enthusiasm in Work

Enthusiasm is the element of success in everything. It is the light that leads and the strength that lifts men on and up in the great struggles of scientific pursuits and of professional labor. It robs endurance of difficulty, and makes a pleasure of duty.—Bishop Doane.

A Translation

Let us learn what death is. It is simply a translation; not a state, but an act; not a condition, but a passage.

Ask Me Another?

A Quiz With Answers Offering Information on Various Subjects

1. What causes leaves to change color in autumn?
2. Who said, "It is much easier to be critical than to be correct"?
3. Which are the lightest birds in proportion to their size that fly?
4. There were how many signers of the Declaration of Independence?
5. What is the total number of war medals that have been given to soldiers? Which medal was most widely distributed?
6. Are car colors restricted in Japan?

Answers

1. Gradual formation of cells at the stem of the leaf finally shuts off the supply of chlorophyl, or green coloring matter, and starts the formation of the gaudy autumnal colors.

2. The expression was used by Benjamin Disraeli in the house of commons on January 24, 1860.

3. The birds with great powers of flight, such as the sea-gull, are the lightest birds to fly. The common gull weighs only a quarter of a pound. Its bones are hollow and filled with air.

4. There were 56 signers of the Declaration of Independence.

5. The total of medals on record at the War department is 1,543,-721. The Victory medal, issued after the World war, is the most widely distributed.

6. In Japan only imperial household cars may be painted maroon, and no cars except hearses may be painted yellow, which to the natives signifies mourning.

Household Questions

Removing Tar.—Tar is easily removed from the hands and clothing with lard, followed by warm water and soap.

* * *

A Refreshing Drink.—Rhubarb juice makes a good beverage of pleasing tart flavor. Clarify the juice with water and add sugar to taste. It may also be combined with fruit juices.

* * *

Washing Linoleum.—Dissolve a lump of sugar in the water when washing linoleum or oilcloth, and a brilliant polish will result.

* * *

Removing Wallpaper.—To remove wallpaper quickly, put a heaped tablespoonful of saltpetre to a gallon of water and apply freely with a whitewash brush while the water is very hot. The paper then can be stripped from the walls quite easily.

THE LANGUAGE OF YOUR HAND

By Leicester K. Davis
Public Ledger, Inc

THE fourth finger, or Finger of Mentality, indicates the quality and amount of mental force which is at the disposal of the individual. Its place among the finger elements and their indications of mind qualities represents the power of the inner self.

Familiarize yourself thoroughly with each of the types of fourth fingers which we are now to analyze, and you will be able to tell at a glance what kind of mental force its owner has at his or her command.

Finger of Normal Mentality.

The characteristics of this type are straightness, strength and moderate length. Such a fourth finger is usually smoothly knuckled, well fleshed and slightly tapered. The under side of the nail tip is rather full and moderately rounded, with the nail either square or slightly ovaled, but always well set.

With the hand extended wide, the finger stands fairly close to the third finger. Under backward pressure, moderate flexibility is felt throughout the finger. With the fingers pressed closely together, the tip falls even with or slightly below that of the third finger.

A fourth finger answering to this description indicates that its possessor has adequate mental force to carry out ideas in the manner indicated by the second finger, and through the creative outlets indicated by the third finger, the characteristics of which have been given in previous lessons.

Elephants Like to Be Chained

It is said that elephants like to be chained because it gives them a feeling of security and assurance that their beds will not be disturbed. Native keepers in India often make chains of nothing more formidable than straw with which to humor their charges.

GRAPHIC GOLF

By BEST BALL

SETS PRO PACE

ALF PADGHAM was the British professional golfer of the year 1936. His crowning achievement was winning the British Open title but even prior to this event he had won several major events. His yearly earnings total as well as his average score would compare favorably with that of high bracketed American pros. To win such an amount of money in English tournaments, one must have a monopoly on the prize events and it is just such a golf tycoon that Padgham proved to be. Padgham can put plenty of power and subsequent distance to his drives but they are not the result of great physical leverage but rather the product of smooth, leisurely swinging. This is the hallmark of the consistent golfer who can shoot par golf for round after round. Bobby Jones once observed that he had never known a first class golfer who did not possess large hands and feet. Padgham can boast of the former in good measure. To the English observer they compare favorably with Harry Vardon's, which means the ultra in British praise. While Padgham's game is now well rounded there was a time when his putting was the weak sister of his game. Practice cured this and his smooth flowing stroke is now good enough to more than hold its own with golf's greatest.

Invented Electric Battery

Allessandro Volta invented the first electric battery—a crude pile of silver coins and zinc discs, laid alternately one upon the other with pieces of moist cloth in between. Volta fastened wires to the top and bottom of the pile, joined the two together and produced, for the first time, a steadily flowing current of electricity.

BECAUSE in Firestone Standard Tires —

YOU GET EXTRA PROTECTION AGAINST BLOWOUTS — eight extra pounds of rubber are added to every 100 pounds of cord by the Firestone patented Gum-Dipping process. By this process every cord in every ply is saturated with liquid rubber. This counteracts internal friction and heat that ordinarily cause blowouts.

YOU GET EXTRA PROTECTION AGAINST PUNCTURES—because under the tread are two extra layers of Gum-Dipped cords.

YOU GET EXTRA PROTECTION AGAINST SKIDDING—because the tread is scientifically designed.

YOU GET LONGER NON-SKID MILEAGE because of the extra tough, long-wearing tread.

Before leaving on your vacation trip, join the Firestone SAVE A LIFE Campaign. Let your Firestone Dealer or Firestone Auto Supply & Service Store equip your car with a set of new Firestone Standard Tires—today's top tire value.

Wild Species of Bananas

There are about 60 wild species of bananas, varying in many characteristics, along with some 200 cultivated varieties. The wild ones are widely distributed over tropical Africa, Asia, Australia, and many islands. They range in stature from four to forty feet. Some are without edible fruits; others are beautiful in foliage. Some leaves are green with red mid-ribs and veins. One has leaves striped with rose and white while another is blotched with irregular patches of brownish wine-color. However, the large Abyssinian type may have been the first of note, for it is represented in ancient Egyptian sculpture.—Los Angeles Times.

Two Types of Coloring

There are two major types of coloring pigments used in paints: Natural earth colors and manufactured colors. Earth colors are mined. These are the ochres, siennas, umbers, iron oxides, etc. Manufactured colors are produced in chemical laboratories. These are the yellows, greens, blues and brighter shades of red.

Greatest Gambling Resort

Macao, said to be the world's greatest gambling resort, is forty miles by steamer from Hongkong. It is the oldest European settlement in China, settled as a colony by the Portuguese in 1557. At one time Macao was a great commercial city, but its trade has dwindled to almost nothing, although its opium dealing still affords a good living to many residents of the island.

Named "Old Glory"

Captain Driver of Salem in 1831 commanded the brig Charles Doggett, which sailed on its famous voyage which resulted in the rescue of the mutineers of the British ship Bounty. A letter acknowledging this service contains Driver's autograph dated November 16, 1880, and bears the words "My ship, my country, and my flag, Old Glory." It may be fairly assumed, therefore, that the phrase "Old Glory" originated with Captain Driver. The flag which was so designated by him was presented to him by a friend before starting on this voyage. It is still preserved in the Essex institute, Salem, Mass.

Early Chamber of Commerce

The Hanseatic league was a great trading association of the Middle Ages, which included all the principal towns in northern Germany. The league protected merchants against pirates, thieves and hostile governments, and in return exacted perfect obedience from its members. A whole city would be held responsible for the offense of one of its citizens and obliged to punish the wrongdoer.

Famous Sanctuary in England

The most famous sanctuary of old England was the cathedral in Durham. Anyone, irrespective of his crime, was safe from all pursuers when he reached its front door and grasped its sanctuary knocker. For 37 days he was given food and a bed and then, if no pardon had been obtained, he was given the white cross of the Sanctuary Man and allowed to escape from the country.—Collier's Weekly.

Kosciuszko's Tomb

The tomb of Kosciuszko, who served as Washington's adjutant during the Revolutionary war, is now a vault of the Cathedral of Cracow, in Poland. Every year hundreds of Americans visit it and the huge mound of earth which the Polish people built to honor him. The dirt for the mound was brought by peasants from all over the country in their long-flowing sleeves and aprons.

The meanest man is the one who begs wife not to work so hard. He knows she will continue slaving so long as he begs her to quit.

Evils of Civilized Life

Long ago Aristotle pointed out that the evils of civilized life are not caused by the system of private property, but rather by the wickedness of human nature.

Angora Wool Does Not Expand

Angora wool does not grow after being knitted into a garment. The lengthy fuzz that appears on the wool is due to the stretching qualities of the wool itself, and in some cases to the type of twist used in its manufacture.

Qualifications for President

The Constitution defines the legal qualifications for President of the United States as a natural born citizen of the United States who has attained the age of thirty-five years and has been for 14 years a resident within the United States.

"Barbs," an Abbreviation

"Barbs" is the abbreviation for barbarians. The allusion is to the fact that among the Greeks, as early as the time of Homer, those who could not speak the Greek language were known as barbarians.

Pronunciation of America

The late Dr. W. E. Barton says in his "The Life of Abraham Lincoln": "In Lincoln's day hardly anyone said Americah; now and then someone said Americur; but Lincoln and most of his fellow countrymen said Amerikay."

Custom Among Pigmies

An unusual custom among the pigmies was to cut off one of the left fingers when a woman marries. If she marries, off came another finger. And so on until a five-husband wife didn't have anything but a stump on her left hand. Naturally remarriage very seldom went that far.

National Forest Preserve

Our national forest preserve in the continental United States is over 140,000,000 acres.

Formosa, Rich Island

Although not so well known, Formosa rates as one of the richest islands of the world. It is about 350 miles long and 100 miles wide and is located just 100 miles off the South China coast. It is separated from the mainland by the Formosan straits, an important body of water which must be traversed by all American and European trans-Pacific and 'round-the-world passenger and cargo steamers.

KEEPING a home right up to the minute, modern and comfortable, is no easy job as you well know—you women particularly. The living room furniture gets out-of-date—new curtains must be purchased—the kitchen needs a new refrigerator. Usually, however, three or four days in the Spring are enough to make everything spic and span.

But here, in your "Home Sweet Home on Rails" it's a different story. In order to give you clean, cool, modern travel comforts—and safe, dependable delivery of your every-day commodities, we can't let a day go by without replacing something.

Right now, we're sweeping out over five thousand freight cars, and buying over six million dollars worth of new ones just to give you better service. And we've just expended well over a million dollars to completely air-condition every main-line L & N train, except locals.

Yes, neighbor, when the home you keep is 5,000 miles long, spread over 13 states and is visited by millions of people who enjoy its genuine southern hospitality, well, Spring cleaning just has to go on right through the year. Yet with it all, it costs only 1½c to 3c a mile to be a guest in your "Home Sweet Home on Rails"—less than 1c a ton-mile on an average to use this safe, dependable freight transportation. Won't you think of the L & N, neighbor, when next you travel or plan a shipment?

UNDER THE COURTHOUSE DOME

According to the Blue Book of Southern Progress the number of manufacturing establishments in the South increased approximately 21 per cent from 1933 through 1935.

There are 1213 cotton goods manufacturing establishments in the Nnited States. Of this number 709 are in the South and 75 are in Alabama. Those in Alabama employed an average of 31,431 wage earners who were paid in 1935, $18,339,000. The value of the products of these Alabama establishments is given at $84,815,000.

The State of Alabama owns 4,221 buildings. The appraised value of these buildings, including contents, is $36,079,850. This property is insured for $27,777,245, against loss by fire. The State itself is carrying $18,566,815 of this insurance and the balance is reinsured in old line companies. The State also carries tornado insurance on this property to the amount of $26,942,690. The total fire losses paid last year were $227,863.74, and the total tornado losses amounted to $8,833.61.

There are two Counties in Alabama that have never had an Almshouse. They are Monroe and Winston

The average number of people residing in Alabama per square mile is 51. Contrast this with Rhode Island which has 551, Massachussetts 515, Connecticut 323, New York 265, and Ohio with 162.

4-H Club Members In Muscle Shoals

AUBURN — Approximately 3,000 4-H club boys and of 31 Alabama counties are making tours of the Muscle Sheals area, August 11 to August 28. Headquarters for the club boys has been established at Tuscumbia Fair grounds, and guides have been appointed to direct the county groups to Wilson Dam, through soil erosion demonstrations, to Wheeler Dam, and other isteresting places in the Tennessee Valley.

The trips are giving club boys first hand information on the soil conservation and soil building program being carried on by the Tennessee Valley Authority and the Alabama Extension Servcie, says L. L. Self, State boys 4-H club leader.

The victims of last year's automobile accidents have not even served as warnings to those scheduled to die this month.

INTERNES CAN'T TAKE MONEY

TWO FROM SHELBY GRADUATE FROM ALABAMA POLY

AUBURN—Among the 133 candidates for graduation at the summer commencement exercises of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute on Friday evening, August 20, there are two from Shelby County.

They are: Percy Nolen, Siluria; and Joe W. Stone, Columbiana.

The exercises will be held at the State Camp on the south campus with the baccalaureate address by Col. T. D. Samford, of Opelika. Dr. Zebulon Judd, summer session director, will present the graduates to Dr. L. N. Duncan, president, who will award the degrees.

The number of graduates and those who receive their Master of Science degrees will be approximately 400 this year, including the mid-year graduates in January and those at the commencement exercises held in May.

AUTO DEATHS IN STATE INCREASING

MONTGOMERY—Half a hundred persons were killed on Alabama's highways in July, 12 times as many as in June, the monthly report of the State Highway Patrol showed.

The number of persons seriously injured doubled, jumping from 16 in June to 33 in July, and those slightly hurt increased from 59 to 85.

Arrests for practically all types of violations increased, with the total number of arrests jumping from 1257 to 1565.

For the first time in the patrol's history, type of arrests went beyond violation of highway laws and included violation of the prohibition law, gambling laws, revenue laws, carrying concealed weapons and vagrancy.

4-H CLUB CAMP

100 boys and girls enjoyed the annual 4-H Club Camp at Blue Creek Camp near Clanton on August 10th, 11th and 12th. School busses picked up the groups in their respective communities arriving at camp in time for a picnic lunch Tuesday. Horseshoe and washer tournaments, swimming, boating and boxing matches filled the afternoon., An amateur program given by the boys and girls furnished entertainment for the group that night. Mr. Fant, Mr. Ivey and Mr. Wingard, County Agents from Chilton County came down in the afternoo nto assist with the program and remained over for the amateur performance. Mrs. Lauderdale, Miss Tate and Miss Laura Garrett were present to help Miss Watson with the girls part of the program. Homer White of Maylene and Sara Nell Stockdale of Calera were chosen as the camp's biggest pigs when they won the watermelon eating contest. Perhaps the most entertaining feature of the evening was the blind folded boxing match refereed by Mr. Ivey and Mr. Wingard.

Early the next morning the boys accompanied by Mr. Clark and Mr. Lauderdale left by boat for a trip through Mitchell Dam. The girls accompanied by the home agent went on a scavenger hike. More swimming and boating in the afternoon followed by stunt night ended the second day's program. Stunts were originated and given by the various groups and included everything from an impersonation of a Model T Ford in action to acrobatic performances. Mr. Lyle Brown with the State Extension Service at Auburn was present to assist with this program.

Thursday morning the girls accompanied by the home agent made a boat trip to Mitchell Dam while the boys completed their horseshoes and washer tournaments.

The group broke camp immediately after lunch with nothing more than a few cases of sunburn stumped toes and innumerable scratches to indicate the happy three days spent together.

The Home Agent and County Agents are particularly grateful to Mrs. Billingsby, the camp director, for her co-operation and for the delicious meals served to th egroup.

Black Is Third Alabamiam Picked For Supreme Bench

Senator Hugo Black, who was nominated to the Supreme Court by President Roosevelt in an unexpected move Thursday, may become the third Alabamian to serve on the nation's hightest tribunal, and the first ciitzen of this state on the bench since the War Between the States.

Exactly 100 years ago, John McKinley, a resident of Florence, was named by President Martin van Buren to the court and served until his death in 1852. President Franklin Pierce appointed John Archibald Campbell to the high court in 1853, and he served until 1860, when he resigned.

McKinley, who was born in Culpeper County, Virgina, in May 1780, moved to Alabama and opened his first law office at Huntsville in 1819, after having read and practiced law in Louisville, Ky., for several years. He went to the State Legislature in 1820, and two years later lost a federal Senate seat to William Kelley of Madison, by one vote.

He won the Senate election in 1826 and served until the expiration of his term in 1831, when he returned to the State Legislature. In 1833 he went back to Washington, this time representing the Lauderdale district in the House.

McKinley served in the House until 1837 when he was appointed to the Senate to succeed former Gov. Gabriel Moore. Before taking his seat that year, however, Van Buren named him to the Supreme Court. Most of his later life was spent in Washington and Louisville, Ky., where he died in 1852 while still a member of the court.

John A. Campbell, the second Alabamian to serve on the court, was born in Washington, Ga., June 24, 1811, of Scottish parents. He spent his early life in that state, graduating from Franklin College, Athens, with high honors, at the age of 15. He was appointed to West Point by John C. Calhocn in th esame year, 1826, and remained until his fathers death forced resignation ni 1829.

Campbell then moved to Montgomery, where he began the study of law and was admitted to the bar in 1830. He served in the State Legislature in 1836, refusing to accept Gov. Clay's appointment to the State Supreme Court, In 1840, he moved to Mobile, where he was associated with the law firm of Gordon & Chandler until 1842, when he returned to the State Legislature. this time representing the coast city.

Campbell again refused a seat on the State Supreme Court bench in 1852, but a year later he accepted President Franklin Pierce's appointment to the federal high court.

Realizing fully the impending strug gle between the North and the Soutn which was just about to break. Campbell resigned his seat on May 1, 1860, and for the next year become an informal mediator between the commissioners of the Confederate States and the federal authorities. He first declined a position in the Confederacy but finally accepted the post of assistant secretary of war in 1862, serving in that capacity until the close of the war.

For six months after the Appomattox surrender, Judge Campbell was confined at Fort Pulaski, Ga., and at the end of that time he was paroled, although his disabilities were never removed because he had always refused to apply for a pardon. Upon his release in 1866, he resumed law practice in Alabama and Louisianna becoming a resident of New Orleans.

All during his life he was recognized as one of the nation's foremost legal authorities. He had risen to top ranks in the Alabama bar at the early age of 27. He spent his last years in Baltimore, Mr., and died their March 13, 1889.

Black's Appointment Confirmed By Senate Vote 63 To 16, Aug. 18th

Home Coming At Lester's Chapel

Sunday, August 8th, was Home Coming Day at Lesters' Chapel. A large crowd was present for the Sun day School hour with Superintendent M. S. Buck in charge. At 11:00 A M which was the main service of the day a large group of local people as well as visitors were present After a song service led by Mr. Vekon Vick, prayer was offered by T. P. Ray, chairman of the Board of Stewards Rev. C. M. Nolen gave a history of the church Records show that the history of the church goes back something over one hundred years. The present structure erected in 1900, is the third building to be used during that period. Bro. Nolen gave the names of pastors from 1874 until the present. After announcements were made by the pastor, Rev. E. M. Barnes, D D, pastor of the church 1910-12, and now presiding elder of the Huntsville district, preached from Rev. 21:7, "He that overcometh shall inherit all things and I will be his God and he shall be my son." Dr. Barnes brought out that life is a struggle, life is a victory if man makes it such but that we shall inherit all things and in the end there shall be home coming. Dr. Barnes dismissed the congregation with prayer

At noon a bountiful feast was spread by the ladies of the church and if any one went away hungry it was their own fault.

In the afternoon, the Quartet from Blue Springs and Old Chapel gave several special numbers. We are grateful to these people for being with us on that great day. Rev. W. T Holdridge was to preach in the afternoon but was unable to be with us on account of sickness in his family. Again Dr. Barnes brought a great message on Life's Investments. After the sermon several preachers were introduced and brought words of greeting. These were: Rev. O. R Burns, of Montevallo, Rev T K Roberts and Rev W B Hope of Columbiana. Other visitors were: Mrs. O. R. Burns, Mrs T K Roberts, Mrs W B Hope and Mrs E M Barnes. The benediction was pronounced by Bro. Tom Roberts. A great day had come to an end which we trust shall be a blessing to all that were present.

Mining Death Toll For Year Reaches 22

Death came to 22 workers in Alabama ooal mines during the first seven months of this year, an increase of two fatalities over the corresponding period of last year.

W. B. Hillhouse, chief mine inspector, today had released that report, running through July

The 22 fatalities occurred during an estimated output of 8,700,000 tons against the 20 fatalities for last year's period with a production of 8,200,000 tons.

Twelve of the deaths this year were caused by rock or coal falls, against 11 from that cause in last year's period.

The number of deaths in haulage accidents jumped to seven this year, against only one for the first seven months of last year.

No deaths so far this year have been attributed to electricity, the cause of four deaths in last year's period. One death due to machinery and two listed as "miscellaneous" complete the score for this year.

Poultry breeders have tried to cross the turkey and chicken but no one seems ever to have succeeded in hatching the actual cross.

We are advised by a lady friend, apropos the unemployment situation, that the average man has 50,000,000 brain cells

DISTRICT MEETING OF BOY SCOUTS TO BE HELD AUG. 24TH

The District Meeting and the meeting of the Court of Honor, Boy Scouts of America, will be held at the Court house in Columbiana at eight o'clock Tuesday evening, August 24th. In addition to the regular officers and members of the Court of Honor, all members of the American Legion, Exchange Club, and other citizens are invited.

All Scouts who wish to pass Tenderfoot, second class, or first class tests are asked to be present. Also all first class and second class Scouts who wish to pass Merit Badge tests are asked to be present with their credentials.

It is expected that a large group of people who are really interested in boys will attend the meeting.

SHELBY COUNTY DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC HEALTH

MONTGOMERY—Pointing out that about one-half of the approximately 165,000 boys and girls who will be in the first grade of Alabama's public schools during the 1937-38 school term beginning next month will be "repeaters," who failed last year or ina previous year, Dr. J. N. Baker State Health Officer, today urged parents in all parts of the State to have their children examined for physical defects which might contribute to the new school year's failures.

"School officials tell us that the percentage o ffailures is far greater in the first grade than in any other," he said. "These officials also tell us that it costs twenty-six dollars a year to provide a child with a public school education, and, on the basis of this estimate, the first-grade 'repeaters' will increase the expense of operating the State's public schools during the next school year by $2,145,000, or more than six times the cost to the State of Alabama of maintaining the State Department of Health during the present fiscal year.

Dr. Baker declared that, while physical defects were not entirely responsible for these failures, health conditions were among the chief contributors to this heavy economic loss.

Vetch And Austrian Peas Land Builders

A. A. Lauderdale, County Agent

The greatest need on Shelby County farms today is LAND BUILDING. Hairy Vetch and Austrian Winter Peas are our best known soil building crops.

NOW is the time to see the results of the use of these winter legumes and compare the corn or cotton following these crops with cotton or corn on the adjoining farm following no legumes. I would not advise any farmer to put his money in these crops if they did not give big returns on the investment.

There are fields of corn throughout the county following vetch or peas that will produce from 30 to 40 bushels of corn per acre, and cotton that will make a bale per acre. The average corn yield in Shelby County is about 14 bushels per acre; the average cotton yield about 200 pounds lint cotton per acre.

The Experiment Station records show that a crop of vetch or Austrian peas will increase the yield 20 bushels of corn per acre, and we have found throughout the county that these figures are not too high.

In planning to plant these crops, figure 12 to 15 acres for each two horse team. The rate of seeding is 20 pounds of vetch or 30 pounds of peas per acre.

In order to be assured of a supply of seed this fall, I would advise every farmer to figur ehis needs as early as possible and place an order for seed, since planting time beings in about a month.

Let me urge again that every farmer and business man ride out to some of these farms and see what vetch and peas have done this year to make corn and cotton.

7000 Boys And Girls 4-H Club Camps

Register In Chancery 7-5-38

AUBURN—Over 7,000 Alabama 4-H club boys and girls have attended about 100 county club camps during June, July ,and August, reports T A. Sims, State 4-H club leader.

The camps were well organized for leadership training, fun and recreation, says Mr. Sims. Swimming, soft ball, singing, baseball, club stunts, treasure hunts, horse shoe pitching contests, and many other interesting activities were enjoyed.

County farm and home agents were assisted by state and local club leaders. Visitors' days brought to the camps fathers and mothers who enjoyed seeing their boys and girls enter into the spirit of and get the most possible training from their camps. County governing bodies and civic clubs co-operated in making the camps successful and enjoyable.

June Death Rate Is Higher Than May

MONTGOMERY—Deaths reported from Shelby County in June totaled 12, as compared with 14 for May, according to the monthly report of the Bureau of Vital Statistics of the State Department of Health. The County's births reported during June number 56, as compared with 38 reported in May.

In the State as a whole, reported deaths numbered 2,283 in June, as compared with 2,599 in May. The States births totaled 4,703 and 4,893 in June and May respectively.

The State's leading causes of death in June, with the number of deaths attributed to each, were as follows:

Whooping cough, 24; influenza 30; tuberculosis (all forms), 133; cancer (all forms), 137; pellagra, 28; cerebral hemorrhage, 171; heart disease, 367; pneumonia (all forms), 99; diarrhea and enteritis (under two years 97; nephritis, 171; motor vehicle accidents, 46; other forms of violence, 164.

"Who do you think will win the high jump at the track meet?"

"Jim Grasshopper—there he is now—look at that practice jump."

Disgusting

Man—Hey, Doc, Joe Dokes has been shot!

Western Doctor—Where?

Man—In the laig.

Doctor (disgustedly)—Huh, some shootin'.

It Goes Anyway

Jubb—I certainly have been pinched for money lately.

Duff—What a strange way of getting it. My wife kisses me when she wants money.

MORE SPEED, BROTHER

"If you want to fight your foot work has got to be fast."

"Yes, and it has to be just as fast if you don't want to fight."

A Few Little Smiles

TOO SMA'.

Young Angus had been out for the evening with his best girl. When he arrived home he found his father still sitting up.

"Hae ye been oot wi' yon lassie again?" he asked.

"Aye, Dad," replied young Angus. "Why do ye look sae worrited?"

"I was just wondering how much the evening cost."

"No more than half a croon, Dad."

"Aye? That was nae sae much."

"It was a' she had," said Angus.—Vancouver Province.

IN THE WAR ZONE

"Why don't you enter for the prize plan for the Universal peace?"

"What's the prize?"

"A fine, hand-polished stone war-club."

Minimum Storage

Caller—Are these the general offices of the Universal Tank and Pipe Line corporation?

Eleventh Vice President—They are.

Caller—I wish to discuss with you a safe method for storing a small quanitiy of gasoline.

V. P.—Why not try one of these pocket lighters?

Unknown

Emanuel Jackson, a mule tender, appeared one morning on crutches.

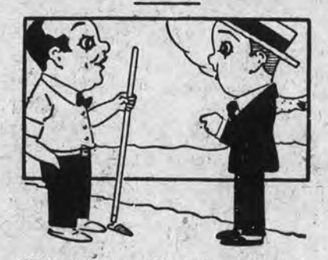
"Lawsy!" exclaimed a friend. "Ah thought yo' was one o' de bes' mule han'lers in de business."

"So Ah is," affirmed Emanuel proudly, "but we done got a mule in dis mornin' dat did not know mah reppitation."

Gnutritious!

The African explorer had seen many gnus during the day. In the evening his native cook served him a delicious steak.

"This is one of the finest steaks I've ever eaten," he explained to his guide. "Is it gnu?"



"No," said the guide. "But it's just as good as gnu."—Boys' Life.

Heart Still in the Same Place

"When we were first married you sent me flowers and matinee tickets."

"Henrietta," replied Mr. Meekton, "customs change with time. I am spending just as much now buying groceries and tickets for your lectures."

CATALOGUED VARIETY

"I'll betchu $50 y' won't get a bean off your vines this season."

"I'm on; why man, they're all in bloom now."

"Yes, but they are pea vines."

Clever

Customer—I should like that parrot. But can it talk?

Dealer—Talk! Why it flew from Paraguay to Stockholm, asking its own way all the time.

Accounted For

Father—This is the sunset my daughter painted. She studied painting abroad, you know.

Friend—Ah, that accounts for it! I never saw a sunset like that in this country.

Educated

Here's Planned Prettiness

IF AUTUMN comes will you be left behind with faded summer frocks, Madam? No, no, many times no—that is, not if you will but accept this cordial invitation from Sew-Your-Own. It's the easy way to become frock-sure of chic for yourself and your daughters, as well. So Madam, why not sew, sew, sew-your-own!

A Dutch Treat.

It isn't often mother gets a break (it's beauty before age, you know) but this trip she does. Sew-Your-Own has designed, especially for her, an all-occasion frock (above left) that's simply lovely to look at. If father's compliments have become a bit rusty from lack of use, this frock will bring them back to their former brightness. It's pretty in any fabric: gingham, silk crepe, rayon prints, percale, or sheer wool.

Sweet 'n' Simple.

It's a treat, too, for mother when she finds a dress for Little Sis that's as carefully planned as the captivating model above center. It gives the growing girl the fluffing out she needs in the shoulders, and the prettily flared skirt offers her graceful poise indoors, plus full freedom for activity out of doors. It's adorable with the collar and cuffs in white linen. It heightens the contrast of her luscious healthy suntan.

Chic for the G. F.

And a treat for all concerned is the frock Sew-Your-Own has created for The Girl Friend. She may be collegiate, high schoolish, a steno, mother's helper, or a young lady of leisure, but whatever she is she'll look the part and prettier in a take-off on Pattern 1327. It is new, novel, and easy to sew. It is undoubtedly the frock to wear when your escort, the time, and the place are important.

Pattern 1372 is designed for sizes 34 to 46. Size 36 requires 4⅞ yards of 35-inch material.

Pattern 1987 is designed for sizes 4, 6, 8, 10, and 12 years. Size 6 requires 2 yards of 35-inch material, plus ⅜ yard contrasting.

Pattern 1327 is designed for sizes 12 to 20 (30 to 38 bust). Size 16 requires 4¼ yards of 39-inch material, plus 3½ yards of cord for lacing. With long sleeves, 4⅝ yards required.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., Room 1020, 211 W. Wacker Dr., Chicago, Ill. Price of patterns, 15 cents (in coins) each.

"LITTLE STORIES FOR BEDTIME"

by Thornton W. Burgess

WHAT SAMMY JAY TOLD BLACKY THE CROW

THIS is the story, the amazing story, that Sammy Jay told to Blacky the Crow as they sat in the Lone Pine. It is the same story he had tried to tell all the little people of the Green Meadows and the Green Forest, but that in his excitement he had mixed up so that nobody could make head or tail of it, and so everybody had thought he had gone crazy.

"I had gone way, way into the Green Forest just to look around a little," said Sammy. "I had seen

Blacky shook his head. "Was it as black as mine?" he asked.

nothing and nobody for a long time, when suddenly I saw something moving on the ground. I flew over to see what it was, and when I got where I could see clearly I nearly fell from the tree in which I was sitting. Yes, sir, I was so surprised and—and frightened that I nearly fell out of that tree!"

Blacky looked as if he didn't quite believe this, but thought that Sammy was just trying to make a big story. But he didn't say anything, and Sammy went on.

"At first I thought it was Farmer Brown's boy, for the stranger was standing on two legs, just like Farmer Brown's boy, and his back was to me. But in a minute I saw he had on a black fur coat, and I've never seen Farmer Brown's boy wearing a black fur coat, have you?"

Blacky shook his head. "Was it as black as mine?" he asked.

Sammy nodded. "Just as black," said he. "In a minute he began to walk, and he didn't walk on two feet—he walked on four feet!" Sammy was beginning to get excited again. "I was so surprised that I guess I screamed. Of course, he heard me and looked up. 'Hello, Mr. Jay!' said he, and grinned, and when he grinned he showed his teeth and they were very big. 'I had begun to think that nobody lives around here and was getting kind of lonesome. You don't happen to know where there is any honey, do you?' The idea of thinking that there would be any honey as early in the spring as this! Then he walked over to a big tree and stood up and stretched his hands way up as high as he could and scratched the bark of the tree, and he has the awfulest claws you ever saw! I didn't suppose anybody ever had such claws. When I saw those I just spread my wings and flew away as fast as ever I could. And now when I try to tell about it everybody calls me crazy."

Blacky scratched his head thoughtfully and Sammy suspected that he, too, thought him crazy. "Did he have a tail?" asked Blacky.

"I—I don't know," confessed Sammy. "I didn't stop to look."

"And you say he is as big as — as Reddy Fox?" asked Blacky, his sharp eyes twinkling shrewdly.

"I said he is as big as Farmer Brown's boy!" replied Sammy indignantly.

"And he walks on four legs?" persisted Blacky.

"Yes," replied Sammy, "but he stands on two legs."

"Hm-m-m," said Blacky. "I've lived a long time in the Green Forest, but I've never seen or heard of any one like that. You are sure you did not dream it, Sammy?"

"Of course, I didn't dream it!" cried Sammy. "Did you ever know me to go to sleep in the daytime? I tell you he's a stranger!"

"Where did you say you saw him?" asked Blacky.

"Deep in the Green Forest, beyond the pond of Paddy the Beaver," replied Sammy.

"I believe I'll go have a look for myself," said Blacky. "Won't you come show me the way?"

"No, thanks," replied Sammy promptly. "I've seen him once, and that's enough!"

And so Blacky the Crow started alone to hunt for the stranger in the Green Forest.

Contents of Tobacco Smoke

Tobacco smoke contains nicotine, carbon dioxide, carbon monoxide, ammonia, aldehydes and a number of organic tarry compounds, investigators report. Although there has been disagreement as to the degree of harm resulting from the assimilation of these constituents into the body, it is generally conceded that nicotine, ammonia and tarry matter are present in amounts which could have the greatest physiological effect.

Blue for Wally

Wallis blue is the color of the front of the jacket and the softly draped, scarf-like front of the dress in this outfit of black crepe. Sleeves in the dress and jacket are black and clips are placed at each side of the neck on the dress.

When Factory Accidents Occur

Factory accidents are most likely to happen between 9:30 and 10 a. m., and between 4:30 and 5 p. m., say experts.

Lesson for August 22

THE PLACE OF RELIGION IN A NATION'S LIFE.

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 25:1, 2, 8, 9; 29:43-46; 40:34-38.

GOLDEN TEXT—Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord. Ps. 33:12.

PRIMARY TOPIC—The Meeting House.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The House of the Lord.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Why a Nation Needs Religion.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Place of Religion in a Nation's Life.

The nation of Israel was under the direct government of God—a theocracy as distinguished from a monarchy, or a democracy. God spoke to them through his servant Moses, but his relationship to the people was far more intimate than that of a distant power delivering laws through a representative. God dwelt in the midst of his people, and today we consider how he made provision for a place in which to meet with them, for a holy priesthood to minister before him, and made known his personal presence by a manifestation of his glory.

I. A Place to Meet God (Exod. 25:1, 2, 8, 9; 29:43-46).

Every place of worship, whether the tabernacle in the wilderness, or a church on a busy city street, testifies to the fact that man is indeed "incurably religious." He is a spiritual being, made by God for fellowship with himself. He is never satisfied until he meets God.

The pattern or plan for the tabernacle was given by God (v. 9), and was to be followed in every detail. But note that the people were to make a willing offering of all that was needed for its construction. God gives man the glorious privilege of partnership with him. Shortsighted and foolish is the man who grumbles because the church needs money. A father might just as well grieve because his children outgrow their clothing. Thank God if your church is alive and growing, and be glad for the opportunity to buy it some "new clothes."

Sacrificial gifts and faithful building according to God's plan, brought to completion a place of meeting which God sanctified and accepted.

II. Priests to Minister to God (vv. 44,45).

Note, first, that they were men called of God. Those who stand to minister to him for the people dare not appoint themselves, or seek an appointment by men. They must be "God-called."

They were also sanctified, or ordained, by God. Only as men act in true recognition of God's selection and setting apart of his chosen servants does ordination have real meaning.

Finally, notice that the priests were "to minister to" God. His servants are to serve him, and thus to meet the need of the people for whom they speak. They are "put in trust with the gospel," and therefore to "so . . . speak; not as pleasing men, but God" (I Thess. 2:4). If you have that kind of a pastor, praise God for him, and give him your earnest support and encouragement.

III. The Presence of God (Exod. 29:45, 46; 40:34-38).

He dwelt in the midst of his people. Christians also know what it means to have "God with us," for such is the very meaning of the name "Immanuel" (Isa. 7:14; Matt. 1:23). He it was who as the living Word "became flesh and dwelt among us" (John 1:14).

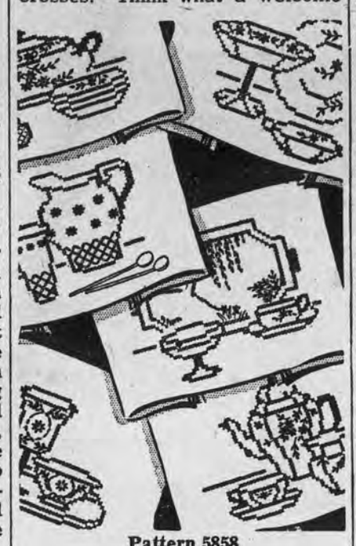
For our further instruction and blessing let us observe that when God dwelt with his people his glory "filled the tabernacle" (v. 34). Is that true of our churches? Have we so loved God and so fully yielded ourselves and our churches to him that he is free to fill the place with his glory?

The word "abode" in v. 35 is significant. What blessed peace and assurance must have come to Israel when they knew that God had come to abide with them. In this world of transitory things we need such an anchor for the soul—God's abiding presence.

But God's people must move on. There are victories to be won, a promised land to take. So we read that the cloud arose when they were to move forward, and when it was "not taken up, then they journeyed not until the day that it was taken up."

The Psalmist tells us that "the steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord" (Ps. 37:23). I believe it was George Mueller of blessed memory who inserted three words—"and the stops." The man, or the church, or the nation, that trust God, will have both "steps" and "stops" "ordered by the Lord."

Beginning of Eternal Life



Eternal life does not just mean that when our bodies die our souls last on. It means a kind of life which we can begin to live here and now, and which cannot be destroyed by death because it is united with God.—A Day Book of Prayer.

Always an Answer

A little girl was once teased by a skeptic, who remarked that God had not answered her prayer. "Yes," she said, "he answered. He said no."

Dish-Drying Is a Picnic With These

More fun than a picnic . . . drying dishes with these cross-stitched towels. Put color into them with cotton floss, and you'll have the gayest, gladdest set ever! Here's pick-up work that fairly flies for each motif's in 8-to-the-inch crosses. Think what a welcome

Income, Outgo

"My other piece of advice, Copperfield, you know. Annual income twenty pounds, annual expenditure, nineteen nineteen six, result happiness. Annual income twenty pounds, annual expenditure twenty pounds ought and six, result misery."—Dickens' Micawber advising his young friend, David Copperfield.

Household Questions

Cooking Salt Meat—Salt meat, to be tender, requires longer boiling than fresh meat.

* * *

Keeping Cut Flowers—To help prolong the life of cut flowers, wash the vases thoroughly with soap and water, and scald them.

* * *

When Using Soda—To prevent the soda taste in foods in which soda is used as a leavening agent, dissolve the soda in a small amount of liquid called for in the recipe before mixing it with the other ingredients.

* * *

Testing Fish—If fish is fresh and has been properly refrigerated from the time it was caught, it will have a little odor. If it has a strong odor do not serve it. Let your nose and eyes tell you whether or not it is usable.

QUICK! STOP CHILLS AND FEVER!

Take This Good Old Medicine for Malaria!

When you've got chills and fever, you want real and ready relief. You don't want to go through the usual old misery.

Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic is what you want to take for Malaria. This is no new-fangled or untried preparation, but a medicine of proven merit.

Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic contains tasteless quinidine and iron. It quickly relieves the chills and fever and also tends to build you up. That's the double effect you want.

The very next time you have an attack of chills and fever, get Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic and start taking it at once. All drug stores sell Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic, 50c and $1. The latter size is the more economical.

Hot Weather is Here— Beware of Biliousness!

Have you ever noticed that in very hot weather your organs of digestion and elimination seem to become torpid or lazy? Your food sours, forms gas, causes belching, heartburn, and a feeling of restlessness and irritability. Perhaps you may have sick headache, nausea and dizziness or blind spells on suddenly rising. Your tongue may be coated, your complexion bilious and your bowel actions sluggish or insufficient.

These are some of the more common symptoms or warnings of biliousness or so-called "torpid liver," so prevalent in hot climates. Don't neglect them. Take Calotabs, the improved calomel compound tablets that give you the effects of calomel and salts, combined. You will be delighted with the prompt relief they afford. Trial package ten cents, family pkg. twenty-five cts. At drug stores. (Adv.)

JOYS and GLOOMS

MANY people can safely drink coffee. But many others—and all children—should never drink it. If you suspect that the caffein in coffee disagrees with you... try Postum's 30-day test. Buy a can of Postum and drink it instead of coffee for a full month. If...after 30 days...you do not feel better, return the Postum container top with your name and address to General Foods, Battle Creek, Mich., and we will refund purchase price, plus postage! (If you live in Canada, address General Foods, Ltd., Cobourg, Ont.)

Postum contains no caffein. It is simply whole wheat and bran, roasted and slightly sweetened. It comes in two forms...Postum Cereal, the kind you boil or percolate... and Instant Postum, made instantly in the cup. Economical, easy to make, delicious, hot or iced. You may miss coffee at first, but you'll soon love Postum for its own rich flavor. A product of General Foods. (Offer expires Dec. 31, 1937.)

VILLAGE CHATTER FROM SILURIA

Again we grab a pen and come forth with a noble effort to build a piece of news (if such may be called so) to interest our readers . . . .I would have warmed the cockles of your heart to have been in on that animated discussion of books and shows down at the 'Y' one afternoon last week. Child! that was a regular review, indulged in by some five or six of our fair ladies. By the way, how many handkerchiefs did you ever require at a picture show? Ever come out with four sopping wet as did our Mary Thomason once? Something of a tear-jerker, eh? . . . Tough luck is forever befalling some of our citizens. That really was tough when Inell Booker cut her leg with a grass blade last week and had to be rushed to the hospital. According to the latest reports, she is doing nicely and will be brought home in a day or so. Careful is the word, Inell, from this on out . . . . "I scream you scream, we all scream for ice cream," Merle and Marie too, or at least it's out on them that they go tripping down to the Rock Villa every day for a dish of that most delicious of delicacies. Just what is your favorite flavor, girls? . . . . Dejected is the only adjective we can find that will describe Friday afternoons state of weather. Some citizen could be seen popping into a neighbors house with a newspaper over his or her head or a wilted old hat. "Any port in a storm" . . . . Mrs. Horton and Mrs. Thorpe decked themselves out in some good looking new togs and proceeded to take themselves a nice little trip for the week end. They made a return trip to some of the places that used to be home sweet home to them. Gorgas it was. They say in response to, "Did you have a good time?"—"Did we!" . . . Excertps from a letter to Margaret Lexie 'I stole Pats heart but Hazel is not to know anything about it. You see it was this way. We were eating watermelons the other night and just as Pat bursted his melon, the lights went out. Then's when I grabbed his heart.". "You said you had found me a man. For a minute you had me there. I couldn't imagine what you were talking about, but I fished out my dictionary and saw that a man is a human being and can be a husband (that is if you can hook one.) Well, you can bet I'm interested."—"The victrola man paid me a visit, he said he brought Nola. I looked all around and didn't see her any place. I come to find out to my surprise, it was only a record." . . . . Monteen Duke has a very charming guest this week in the person of Daphene Crow. Earl and Daphene were the picture of romance the other night strolling down the avenue in the moonlight. . . The many friends of Mrs. Ray Thornton miss her smiling countenance from among them while she is sick abed. Each and all are wishing you a speedy recovery Ruby . . . We are losing a family of good citizens to our regret, Mr. and Mrs. Willie Gardner are upstake and move away. We wish you all much luck in your new home. . . . Roscoe and Mildred seem to be having quite a big time spinning around in that shiny new coupe of Roscoe's. Oh, yes! Have you spied that beautiful diamond that Mildred is proudly sporting—boy, its a humdinger . . . . This hot weather sure is something to talk about. everybody takes to the water in the afternoons and by the way we know two little girls that get many a spanking for playing at the hydrant! Isn't that true Louise and Hazel? . . . . Our village is looking up some since so many of "our" weeds have been slaughtered. Now, if everyone would only take "Whimpy's" attitude ("I'd gladly mow your lawn if you had a lawn to mow") and fall to work, we'd really see some improvement around here. . . . Did you see all those cars parked alongside the road just this side of the John Allen Bridge Saturday night? What happened? Why someone had a wreck, what did yoo think it was, an all day singing? Nothing serious tho. Now if you don't like that tone of voice just hold your temper. Don't get mad and throw your pop corn away . . . . Stanley Howell will soon be a man for he has now mastered the art of walking. And is he acute little fellow at it . . . . We had the pleasure of makin gthe acquaintance of Powell Blair during the past week. We will say we were delighted for lack of a better adjective to express our feeling. Here's to a closer acquaintance. . . . With memories of a beautiful picnic at Tapawingo and a show afterwards running through our head, we had better call it quits. Let us warn all of you against drinking out of dry branches or killing dead snakes.

Nell and Nelle.

WHAT REFRIGERATOR HAS THE LOWEST 10-YEAR COST?

THE U. S. PUBLIC WORKS ADMINISTRATION WANTED TO KNOW

and here's what they did about it

● When PWA's Housing Division studied food-keeping economy for the future residents of their low-rent housing projects, they made a discovery. They found that electric refrigeration was the lowest cost food-keeping they could buy, in a majority of their projects.

To pick the most economical electric refrigerator, for 16,697 dwellings in 34 of these projects, they asked for bids from leading manufacturers —not on price alone, but initial price PLUS ten-year cost of electricity. Westinghouse won this contract, showed the lowest 10-year cost of them all. It's 10-year Economy that counts!

SCHOOL DAYS

The honk-honk of the motor horn will soon be supplanted by the "tin-tin-nabulation" of the school bells which will in September call several thousand school children back to their books in various schools in the County. Just around the corner is the "book and slate" time with "readin, writin' and 'rithmetic," holding the spotlight of attraction. In Columbiana schools will be noted the following instructors: Shelby County High School: E. H. Childs, Principal; Mary Peters, Elizabeth Bell, Mildred Meroney, Joe W. Stone, H. L. Wilson (Coach), Evie Woodham, Elizabeth Stone, Loretta Head, Elizabeth Greer.

Grammar School: Irene Bishop, Prin., Gertrude Bishop, Mrs. L. C. Taylor, Mrs. C. E. Niven, Mrs. L. M. McKnight, Hermoine Woolley.

ENERGY

Buxton once said, "The longer I live, the more deeply I am convinced that that which makes the only difference between one man and another—between the wee kand the powerful—the great and the insignificant—is ENERGY; Invincible determination; a purpose once formed and then DEATH or VICTORY!

FRIDAY THE 13th

The Jinx followed some of the natives in Columbiana on last Friday and further information regarding a series of happenings on a certain trip to Troy, Alabama. We refer to Powell Blair, Jit Taylor and Oscar Martin, who were completely turned topsy turvy in double flip time down an embankment on their way home from a Water Carnival in Troy, Alabama, James Taylor suffered a severe cut on his head and was forced to remain in an hospital for 24 hours while 27 stitches were taken. Powell Blair's car is still "vacationing" in South Alabama, too "broken in body and spirit" to even roll merrily along the Highways again. A complete wrech!

Miss Clarice Evans of Birmingham also suffered a car collision, in which her car seems to have gotten the worst end of the deal. This popular pretty nurse of Birmingham, spent the past week end, in Columbiana the guest of her sister, Mrs. Tom Taylor and we understand she and "Jit" while consoling each other were quite thank ful they were able to answer "present' after their narrow escape from final calamity-DEATH! ON FRIDAY 13th!

FLOWERS

We greatefully acknowledge lovely tube roses grown in the beautiful gardens of Mayor and Mrs. Harry Gordon, who have recently returned from a five weeks tour along the Florida Cost line. The Mayor, much to the delight of his many friends is much improved in health, and states most emphatically he is delighted to again be in the "old home town".

DAHLIAS

If you are in the market for the most gorgeous blooms of the Dahlia variety, we refer you to the Noland Barnett Garden- now redolent with the finest specimens we have seen. Flowers the thoughtful gift for all occasions!

Mr. and Mrs. John (Alabama Power Company) Thompson and daughter Annette, are motoring thru Northern Alabama on a vacation tour. Pinch hitting for the popular residential official of the Company is Milton Thompson, a brother, and one whose ready smile and pleasing personality will go far toward his goal of achievement. Young Mr. Thompson is as refreshing in his enthusiasm over his work as a "summer breeze" and his spontaneous chatter "pepped" things up in the office while attending his "official" duties on Tuesday. In other words, w epredict a successful career for this young fellow—and as stated above, PERSONALITY goes far in any line—especially is this true when dealing with Mr. and Mrs. John Public, whom we think is the most whimsical couple we have ever met.

Mrs. Fox and two daughters of Birmingham, are the guests of Mrs. Myra Chandler this week.

SHOP BUILDING FOR VOCATIONAL DEPARTMENT A NECESSITY!

A newshop building for the Vocational Department of S. C. H. S. is an absolute necessity, if this important work is to continue in our County, according to Joe Stone, popular and efficient Instructor. Immediately upon hearing this startling news, we got in touch with Supt. Appleton, whom we found "turning every stone" to obtain necessary funds for the erection of the building. He has received an exension of time on this project, and January 1st is the deadline. Perhaps a PWA loan may be granted. If not, then Civic and other public spirited clubs and individuals should band together and see that this building is "cinched"! It means much to the Future Farmers of America, as well as to the school to continue this great work Mr. Stone is so well qualified to carry on to future creditable fruition.

Ruby Upshaw, Shelby Hi Honor Graduate, Receives Flattering Scholarship Offers

The many friends of Ruby Upshaw, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Upshaw of Shelby, will be eager to join us in offering sincere congratulations to this brilliant student, upon winning two scholarships, one to Huntingdon College in Montgomery, and one for Athens College in Athens Alabama. However, this last year's graduate of Shelby County Hi School preferred a University of Alabama degree, and with the aid of friends and interested educational authorities, has obtained an N. Y. A. loan, and will leave for the University of Alabama in September to begin her collegiate course. Ambitious and studious, this versatile and talented young lady will carry with her the good wishes of all her classmates and friends throughout the County. A brilliant future is hereby predicted.

MR. AND MRS. C. E. NIVEN ARE HOSTS ON MOONLIGHT PICNIC.

A delicious menu, a perfect moonlight night, a congenial company, with cordially hospitable hosts, Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Niven, furnished the inspiration for a delightful courtesy extended Mr. and Mrs. Henry Middleton, of North Carolina, guests in the Niven home this week. This happy event was staged on Saturday night at Taylor's Ferry. About 40 guests shared this lovely event.

George Veazy of Washington, D. C is visiting his uncle, C. E. Niven, this week.

The kind of a Fishing Trip we like to hear about and believe in is the variety enjoyed by our good friends Mr. and Mrs. Homer J. Walton, who have returned from a chase after the finney tribe this week in Panama City—and brought back the evidence We enjoyed a delectable meal with the "catch" holding the spotlight of attraction. No photograph or idle chatter left a lingering doubt in our minds about how many fish were caught—if any!

AUGUST, THE MONTH OF HAPPY BIRTHDAY ANNIVERSARIES

August seems to be the favored month for happy birthdays as Virgo, the ruling planet hovers brightly over the following: L. C. Abbott, J. R. White, Charlotte Sawyer, Jimmie Brasher, Fay Beaton Roberts, Keener Roberts, Harry Mims Roberts Sr., and Harry Jr., Maureen Rinehardt, Elizabeth Taylor, Mamie Jo Harbin, O. P. Head and Oliver Head.

Mrs. George Barfield and son Howard of Nashville, Tenn., are visiting hermother, Mr. and Mrs. Oakley Vincent and son.

Vertnor Barnett of Birmingham spent the week end with Mr. and Mrs Nolen Barnett.

Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Cole, Denton and Margaret Cole, are enjoying a lightful vacation in Camp Walton.

AT HOME THIS WEEK

Returning this week from a Gulfing expedition in Destin, Florida, are Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Christian, who with Mr. and Mrs. Earl Martin of Birmingham and Miss Virginia Hendricks, of Montevallo, Dr. and Mrs. Lubright of Helena, have formed a congenial houseparty spent in the Land of Flowers—and FISHES!

Mrs. Alma McGhee and Jackson McGhee are "at home" after spending a week in Panama City with Mr. and Mrs. Onnie Sternenberg of Birmingham, members of the motor party.

There must be something magnetic about FLORIDA, for Shelby Countians have descended en masse during the past six weeks. We feel sure the beauty of the beaches has been enhanced ,and we KNOW the deep sea fishermen have had to seek other members of the finny tribe to conquer—for IF all the fish tales we have HEARD are true—there is not another swimming little gold fish in the ponds, not mentioning the whales, makerel and tarpons, we have read about and seen POSTCARDS—PHOTOGRAPHS to verify! We, however, have continued to tap-tap-tap along the keyboard but have shared their happiness along Remembrance trail of Uncle Sam's postal delivery, and herewith tender our appreciation of same.

A. A. Lauderdale and W. M. Clark took a group of 4-H club boys and farmers to Muscle Shoals and the Tennessee Valley to see the TVA Development and the Sub-Experiment Station on Tuesday and Wednesday of this week.

NOT "AT HOME" THIS WEEK

Vacationing along the Gulf shores this week are Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Duke, Jim and Warren Duke, Frank Fulton and Dick Fulton, Mrs. Lena Merrell, Virginia Pettus, and party from Birmingham.

Motor meandering thru the North Carolina mountains are Mamie Jo Harbin and Ruth Harbin Mills of Gadsden.

Down New Orleans way, should you happen along, you would likely see Mrs. Charles Niven and Jeanette Niven, who are members of a congenial motor party composed of Mr. and Mrs Henry Middleton of North Carolina, as hosts.

Lady Lightcap continues her stay in North Carolina for another week.

Our "across the way" neighbors, Mrs. Clayton McGhee and Charles, are spending this week in Alexander City, the guests of Mrs. McGhee's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Saxon.

Miss Katherine Houseman of Birmingham, is the attractive house guest of Miss Anne Watson this week. Miss Houseman is receiving many social courtesies planned for her entertainment during her stay in Columbiana.

The Rebecca Holcombe Sandwich Shoppe is proving a delightful meeting place for the young contingent of Columbiana, and almost nightly you may see groups of the High School and College Set, dining and dancing in this lovely spot. Good music and delicious sandwiches offer an unbeatable combination for "some place to go" after the show.

Jatie Lawrence Longshore, former Columbiana resident, now permanently located in Birmingham, and holding a responsible position with the E. E. Forbes Paino Co., has returned from a vacation spent in Panama City, Florida, and is ready to serve her many friends in this district with all their music requirements, be it a piano, a radio, or sheet music! When in Birmingham call by Forbes' Piano Store and consult Mrs. Longshore. There are many wonderful values in new and used pianos should you contemplate buying this Fall. She will be delighted to see you and help solve your musical problems.

Heart Drifts

THE PRICE

I climbed the ladder of success,
Then let myself look back,
And, lo! I saw the joys I passed
Unnoticed on the track—
A hand that had failed to grasp;
A heart I'd failed to touch;
A joy to some child brushed aside,
That would have meant so much;

A kindly deed I overlooked;
A smile I failed to give —
So greedily I'd sought success,
I hadn't stopped to live.
I saw myself a master man,
Unmerciful—and cold—
And in a world of happiness
I stood alone—and old.

—A. W. N.

SHADOWLAND

Strange I should meet in Shadowland
One I have loved so well,
Strange that his heart should understand
What I had failed to tell.

Here where the gulf of aching years
Fades to the never-was
I had expected only tears
But joy is mine because

Near to my love and face to face
Again he speaks to me. . .
And Shadowland is a holy place
Of hushed reality.

—M. B. C.

I SHALL STOP DREAMING

I shall stop dreaming of the far-off places
Where strange old cities cast a glamorous spell,
Where mysteries entice and time effaces
Their dim beginnings. I shall seek to quell
The lure that beckons toward some hidden treasure
Along barbaric coasts, to probe the wild
Impenetrable jungle; there is pleasure
In simple paths of life if reconciled.
Better than dreaming is the mind's unveiling
To humble beauty in a bent old man;
This little shop behind the basement paling
Holds romance in a broken ivory fan.
Enchanted is the bench where lovers meet,
And childhood glorifies the meanest street.

I HAVE FORGOTTEN

I have forgotten other days that held
Distress like this, and grief, and baffling pain:
Perhaps I shall forget this bitter day
And not remember it again.

I trust it may be lost among the years:
As lost as one flake in a falling snow:
As lost as some persistent pleading voice
That has ceased speaking long ago.

Surely, my heart, among the coming years
The day will bring us laughter for a guest
Ond gladness will companion us, and peace
Will be our portion and our rest.

From dawn to dusk, the old sun takes its way
And leaves no imprint on the sky's blue arc—
God grant this long heart-breaking day will pass
Into forgetfulness—and leaves no mark.

—Selected.

COMPENSATIONS OF AGE

It is not now so much that age has dulled the powers;
Drawn limitations round capacity for pain;
But rather that the soft, slow-footed spring's eternal showers,
Upon the green of so many graves has long time lain,
The deft touch that disciplined, sure skill bestows
Like maestro's fingers on the vibrant quivering ivory keys,
Mutes to a measured cadence inharmonious blows,
Soothes new, demanding sorrows to a reconciling ease.
The wisdom of experience has taught calmness and poise;
To value what the past has given or allowed one to retain
To hear the faint whispering winds above the thunder's noise;
See true proportion of things lost to those that yet remain.
A broad tolerance, that flaming youth could never know,
Is theirs who, thoughtful, linger in time's afterglow.

A LETTER OF APPRECIATION FROM DR. J. B. BOYER WILSONVILLE

Democrat: I want to express my sincere appreciation and thanks for your highly appreciated paper. would feel lost without the Democrat, as I am not able at my age (78) to keep up with the news, were it not for your newsy paper. God bless you in your noble work in the County. Many thanks for all your kindness. Best wishes, As ever your friends,

(We personally appreciate this letter written by Shelby County's oldest and one of the most beloved physicians in the state. MWW).

"TO TINT OR NOT TO TINT"

"To Tint or not to tint" that is the question now under discussion at the Louise Thompson Beauty Salon and, should you see your favorite among the fair sex, completely changed in both personality and distinctive locks. Well, Louise and Delilah hold the secret of "renovation" and 'Tis TINT or TAINT TINT. You will never know the difference. There's Magic in those "finger tips"—just as "Thars Gold in Them Thar Hills" Sure, go by and see what its all about. Tired of being a "blonde"—the kind gentlemen prefer. All right go gay and get your self a "brunette" The Alabama Power Company is not the only place you can find a "Trans-Form-Her!"

DOLLY DALRYMPLE HONORS SAM A. BENTON, RADIO ANNOUNCER FOR WAPI

The many friends of Sam A. Benton, former resident of Columbiana, who has for the past ten years, made good in the field of Radio Announcers will be happy to read the following account of Mr. Benton's recognition by one of the South's most gifted writers, Dolly Dalrymple, who in her "Dolly's Dialogues" of Sundays edition states:

"My little Summer bonnet with the pretty flowers on it is doffed to Birmingham's Sam Benton as one of the best radio announcers on the air. His voice is euphonious, his diction clear and his pronounciation correct, which is something which cannot be said of many announcers. With most of them emphasizing the "Ar-tic Circle' instead of the "Artic Circle," and even the scholarly Shakespearean producers from Hollywood presenting the 'taming of the Shrew" and call-"Petruchio" by the queer pronounciation of 'Petrookio', it is pleasant to hear Mr. Benton pronounce his words correctly, as well as "trippingly on the tongue" as Mr. Hamlet suggested.

Mr. Benton is a favorite in Columbiana where he often visits his mother, Mrs. Fay Miles Benton, and former associates, comrades and class mates will read the above tribute with sincere and heart felt pride in thisy oung man's outstanding, successful achievements in the Land of Radio.

J. T. Phillips and H. Parrish, officials of the Buck Creek Cotton Mills of Siluria, were distinguished guests in Columbiana on Saturday.

Harry Holcombe and John Farr of Birmingham, spent the week end in Columbiana.

SALLEE CIRCLE MEETS

The regular monthly business meeting was held on Monday afternoon, August 9th with Mrs. Sparks.

The meeting was opened with a song, a very inspiring devotional was her subject 'The temptation of the Wilderness."

We were then favored with a special song by Miss Eleanor Atchison and Miss Mary Elizabeth Walker.

The business session was conducted by the president, Mrs. J. F. Thompson, the minutes of the last meeting were read by the secretary, Mrs. Johnie Woods. Roll call was answered by payment of dues. Good reports were given by all officers. The meeting was closed with prayer by Miss Eleanor Atchison. Delicious refreshments were served to thirteen members and two visitors.

BLACK NAMED FOR COURT

Nominee Draws Rebuke

WITH his customary exercise of the dramatic, President Roosevelt nominated Senator Hugo L. Black (Dem., Ala.) to fill the vacancy on the Supreme court bench caused by the retirement of Justice Willis Van-Devanter. Senator Black had not even been mentioned for consideration previously, and the appointment was a complete surprise to his colleagues.

Senator Black

For 20 years it has been a custom, when a senator is appointed to high office, for his nomination to be considered in open executive session. But when Senator Ashurst (Dem., Ariz.) proposed this in Senator Black's nomination, objections came forth immediately from Senator Burke (Dem., Neb.) and Senator Johnson (Rep., Calif.). They asked that the nomination be referred to the senate judiciary committee for "careful consideration." This was viewed in the light of a distinct rebuke for the nominee.

Senator Black has been a militant leader in the fight for the President's wages and hours legislation. As a justice he would have the opportunity to pass upon measures regulating public utility holding companies, authorizing federal loans and grants for publicly-owned power plants, and fixing prices in the soft-coal industry. He was, as the chairman of the Black committee to investigate lobbying, the center of a storm of public opinion during the early months of 1936.

Black practiced law in Birmingham after being graduated from the University of Alabama in 1906. At fifty-one, he is one of the younger members of the senate.

Shells Pepper Great Wall

ALTHOUGH war was still without benefit of official declaration, the army of the Chinese central government clashed with the Japanese invaders for the first time. The Eighty-ninth division, from the provinces of Suiyuan and Shansi began the attack at the Nankow pass of the Great Wall, 30 miles northwest of Peiping, the Japanese said.

Through this pass the Japanese have been able to move reinforcements from Manchukuo, its protectorate, and the Chinese wanted to gain control of it. They wiped out a whole battalion of Japanese soldiers in the opening battle.

The Japanese opened up immediately afterward with heavy artillery fire which the Chinese failed to return. Indeed the latter were silently retreating into positions they thought more secure. As shells fell in the city of Nankow, fires were seen to arise from heavily populated areas. The Chinese, however, were said to be well equipped with trench mortars with which to defend the pass once they considered their position satisfactory.

Japanese warned that all of their forces in North China, some 40,000 fighting men, would be loosed upon the Chinsee if they made any attempt to return to the old capital in Peiping, now held by the invaders.

South Demands Crop Loans

CONGRESS regarded adjournment as possibly farther off than ever as the wage-hour bill got all tangled up with surplus agricultural control and cotton loans in what looked like a hopeless mess.

With the Department of Agriculture estimating a 15,500,000-bale cotton crop, about 3,000,000 bales more than can be consumed, Southern representatives and senators were demanding surplus crop loans. The Commodity Credit corporation has authority to make such loans.

In a press conference, President Roosevelt indicated that he had no intention of permitting a 10-cent cotton loan until congress passed the agricultural control program and ever-normal granary bill which Secretary of Agriculture Wallace says is necessary before the new session in January. Trouble is the house committee doesn't know how to write such a bill and make it stick, in view of the Supreme court's decision on the AAA.

Now the Southern bloc has made it clear that it will not push through the President's much-desired wages and hours bill, as dictated by William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, unless southern farmers get their cotton loans. Furthermore, the Southerners under the capitol dome are now asking for loans as high as 15 cents a pound, and in some cases even 18 cents. The South is not any too well in accord with maximum hours and minimum wages anyway.

The result of the whole affair is a complete stalemate. Somebody will have to give in; somebody probably will, and there will be old-fashioned "hoss - trading" on a wholesale scale. For congress wants to adjourn before the snow flies.

Southerners in the senate were also worried when Senator Robert F. Wagner of New York succeeded in winning recognition to debate an anti-lynching bill, the type of which the South has been successful in blocking since the Civil war. Some were of the opinion that the bill, already passed by the house, might be defeated by filibuster (Senator Bilbo of Mississippi threatened to filibuster until Christmas) but more believed that the Southern members would consent to its passage to put President Roosevelt "on the spot." They explained that if he did not sign it he would lose the negro vote so essential to the third term that is being whispered about, and that if he did sign it the Democratic South would drop him like a hot potato.

Senate O.K.'s Court Reform

ALL that was left of the administration's sweeping court reform proposals passed the senate in an hour without a record vote. This was the procedural reform bill for the lower federal courts. It was in the nature of a substitute for the Sumners bill in the house of representatives, and went back to the house for what was expected to be a peaceable conference.

The bill, as summarized by Sen. Warren R. Austin (Rep., Vt.), who wrote most of it, included:

Provision making it the duty of the District court, in any constitutional suit between private citizens, to notify the Department of Justice that upon a showing by the attorney general that the United States had a probable interest the government would be made a party to the suit.

Permission for the senior circuit judge to reassign district judges within that circuit for the purpose of clearing congested dockets. (If necessary, a judge may be transferred from one circuit to another.)

Permission for direct appeal to the Supreme court, if 30-day notice is given, from any decision of a District court against the constitutionality of an act.

Requirement that all suits for injunction against the operation of federal statutes to be heard by a three-judge court, including at least one circuit court of appeals judge.

Shanghai Smells Smoke

A JAPANESE officer and a seaman tried to enter the Shanghai airport, now under Chinese military control, in a high speed automobile. Chinese guards, after trying to halt them, shot and killed them. The Japanese claimed the road on which the men were traveling was part of the international settlement, and threatened the severest reprisals unless the Chinese made satisfactory explanation.

The incident bid fair to touch off a terrible conflict on the scene of the war of 1932. When Japanese warships threatened the Shanghai wharves, Chinese national troops began pouring into the city from every direction. Simultaneously came reports that two boatloads of Nipponese soldiers were headed to augment the garrison in Shanghai, and that the sudden ingress of Chinese troops had virtually blocked off the entire city, isolating thousands of foreigners from the outside world.

Cutting Madrid from Sea

SLOWLY but determinedly Gen. Francisco Franco's rebels are pressing their campaign to cut Madrid off from Valencia and the sea. Latest advances of well-mobilized and mechanized troops, following up co-ordinated attacks, brought the insurgents near to the capture of Salvacanete, which is only 30 miles from Cuenca. Cuenca is the provincial capital, and from it emanate most of the roads upon which the loyalist government is depending to keep open the traffic between the two cities.

Reports revealed that the rebels were also opening a new drive on Santander, last government stronghold on the northern coast, and had already made important advances. The drive followed an attack made upon them by Asturian miners fighting under the loyalist colors. The miners acted quickly in a surprise move, advancing far enough to throw hand grenades into the insurgent trenches. Then the rebels opened up with machine gun fire and half the attacking band was killed, Franco's officers claimed.

That all might not be going as well as General Franco insisted was indicated when he was forced into the paradoxical act of shelling one of his own cities, Segovia. This was done, it was reported, to quell a rebellion among the insurgent forces. It was also said that the insurrection had been spreading among several provinces.

Meanwhile, other nations were on the point of being involved again. There was a riot among rebel troops at Toledo, and Italian soldiers were alleged to have aided in quelling the uprising. Four merchant ships —one British, one Italian, one French and one Greek—were attacked in the Mediterranean by three "mystery" planes. Great Britain blamed the rebels and demanded an answer to its protest. Italy blamed the red loyalists. The loyalists blamed the rebels, the rebels blamed the loyalists, there were lots of talk and back talk, and nobody got anywhere.

Peiping Gets "Protection"

"ALTHOUGH Nanking is preparing to wage a destructive war, do not be afraid.

"The Japanese army will protect you."

Emperor Kang Teh

Leaflets containing these words fluttered from the skies to come to rest in the hands of residents of the ancient Chinese capital, Peiping. As the airplanes which spread the news hummed overhead, a brigade of 3,000 Japanese soldiers, in command of Maj. Gen. Torashimo Kawabe marched through the city, taking possession of it in the name of Tokyo.

What would be the result of the new Japanese domination apparently begun by Maj. Gen. Kawabe was a matter for speculation. Chinese residents, long since convinced that the inevitable would happen, took it calmly enough. Some of them voiced their belief that the former boy emperor of China, Tsuan Tung (Henry Pu-Yi), since 1934 Emperor Kang Teh of Manchukuo, would return to his throne in Peiping. He would then rule over North China as well as Manchukuo, as a puppet for whom Japan would pull the strings.

New York's Share Cut

SENATOR ROBERT F. WAGNER'S (Dem., N. Y.) $726,000,000 housing bill was passed by the senate, 64 to 16, but the senator scarcely recognized it when his fellows were done with it.

Senator Wagner and other administration leaders struggled frantically to defeat an amendment by Harry F. Byrd (Dem., Va.) limiting the cost of housing projects to $1,000 a room or $4,000 a family unit. Result of the struggle: The upper house, which originally passed the amendment 40 to 39, defeated a motion to reconsider by 44 to 39.

The bill originally called for expenditures up to $1,500 a room or $7,000 a family unit. Opponents conceded that the Byrd amendment would prohibit the building of the type of houses Senator Wagner had in mind in New York City.

Purge Toll to Date: 320

SEVENTY-TWO Russians in East Siberia were lined up and shot by the government, bringing the total number of eastern executions in Russia's purge of "Trotzkyists" to 320. The 72, described as rightist terrorists, were charged with operating along the Siberian railroad for the Japanese secret service.

It was alleged the accused had wrecked a train, killing 14 persons and injuring 40.

Arrests of officials in charge of various branches of the Soviet economy who had failed to make their production quotas continued.

Memorial for Will Rogers

THE memory of Will Rogers, America's lately beloved gum-chewing philosopher, will be enshrined in fitting manner near his Claremore, Okla., home after the President signs a bill which has now been passed by both houses of congress. It appropriates $500,000 for a memorial to Will; the state of Oklahoma also will be required to furnish $500,000.

SEEN and HEARD around the NATIONAL CAPITAL

By Carter Field

FAMOUS WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENT

Washington.—Two distinct reversals in public sentiment, utterly unrelated, though both very human, have contributed to President Roosevelt's recent troubles with congress, and promise to make him a lot more trouble in the session to come.

One of these is nation-wide—the other southern. The former is much easier to understand. It is another evidence of that age-old trait of human nature illustrated by the old rhyme:

"The devil was sick, the devil a monk would be.
The devil got well, the devil a monk was he."

When President Roosevelt went into office the country was sick, economically. The chief criticism of the administration he supplanted was that it had floundered along, instead of doing something to correct a bad situation. So the voters were willing to try anything. When Roosevelt came into power, and began doing things in a spectacular way, he aroused enthusiasm. He continued to arouse it for at least two years before there was really a whisper of protest from the folks who had been pleased in the beginning.

Unquestionably there were some defections from his supporters during the second two years, but these were much more than replaced by the people who had come to be dependent on the federal spending policies, both as to farm and work relief, so that his popular victory in 1936 not only exceeded that of 1932, but the congressional election of 1934 as well.

But the dissenters have been growing in number. The emergency having passed, they began to chafe at the continuance of what they had hailed earlier as remedies. During the 1936 campaign the Republicans tried their best to make the people tax conscious. They harped on the pay-roll deduction taxes, and the hidden taxes, and so on until the voters got sick of hearing about it. Certainly the Republicans got nowhere with the issue.

Revolt Likely to Grow

In the first place, the voters did not believe them. In the second, the idea of an emergency was still present. There was not any general conviction that the hard times were definitely over.

But since January all the little employers, especially the lads in the small towns, have been paying those security taxes. So have the workers. And nobody likes to pay taxes.

More important, with the passage of the months since last November has come a general feeling that the emergency has passed. Along with this conviction is a growing feeling that the country would have recovered anyhow, without the drastic Roosevelt cure. Those who feel this way—those who have changed their views since last November—are probably a very small minority of the entire people. Even added to the people who voted against Roosevelt last November, they almost beyond question are in the minority. Most political observers still think that Roosevelt has a majority following in the country.

But the folks who have changed are in evidence everywhere. They are known to their senators and representatives. The mail reaching Capitol hill speaks no uncertain language about the change.

To all this in the South is added the fact that party loyalty, and even stronger dislike of the very word "Republican," has made any thought of insurgency unlikely. Then, due to farm benefits, etc., there was a general feeling for the first time since the Civil war the South was getting something from Washington.

The revolt seems more likely to grow than to fade.

Turn Conservative

Significance of the fact that twenty-two Democratic senators voted to recommit the wages and hours regulation bill is more obvious than the deductions to be made about opposition to President Roosevelt on the Supreme court enlargement bill, but the two things are down the same alley.

There are exceptions, of course, such as the fact that Senator Burton K. Wheeler of Montana was against the President on the court and for him on wages and hours regulation. Most of the Democratic senators who opposed the President on either issue had the same motive. They want to curb the New Deal phases of the administration. They want to force the Democratic party back into more conservative policies and principles. They want to force the nomination of some one more conservative than Roosevelt in 1940, and they want a much more conservative platform than the Brain Trust wing would favor.

There has been a most interesting swing of Southern Democrats just in the last few weeks. Some of the most radical of them suddenly found out something about their constituents. Notable among the spectacular reversals of form have been Senator Hugo L. Black of Alabama, and Representative John E. Rankin of Mississippi.

Not Surprising

Which might not be surprising, Alabama being regarded mostly as a very conservative state, economically and socially, except that Senator Black has been the nemesis of the princes of privilege right from the day the Roosevelt administration came into power in 1933. It was Black who fought so vigorously for the death sentence in the public utility holding company bill, and who obtained rather a reputation as a snooper during the seizure of private telegrams episode.

Mr. Rankin has held firmly in an anti-privately owned utility position several laps ahead of Senator George W. Norris of Nebraska and a few more ahead of President Roosevelt all the way through the New Deal administration so far.

Both have had some very disturbing communications from back home. They have found that many of their influential supporters were far from enthusiastic about the New Deal. They have discovered that attacking the Morgans and the big northern utilities was one thing, but that forcing little manufacturers down in their home states to pay higher wages and grant shorter hours was something else again.

Senator Ellison D. Smith (Cotton Ed) of South Carolina voiced the opinion of a great many southerners when he intimated that the administration, in regulating wages and hours, was attempting to deprive the South of the natural advantages that God had given it, and that the mental attitude of the New Deal would seem to require them to hold God to strict accountability for such unfairness!

The South figures that it has a certain economic advantage in cheaper living costs, and it proposes to hold on to them!

Puzzles Labor Men

Just why President Roosevelt referred newspaper men the other day to the British trades unions act as something worthy of study is puzzling some of his labor advisers no end. Most of the clearest thinkers among them want no part of it. Some phases of it they regard as unnecessary in this country. Other phases they think would be utterly unacceptable to employers.

The Scandinavian plan appeals much more to the particular group in question, including Edward F. McGrady. The assistant secretary of labor is fond of pointing out to friends that you don't hear anything about strikes in Norway and Sweden.

So far as the British plan is concerned, in practical working conditions the industry against which a strike is leveled shuts down until the strike is settled. No attempt is made by employers to put scabs to work, or for that matter to operate at all. Just the reverse, of course, of what has to happen when there is a general strike, and what did happen in England when a general strike was tried.

The present British law forbids a general strike, but, as the young labor experts here point out, that sort of prohibition is unnecessary here for the simple reason that there is no possibility of a general strike. No labor leader of importance favors the idea. Practically every one of them would refuse to co-operate.

The feature of the Scandinavian labor policy that appeals most to some of these young labor experts is that it provides for collective bargaining by industries, and on a country-wide basis. Applied to the recent motor strikes, it would have worked in this way. The motor employees would have served notice on the manufacturers that they wanted this, or that. They would have insisted on dealing with all the manufacturers at once, and concluding one bargain for pay, hours and working conditions for all.

Thus there would have been no differentials out of which some think one motor company has a slight advantage over others in its labor costs and general efficiency.

Expect It to Help

Just how those advocating this plan would have handled Henry Ford in the recent situation is an unanswered question.

Labor leaders think that the wages and hours bill, especially after it has been modified a few times, which they confidently expect, is going to prove a great help with a certain type of employer in labor troubles.

The kind of thing that makes the labor leaders very low in mind indeed is what happened, to cite a recent case, on the Fall River line, where the steamship line simply suspended operation after the walkout and stayed suspended.

Of course this is an unusual case. Far more usual is the case of an employer who closes down where he has been operating, and then after a while, moves to some other community and resumes business, usually at lower wages and longer hours than he was giving his employees before the strike.

what Irvin S. Cobb thinks about:

Advertising's Value.

VERNALIS, CALIF.—On the train a charming young woman said: "I always read the advertisements whether I want to buy anything or not. Do you think I'm crazy?"

I told her she was the smartest young woman I knew. If I were asked to describe the race in any bygone period since printer's ink came into common use, I'd turn to the advertising in the papers and periodicals of that particular age. For then I'd know what people wore and what they ate and what their sports were and their follies and their tastes and their habits; know what they did when they were healthy and what they took when they were sick and of what they died and how they were buried and where they expected to go after they left here—in short, I'd get a picture of humanity as it was and not as some prejudiced historian, writing then or later, would have me believe it might have been.

Irvin S. Cobb

I'd rather be able to decipher the want ad on the back side of a Chaldean brick than the king's edict on the front.

Running a Hotel.

I'VE just been a guest at one of the best small-town hotels in America. I should know about good hotels because, in bygone days, I stopped at all the bad ones.

The worst was one back East—built over a jungle of side tracks. I wrote a piece about that hotel. It had hot and cold running cockroaches on every floor and all-night switch-engine service; the room towels only needed buttons on them to be peekaboo waists, but the roller towel in the public washroom had, through the years, so solidified that if the house burned down it surely would have been left standing. The cook labored under the delusion that a fly was something to cook with.

Everybody who'd ever registered there recognized the establishment. So the citizens raised funds and tore down their old hotel, thereby making homeless wanderers of half a million resident bedbugs; and they put up a fine new hotel which paid a profit, whereas the old one had been losing money ever since the fall of Richmond.

Poor Lo's Knowledge.

SOMETIMES I wonder whether we, the perfected flower of civilization—and if you don't believe we are, just ask us—can really be as smart as we let on.

Lately, out on the high seas, I met an educated Hopi, who said to me:

"White people get wrong and stay wrong when right before their eyes is proof to show how wrong they are. For instance, take your delusion that there are only four direction points—an error which you've persisted in ever since you invented the compass, a thing our people never needed. Every Indian knows better than that."

"Well then," I said, "how many are there, since you know so much?"

"Seven," he said, "seven in all."

"Name 'em," I demanded.

"With pleasure," he said. "Here they are: north, east, south, west, up, down and here."

Of course, there's a catch in it somewhere, but, to date, I haven't figured it out.

The Russian Puzzle.

UNDER the present beneficent regime, no prominent figure in Russia's government, whether military or civil, is pestered by the cankering fear which besets an official in some less favored land, namely, that he'll wear out in harness and wither in obscurity.

All General So-and-Soski or Commissar Whatyoumaycallovitch has to do is let suspicion get about that he's not in entire accord with administration policies and promptly he commits suicide—by request; or is invited out to be shot at sunrise.

To be sure, the notion isn't new. The late Emperor Nero had numerous well-wishers, including family relatives, that he felt he could spare and he just up and spared them. And, in our own time, Al Capone built quite an organization for taking care of such associates as seemed lacking in the faith. 'Twas a great boon to the floral design business, too, while it lasted.

Enthusiasm in Work

Enthusiasm is the element of success in everything. It is the light that leads and the strength that lifts men on and up in the great struggles of scientific pursuits and of professional labor. It robs endurance of difficulty, and makes a pleasure of duty.—Bishop Doane.

SYNOPSIS

Brooke Reyburn visits the office of Jed Stewart, a lawyer, to discuss the terms of an estate she has inherited from Mrs. Mary Amanda Dane. Unwittingly she overhears Jed talking to Mark Trent, nephew of Mrs. Dane who has been disinherited. Mrs. Dane had lived at Lookout House, a huge structure by the sea, built by her father and divided into two, for her and Mark's father. Brooke had been a fashion expert, and Mrs. Dane, a "shut-in," hearing her on the radio, had invited her to call and developed a deep affection for her. Mark discloses that Mrs. Dane had threatened to disinherit him if he married Lola, from whom he is now divorced. He says he does not trust Henri and Clotilde Jacques, Mrs. Dane's servants. He says he is not interested in an offer of Brooke's to share the estate with him. Leaving her department store job, Brooke refuses an offer to "go stepping" with Jerry Field, a carefree young man who wants to marry her. At a family conference she learns she must live at Lookout House alone, since Lucette, her younger sister who is taking her job, her brother, Sam, a young playwright, and her mother plan to stay in the city. Jed and Mark are astounded when they hear from Mrs. Gregory, a family friend, that she had witnessed a hitherto unknown will with Henri and Clotilde two weeks before Mrs. Dane died. Brooke had arrived just as she was leaving. Jed suggests that Mark open his part of Lookout House, get friendly with Brooke and try to find out about the will. Jed agrees to stay with him. Mark accepts Brooke's invitation for a family Thanksgiving dinner at Lookout. Mrs. Reyburn announces on Thanksgiving eve that she has been invited to England. Sam and Lucette decide to move in with Brooke and Sam plans to produce a new play locally. After the Thanksgiving dinner Brooke tells Mark that little of Mrs. Dane's silver collection is left. Jerry Field and his sister Daphne drop in and announce they will be neighbors for the winter. Later Inspector Harrison of the local police visits Mark and is informed about the missing will and silver. As Harrison leaves, Lola arrives. She announces that she and her new husband, Bert Hunt, have started a neighborhood filling station. Mark almost makes a break about the missing will and Brooke is suspicious. Returning home, she sees Lola talking covertly to Henri. "Mr. Micawber," Mrs. Dane's pet parrot, is missing. Henri is ugly and warns Brooke she had better like him and Clotilde. That night while the cast of Sam's play is rehearsing and the Jacques are away, Mark shows Brooke the missing silver which he had found cached in an unused upper floor store room in his house. A black gloved hand pulls the key from the storeroom door.

"Jed stopped at your house for a minute, he'll be here pronto; the other actors—so-called—have gone home. I'll say I'm here early. After they'd walked through the first act, it was a choice between dismissing the cast or shooting them. I had a sane interval and decided not to shoot. I'm giving them tomorrow night off."

"Then I'll throw a party for the Reyburns and Fields at that new Supper club just opened in town. Give them a let-up from the play. What say, maestro?"

"Okay with me. It's darned good of you. Perhaps I have overworked them, but there is so little time before the performance." Sam sat up and ran his fingers through his hair. "With that so near, wouldn't you think those dumb-bells would know their parts? I ask you! Besides that, the leading man has walked out on us."

"It's tough. Can I help, Sam?"

"Can you help! I'll say you can. 'Now is the time for all good men to come to the aid of their party.' Take the lead." He caught Trent's arm. "Be a good scout. Help a poor, distracted playwright-producer, will you? With you and the Crane woman in the leads, we'll make a two-star offering of it. That girl's good."

Sam's despair had changed to exultation. Mark Trent temporized:

"How do you know I'm good?"

"How do those bozos out in Hollywood know an actor will be a wow on the screen sometimes before they give him a try-out? Something here, m'lad, something here," Sam tapped his broad brow, "tells me you'll be stopping the show."

"That same something couldn't tell you where I'm to get the time for a theatrical career, could it? All right, all right," Mark conceded in response to Sam's groan, "I'll take the part. Give me the sides and I'll try to know the lines at the next rehearsal."

Sam caught Brooke as she entered the room. He hugged her as he exulted:

"What d'you think, gal? Trent has signed up for 'Islands Arise'! Will he pack 'em in as the lead? I ask you!"

Jerry Field appeared at the door beating a huge spoon against a tin pan.

"First call for the dining car! First call—"

Sam held up his hand.

"Just a minute! We're all invited to dine and dance tomorrow by the new male lead in 'Islands Arise,' Mark Trent! Sam Reyburn announcing."

"You in the play, Mark?"

"How exciting!"

"Dinner and dance in the big city! What a break!"

Jerry Field interrupted the excited comments.

"Where are your gardenias, Brooke?"

His tone set Mark Trent's lips twitching. Under cover of lighting a cigarette, he caught the girl's furtive glance at the wastebasket. She put her hand to her shoulder.

"Why—why I must have dropped them."

"Where've you been?"

"Hi there, m'lad!" Sam's tone and manner were those of a stern parent guarding his offspring. "That isn't a topic for group discussion. We don't make people punch the time-clock in this family."

Jerry Field's face turned a bright and lively crimson; his voice and eyes were furious.

"I wasn't asking Brooke to punch the time-clock. I thought I might find the gardenias for her.—I"

He stopped as Jed Stewart appeared on the threshold. He was tapping a gardenia against his lips.

"Run to earth, Mark. Who's the charmer who leaves a flower outside your door?"

CHAPTER VII

An hour later Jed Stewart slumped deeper into a crimson-cushioned chair in Mark Trent's library and demanded:

"How was I to know that Field had brought Brooke the gardenias? Didn't he look like a meat-axe though, when I barged into Lookout House waving that flower and giving the whole show away by telling where I picked it up? I'm the original village cut-up, I am." He lighted his pipe.

"It wasn't all my fault. I didn't know, did I, Mark, that you and she had been cruising round this house?"

"You didn't. I hadn't told you then that I had discovered Aunt Mary Amanda's silver parked in a storeroom. Decided to wait till I had the goods on someone, but I couldn't resist the temptation to show it to Brooke. You should have seen her eyes when she saw it piled on that table."

He poked the fire till orange and scarlet flames, shot with pale

"Started for the Sole Purpose of Chiseling Money Off Me, I Suspect."

green, roared up the chimney and sent a tangy puff of wood smoke into the room.

The sharp ring of the phone broke the silence.

"Trent speaking.—Lola! What do you want?—Not interested. If you like selling gas, sell it, only remember that the allowance stops.—Is she? Mrs. Gregory's word goes, here. You should have made sure of that before you set up shop.—What? What sort of paper?" Mark Trent looked at Jed Stewart who had come close and was moving his lips without making a sound. He nodded understanding. "I haven't rung off.—Yes, I heard what you said. I can't imagine how any paper you may have will interest me, but bring it here tomorrow at five.—Sure, I'll be alone.—Yes. Goodby."

Mark Trent cradled the telephone. He looked up at his friend.

"Lola has a 'paper' to sell me. She suggested that I have my checkbook in hand tomorrow. What do you make of it?"

"If it is the 'paper' Mrs. Gregory witnessed, how could she get hold of it?"

"Henri?"

"She said he had written to her, didn't she? She's bringing it tomorrow afternoon! There's a catch in it somewhere. It sounds too easy. You don't think she'll back out at the last minute, do you, Mark?"

"Not if there is money in it. She said also that Mrs. Gregory was putting the filling-station out of business. It was started without a license. Started for the sole purpose of chiseling money off me, I suspect."

"Right as usual. What say we call this an evening? I'm due in court in the morning in my best Gentlemen of the Jury style; furthermore, we'll need our brains running wide open when Lola comes at five. She has a 'paper' to sell! Won't we feel cheap about our suspicions of Brooke if it proves to be the 'paper' we're after?"

"I stopped suspecting her some time ago. Shall we go up? We are getting provincial. If we were in town we'd be just beginning to go places. Toddle along. I'll put out the lights."

Mark banked the fire before he ran up the stairs. Jed Stewart yawned as he stood at his door.

"In spite of the late excitement, I'm sleepy. Nightie-night, Mark. I'll drop our problem into what the psychologists call the deep mind. Perhaps it will float to the top in the morning all nicely solved." He was whistling softly as he closed his bedroom door.

Mark crossed his dark room to the window. What a night! The sky was powdered with stars. The sparks of gold were like the lights in Brooke Reyburn's eyes when she was happy or thrilled, and she had been thrilled when she had heard of his plan to dine and dance in town.

He drew the gardenia from his pocket. Nothing beautiful about it now but the leaves. He didn't need a paper which Lola Hunt might produce to clear his mind of suspicion that Brooke had influenced his aunt in any way. He drew the flash light from his coat pocket. Lucky he had thought of it when he had taken Brooke to see the silver.

"Mark! Mark!"

Jed's voice? He laid the flower on the dresser before he opened the door. With the electric torch still in his hand he crossed the hall and knocked at Jed Stewart's door. He knocked again. Why didn't he answer? He flung open the door. A coat had been hung over the back of a chair. A shoe lay on the floor. Cold air was stirring the chintz hangings. Where did it come from?

The bath-room! Mark sprinted to the door and stopped in amazement. The window was wide open, but the air was strongly scented with perfume. The shower was dripping. Shaving materials were flung about as if hastily dropped.

He thrust his head out of the window. There were two ways to escape from the little balcony under it. Drop to the terrace, or through Lookout House. Had Jed and an intruder crashed in there? Brooke would be frightened. He'd follow them. He swung his leg over the sill.

"Stop!"

He went rigid in obedience to the hoarse warning, but only for an instant. Why was he perching like a dummy with the light from the room behind making him a perfect target for the person who had grunted? He moved his leg. No response to that from the balcony. Quickly he flashed his powerful light in the direction from which the sound had come. That would blind the person watching.

His eyes followed the light. In his amazement he lost his balance and pitched forward. At one corner of the railing, blinking and shivering in the glare, huddled the run-away green parrot.

Held up by a bird! He slid to the balcony. Reached for Mr. Micawber, grabbed him, flung him into the room behind him. He could hear the parrot squawking with fury as he closed the window.

"That seems to be that! Now, where's Jed?"

He peered over the railing. No uprights on this balcony to slide down. The next one had iron trellises which connected it with the stone terrace. Had Jed entered Lookout House by the window? Who occupied the room of the next house which opened on it? He would investigate.

He tiptoed to the window, reduced the light in his torch before he flashed it over the glass. The shade was closely drawn and the sash locked. No one could have gone in there. Cracks of light were visible in the two rooms beyond where French windows opened on another balcony. Had Jed entered that lighted room? How could he get there? He was too stout to swing across. Could he himself do it?

He appraised the distance, stepped over, and swung. Cautiously he stepped over the rail and ripped his hands from the frosty iron.

With his heart drumming like an airplane motor he concentrated his attention on the window. A crack of light showed between the hangings. Whose room was it? Should he take a chance that it was Sam's or Brooke's and tap lightly?

A window was being opened cautiously. Where? He flattened himself against the house. Must be the end balcony outside the studio. He visualized the interior as he had seen it the day he had helped Jerry Field sketch in the tree trunks on the backdrop. Someone was crawling out! A man! He was sliding down an iron trellis like a monkey! Now he was running across the lawn bent double! He was entering the garage!

Mark Trent crammed the electric torch into his pocket and swung a leg over the railing. He hitched along till his feet found an upright, went down hand over hand, his palms sticking painfully to the iron as he moved them.

From purple tree shadow to purple tree shadow he skulked. Near the garage he hid behind shrubs. The click of a lock! He held his breath as he listened. Who had been in the Lookout House garage at this time of night? Whoever it was, was leaving. He could hear cautious footsteps. An automobile starting! He strained his ears. It was speeding down the street toward the causeway. That didn't prove anything, it would be easy enough to turn into a side road and cut back. Was the man who had sneaked from the house driving? Had he stolen the car? Even so, he couldn't follow it, he must find out why he had entered the garage.

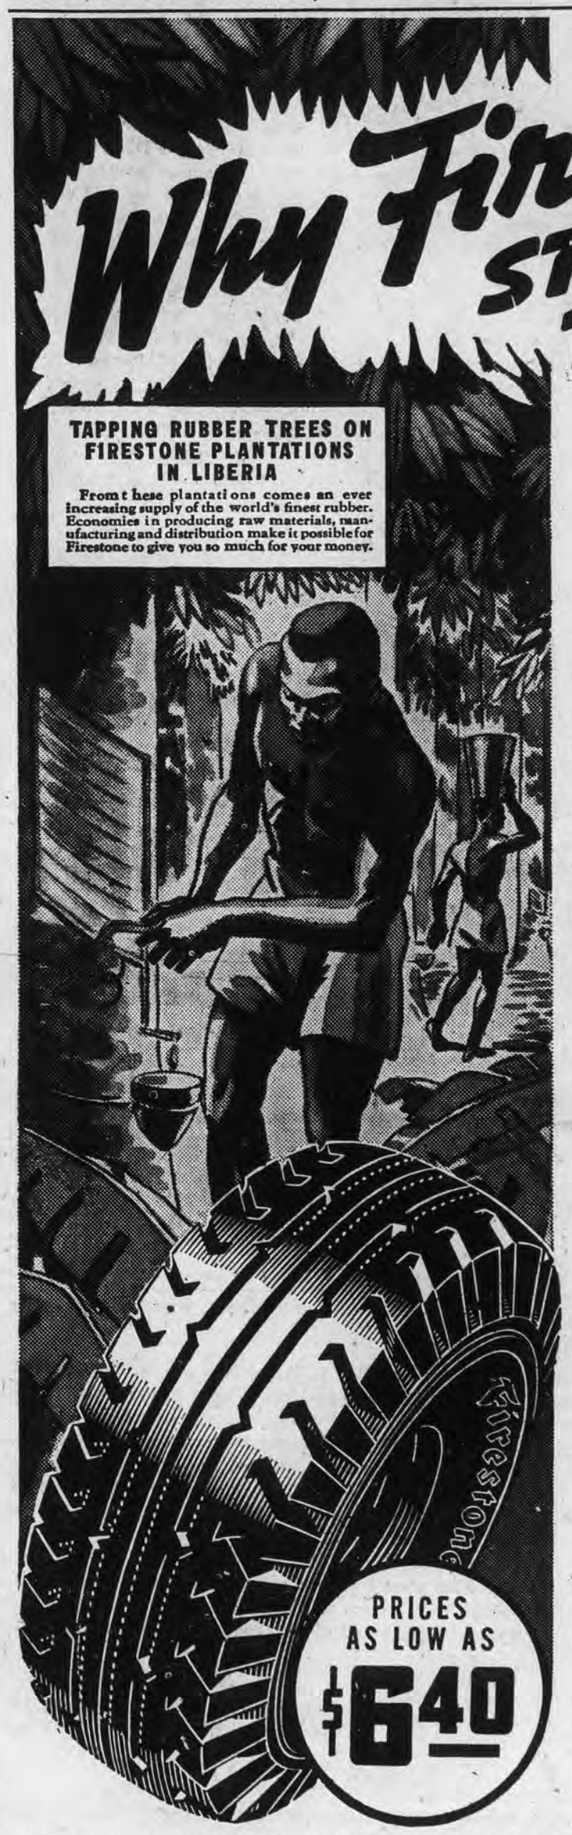
A Quiz With Answers Offering Information on Various Subjects

1. What countries have dictators at present?
2. Is there any guide to the length of sentences when one is preparing a lecture?
3. How is GPU (Russia's secret police) pronounced?
4. By what title was Commodore Perry known to the Japanese?
5. How fast do bullet travel?

Answers

1. The principal dictatorships are Russia, Austria, Italy, Germany, Turkey, Hungary, Bulgaria, Albania and Mexico.
2. There is the generalization that sentences should not be long. Twenty-four words is a safe maximum.
3. GPU is pronounced Gay'pay-ooh—but only by foreigners. Russians do not mention the name, sometimes referring to them as the "three-letter men."
4. For diplomatic purposes Perry created for himself the title of "Lord of the Forbidden Interior," but, of course, he did not actually hold such a title.
5. Military rifles drive their bullets at speeds of from 2,000 to 3,000 feet per second. The Gerlich bullet, one of the speediest, is capable of traveling almost a mile a second.



Favorite Recipe of the Week—

Refrigerator Ice Cream

½ package (scant ⅓ cup) ice cream powder (vanilla, strawberry, lemon, maple, or *chocolate flavor)
2 tablespoonfuls sugar*
1 cup milk
1 cup cream, whipped

Combine ice cream powder and sugar. Add milk very gradually, stirring until dissolved. Fold in whipped cream. Turn into freezing tray of automatic refrigerator, setting control for lowest freezing temperature. Stir when frozen ¼-inch thick on sides and twice more at 20-minute intervals. Freezing time: about 3 hours. Makes about ¾ quart ice cream.

*With chocolate ice cream powder, use ½ package (scant ½ cup) and 4 tablespoonfuls sugar.

Why Firestone STANDARD TIRES are EXTRA SAFE

YOU GET EXTRA PROTECTION AGAINST BLOWOUTS—eight extra pounds of rubber are added to every 100 pounds of cord by the Firestone patented Gum-Dipping process. By this process every fiber in every cord in every ply is saturated with liquid rubber. This counteracts dangerous internal friction and heat that ordinarily cause blowouts.

YOU GET EXTRA PROTECTION AGAINST PUNCTURES—because under the tread are two extra layers of Gum-Dipped cords.

YOU GET EXTRA PROTECTION AGAINST SKIDDING—because the tread is scientifically designed.

YOU GET LONGER NON-SKID MILEAGE because of the extra tough, long-wearing tread.

Firestone Standard Tires give you all these extra value features because they are first-quality tires built with high-grade materials and patented construction features. You SAVE MONEY because you buy this high quality and extra value at such low prices.

Before leaving on your vacation trip, join the Firestone SAVE A LIFE Campaign by equipping your car with a set of new Firestone Standard Tires —today's top tire value. See your nearest Firestone Dealer or Firestone Auto Supply and Service Store.

Fourth Woman Senaor

Mrs. Dixie Bibb Graves is the fourth woman ever appointed to the Senate and all four of them came from the South.

Mrs. R ebecca L. Felton of Georgia was the first. She served one day Nov. 7, 1922 under a courtesy appoint ment.

Next were two widows of former Senators, Mrs. Hattie W. Carraway of Arkansas and Mrs. Rose Long of Louisana, is the only woman ever elected to a full term, still is in the Senate.

Mrs. Long, widow of Huey Long, gave up her seat on the election last November of Allen J. Ellender. She was not a candidate.

Proclamation Officially Calls Election April 26

In compliance with the request of Gov. Graves, made by long distance telephone from Washington, late Thursday, Lawrence H. Lee, personal lagal adviser to the Chief Executive, yesterday issued at the Governor's office a formal proclamation calling a special election to be held on Tuesday, April 26, 1938, for the electing of a United States Senates,to serve the remainder of the unexpired term of Senator Hugo L. Black, who resigned to accept appointment as Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court.

Mrs. Dixie Graves, wife of the Governor and appointed by him to serve as U. S. Senator until a successor to Senator Black is elected, was formally sworn in on Friday August 20th, in the Senate Chamber at the national capitol in Washington, and immediately thereafter took her seat at the desk vacated by the former Alabama senior Senator.

4-H Membership Grows

One of the most hopeful signs for the future of agriculture, the Michigan Farmers points out, is that the enrollment in 4-H clubs passed the million mark for the first time, in 1936. Membership continues to increase.

The young men and women who join the 4-H will be the producers of tomorrow. In their club work, they are instructed in new methods and techniques that maks it possible for the farmer to raise larger crops and earn a greater return. They are given a nopportunity to develop qualities of leadership that will prove invaluable to them in the future for example, in the agricultural cooperative movement which is constan tly growing in size and economic and social significance. In brief, they are wisely making careers of farming.

Good neighbors fight erosion. They do not let silt from their farms destory the other fellow's fields farther downstream.

State Health Program Widens

Within the next few months there is every reason to believe that every County in the State will have a full time health department. Already 59 out of the State's 67 have local health units for safe guarding the ohysical well being of the people.

Oats Excellent Feed For Spring Months

Alabama farmers can grow larger quantities of spring feed by planting oats during the fall months.

Oats should be planted on good land in September and the first of October, advises J. C. Lowery, extension agronomist. They should be planted at the rate of 2 bushels per acre and the seed should be treated for smut.

Farmers wishing latest information on how to succeed with oats are advised by Mr. Lowery to see their county agents or vocational teachers who have recently been sent the latest findings of the Alabama Experiment Station.

Bride One Year

For the first year following her marriage, it is customary to speak of a young matron as a bride.

Legumes Valuable in ....Controlling Erosion

Auburn, Ala.—Austrian winter peas, hairy vetch and crimson clover can be used by farmers in controlling erosion on their farms.

Tests by the Alabama Experiment Station gave the following results:

On land with a 5 percent slope the soil losses on an acre planted to vetch were only 3,784 pounds compared with 27, 564 pounds per acre without vetch. On land with a 10-percent slope the losses were 6,392 pounds following vetch compared with 90,218 with out vetch. On land with a 15-percent slope the losses were 14,767 pounds following vetch compared with 135,179 without vetch. On land with a 20-percent slope the losses totaled 19,675 following vetch compared with 182,562 pounds without vetch

Largest Bell in World

Moscow has the largest bell in the world, popularly known as "the Czar Kolokol." It weighs 200 tons and is 54 feet in circumference, but has never been rung. Soon after it was cast a fire broke out in the temporary shed over it and cracked it so badly that repairs could not be made.

STATE YOUTHS TO FILL CCC POSTS

MONTGOMERY—Alabama's Fall enrollment for the Civilian Conservation Corps will be the largest in the history of the program in the state and may triple the total of 499 enlisted in July, A. H. Collins, director of the state public welfare department, predicted last week.

He said he had received word from Washington concerning major new regulations which would produce the increase despite the reduction in the total nmber of CCC members this year.

They included:

1. All members of the CCC reaching 24 by September 30 cannot reenlist.
2. All "local experienced" men cannot return to CCC camps, making room for additional recruits.
3. Enrollees must be between the ages of 17 to 23.
4. Replacements will be needed to take the place of those going into private industry and getting premature discharges for that reason.

Idea of Telegraph

It is difficult for us to realize the effect upon certain minds of the pioneer telegraph or the weird notions about the early locomotive. For instance, some actually believed the telegraph wires were hollow, and that the pieces of paper on which messages were written were blown through them, like peas through a pea-shooter.

State Farmers Advised Plant Winter Gardens

Auburn Ala.—Farmers throughout Alabama are being advised to plant vegetables during August and September for use this winter.

Some of the vegetables that can still be planted are turnips, mustard lettuce, kale, spinach, tendergreens and onions, advises Prof. L. M. Ware, head of the horticulture department, Alabama Polytechnic Institute.

"Planting of these vegetables may continue in North Alabama until Septembed 20; and in South Alabama throughout October," he says.

Full information on how to succeed with winter gardens may be obtained from farm and home agents and vocational teachers. They have been sent bulletinson gardening in Alabama.

FARMERS URGED .. TO KEEP RECORDS

MONTGOMERY—R. J. Goode, Commissioner of agriculture and industries, urged Alabama farmers "to be sure and keep accounts on cotton," recently.

Insistency that accounts be kept, Goode said, was prompted by President Roosevelt's agreement to approve crop loans and price adjustment payments on the 1937 crop.

"Every farmer," he said, "should keep the date of sale, to whom sold, at what price, the grade and staple rating.

"All will be eligible for the benefits, but if a man is unable to produce the data required he may not get the price anjustment payment."

Goode returned from Washington Saturday, where he acted as spokesman for southern agriculture commissioners htis week in preparing congress and the president to reach agreements on passage of a farm program next session and immediate assurance of loans and prices adjustment payments to keep prices up.

"I estimate," the commissioner said, "that the agreement reached will benefit cotton farmers $300,000,000 on the 1937 crop alone."

Price adjustments payments will be based on difference between 12 cents and the average price on 10 major spot markets, Goode said.

While amount of loan per pound was not definitely determined, he said, he anticipated it would be "9 or 10 cents."

The commissioner claimed credit for writing the congressional resolution which pledged congress to immediate enactmant of farm legisiation at its next session and brought from President Roosevelt agreement to make loans and price adjustment payments this year.

Form[illegible]elby County Deputy Incited in Nashville

Richard Hullett, age 21 foundry employee of Centennial Boulevard in Nashville was killed in a West Nashvillen beer parlor last week by the proprietor, William Farmer, formerly of Calera, Ala., Mr. Farmer admitted to police that he shot Mr. Hullett but only after he had struck at his wife Mrs. Farmer with a knife.

Farmer admitted to officers that he was the same person who figured in the sensational murder case in Calera, Alabama in 1927, At that time Farmer was employed as a motor cycle officer by the town of Calera.

A young woman, Miss Louise Montebarro, an executive of the Singer Sewing Machine Co., was shot to death in her auto on the out skirts of Calera. The State attempted to prove that Farmer shot her, but he was never tried, he stated to the Nashville authorities.

A preliminary trial will held in Nashville this week.

REPORT IS MADE ON CROP LOANS

WASHINGTON, Crop loans of the Commodity Credit Corporation totaled $609,189,917 in the last four years records showed Friday. Farmers have paid back all but $121,504,137.

The unpaid balance resulted largely from loans on the 1934 cotton crop. Secretary Wallace said the corporation lost $23,000,000 in liquidating this loan of $300,000,000 and would lose another $30,000,000 if the "collateral," of carryover cotton, were sold on today's market.

These losses, he said, might reduce the capital stock of the corporation, originally $100,000,000, to $47,000,000.

Loans have been made, and largely repaid, on cotton, corn, tobacco, turpentine and resin.

Speaker Bankhead ((D., Ala.) asked President Roosevelt Thursday to approve 10-cent loan on this years crop, Secretary Wallace, he said, has asked for a 9-cent basis which Bankhead contended would not be as satisfactory to either the goverment or the farmer.

The 1934 cotton loan was on a 12-cent basis. In 1933 and 1935 the rate was 10 cents. There were no cotton loans last year.

AMERICAN BOY INTRODUCES NEW GAME

In the early fall issues of "The American Boy" there'll be presented the story of a new game—six-man football—fast as professional football, wide open as basketball, thrilling as hockey!

The game came to life through the need of small schools for some substitute for 11-men football, which was too expensive. Stephen Epler, a Nebraska graduate student in athletics, developed the game of six-man football to meet this need. In six-man football anybody can score, the possibility of injury from mass plays is minimized, and the game is open enough for spectators to follow every exciting development.

The new game is a hit. New schools are taking it up every day. In coming issues "The American Boy" tells the world about this practical new game. In addition, it presents The American Boy Official Handbook, which can be obtained from the magazine at 20 cents a copy, or 15 cents when broght in bulk.

NOTE: Subscribtion prices of The American Boy will be raised in the near future. Send your subscription order at once to take advantage of the bargain rates now in effect: one year at $1.00 or three years at $2.00. Foreign Subscriptions 50 cents a year extra. Send your name, address and remittance to The American Boy, 7430 Second Blvd., Detroit, Mich. On newsstands the price is 15 cents a copy.

"LITTLE STORIES FOR BEDTIME"

by Thornton W. Burgess

BLACKY THE CROW IS AS EXCITED AS SAMMY JAY

WHEN Sammy Jay came flying out of the Green Forest screaming at the top of his lungs and so excited that he couldn't talk straight, everybody said that he had gone crazy. You see, he was too excited to tell what the trouble was. At last his cousin, Blacky the Crow, managed to get him calmed down so that he could tell him all about it. When he heard the story which Sammy had to tell of the stranger he had seen deep in the Green Forest he looked very much as the other little people did when they heard Sammy screaming foolishly.

He Caught Himself Just in Time and Flew to the Top of the Nearest Pine Tree.

You see, it was very hard for Blacky to really believe that Sammy had seen what he had said he had. Not that he thought Sammy was telling a wrong story! Oh, my, no! Sammy was too much in earnest. What Blacky thought was that he had seen a lot more than he really had. You see, Blacky had lived a long time in the Green Forest and he never had seen or heard of such a stranger as Sammy told about.

He asked Sammy just where he had seen the stranger, and Sammy told him that it was way deep in the Green Forest, beyond the pond built by Paddy the Beaver. Now, Blacky believes that the only way to make sure of things is to see them, and not be content with the word of some one else. So he suddenly made up his mind that he would visit the place where Sammy Jay had seen the stranger. He invited Sammy to go along with him, but Sammy refused. It was very plain to see that Sammy was afraid of the stranger. Blacky chuckled to himself as he flew over the pond of Paddy the Beaver and so deep into the Green Forest.

"The idea," said Blacky, "of there being a stranger as big as Farmer Brown's Boy and wearing a black fur coat! Nobody like that ever has lived in the Green Forest. I guess I'd know if they had. Sammy must have eaten something and had a very bad dream, or else there is something the matter with his eyes."

He was talking to himself in this way as he flew along, all the time keeping a sharp watch for the stranger, when, without any warning, the stranger himself stepped out from behind a tree almost under Blacky. It startled Blacky so that he let out a frightened "Caw! Caw!" and nearly turned a somersault in the air. He caught himself just in time and flew to the top of the nearest pine tree, where he could look down and see all that was going on.

Everything was just as Sammy had said. The stranger did wear a black fur coat, he was as big as Farmer Brown's boy, and he did have great feet and the biggest claws Blacky had ever seen. Blacky felt just as if he ought to peck himself to make sure that he was awake. Of course he knew he was, but he just couldn't make it seem so.

Now, Blacky sometimes gets as excited as Sammy Jay, and this was one of the times. He started back for the Green Meadows as fast as he could fly, and all the way he was cawing at the top of his lungs. Sammy Jay heard him long before he saw him and Sammy grinned. "He found him!" thought Sammy. "Now he knows that I told the truth. My, but he sounds just as crazy as I ever did."

And then as Blacky came in sight Sammy once more grew excited, too, and began to scream questions at the top of his lungs, until it was hard to say who was screaming the loudest, Sammy or his big cousin, Blacky the Crow.

Bloemfontein Monument

The idea of a National Women's monument in Bloemfontein, South Africa, to commemorate the women and children who died during the Anglo-Boer war, originated with President Martinus Steyn of the Orange Free State in 1906. It was erected in 1913. Donations amounting to 12,000 pounds were offered from all parts of South Africa. The obelisk of 113 feet has at its base a massive bronze group representing a mother and child comforted by the spirit of South Africa, looking to the east. On each side are bronze bas reliefs, one depicting the burning of a house and the other a scene in a concentration camp. In the enclosure fronting the monument are the graves of the two heroes of the Orange Free State, President Steyn and General Christian de Wet.

MANNERS OF THE MOMENT

By JEAN

© By The Associated Newspapers

It's partly the fault of these big loose powder compacts. But I'm sorry to admit, it's partly the fault of us gals who forget. It seems that complaints have been coming in by the ton that men don't like powder showers. Especially do they resent them when they are on their way home for a nice cozy little dinner with the wife. The wife sees powder on the lapels, burns the lamb chops and goes off to the movie alone.

Sitting Under a Shower of Face Powder Is No Fun.

I'd hate to feel responsible for a marital rift. So I have vowed never to open my loose powder compact over a man again. Nor will I do it anywhere unless there is at least a good ten feet of space on either side of me in which I can shake my little puff. Of course if my nose gets shiny . . . oh, well, I've vowed now, and I'll stick to it.

Trees Prove History Repeats

Tree rings, which tell the story of wet and dry seasons, do not indicate there is any general trend toward either drier or wetter climate. In the Pacific Northwest, studies made by United States Department of Agriculture of 1,240 ponderosa pines centuries old, show that the period from 1917 to 1935 was critically subnormal because of the lack of precipitation and lower water tables. The average ring growth from 1900 to 1919 was identical with the general average during the past 600 years, bearing out the generally accepted theory that climatic history repeats itself through the ages

Favorite Recipe of the Week—

Apple Scallop.

6 apples (medium size)
¾ cupful brown sugar
Juice of 1 lemon
⅓ cupful butter, melted
1½ cupfuls crushed ginger-snaps
½ teaspoonful cinnamon

Pare, core, quarter and slice the apples in thin sections and sprinkle with lemon juice. Blend together the sugar, cinnamon, melted butter and ginger-snap crumbs. Fill a baking dish with alternate layers of sliced apples and the crumb mixture. Cover and bake for 1½ hours in a moderate oven (350 degrees F.) A top-of-the-stove oven will do admirably for baking this dessert. Serve hot with ice cream or cold with plain cream.

FARM TOPICS

BOARDER HEN NOT WORTH FEED; CULL

Non-Producers Will Bring No Profit From Eggs.

By Dr. W. C. Thompson, Poultry Husbandman, Rutgers University.—WNU Service.

Don't feed boarders if it is the aim to maintain high egg production during the summer months.

Egg prices will probably begin to advance soon, but in view of present grain prices, the hope of profit in egg farming lies chiefly in keeping egg production at relatively high levels.

Cull the laying flocks carefully, removing birds which have stopped production. Such birds are early molters with yellow pigmentation on shanks and beaks and with withered, dry combs.

Carry on the same feeding program as in winter and provide an ample water supply. There should be no let-down in feeding, for it requires lots of good food to produce eggs no matter what the season. Do not change rations in summer.

Keep the nests clean, sparsely littered, well ventilated and sufficient in number to furnish one nest for every five hens.

Gather eggs at noon and in late afternoon, preferably using wire baskets which permit a circulation of air and rapid cooling. Store eggs in a cool, somewhat moist room and market them frequently during hot weather.

Remove any male birds—except when eggs for hatching may be still desired—and produce only infertile eggs for table use.

Good quality stock is necessary to get the best results in summer egg production regardless of fine management. If present stock is questionable as to breeding, perhaps the coming fall will offer a good opportunity to change.

Shipping Inspection for Fruit and Vegetables

This is the fifteenth year of the federal shipping point inspection service on fresh fruits and vegetables, administered by the bureau of agricultural economics. Nearly five times as many carloads of these commodities were inspected at shipping points in 1936 as during 1923, the first full year this service was available.

During the first years the service was available in only a few states and only during the harvesting season of certain products. Today it is available during the entire year, under co-operative agreements with the state, in California, Colorado, Florida, Idaho, Louisiana, Oregon, Texas, Utah, and Washington.

In other states, with the exception of New Mexico, Kentucky, and Vermont, where no co-operative agreements are in effect, the service is offered during the movement of the major fruits and vegetables if the volume for inspection is sufficient to prevent prohibitive costs to users.

In nearly all parts of the country the service is self-sustaining. A few states have small appropriations which are used to supplement the fees collected.

The United States Department of Agriculture receives from the inspection fees only enough to cover the cost of supervision and general overhead expenses.

Don't Wash Eggs

Eggs have a natural bloom to them when fresh. When stale they become slick, or shiny. This bloom seems to be made up of tiny pores in the shell, which may be seen upon close examination. When a hen sets on the egg a few days, when the egg becomes old, or when it is washed, these tiny pores become stopped up and the egg cannot "breathe" with a consequent deterioration in quality. For that reason, says the Missouri Farmer, eggs should never be washed if they are to be sold on the market. A better way is to wipe them off with a dry cloth, or sandpaper the spot of dirt off with a piece of sandpaper or emery cloth.

Farm Notes

Apples, pears, and peaches are produced in three-fourths of the states.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL Lesson

Lesson for August 29

GOD CONDEMNS INTEMPERANCE.

LESSON TEXT—Leviticus 10:1, 2, 8-11; Proverbs 31:4, 5; Isaiah 28:1-8; Romans 14:21.

GOLDEN TEXT—Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging: and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise. Prov. 20:1.

PRIMARY TOPIC.—What a Wise King said.

JUNIOR TOPIC—When a Man Drinks.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How Drinking Harms Others.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Why Beverage Alcohol Is a Social Foe.

The use of intoxicating liquors is financially unprofitable to the nation, scientifically unwise and destructive, socially degrading, and morally wrong.

I. The Problem.

The selected Old Testament scriptures which comprise our lesson present the use of intoxicants as causing four socially undesirable results.

1. Religious disobedience (Lev. 10:1,2; Isa. 28:7). Two things we may rightfully expect of those who serve the nation in its religious life: (1) a vision of God and obedience to that vision in life and service, and (2) the exercise of sound God-guided judgment in the affairs of the people. But note what happens when the prophet and the priest turn to wine and strong drink. "They err in vision" (Isa. 28:7). That is, they have no clear concepts of divine truth, and lead the people into error. Further, we see that "they stumble in judgment." To every true servant of God comes repeatedly the opportunity and the need of rendering judgment, that is, of advising and counselling those to whom he ministers. If his mind is befuddled by the use of alcohol (or, for that matter, of any other kind of worldly indulgence) he will "stumble," and cause his people to stumble.

A sad incident is related in Lev. 10:1,2 of the sons of Aaron, appointed to the priesthood and instructed in its privileges and duties, but coming with strange fire to be offered before the Lord. Swift and terrible was the judgment they received. We are not told directly that they were intoxicated, but it is implied in the fact that there is an immediate injunction against the use of wine by the priests.

Lest someone think that such a thing could not happen in our day the writer mentions word which recently came to him that a leading seminary has professors on its staff who defend the so-called moderate use of alcoholic drink.

2. Political disorder (Prov. 1:5). While political leaders make sanctimonious protestations that government agencies are not influenced by the liquor interests, it is common knowledge to even those who are slightly informed that the two are closely associated. The result of that unholy alliance is rightly described in Prov. 31:5—"They forget the law, and pervert the judgment of any of the afflicted." Much of the sad disorder in the body politic is traceable directly to the door of the makers and sellers of alcoholic beverages.

3. National decay (Isa. 28:1-6). "Overcome with wine"—stricken down, useless in life, without true ambition, such is the picture of the man who gives himself to drink. Poverty, with all its attendant social problems, follows on the heels of the sale and use of intoxicants. Some liquor dealers are beginning to sense a rising tide of opposition to their business, and are advertising, "We do not want bread money," but the fact is that it is all too often bread money that goes for liquor, and the vile stuff is still on sale where the poor man may readily spend his "bread money" for it.

4. Personal degradation (Isa. 28:8). "Vomit and filthiness" are not very nice words, but they describe accurately the ultimate condition of the drinker and his surroundings. The writer knows a young man who boasts that he never gets drunk because the "booze" makes him so sick that he vomits it up. Imagine a supposedly intelligent man drinking stuff so vile that his stomach (evidently having more sense than his head) sends it back—and then boasting of his ability to drink more!

II. The Solution, a Divine Principle (Rom. 14:21).

Thousands of Christian people have solved not only the drink problem, but practically every question of conduct and social life by applying this principle. Surely no true follower of Christ will be guilty of doing anything that will cause any brother to be offended, to stumble, or to be made weak.

Foundations

The foundation of domestic happiness is faith in the virtue of woman; the foundation of political happiness is confidence in the integrity of man; the foundation of happiness, temporal and eternal, is reliance on the goodness of God.—Landor.

3. Discovery of the simple principles of magnetism possessed by magnetite, or loadstone, was made by Chinese in 1400 B. C., or 3,500 years before magnetism was known in Europe.

4. The Great Lakes have approximately the following elevations above sea level: Superior, 602 feet; Michigan, 581; Huron, 581; Erie, 241; and Ontario, 246 feet.

5. A 14.1 inch cube of gold weighs a ton.

6. Roman senators were appointed for life unless expelled from office for some dishonorable cause.

7. Contrary to general opinion, says a specialist, there is no small eye or large eye. All eyes are approximately of the same size. The reason for the apparent difference depends upon the orifice or aperture through which the eyes are seen. It is the variable diameter of this opening that creates the erroneous impression of different sizes of eyes.

8. There are three ways in which salt may be secured: First, by mining; second, by evaporation of sea water; and third, by digging wells until a salt vein is struck and then pouring water and pumping it up again as brine.

9. Petrification of wood is produced by the infiltration of water containing dissolved mineral matter, as calcium carbonate, silica, etc., which replaces the organic matter particle by particle, sometimes with original structure retained. It takes thousands of years for wood to petrify.

10. The capture of Constantinople by the Turks seriously affected the trade of the other Mediterranean countries, particularly that of Italy. The Turks put a fleet of ships at sea, which constantly harried the vessels of other nations. Since a large volume of their trade was with Asia and the accustomed routes were cut off, it was necessary for them to try to find some other practical route to the Indies. This no doubt influenced the decision of Christopher Columbus.

"I Planted a Flower"

Die when I may, I want it said of me by those who knew me best that I always plucked a thistle and planted a flower wherever I thought a flower would grow.—Lincoln.

RECREATE!

THE leisure time period contributes most to the development of the individual. It has been said, "What we earn while at work we put into our pockets, and what we spend during our leisure time we put into our character." Our occupations are tending to become more and more specialized and one-sided. So much of the time we are using only one part of our body or mind, allowing the other parts to deteriorate through disuse. There is great need, therefore, for our leisure-time activities to provide opportunities for developing those faculties which remain inactive during the working period and thus build a more all-around individual.

Active recreation, such as sports, games, dramatics and singing, develops powers of self-expression, of individuality, of initiative and of decision which many occupations tend to stifle. They provide a beneficial outlet for our natural demand for play and help to form certain desirable habits of perseverance, pluck, quick thinking, self-restraint and co-operation.

Fair play learned in games makes it easier to live a clean, courageous and generous life. Group activities also render service to the individual by promoting his happiness and decreasing his loneliness.

Life's Tenderness

What seems to grow fairer to me as life goes by is the love and grace and tenderness of it; not its wit and cleverness and grandeur of knowledge (grand as knowledge is), but just the laughter of little children and the friendship of friends; the cozy talk by the fireside; the sight of flowers and the sound of music.—John Green.

TESTED AND PROVED ON THE FARM

THE AMAZING New Firestone GROUND GRIP TIRE

PROVIDES GREATER DRAWBAR PULL, GREATER TRACTION AND SAVES MORE TIME AND FUEL

NEWS of the amazing performance of the NEW Firestone Ground Grip Tire is sweeping rural America. Farmers everywhere who have seen this new tire are so enthusiastic about it that sales have been climbing steadily upward and production has been greatly increased to meet the demand.

Why all this enthusiasm? Those of you who have seen the new Firestone Ground Grip Tire in action know the answer. Tests show that it will pull a three-bottom plow under soil conditions where other makes of tires can pull only a two-bottom plow. The re-designed tread gives greater traction and better self-cleaning action. It will not pack the soil — in fact, it leaves a mulch on the surface of the tread track that prevents rapid evaporation of moisture in the soil. These tests also show up to 30% more available drawbar pull on dry sod, up to 40% more on dry plowed ground, up to 50% more on wet plowed ground than with any other tire tested.

Only in Firestone Tires do you get so many patented extra-quality features. The Ground Grip Tread is patented and is made of specially compounded rubber which resists the action of sun, rain and snow. Gum-Dipping is a patented Firestone Process, by which every fiber of every cord in every ply is saturated with liquid rubber which gives added strength to resist the strain of heavy pulling. The Two Extra Layers of Gum-Dipped Cords under the tread are patented. This Firestone construction feature binds the tread and cord body into one inseparable unit.

You want and need ALL these features. Only Firestone has them! See this new tire at your nearest Firestone Implement Dealer, Tire Dealer or Auto Supply & Service Store today.

If you have not received a copy of the new Firestone Farm Tire Catalog, please send your name and address to The Firestone Tire & Rubber Company, Akron, Ohio, or Los Angeles, California, and a copy will be mailed to you promptly.

GREATER DRAWBAR PULL
Increased height of the new Ground Grip tread and the improved design and spacing of the heavy traction lugs result in much greater drawbar pull.

GREATER TRACTION
The increased penetration of the improved Ground Grip tread gives a deeper "bite" resulting in greater traction.

GREATER FUEL SAVINGS
Tests show savings of as much as 50% in fuel as compared with steel-lugged wheels.

GREATER TIME SAVINGS
The increased traction enables you to cover much greater acreage in a day.

WEATHER-PROOFED
The Ground Grip Tread is made of special weather-resisting rubber which is unaffected by hot sun, rain or snow.

Mr. Farley's Ringing Address
To The Young Democrats

The work of progress is on parttime efforts." So declared Hon. James A. Farley in his stirring address last Friday at the Indianapolis convention of the Young Democratic Clubs of America. Eternal vigilance is the price, not of liberty alone, but of everything worth while in a free and forward-going goverment. It is so because the agencies of reaction, like the elements of soil erosion, are continually seeking to under mine what liberal and constructive statesmanship has built up Repeatedly in our county's past the friends of progress and workers for human betterment have accomplished splendid results, only to see them challenged, and sometime partly undone. Thus it was in the days of Jefferson, and of Jackson and of Cleveland, and of Woodrow Wilson. Thus it is now in the fruitful fifth year of Franklin D. Roosevelt's administration. Speaking as chairman of the National Democratic Committee and as a veteran honored for his many brave battles in the cause of progressive goverment, Mr. Farley reminded his young comrades in Democracy that they cannot afford to regard what has been achieved since 1933 as a finished task.

"You must not be satisfied," he declared, "with the idea that when it comes your turn to man the legislative, executive and judicial departments, you will make this country what it ought to be. . . . Your task does not lie wholly in the future; you must assume the burden here and now. Unless you and organizations similar to yours plow the field and sow the seed, it is going to be a hard job for the nation to harvest a crop of prosperity and contentment later on. . . . It is no mere coincidence that today finds all the mouthpieces of ultra conservatism massed against the aims and processes of the New Deal. It is no accident that the Liberty League, pretending to be inactive, is doing a lot of subterranean work to balk the measures that our President has adocated and is advocating. It is no unpremeditated development that every newspaper which is tied in with the privileged interests is seeking to undermine the people's faith in the administration which has lifted our country out of the pit of depression to the highway of hope and renewed prosperity."

The song of these reactionarie just now is thatthe Democratic party is "split wide open" Mr. Farley aptly reminded his ten thousand applauding hearers at Indianapolisand his nation-wide radio audience that only a year ago the names of the few Democrats who then deserted their party were being paraded across the stage of every Republican rally. "Think back," he said, "on the innumerable editorials in G. O. P. newspaper, pointing out how vast sections of the Democratic party were following those few out of the fold. And then recall to your mind how flat and silly all these things appeared on election day. The opposition clamor of Democratic demoralization and industrial collapse is no more valid today than in the 1936 campaign. There is no more substance to the scarecrows and phantoms being invoked by our political foes in 1937 than in 1936"

The fact is the elements that are fighting President Roosevelt and his policies most bitterly now are, mainly, the ones that have been fighting him since the Chicago convention of 1932. Some of them left the party then, after failing to prevent his nomination. Othes deserted four years often. Still others, no doubt, will fall away in the times ahead. But the Democratic party is still democratic. Far from having been weakened by such defections, it is today more that ever a mighty fortress for the people's rights. And its future is all the more reassuring because its great leader and its loyal rank and file realize, as Mr. Farley says, that "the work of progress in no part-time effort."

Steel Is Iron

Steel is iron with a carbon content between that of wrought iron and that of cast iron. When properly made it combines the good properties of both, the degree depending upon its carbon content. The low-carbon steels approach wrought iron in toughness and are used for plates, wire, and rails. The high-carbon steels are very hard and are used for cutting implements.

The Word "Bat"

The word bat, as the name of the flying mammal, was an apparently sudden shift of name taking place about 1575. Prior to that time, for some three centuries, the name was variously bakke, backe, bake, bak, back. The earlier middle English name was from the Scandinavian atten-bakke, "evening bat."—Literary Digest.

Insensible to Pain

The New aerogene WAVE.

COOL . . . LIGHT . . . SAFE . . . COMFORTABLE

It's impossible to over-heat your scalp or your hair during an Aerogene wave. And it "takes a load off your shoulders" . . . for no heavy metal heaters are used to bow down your head.

An entirely new modern principle is used in giving this wave. After the light little Aerogene Sachets are folded on your hair, a toy-train current (only 4 volts) flows through them. A minimum amount of waving heat is created. Your hair will be actually softer and in better condition after an Aerogene . . . and the wave definitely lasts longer.

Shelby Counuy Health Department Announces Clinic To Open InColumbiana August 26

On Thursday, August 26, the Shelby County Health Department will begin the operation of a Clinic for the treatment of Venereal Diseases. This Clinic will accept for treatment only indigent patients and they must be referred to the Clinic by a practicing physician of the county. The Clinic hours will be 1 to 5 eash Thursday afternoon.

These diseases are the most prevalent of all infections. It is estimated that at least 6 million people are suffering from Syphilis at the present time and that over a half million new cases occur every year. It causes something like 40,000 deaths from heart disease every year;5,500 deaths from diseases of the nervous system and 10 per cent to 20 per cent of the insane . It can attack and destroy any organ or tissue of the body.

A considerable number of the cases are innocently acquired. If a mother is infected she will transmit the infection to her offspring and will be likely to abort or deliver a stillborn baby. Should it happen that the baby is born alive, it will likely develop some of the various manifestations of the disease at an early age.

It is believed that 2 or 3 times as many people are suffering form Gonorrhea or its complications as from Syphilis. This disease is frequently acquired innocently and may be transmitted from one person to another by the common use of towels, bed linen, toilet facilities, etc. It does not rank high as a cause of death but as a preventer of life, as a disabling desease and as a case of blindness, it has no equal. It is one of the leading causes of sterility; it produces a form of arthritis that will cause long periods of disability; a large number of major operations on female reproductive argans are made necessary because of the complications of this infection and it is estimated that probably more that 50 per cent of blindness is a direct result of Gonorrheal infection.

When we have learned to look upon these infections as diseases and not as something to be ashamed of, then we can bring these causes to early and adequate treatment and in this way help to control the active cases and prevent the spread of the information. Only in this way can the appalling amount of suffering, loss of earning power and of life, due to these most prevalent of lalinfoctions be prevented.

Home Ties Strong With Ducks

According to F. C. Lincoln, naturalist of the United States biological survey, years of banding of wild ducks shows that while they will spend their summers and breeding season together, they will separate on their flights southward, each mother duck taking her brood to her chosen winter quarters. California ducks, for example, may nest with Mississippi ducks during the summer in the same Canadian marsh, Naturalist Lincoln says, but on migrating southward for the winter, the California birds return to California and the Mississippians to the Mississippi swamps.

Happy Workers Do Better

Happy forces of workers do more and better work than others, declare London efficiency experts, who have found that bullying or nagging heads may cause a waste of half the working time.

Used Marriage Bracelets

Curious customs have been reported by those who have studied some of the jungle tribes. At the United States National museum is a pair of extraordinary marriage bracelets brought back from the region in 1858 by naval officers. By daring to wear these, a young Indian would prove his worthiness for marriage. The wristlets look harmless enough, but before the aspiring bridegroom put them on, they were filled with stinging ants of a most vicious kind. Bravely wearing them, the suitor would dance from one end of the village to the other, pausing before each house. If he did not flinch in his grim dance, he was "approved," and presumably he and the bride lived happily ever after.—Science Service.

The "Travelers' Aid"

The first recorded work in the United States that at all parallels the modern conception of travelers' aid grew out of the gold rush to the West in the 50s. Bryan Mullanphy of St. Louis, who died in 1851, left approximately one-third of his fortune of more than $1,000,000 in a trust fund to be administered by the city council for the purpose of assisting, while in St. Louis, those who were "traveling to the West.'

The ten largest states in population are: New York, 12,588,066; Pennsylvania, 9,631,350; Illinois, 7,630,654; Ohio, 6,646,697; Texas, 5,824,715; California, 5,677,251; Michigan, 4,842,325; Massachusetts, 4,249,614; New Jersey, 4,041,334; Missouri, 3,629,367.

Bloodhounds in 1575

The bloodhound was known in Scotland as early as 1575, being said to have been introduced from Brittany.

Old Time Prison Cells

Cells in which two of the most famous men in history spent some time still are intact after many hundreds of years. The first is the caged room in the Monastery of San Francesco del Deserto on an island off Venice where St. Francis of Assisi spent many months in 1220. The second is the prison, dug in the side of a stone cliff in Athens, where Socrates was confined up to the day of his death in 339 B. C.—Collier's Weekly.

Tomato Plants on Submarines

In the British navy, tomato plants are carried on all submarines because they are 200 times as sensitive as the canary at detecting poisonous gases, one of the main dangers in submarines. These gases are given off the storage batteries and are deadly. The leaves of the tomato plant droop when exposed to gas.

Your Pajamas Are Indian

When we go to bed in pajamas, we are wearing the sort of clothing that is worn as ordinary daily dress by vast numbers of the natives of India. "Pejama" is the name in that country, and long ago British people in India found that this native style of clothing was best for night wear in hot climates. So they started to wear "pejamas," and when they came home to England they introduced the sleeping suits here, with the name slightly altered.—Pearson's Weekly.

Swiss Cheese

Swiss cheese, or Emmenthaler, was first made in Switzerland's Emmen valley. For many years, practically all Swiss cheese consumed in America was imported from Switzerland.

Origin of Chess

The origin of chess is lost in obscurity, says a writer in the Philadelphia Inquirer. Its invention has been variously ascribed to the Greeks, Romans, Babylonians, Scythians, Egyptians, Jews, Persians, Chinese, Hindus, Arabians, Araucanians, Castilians, Irish and Welsh. Some have endeavored to fix upon some particular individual as the originator of the game; among others named are Japheth, Shen, King Solomon, Xerxes, Hermes, Aristotle, Semiramis, Zenobia, etc. However, the view which has obtained most credence is that which attributes the origin of chess to the Hindus.

Bear Eats Ants

When the black bear of India finds an ant hill it takes but a few minutes to tear up the hard, cemented clay and lay the deep galleries bare; then putting its gutta percha muzzle to the mouths of each gallery, it draws such a blast of air through them that the industrious laboring ants are sucked into its gullet in drifts. Afterward the bear digs right down to the royal chamber, licks up the bloated queen and goes on its way.

Glow Worm Grotto

The New Zealand Glow Worm Grotto is one of the strangest sights. On the ceilings of the vast, gloomy underground caverns twinkle millions of little lights. Their illumination is sufficient to light up the interior, making the place almost as bright as a ballroom.

Name for Jerked Beef

Beef preserved by drying in the sun is properly called charqui, being of Chilean origin.

First to Divide Circle

The Babylonians, who for some reason had a predilection for 12 and multiples thereof, were the first to divide a circle into 360 degrees. They decided to divide the day into 12 hours, the hour into 60 minutes, the minutes into 60 seconds. An important advantage of this is that it enables the hours to be divided into 12 convenient five-minute intervals.

Down Among the D's

It is strange how many of the gloomy words in the English language commence with the letter "d"? For instance, observes a writer in Pearson's Weekly: Depress, disease, demon, dull, doom, dread, dole, damn, dumps, dirt, dark, drown, droop, despair, defeat, desolate, disaster, devil, dirge, death, dungeon.

The Aretic tern is the world's widest wanderer, having been reported within eight degrees of the North pole and as far south as the Antarctic ocean.

FOLKS call me "Old Reliable" —guess that's because I've been on the job serving the South so long—eighty-seven years in fact.

We have so much in common, Neighbor, I'd like to get better acquainted with you, but with 5,000 miles of road spread over 13 states and millions of dollars worth of equipment to look after and all—it seems hard to find time to visit with all our friends.

But here's what I really want to say. The biggest job we both have is home-making. Yours, for the care, protection and happiness of your family and community. Ours, for the comfort and pleasure of thousands of families using our railroad—and the dependable moving of everyday commodities. We have much the same problems; food to buy, furniture to replace, taxes to pay, civic duties to perform.

So, if you just think of the L & N as the "Friendly Railroad"—as a home owner, like yourself—a respectable, useful citizen who for nearly a century has had a hand in building towns and cities and industries, helping support schools and churches and highways, giving employment to thousands, well, you'll have a true picture of American Railroads. You'll understand why we proudly call the L & N "Your Home Sweet Home on Rails"—and with your friendship and help we're going to keep right on making that Home safer, more comfortable, more enjoyable.

And Neighbor, here's our hand on it.

VILLAGE CHATTER FROM SILURIA

Oh, Boy! We just can't wait! There's lots of things happening around here and our chatter box is turning upside down.

Have you seen Geraldine Tucker's little puppy? He is the downiest, duckiest, whitest, little bit of roly poly from puppy land we have ever laid our eyes upon. Say, Who's that coming down the street? That's Joe Sharp, aint he sweet? O, pardon us, what we meant was, that tiny new son of his which he holds so sorta awkward, like is sweet! The young fellows name is Donald. . . . We understand that Mrs. Frank Kelly is departing for Florida, the land of sunshine and flowers, for a short vacation trip next week. She says, if the nights are as glamorous there as they are here, she may remain indefinitely. That would never do. Marie, cause we need you to help Merle "doll" us up. Anyway, we wish for you a swell trip. . . . . We all are burning with desire to know the identity of the dashing young damsel who rode a bicycle up the street the other day without any shoes on her feet. We know a little secret about Vera Simms. and one of the young men, but Vera says, it must not be told, so we shut our mouths wide open-we won't! . . . Mr. and Mrs Jim Talley and family left last Thursday for Spartenburg, S. C. a la motor car! . . . While tripping down Main Steet recently, we happened upon a touching little scene. Ginger Robertson, adorable little tyke, who's mother had left her that day to work, was telling her troubles to Dolly. She held her dolly ever so close, and she was saying in a woe begone little voice, while several tears spashed down her cheeks, "Dolly, I want my Mamma so bad." Bear up Little One, we say, sail right on Virginia, you will soon learn to take it! . . . Drive slowly down Ball Street and take a peep at that lucious begonia blooming so majestically on the porch of Mrs. Langstons home. . . . Another thing one might do is to stroll down by the "Y" and take a glance across the village to where our Medthodist Church Nestles among the trees at the foot of mountains .With it's double flight of steps and it's old fashioned steeple its like a picture out of an old book. . . . . Heres what not to do if you have a What-Not shelf to attach to the wall you'rs not to arrange all your fragile little what -nots on the shelf and then attempt to nail it up. Madge Ward has learned from better experence thats its very apt to prove fatalto the tiny dogs, Cats, etc. . . . It takes plenty of Courage to go a-visting away from mother when you're only two years old That happens to be the case of little Peggy Nell Peeples who is spending a few days this week with her grandparents Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Peeples in Mt. Era. If you're asking us the we think the courage came in where her mother agreed for her to go. . . . We are expecting Alonzo to come up with a permanent most any day now. . . . Mr. A. V. Reynolds has returned from a nice visiit in Geargia he reports a swell time but says he's glad to be back home. . . . While walking down Buck Creek Avenue the other day we happened upon a very sad, sad little scene we held our freaths as we watched Allen Cofer take a very delicate little piece of Weed to her little daughter Alice Fay. No "Al" we weren't worried for fear you'd hurt the little lady but we did tremble in fright for fear you might exert yourself weilding such a stout looking switch. . . . Inell Booker is home from the hospital with her leg in a cast. This is mighty hot weather to be learning to walk on crutchers isn't it, Inell. It's all in life though. . . . That's an attractive gown Miss who is visiting France Walker this week we understand she is from Texas and we're too sorry we don't know her name Anyway Miss who-ever you-are you're as welcome as the flowers in May. . . We had a colorful wedding in our town last week. Two of our lankiest darkies got hitched at twelve noon one day in front of Roscos Place. We hear that a number of prominent citizens left their mid day meat to witness this inresting procedure. . . . . Again its tim e tosay Alohae we'll do with a promise to come again.

There is no profit in bucking the inevitable but the surrender of principle is never inevitable.

Game birds and animals are finding a new friend these days in the Soil Conservation Services. The reason for this new friendship is because Service techincians see to it that some of the vegetation used to control soil erosion also provides food and cover for wildlife.

The soap industry is by far the largest of the industrial consumers of fats and oils in the United States, using about one and one-half billion pounds annually.

Fertile soil is the chief foundatioon of wealth.

CHANGES IN BUSINESS CIRCLES

Changes in business circles noticed this week iinclude Mason Edwards, former Manager of the Taylor Cash Store, who has accepted a position with the M. & W. Cash Market. Both Mr. Edwards and Clayton McGhee, who is in charge of the Meat Market, are very popular in Columbiana, and these young business men are creditable representatives of this very reliable trading center.

Jimmy Brasher, who has been in Sylacauga for the past few weeks, may again be found at his accustomed post in the Taylor Cash Store. "Jimmy" is the personification of "service with a smile" all the time, and what he does not know about pleasing Mr. and Mrs. Public, would be hard to write about. Go by either of these two trading centers and you will receive a cordial welcome and prompt service which spells, in the long run SATISFACTION!

THE DAILY ROUTINE CONTINUES

Powell Blair, who has been identified with the Democrat as Advertising Manager and Linotypist for the past two years, has accepted a position with the Cullman Democrat. Horace Polk, Apprentice, who has been learing the art of PRINTING in that much talked about "School of Experience," for the past four years in the office, takes his seat in the linotypist chair this week. Jack Letson, may be found busily engaged in artistically setting advertisements. Forms are "all set" and in place! A whirring medoly played on the big press by Zell Barnett and Upton Baber is next heard and presto here's your Democrat Mister-right on time!

Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Duke, Frank Fulton, Dick Fulton, Jim and Warren Duke, Imogene Clayton, Mrs. Lena Merrell and Virginia Pettus, have returned from an enjoyable motor trip of a weeks duration in Camp Walton.

Mr. and Mrs. Bill Head of Bessemer, a "50-50" attractive couple, were cordially greeted guests in the Democrat office on Friday when they paused for a few hours in Columbiana on their way to enjoy a two weeks vacation in Florida.

Wilson Milner, capitalist, of Gulf Port Miss., was a distinguished visitor in Columbiana last week.

Paul O. Luck, Max Lefkovits, Sam A. Lokey and Frank Head formed a congenial motor party who were guests of President Sam Lefkovits of the Olks Club of Alabama, and who was the hospitable host at a barbecue staged in Pineview Beach, near Bessemer, on last Thursday.

On last Thursday night, Judge and Mrs. Cage Head were cordial hosts entertaining with a six o'clock dinner the following guest: Mr. and Mrs. O. P. Head, Miss Carrie Head, Mr. and Mrs. Grover Cleveland, and son Oliver, Mrs. Glennie Nybeck, and Miss Sarah Head.

A successful dance was presented on Saturday, night by the American Legion Post of Columbiana, when they presented the Ten Counts of Rhythm. Miss Vivian Booker, Painist, is quite an addition to this array of young musicians, and much fovorable comment was heard regarding this popular Dance Orchestra.

Douglas Holman and Bill White now holding responsible position with the Highway Department located near Attalla, spent the week end in Columbiana.

ATKINSON FAMILY HOLDS REUNION

Members of the family of Mrs. Thos. J. Atkinson met on August 22, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Wyatt in Harpersville, for their annual family reunion. All the living children and every grandchild, with one exception, were present.

The Atkinson family are pioneer citizens of Shelby County, Mr. Atkinson came to Alabama from Georgia, over 45 years ago, while Mrs. Atkinson's farily have resided in the County for four generations.

Those who attended this festivity and happy gathering included: Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Espy (Mable Atkinson), Clay Espy Jr. Frances, Elizabeth and Joe Espy of Helena; Mr. and Mrs. W. Y. Johnson (Myrtle Atkinson) and son, Billy Atkinson of Wilsonville; Mr and Mrs. Carey Atkinson and children, Jerry and Jane; Mr. and Mrs. Leo. Atkinson, Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Wyatt (Margaret Atkinson) and daughter, Jane; Mrs. T. J. Atkinson of Haroerville.

Mr. and Mrs. Felton Goodwin of Birmingham spent Sunday in Columbiana with their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Charlie Goodwin.

Mr and Mrs. Alvin Stinson, formerly of Columbiana, now residing in Montevallo, are receivng congratulations upon the arrival of a boy, on August 22, 1937, whom they have named Olvin Macon Stinson Jr., This young fellow is also receiving a royal reception in the home of Mrs. and J. L. Isbell, he beiing the first grand son! Thus does August chalk up another "favored" son, whose life will be controlled by the Planet Virgo. This makes a grand total of about 25 birthdays we have recounted during this month.

Dorothy Sessions of Clanton was a popular guest of Charlie Verne Tinney during the past week.

Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Mansfield (Pat Carter) of Montgomery, were guests of Mrs. W. W. Carter, Sunday.

Mary Joe and Hulda Milner of Gulfport, accopmanied their father, Wilsoon Milner on a trip thru Alabama this week. While in Columbiana they were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Davis.

Mrs. D. S. Lightcap, has returned to Columbiana, after a delightful vacation spent in Columbus, N. C.

Heart Drifts

SHOPPING

I needed a new frying-pan,
I needed a new crock,
I needed very much a new
Plain gingham frock.

I took my silver in my hand
And started to the town:
I planned to buy the crock and pan
And the gingham gown.

The shops were glittering with things
Of beauty and of grace:
I saw a little silver fan,
I saw a golden vase.

I did not reach the counter where
They kept the crocks and pans:
I could not pass the vases by,
I could not leave the fans.

I bought the little golden vase,
I bought the fan and went Home again, within my hands
Not a single cent.

And still I need a frying pan,
The other needs are there:
But I have two such lovely thiings,
And I don't care.

TODAY'S THOUGHT
From "A Prayer"

I kneel not now to pray that Thou
Make white one single sin,
I only kneel to thank thee, Lord,
For what I have not been—

For deeds which sprouted in my heart
But ne'er to bloom were brought,
For monstrous vices which I slew
In the shambles of my thought—

Dark seeds the world has never guessed,
By hell and passion bred
That cankered in my head.

Some said I was a righteous man—
Poor fools! That gallows tree
(If thou hadst let one foot to step)
Had grown a limb for me.

—Harry Kemp.

STRANGE RIDERS

Four swift brothers
Are galloping along
Each one chanting
A boisterous song.

They never cast a shadow
No matter where they ride,
Over blank desert
Or over the tide.

No one ever sees them
And no one ever will,
The four Wind Brothers
Who straddle the hill.

—L. T.

HEARTBREAK

A heartbreak is a foolish things.
It only means that you
Will find no foolish songs to sing
Or useless things to do.

A heartbreak means that you can sit
And watch a dream go by
And laugh because you know that it
Will sicken soon and die.

So small a thing a heartbreak is,
There is no word or touch
No hand you clasp or smile you miss
Can move you very much.

A heartbreak means that where a kiss
Has dealt means that where a kiss
Has dealt you pain before,
There is no thing,—next world or this
Can hurt you any more.

THE TOO-MUCH-LOVED

It has been written in your star
That fires shall kindle where you are;
That where you walk there shall be strife;
Ice melting; earth turned; sleep stirred; life;

You will graze hearts and blood will spurt.
You will be hurt because you hurt
Those whom you try not even to touch
Whose eyes pursue your eyes too much.

You will write longer than you know
Upon the sky and where you go
There will be wounds and pain, which yet
None of the wounded will regret.

You will bring peace but oftener still Wars in your name, against your will;
Yet you, divided, waked of
Angers, will suffer too much love.

And you will stir the whirlpool up,
Ond you will drink the unasked-for cup,
And be of those much-damned-and-blessed
Who never rest, who never rest.

Declared or Not, It's War

SHANGHAI'S "war" of 1932 was a second-rate movie sham battle compared with what's going on over there now. The city of 3,500,000 inhabitants and its environs are a scene of destruction, terror, flames and death on a mass scale the horror of which is unthinkable.

Thousands upon thousands of civilians lie dead, dying and wounded, and the toll increases day after day. No estimate has even been attempted to determine the amount of casualties among the Chinese and Japanese fighting forces. Indeed such an estimate today might be woefully inadequate tomorrow, for reports tell of whole brigades being shot or blown to bits in a single encounter.

Square mile after square mile, especially in the native Chapei district, has been gutted by fires that rise in the wake of bombs and artillery shells. Millions of men, women and children face slower, even more terrible death by hunger, for who is to bring supplies from the outlying farm fields while the whole area is under terrific fire?

Even in the International Settlement life is fleeting, insecure, for bombs and shells drop there, too. And with 1,000,000 refugees inside to be fed, shops are rapidly locking their doors to protect their wares from rioters.

As this is written, the Chinese land forces, outnumbering the Japanese four to one, are forcing the invaders slowly back to the Whangpoo in fierce ground fighting. Whether the Japanese reinforcements will be able to turn the tide of battle is problematical. At the same time Japanese warships—half the entire Japanese fleet must be in the Whangpoo—are showering exploding shells upon huge concentrations of Chinese soldiers.

Eye-witnesses reported that the Japanese had concentrated some 40 destroyers, six cruisers, four dreadnaughts, an airplane carrier and many gunboats in the rivers near Shanghai. Only through a clever maneuver did the Chinese prevent them from gaining the upper reaches of the Whangpoo and shelling Shanghai from the rear. The Chinese, in a surprise attack, captured six Japanese merchant ships, sailed them into the heart of the channel and scuttled them, preventing passage.

American authorities in Shanghai decided upon immediate evacuation by the 3,800 Yanks living there. The danger which confronted them was emphasized when stray Japanese bombs blasted the American Baptist mission, leaving the fate of 20 persons inside in grave doubt.

United States marines were on hand, of course, to offer what protection they could to American nationals, and reinforcements were quick in leaving San Diego, Calif., to join them. The U. S. S. Augusta, flagship of Uncle Sam's China squadron, lay in the Whangpoo alongside the Japanese ships. With shrapnel flying about their ears, Americans were getting out of China on every available ship.

It was not considered likely that President Roosevelt would invoke the neutrality act so long as no "official" state of war between Japan and China existed. This would involve the declaration of embargoes on arms and on the extension of credits to both nations, a situation which would be of definite aid to the aggressor, Japan, since China is in far greater need of war materials.

Japan continued to "defend" itself, officially, from the wicked Chinese, whom its foreign office characterized as "prejudiced." However, the "defense" was being carried on in the other fellow's back yard. Japanese authorities continued to insist that they meant no harm to the Chinese people, and that their aim was still for the cooperation of China, Manchukuo, and Japan. They also revealed that voluntary contributions to the nation's war chest, coming from all over Japan, had passed the $2,500,000 mark.

Question Black's Eligibility

THE senate confirmed the President's nomination of Sen. Hugo L. Black of Alabama to the Supreme court, 63 to 16, but only after a bitter fight, following which the minority protested that the confirmation had been railroaded through.

Six Democrats and ten Republicans voted against Black. The Democratic insurgents, led by Edward R. Burke (Neb.) and Royal S. Copeland (N. Y.) based their objections principally upon charges that he was associated with the Ku Klux Klan, and therefore unfitted to sit with the high tribunal for reasons of racial and religious prejudice. The Republicans, notably William E. Borah (Idaho), argued that he could not legally become a member of the court.

That his eligibility might be tested before the court itself was a possibility when Attorney Albert Levitt,

Appointee in judicial mien.

former special assistant to Attorney General Homer S. Cummings, filed a plea for leave to pray an order for Black to show affirmatively why he should be permitted to serve as an associate justice. He raised the same legal questions as the Republican minority had:

1. That Black could not become a justice because during his term as a senator the Sumners retirement act was passed, permitting justices to retire at full pay. The Constitution provides that no member of congress shall be appointed to an office which was created or the emolument of which was increased during his membership in congress.

2. That no vacancy existed on the Supreme court anyway, since Justice Willis Van Devanter had only retired, not resigned, and may still be called for judicial service by the chief justice.

It was expected that the Black appointment would become political fodder in the next election campaigns.

Grist from the Mill

AFTER months of wrangling over the Supreme court measure, the wages and hours bill, the ever-normal-granary bill and other administration "musts" the house of representatives began to act upon some other legislation in haste, with a view to adjournment some day, some time.

The house appropriations committee reported out the year's last "deficiency" measure to supply funds for government operations overlooked in the regular budget. It called for $78,500,000; two previous deficiency measures, totaling nearly a billion, had been passed. The committee turned down requests from the executive department for $43,000,000 in additional appropriations. Some of the appropriations recommended were $23,000,000 for new buildings, $3,000,000 for federal participation in the New York world's fair and $1,500,000 for participation in the San Francisco world's fair. Funds for the operation of the Jones-Bankhead farm tenancy act and for naval building were denied altogether; appropriations for payments to federal land banks and the Federal Farm Mortgage corporation, and the national labor relations board were sliced severely.

The house passed the low-cost housing bill, but with so many alterations that it had to go to a joint committee for the differences to be straightened out before it could be sent to the White House. The senate had approved a bond issue of $700,000,000; the house shaved it to $500,000. The house also raised the percentage of funds which local communities must contribute to projects; increased the limitation of cost of a single dwelling to $5,000 or $1,000 a room; and cut the limit of any one state's share in the funds from 20 per cent to 10 per cent.

The house also passed a bill designed to plug the tax loopholes by which, it was alleged, the wealthy have been, legally or illegally, avoiding the payment of income taxes which they have a moral if not a legal right to pay. The extremely complicated bill carried unanimously after only two hours' consideration.

Strange Doings at Sea

FOUR insurgent airplanes dropped 25 bombs upon the Danish vessel Edith and sank it in the Mediterannean, came the report from Barcelona. The crew of 20 and a French observer for the non-intervention control were rescued by two fishing boats. The owners of the vessel, in Copenhagen, said it was their twentieth ship to be captured or bombed by the rebels.

The captain of the French freighter Peame reported to authorities that a torpedo had been fired upon his ship by an unidentified submarine which floated beside his ship for several minutes off the Tunisian coast.

When the Spanish tanker Campeador was sunk in the Mediterranean, the rebel command issued a communique taking the full blame. But the captain of the tanker insisted an Italian destroyer sank it.

Campaign Aftermath

TURNED down by the house rules committee when he demanded a special investigation, Rep. Bertrand H. Snell of New York, Republican floor leader, has carried direct to Attorney General Homer S. Cummings his charges of violation of the federal corrupt practices act by the Democratic national committee. The charges arise from National Chairman James A. Farley's ingenious method of replenishing the party's treasury by selling Democratic convention books, autographed by President Roosevelt, for $250 each.

In a letter to Cummings, Snell charged:

1. That sales of the book, autographed by the President, in 1936, at $250 each constitute an illegal collection of campaign funds and a direct violation of section 313 of the corrupt practices act.

2. That a Colorado man was the "victim of eleven specific acts of reprisals" by the resettlement administration and threats to "put him out of business" since his refusal last October to subscribe $500 to the book sales campaign.

3. That a New Yorker was approached by a Democratic campaign committee agent with promise of White House intervention in return for a $25,000 subscription or retainer.

Snell attached affidavits and a synopsis of the evidence he had furnished the house rules committee.

Rebels Press Santander

REPORTS from the insurgent command said that 35 villages and 1,000 prisoners had been captured by the rebels in their drive on Santander and the tiny remaining slice of the northern Spanish coast held by the government. The government admitted that some advances had been made, but refused to concede that General Franco's forces were threatening the main defenses of the Santander area.

Franco, in his new drive, was using the same tactics which eventually brought about the downfall of Bilbao after a siege of many months. Bombing planes and artillery were pounding the fortifications while other airplanes poured machine gun fire upon trenches.

Insurgents planned the Santander advance to require as little manpower as possible, so as to leave enough men at the Madrid front to start a separate offensive there if necessary. They admitted the loyalists had caught them napping with an offensive west of Madrid in July, causing them to abandon the Santander drive temporarily, but declared that "That will not happen this time."

Rumor Has Farley Quitting

IS "Genial Jim" Farley going to resign as postmaster general to become the executive head of an automobile firm? That's what his friends in Washington say, and Jim has not denied the rumor, as he has promptly denied similar rumors in the past. Farley, it is said, seeks to rehabilitate his personal fortunes. As postmaster general he has lost $10,000 a year over his salary of $15,000 and is, according to his friends, today in debt. The story went that he would become an executive of the Pierce-Arrow Motor corporation, that 5,000 new shares of stock would be delivered to him, and that he would also be allowed to share in the $100,000 stock purchase warrants.

French Lifeline Periled?

THE Paris press disclosed that France considers herself in danger of losing her possessions in the Near East and of having her air route connections with the Far East severed because of revolts in Syria.

Censorship of the news out of Syria is strict, but some reports have leaked through which indicate the revolt recently quelled was a serious one. According to one dispatch the population is extremely dissatisfied with the terms of the Franco-Syrian treaty signed last September 10. As soon as the proper machinery can be set up, the treaty provides, a unified Syrian state will be formed from four of the five mandate areas which the French hold in the Levant.

Large sections of the population differ in religion from the Syrians in Damascus. They are willing to be governed by a foreign nation like France, as they have been for centuries, but they do not want to be subjected to the will of the Damascus politicians.

Protests Lease of Ships

LA NACION, influential newspaper of Buenos Aires, Argentina, caused some stir by vigorously protesting the proposed leasing of obsolete United States warships to Brazil, declaring that such an act would upset the balance of naval power in South America.

Secretary of State Hull had written a letter to the senate naval committee asking congressional authority for the leasing of over-age war vessels to South American republics. When the Argentinian objections were noted, President Roosevelt pointed out that the vessels in question were obsolete, and were only to be used for training.

SEEN and HEARD around the NATIONAL CAPITAL

By Carter Field

Washington. — President Roosevelt's most spectacular fight in the next session of congress now seems likely to be on taxation. It promises to develop a battle approaching the fundamental character of the Supreme court enlargement fight of the session now about to die. The Treasury, working under the instructions of the President, will have a measure already drafted when congress convenes in January.

There is no dodging the fact that the government does and will need more revenue—lots more. All the early session talk about economy and balancing the budget has long since blown out the window. Congress appropriated plenty more than the budget. But that is only part of the picture. Federal housing is just starting—will expand. And there will be other new expenses.

Biggest of all, however, is relief. Harry L. Hopkins literally bites his fingernails with rage at the idea of congress appropriating "only" one and a half billion dollars for relief—was especially sore because of the proviso that this must run through the fiscal year. He had hoped for no stringers—to spend the billion and a half, in six or seven months and then ask for a deficiency appropriation. He doesn't blame the President for this nigardliness—says the President asked for only a billion and a half because the White House was told by Capitol Hill leaders that they would not vote for any more.

Criticism of congress for this stinginess—for which Hopkins says many people must suffer—is being broached all through the far-flung network of relief agencies.

But, regardless of any particular development, the Treasury is going to need more money, and the President is going to tell congress how to raise it. Right there will come the rub.

Congress Knows—Maybe

Congress thinks it knows about raising revenues—just how to keep the shoe from pinching too painfully, and just how to get enough money despite tempering the wind to the shorn lambs. It has the pride of one signal victory over the President, with a following demonstration of the accuracy of its judgment. The President wanted to eliminate the regular corporation income tax entirely—slap a very high tax on undistributed earnings, and get the revenue from bigger individual income taxes.

It is now obvious to any one who examines the figures that if congress had done precisely what the President wanted the Treasury would now be in a much deeper hole than it is. Corporations did just what the President wanted done—for the most part. They voted out extra dividends to escape the new tax, and boosted incomes as a result. But the income taxes did not mount at anything like the rate the President's advisers had calculated. Fortunately for the federal strong box, congress insisted on retaining the regular corporation income tax.

In the coming battle the conservatives in congress will line up behind Pat Harrison, chairman of the senate finance committee, in a fight to liberalize the tax on undistributed corporation earnings. Harrison favors a much more liberal policy with respect to putting aside a surplus for rainy days. No conservative on Capitol Hill takes much stock in the Roosevelt-New Deal contention that under the new order there won't be any rainy days. Besides, they slyly point out, the Supreme court is still functioning and the Constitution has not been amended, so the White House should revise its own weather forecasts.

All the Roosevelt tax proposals have contained just as much social and economic reform as money raising. Next January's bill will be no exception. It will move against bigness. It will strike anew at holding companies. It will aim, in a general way, at the distribution of wealth.

Laugh at Farley

Ever since James A. Farley named Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg as the Republican Presidential nominee for 1940, there has been lots of chuckling over Postmaster Jim's taking in more territory, and running the Republican party as well as the Democratic.

But there was plenty of shrewd strategy behind Jim's move. It just so happens that Senator Vandenberg is far from being the easiest Republican to beat, in Farley's estimation. There are lots of Republicans Jim thinks could be beaten much more easily. In fact, if Jim were to take down his hair and tell you the cold truth, he would admit that he would regard Vandenberg as the very hardest Republican to beat of any now on the horizon.

Why then would he try to help nominate him?

Most of the Washington dispatches since Farley made his prediction have stressed the point that Vandenberg would be about as strong as any Republican likely to be nominated. They have gone on from there to the old political logic that the man farthest out in front in any contest is the man most of the other candidates shoot at, and hence is very apt to be crippled in the final stretch. The other candidates "gang" him, fearing that otherwise there would be no chance for any one of them.

This, most observers have figured, is what Farley wanted to happen to Vandenberg, thus greasing the way for the exit of the strongest opponent Franklin D. Roosevelt—or whoever runs in his place—could have.

The real truth is very different indeed. Farley is more afraid of something else, by far, than he is of Vandenberg's running. What he is most afraid of is that NO Republican will run!

Supremely Confident

Farley is absolutely confident, and with considerable logic, that whoever the Democrats nominate—assuming they do not go plain crazy—can beat any Republican who may be nominated. The Democrats might not carry 46 states, as they did in 1936. They might not even carry 42, as they did in 1932. But it would be mighty hard for the Republicans to beat them. In fact, fair betting odds right now ought to be about ten to one that it will be impossible to revamp the Republican organization into a winning machine by 1940, even if they should have an appealing candidate and a popular platform.

There are more factors entering into this situation than are explained by the debacles of 1932, 1934 and 1936. Or by Roosevelt! There are situations in individual states, notably New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and Connecticut—all states that the Republicans simply must carry to have a chance in a presidential election—which make the carrying of any one of them an uphill job for the Republicans.

In all those states the old leaders have passed out of the picture, and no competent hands or shrewd brains have taken their places in the G. O. P. machines. The New York Republican organization went to pot along about 1920. Not a Republican senator or governor has been elected since that year, while the majority of the house delegation has been Democratic beginning with the 1922 election.

The Republican organization in the other states named carried on a little longer than did the Empire state leaders, but they have been dying on the stem. Pennsylvania's "Puddler Jim" Davis is the only Republican senator from the whole lot, and the Democrats are counting on knocking him off next year!

What Farley is more afraid of than any Republican, no matter how strong, is the dissolution of the Republican party as a national institution, and the split of the Democrats into two camps. Further, Farley happens to know that Vandenberg is one of the best known Republicans who privately favor abandoning the word "Republican." So the naming of Vandenberg by Farley was a very shrewd hypodermic, not for Vandenberg, but for the old G. O. P. elephant!

Might Be Worse

Business representatives in Washington—the bright lads who look after the interests of the various industries, etc.—are relieved that the wages and hours bill is going through this session, surprising as that may seem.

Not that they like it. With one accord they agree that it is terrible. But they think that if its passage were delayed until next session it would be worse.

When they saw how William Green marched up to the Capitol, after being relegated to the has-beens by so many commentators, and put a few teeth in the measure, they realized that if passage could have been postponed the measure would be much more radical than it is now.

For instance, there is only a hair line now holding the minimum wages that the board can fix for a community at 40 cents an hour. There is a provision, slipped into the bill by Green, which provides that the board may not fix a minimum less than the minimum obtained by collective bargaining.

But being as the limit is fixed at 40 cents, the board simply could not interfere with a concern which was paying a minimum of 40 cents, though the minimum established by collective bargaining in that vicinity might be 50 cents.

Obviously the two elements were injected in the bill without thought of their working together. And obviously the natural inclination of every New Dealer would be to take out that minimum of 40 cents in favor of any action which might tend to raise it.

So what the business representatives think is that if there were more time to work on the measure—if it were put over until next session to study—the flat minimum would be boosted.

Obviously such an amendment can be proposed next session, and beyond any question will be. But to head off an amendment after a law has been in operation less than a year—before it has really got to working—is not difficult. It is so easy to make the point that time must be allowed to see how the machine works before any tinkering is attempted.

What Irvin S. Cobb Thinks about

Japs Killing Chinamen

SANTA MONICA, CALIF.—The formula still holds good. A Jap kills a Chinaman. That's another dead Chinaman. A Chinaman kills a Jap. That's a war.

But before we get too busy deploring Japan's little way of disregarding pledges so as to gobble more Chinese territory let us look at some records closer home. Since the republic was formed we have deliberately broken 264 separate treaties with the original Red owners of this land.

Irvin S. Cobb

From these violations of our solemn promises border wars frequently ensued.

When the Indians started fighting we called it an uprising. When we sent troops forth to slaughter the Indians it was a punitive expedition to restore law and order. If the white soldiers wiped out the Indians that was a battle. If the Indians wiped out the soldiers that was a massacre.

Those who make history rarely get a square deal from those who write history.

Keeping Undercover.

THIS is the land where, in self-protection, you hide your place of residence and have your telephone privately listed. The result is, if your aged grandmother happens along and doesn't know your address, she can never reach you, but any smart stranger may approach the right party—let us call him a 'phone-legger—and, by payment of a small fee, get the number instantly.

So, in about two calls out of three, you answer the ring to find at the other end of the line somebody with a neat little scheme, because here in movieland neat little schemes grow on every bush and gentlemen promoting them are equally numerous.

Through long suffering, I've become hardened to this, but today over the wire came a winning voice saying the speaker desired to give me, as he put it, "a checking over for white termites."

I admit to a touch of dandruff and there have been times when I suspected fleas—we excel in fleas on this coast—but I resent the idea of also being infested with white termites.

I've about decided that, to modern civilization, telephones are what cooties are to a war—nobody likes 'em, but everybody has 'em.

Camera Sniping.

SNAPSHOOTING of famous folks from ambush may be upsetting to the victims of the sniping, but the subscribing public certainly gets an illuminating eyeful every time one of the photographic magazines appears.

I've just laid aside the current copy of a periodical which could be called either "The Weekly Expose" or "Stop, Look and Laugh." Among other fascinating, not to say illusioning, illustrations, I note the following:

A reigning movie queen with her mouth so wide open that her face looked like a "gates ajar" design. If I had tonsils like hers, I'd have 'em right out.

A political idol taken in a brief one-piece bathing suit. Next time they snap him, he would be well advised to wear more than a mere g-string. A Mother Hubbard would be better. Or, anyhow, a toga. A statesman is greatly handicapped when he suggests a barrel of leaf-lard with the staves knocked out.

A close-up of Mr. John L. Lewis with the lips pouting out and a congested expression. Would not this tend to confirm the impression that lately Mr. Lewis bit off more than he could chew?

This candid camera stuff is translating into the pictorial fact the nightmare all of us have had—that horrid dream of being caught outdoors with practically nothing on.

Field Days for Reds.

UNDER the warming suns of tolerance and indifference and even tacit encouragement in certain quarters, many of our hothouse communists are changing from the pallid, timorous flowerlets of discontent into full-blown advocates of the glad new age when Lenin will take over Lincoln's niche in the gallery of the immortals and government everywhere will be of the Trotskys, but the Trotskys, for the Trotskys.

True, there still remain some wavering souls who are so pink they'd be red if they weren't so yellow!

But these quivering aspens shrink in number as their bolder comrades openly profess the blessed doctrine which is doing so much for the undertaking business in Russia.

He crept to a window and peered in. Dark as pitch except for a white blur. That must be the cover of Aunt Mary Amanda's old limousine. Why was the unused car directly opposite the door? He remembered now. Jed had told him that he had o. k.'d an offer Henri Jacques had reported for the out-of-date machine. Probably the butler had planned to drive it off in the morning.

The man who had just made his get-away had stopped here. Why? Had he hidden loot? The silver? But the silver had been in the storeroom only a few hours ago. A few hours! Much could happen in a few hours while the occupants of the Other House had been at supper at the Reyburns'. He'd better investigate. Lucky he still carried the key to his aunt's garage on his ring. In the days when they had been friendly, she had insisted upon his having a key to the house as well. Soundlessly he slid back the door, squeezed in, closed and locked it.

With the light in his torch dimmed, he tiptoed carefully between the automobiles. Brooke's long, sleek town car. Sam's convertible coupe. The white cloth cover of the old limousine was awry as if it had been hastily adjusted. Part of it lay on the floor. What was that mark? A footprint! A footprint faint but bloody!

With a childish impulse to clutch their coats and keep the men with her, Brooke Reyburn had listened to the closing of the door behind Mark Trent and Jed Stewart. They had pleaded an early morning start for the city, but she was sure that they had gone because they resented Jerry Field's sulky silence. She would have been glad to get away from his gloomy presence herself. She glanced at him as he stood before the fire. From the back of the house came the crash of dishes, a shout of laughter.

Brooke sprang to her feet. "I wonder what went then. I suspect that Lucette and Sam started rough-housing and that Daphne was drawn into the scuffle. I should have known better than to let them wash the dishes. Come on, Jerry. Let's investigate. I'd rather know the worst at once."

Field straightened and thrust his hands hard into his pockets.

"Same here, Brooke. I want to know what you were doing in Mark Trent's house while we were at rehearsal."

"Why should you think I had been in his house?"

"Didn't Stewart find a gardenia outside his front door?"

"So what? I suppose there couldn't be another woman in the world who might call on Mr. Trent wearing a flower, or did you corner the gardenia market today, Jerry?"

Field's expression changed from gloom to cheer.

"There's something in that. Trent certainly is a wow with the ladies. I hear that he could dine out three times an evening if he'd accept the invitations heaped on him. It gets me why he settled down in this burg. Don't be sore at me, sweet thing. Wasn't it natural for me to think the flower yours when Stewart produced the gardenia that he found at Trent's front door when you weren't wearing any?"

Before she could answer she heard someone approaching.

She drew a breath of relief as Sam and the two girls entered.

"What smashed in the kitchen, Sam? I thought the chimney had fallen in."

"Nothing but a stack of those warranted unbreakable plates Clotilde keeps things on in the ice-box. And did they crack up? The floor looked as if there'd been a snowstorm."

"The sound brought Henri down the back stairs in a hurry. Ever seen him in his robe de nuit, Brooke?"

"What a giggler you are, Lucette! Of course I haven't."

"You've missed the laugh of your life. He was something straight out of a Cruikshank edition of Dickens. Night cap with tassel; night shirt, I believe it was called back in the dark ages; thin bow legs, and flapping slippers."

"Was he embarrassed?"

"He was not. He behaved more as if he were afraid we'd miss the appeal of his costume. He ran around like this." She trotted across the floor.

Lucette frowned at Field. "Can't you smile for the lady, Jerry? I'll tell you one thing. I'd rather be a giggler than a gob of gloom. Good-night!" She dashed from the room.

Daphne ran into the hall.

"Lucette, don't forget that Mark Trent is giving us a party tomorrow night at that swell new Supper club."

Lucette hung over the mahogany rail. "Forget! Not a chance. Think I'll forget a night off from rehearsing? Nothing short of an act of God will keep me away. Sam, the old tyrant, is giving us a break. I'll be seeing you."

Jerry Field picked up his sister's coat.

"Come on, Daph, let's go. If I'd known that we were to have a night off, I would have taken you dining and dancing, Brooke."

"Nice of you, but I think that a party will be heaps more fun."

"You would think that. I don't know why but this whole evening has gone haywire. Come on, Daph."

Daphne Field snuggled her hand in Sam Reyburn's.

"Good-night, Sammy. Don't love me much, do you, darling?"

Sam shook off her hand. "I'll love you when you learn your lines, and what's more, if you don't learn 'em, you'll be tossed off the lot."

"You mean that I'll be fired?" Daphne opened her eyes at their widest. "I, fired, after I've had gowns made to wear that will simply stop the show? Come on, Jerry. Nobody likes us here."

From the threshold she threw a kiss to Sam.

He grinned.

"Sam, do you like Daphne?" asked Brooke.

"She's good fun. Swell looker, isn't she?"

In the room she had made her boudoir, Brooke slipped out of the lace frock. If only she could shed with it the haunting sense of having said the wrong thing. She had been bitterly unkind when she had reminded Mark Trent of his divorce. If she could apologize to him and get it off her mind, it would help. Well, she couldn't. Perhaps if she wore the hair shirt of remorse for a while, it would teach her to guard her tongue.

In a heavily embroidered Chinese house-coat of vivid green, she pulled forward the chair at her desk and began writing a letter to her mother.

Suddenly she looked up at the mirror, and her heart mounted to her throat and stuck there, beating, beating. Reflected in the lookingglass, the silver-shot hanging between bedroom and boudoir filled and swung like the sail of a boat. What had set it in motion? Had a window been opened? She was too far from the bell to ring. Suppose she rang? Who would answer? Henri and Clotilde were locked in their room probably. What should she do? She stared at the mirror. How could a person get in? From the balcony under the bath-room window? That meant that he had come through Mark Trent's house. Was it the black-gloved man who had been in the attic this evening?

Her Heart Mounted to Her Throat and Stuck There.

She swallowed her heart. She couldn't sit here forever. She must move. How still the room was! The silence of fear enveloped her like a cold mist and turned her fingertips to ice. Perhaps she was in a nightmare and could waken herself. Glorious thought. She'd scream.

Her mouth remained open as a hatless man in blue denim slipped past the swaying hanging. His head was wet and sleek as a seal's; his face below his eyes—bad eyes—was so thickly plastered with white as to be unrecognizable. He gave one furtive glance over his shoulder before he flitted in ghostly silence from the room.

Brooke pulled out the drawer of her desk. It crashed to the floor spilling the contents. Maddening! It would do that when she was in a hurry. On her knees she scrambled after an electric torch which had rolled under a chair. She dashed to the hall. Who was the man? What was the stuff on his face? She'd never forget those wicked eyes above a smear of white. The house was dark and still. She ran toward Sam's room. Stopped. Better not start him on a man hunt. He was so impetuous. How did she know that the intruder hadn't a gun? She must go Scotland Yard herself.

The hall clock told the hour. The sound echoed through the house. Only twelve? It seemed hours since she had said good-night to Sam in the living-room, and years since Mark Trent and Jed Stewart had gone home. She tiptoed to the balustrade and listened.

A squeak! She put her hand hard over her heart to stop its thumping. Was a window being opened cautiously? If only the wind would stop for a minute.

Had the squeak come from the next room which was being used for scenery? It had a small iron balcony like the one which connected Lookout House and Mark Trent's. A person might easily slide down the trellis.

She tiptoed into the room and closed the door softly behind her. This must be the window that had squeaked; it was wide open. It had been closed this afternoon when she had come in to scatter green paint on the flats and to give another splash of red to the peak of roof on the backdrop.

She flashed her light around the room then on the floor over which a sheet had been spread. A can of red paint had been overturned! It was sluggishly spreading.

Tipped over recently! Slowly Brooke's light traveled. A red footprint! Uncannily like a bloody one. The man must have stepped into the thick paint. Another! One beyond that under the window. Cautiously she followed the trail. A smooch of red on the window sill. He had gone that way. Was he on the balcony? What would she see if she looked out? She must look out. She wouldn't close her eyes tonight unless she knew that the man had gone—where, she wouldn't care, if he were gone.

She leaned out cautiously. There was nothing human in sight, only a one-eyed moon was watching through a maze of branches. Cold winter moonlight turned a towering hemlock to purple, shadows to amethyst, and scattered a shimmering trail of golden topaz on the dark water of the harbor. Had one of the shadows moved down by the tree?

It had. That meant that the man was out of the house! She cautiously closed and locked the window. Pulled the hangings across it. That was that! She curtained the other window, turned to switch on the wall light. Stopped. The door was opening! A glare of light. Had the man come back? Had he a pal? Had her heart parked in her throat forever? She couldn't see, but she could still hear:

"Well, for the love of Mike!"

The wall light snapped on.

Brooke's blood, which she had thought frozen, surged through her veins. Sam was staring at her, Sam in pink and white pajamas which made him look for all the world like an animated stick of striped candy. His copper colored hair was on end; without his spectacles his eyes were big and dark and vague. He shook her arm.

"Hey! Snap out of it, Brooke! Have you got that darn scenery so on your mind that you're walking in your sleep to sling paint in here?"

Brooke swallowed the lump in her throat.

"I wasn't asleep, Sam, and I wasn't slinging paint. I heard something." Her voice sounded hoarse to herself.

"A window being opened? That's what I heard. But how could you get here so soon?"

Breathlessly she told him of the man who had slipped through her room, of following him into the hall.

"You're kidding! No? Then why didn't you yell for me?"

"You're so reckless, Sam, I was afraid you might be hurt."

"That's the funniest thing I ever heard. How about yourself? Beat it back to bed. Sam the boy sleuth is hot on the trail."

"You mustn't go downstairs."

"Who says I mustn't. I'll snoop around outside to be sure the guy has gone. Beat it."

"If you go down, I go too."

"Oh all right, all right. I know better than to argue with you when you use that tone, Brooke. Got a flash? We'll creep down the back stairs. Follow me. We'll get into the front of the house that way."

He switched out the wall light, opened the door and stood motionless, listening.

"Let's go!"

Brooke nodded in response to his whisper. The hall seemed miles long as she tiptoed through the dark; the back stairs endless in number as she stole down, stopping at every creak, holding her breath at every sound which echoed as if amplified in the walls.

Sam stopped at the kitchen door to listen. Crept on to the front hall. Brooke controlled an hysterical urge to laugh as she stole after him.

"The Reyburns go sleuthing," she thought, and chuckled.

She felt Sam's quick turn and glare, though she couldn't see it. The turn was catastrophic. He lurched into a chair. His muttered, "Thunder!" was submerged in a hoarse command:

"Don't move! I've got you cov ered!"

CHAPTER VIII

The dusk about Mark in the garage went black. A bloody footprint! Had the crime horror spread to this small point of land? Brooke! Had anything happened to her? The possibility stopped his heart. He had been so intent upon finding Jed, upon identifying the prowler that he had not thought of danger to the occupants of Lookout House. Sam was there. Nothing could happen to his sister with that boy near. Why was he letting his imagination loose? Would a man who stopped for a shave and a bath in the midst of house-entering be guilty of a bloody crime? But—the footprint?

WHO'S NEWS THIS WEEK...

By Lemuel F. Parton

NEW YORK.—Big, bulbous Gen. Feng Yu-Hsiang craves action. Among all China's rampant war lords, the old Christian general is the least inclined to turn the other cheek, and the one most conspicuously free from charges of dealing under the table with Japan. It was he, say the news reports, who eased Chinese troops into the Japanese Tientsin concession, in civilian clothes, threw Japanese strategy into confusion and pretty nearly wrecked it. The peasants love him. If ever a human tidal wave engulfs the invading Japanese, he will be riding it.

General Feng Doesn't Turn Other Cheek

He has been fighting, off and on, for about 40 years, sometimes as a regular and sometimes in more or less private wars. The politicians dislike him and every once in a while have him sent off to the fog belt. The last time was in 1929, when he stirred up a revolt in an effort to start an "up-and-at-em" movement against Japan. But they always have to call him out of retirement, as when Chiang Kai-shek was kidnaped last December.

Feng always has enough loyal soldiers in reserve to count him in in any large-scale ruction—he has commanded as many as half a million men. When Chiang was rescued, he made peace with Feng and the latter assumed full responsibility for the national military council, of which Chiang is chairman.

He was born of coolie parents in Chaohsien, Anhwei. In June, 1900, he was a big hulking lad, standing guard in a Peking compound, where some American missionaries had been trapped by the Boxers. He became friends with Mary Morrill, a missionary girl from Maine. One night he had a terrible dream about a snake under his bed. He asked Miss Morrill to interpret it.

Missionary Unscrambles Snake Dream

What Miss Morrill made of the dream is not recorded. A day or two later, Feng saw a woman beheaded. He was troubled, without knowing just why, and again saw Miss Morrill. She converted him to Christianity. In the following years, the fighting trade was brisk in China, and Feng began to get a reputation, now as a free lance and now with the imperial armies. He preached to his troops every day. If his men didn't want to listen, he used to pay them.

Each soldier wore a brassard, pinned on with a safety pin, and written on it the Ten Commandments. But Feng had done a rewrite job on the original. His ten commandments gave specific directions for overcoming an enemy in different situations. Every so often, Feng would announce that, no matter what the exigencies of battle might be, it was important for a man to discover his own soul.

On these occasions, he would go to the country, wearing an old padded coolie coat, with a vacuum bottle full of paint brushes hung from a cord around his waist. He would paint plum blossoms for a while and then squat on his heels and read Confucius or Lao Tze. After a few months of this he would get back to his fighting.

Stops Battle to Paint or Read Poetry

When Chiang Kai-shek counted him out in 1929, he went to a hovel hung high on a rocky shoulder of T'ai Shan, China's "sacred mountain," a place set aside for citizens who wanted to take spiritual inventory. Nearby was the ancient "Hall of the Five Sages."

Feng used the hall as a sort of private university. He hired a faculty of seven venerable teachers, he being the only pupil. The curriculum listed first a course on "the spring and autumn period of the Chou dynasty."

Feng is an ascetic, abstemious in his diet, wearing cotton coolie clothes, subjecting himself to rigid discipline. In his retreat on the sacred mountain, he rose every morning at four o'clock.

His task was to draw on each of four sheets of parchment the four most beautiful characters he could possibly devise. His furniture consisted of a mat, a table and two straight-backed chairs and a tiny oil lamp. He always went to bed at 8:30 o'clock, to save oil, he said, and to be rested for his early rising.

Retires Early at Retreat on Sacred Mount

When Miss Morrill converted him, she made him a member of the "Way-Way-Whay," which means "beautiful, beautiful society." It is, in essence, the Chinese name for the Methodist church, but to Feng, the frustrated artist, it was an organization for the propagation of beauty.

So when he isn't fighting, he fulfills his Christian duty, as he sees it, by searching out beauty. He is a pacifist and dislikes violence in all forms, but before he gets back to his plum blossoms and his Lao Tze, he would like to get just one good big walloping clout at Japan.

Fine Feathers for Three

SEW-YOUR-OWN wouldn't be your weather prophet for the world, but you know, Milady, and so does S-Y-O, that it's always fair weather when good fashions get together. Which brings us to today's three sparkling new frocks—a whole crowd of style for the pretty part of any man's family.

A Fun Frock.

Rain, nor gloom, nor a flat tire (either kind), can dampen the spirits of the girl who wears this buoyant, young sports frock (above left) on her daily rounds—be they on the fairway, the campus, behind the counter, or merely from pillar to post. You can easily see why it's a winner: a button-all-the-way front, the matched collar and general shipshape styling make it just that. It's surefire in acetate, or silk crepe.

Here's to Mothers.

Sew-Your-Own loves nothing more than catering to mother's wardrobe needs. The frock above (center) is for all mothers: old sweet ones, young darling ones, yes, even for mothers-to-be. It is easy to run up, easy to do up, and best of all, easy to look at. Smart simple lines make it a favorite of women who demand more than a passable appearance when they're "just at home."

Little Brown Girl.

An all-over suntan is her forte, and many sunny days are ahead for young Miss Fortunate whose mommy chooses to interpret the fetching model at the right. A scallop-edged waist front accentuated by frou-frou trim is right down her avenue, and a gored skirt, that's second to none for class, fits into her scheme of things to a T. Mother, why not make one dressy version, as pictured, another finished differently for school? (Perhaps with a simple braid trim) Rayon prints, gingham, or sheer wool, will do nicely as the material.

The Patterns.

Pattern 1249 is designed for sizes 14 to 20 (32 to 42 bust). Size 16 requires 4½ yards of 39 inch material.

Pattern 1207 is designed for sizes 34 to 50. Size 36 requires 4½ yards of 35 inch material. With long sleeves 4¾ yards of 39 inch material.

Pattern 1366 is designed for sizes 6 to 14 years. Size 8 requires 2⅜ yards of 39-inch material plus 1¾ yards of machine pleating.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., Room 1020, 211 W. Wacker Dr., Chicago, Ill. Price of patterns, 15 cents (in coins) each.

Household Questions

For Bathroom Curtains.—Terry cloth or toweling makes excellent bathroom curtains, easy to wash, requiring no ironing.

• • •

Removing Hair From Upholstery.—Dog hair is rather difficult to brush off car seats, upholstered furniture, etc., but it can be readily removed by rubbing the surface of the cloth with coarse sandpaper.

• • •

To Prevent Iron From Sticking.—A little salt added to starch will prevent the iron from sticking.

• • •

Retaining Vegetable Flavor.—Vegetables will retain more of their flavor if put on to cook in water that has already been brought to the boiling point. Otherwise much of the flavor will soak into the water.

Meaning of "Aloha Nui"

Nui is an Hawaiian superlative. It means "very." Aloha is an untranslatable word of welcome, greeting and farewell, carrying with it love and best wishes.

Snake's Venom Glands

The fangs of a poisonous snake consist of a pair of hypodermic teeth in the upper jaw connected with the venom glands in the temples. In some of the vipers they are long, slender needles, but others, such as the cobra, have stubby needles, like thorns on wild plum trees.

Metal Names

The names of metals are wonderfully expressive: Silver has a gleam, gold is soft and richly yellow, bronze, brass and steel exactly convey the nature of the substances, lead is gray and heavy, zinc is an ugly sound which describes the soul of the metal, while iron is as cold and melancholy a word as can be found.

The Opium War

The Opium war between Great Britain and China, 1840-1842, resulted from the attempt of the Chinese government to prevent the importation of opium from India. By the treaty of Nanking, which closed the war, China opened certain ports to foreign trade and ceded the Island of Hongkong to Great Britain.

Sequoias Old Relics

The sequoias are relics of past ages. Long before the towering forests of California were discovered geologists had become well acquainted with these trees through their study of fossils found in various countries. Before the glacial period sequoias were common not only in many parts of North America, but also in Europe.

Danes in Ireland

Limerick, Ireland, was founded by Danes in the Ninth century.

The Flea Market

In addition to its bird market, horse market, diamond market and dog market, Paris has several flea markets. These were so named because their main sales were originally old clothes and rags, but today they are jumble sales. A tour of the markets is still considered one of the tourist thrills in Paris.

Weather Range Tremendous

The hottest summers and coldest winters known on earth are in eastern Siberia, where the range between the averages of the two seasons is 120 degrees.

Watching Fishes Beneficial

Watching the rhythmic movements of fishes and the rippling undulations of submarine plant life is beneficial to the overwrought nerves of patients, say the doctors. Dietitians agree that fish are as soothing to the senses when alive as they are supposed to be good for the brain when boiled.—Pearson's Weekly.

First Use of Word "Nocturne"

The Etude says that the name nocturne was first used by the composer and pianist, John Field, to denote a quiet, reflective kind of pianoforte piece. Its original meaning was a sort of serenade, and it was thus employed by Mozart.

Silver Driven Out

An act of congress of 1834 established the coinage ratio of 16 to 1 between silver and gold, which drove silver from the country.

Brood Not on Self

Let not the mind brood on self; save it from those stagnant moments in which the awful teachings of the spirit grope into the unfathomable unknown, and the heart torments itself with questions which are insoluble except to an active life.

Earliest Specimen of Tapestry

The earliest specimen of tapestry work which can be accurately dated was found in 1903 in the tomb of Thutmosis IV (1420-1411 B. C.) at Thebes.

Pun on Henry VIII

In the days of Henry VIII, many English inns went by the names of "King's Head" and "King's Arms" and it was a witty saying among the people that if the "King's Head" was empty the "King's Arms" were full.

The Hare Indians

The Hare Indians are a tribe of Athabascan stock, living in the extreme northwest of Canada. They rely greatly upon the Arctic hare for food and clothing, hence their name, but also fish, and hunt the caribou.

Tasmanians Prehistoric

It is believed that the Tasmanian natives, the last of whom died in 1877, represented most nearly Paleolithic man in build and manner of life.

Willows in England

Articles made of withies, or branches of the willow tree such as baskets, furniture, hampers, etc., have been used extensively in England for many hundreds of years.

Burial Place of Jefferson Davis

Jefferson Davis died December 6, 1889, and was buried at New Orleans. On May 27, 1893, his body was removed from the tomb, taken to Richmond and interred with impressive ceremonies in Hollywood cemetery.

Quesitons That Are Often Asked About Banking

Do Banks want to make loans now?

The answer to this question is emphatically, "Yes!" . . . Banks, generally, are making loans every day—— and would like to make more of them. In the first place, banks have funds to loan for restored public confidence has greatly increased bank deposits. Secondly, loans are a chief source of a bank's profits. No bank knowingly refuses to make a good loan for the same reason that a merchant does not lose a good sale if he can help it.

Bank loans are made when business men see clearly a profitable use for the money and the bank is satisfied the loan will be repaid when due.

This bank is willing to loan its funds to business concerns and individuals whose qualifications give adquate money entrusted to our care.

CONCRETE . . . costs less

THE cost of concrete pavement is less than that of any other of equal load-carrying capacity!

Strong, rigid concrete pavement distributes the load over the subgrade as no other pavement of comparable cost can do. As a result—concrete withstands the punishment of a rapid succession of big buses and high speed trucks and trailers through summer heat and winter cold. Concrete can take it! As Henry Ford has said — the modern concrete highway is "unbeatable."

On great super-highways, as on 2-lane pavements—the first cost of concrete is less than that of any other pavement of equal load-carrying capacity—and of course upkeep is less—and driving costs are less and comfort and visibility and safety are greater.

Graves Administration Again Scores

The Alabama Democratic Executive Committee, met in Montgomery on Saturday, August 29, and fixed January 4 and February 8 as primary dates for the selection of a United States Senator to succeed Mrs., Dixie Bibb Graves-recently appointed by Gov. Graves to fill the vacancy created by the resignation of Hugo Black—Former Senator Black accepting the appointment tendered him by President Roosevelt to the Supreme Court Bench.

There were 54 members out of 79 who answered to the roll call .The vote stood 31 to 23

A motion to make the winner of the February voting the party's nominee for a six year senate term begining in January, 1939, was shouted down.

The Committee specified candidates should qualify for the primarises before November 1 and fixed a $200 entrance fee.

Paul O. Luck, Member of the Committee from Columbiana went on record by casting his vote for an earlier Primary-but states in a one minute interview with the writer, "they just out numbered us"--and Members who favored an earlier Primary from North Alabama, were not present.

Hon. Lister Hill and former Senator Thos. J. Heflin are definitely in the race. May other prospects are "considering" the possibility of runing.

6 Elections Next Year

The plan adopted in Montgomery Saturday, will send Alabamians to the polls 6 times next year, January, February, April, May June and November,an election scheduled 6 out of the 12 months of the year. If you want to say Who 's Who 6 times next year. Better pay your poll tax!

Free Text Books

Adventure Is Coming In The American Boy

Readers who like adventure and the lure of far places will find plenty to please them in coming issue of THE AMERICAN BOY Magazine. They'll read; for instance, of seamen and sabotage and San Francisco waterfront trouble; of daring adventure in the world of pseudo-science, and of a feud aboard a plunging, rolling battleship.

They'll read, too, of excitement aboard a transport plane blaring over jungled Mexican mountains, and of stranger planes that are not bound to earth but swing through the noiselessness of space. Readers can follow a young ex-Mountie as he searches for clues in the wild northlands, and Tierney, the pie-eating detective, on the trail of city criminals.

A new feature in THE AMERICAN BOY is picture pages that tell stories Pictures, for instance, that vividly show a day in the life of a coast guardsman, and how an Eskimo husky sled dog does his work. They transmit the thrill of battling a hundred pounds, water-churning tarpon. Tips on how its done are also given pictorially—ranging from how to run a broken field to how to be correct in a ballroom!

NOTE: Subscription prices of THE AMERICAN BOY will be raised in the near future. Send your subsciption order at once to take advantage of the bargain rates now in effect: one year at $1.00 or three years at $2.00. Foreign subscriptions 50c a year extra. Send your name, address and remittance to THE AMERICAN BOY, 7430 Second Blvd., Detroit, Mich. On newsstands the price is 15c a copy.

Confederate Widow Visits Capitol

MONTGOMERY, Ala—Capitol officialdom took time out last week to pay homage to Mrs. Mae "Mother" Clark, 93 years old Confederate widow of Kansas City, Mo., who said, without a falter in her voice that "between trains I wanted to see the sight."

Gen. Paul Sanguinetti, U. C. V., and veteran capitol guide took over the assignment of squiring the aged, though spry, visitor around. The tour came to an abrupt end when the General found his guest tripping up and down staris at a muscle-drawing gait, and she two years his senior.

Mrs. Clark revealed that she had reared four sons of her own, sixteen others for relatives. "never had a pain," and that sixty years of her long life had been spent in prison and other welfare work, which she intends to contiune "until the end." Time did not permit a visit to Kilby prison here.

The capitol visit was made during a stop-over while en route to St. Petersburg, Fla., for a stay with relatives.

Cotton Leaf Worms ....Appear In Alabama

Auburn, Ala.—W. A. Ruffin, entomologist of the Alabama Extension Service, has issued a warning to North and Central Alabama farmers to be on the lookout for cotton leaf worms, commonly known as army worms.

The worms have already appeared in Lawrence and Covington Counties says Mr. Ruffin, in advising that "it is too late for the worms to do much damage in South Alabama, but it is possible for them to do considerable damage in North Alabama."

Mr. Ruffin warns farmers, especially in Northeast Alabama Counties, to be on the lookout for the first appearance of the worms to poison their cotton with 8 to 10 pounds of calcium arsenate per acre immediately after the worms are discovered.

An Oriental Conveyance

The vehicle calded a palanquin is an Oriental conveyance, often enclosed, used for long distances by travelers where railroads or good carriage roads do not exist. It is a wooden box, with shutters like Venetian blinds. At each end of the palanquin two rings are fixed, and the palanquin-bearers support the conveyance by a pole passing through these rings.

Columbiana Future Farmers Of America Make Educational Tour

Twenty eight Future Farmers of America, and driver, Henry Moon, accompanied by Vocational Instructor Joe W. Stone, returned last week from an Educational tour which included Alabama, Mississippi, Louisana, Texas, Arkansas and Tennessee. The interesting trip was sponsored by the Columbiana Exchange Club and the Local Post of the American Legion. Letters were written previous to their leave taking, and in every city these two national organizations entertained the boys, who express deep gratitude to the local chapters for the entertainment and the hospitality they enjoyed while on their trip.

We asked Joe Stone to give us a few highlights on the motor tour, and feel that you will enjoy his narration which follows:

"Our first stop was in Selma. Alabama. Here we were royally Welcomed and entertained by the Exchange Club with a swim in the Y. M. C. A. Pool, then we were taken for a sight seeing tour of this Southern town. We enjoyed points of historic interest like the old Cannnn Factory used during the Civil War. We saw the place where the first submarine was built.

Our next stop was in Mobile-Where we saw narrow streets, and moss covered trees surrounding the Gulf of Mexico. We visited the new Alabama Docks, our world outlet for Southern products, Big boats were incoming or outgoing—One a German liner. We were impressed with the lovely gardens and parks around this city of Five Flags fame.

We spent the night in Biloxi, Miss., Here the American Legion members took us in charge—We enjoyed a swim in the Gulf, and saw the old home of Thomas Jefferson—after which we enjoyed a fish supper.

New Orleans next claimed our attention, and we saw for the first time the Mississippi River—"she is a big one"! We watched them load and unload the ocean going boats. We toured thru the French settlement, including the French Markets—which stock of goods included everything. Huey Long's wonderfully constructed bridge across the River is a credit to the State.

We spent the night with the American Legion boys in Baton Rouge, La., and found this to do composed of the "livest wires" we encounted on the trip, After a cool and refershing swim, we went thru the State Capitol—which is by far the most majestic and elaborate building in the U S. Another creditable project to the reign of Huey Long. In this building are 28 foreign species of marble. Every product that Louisana produces is carved or painted into the structure-The furnishing throughout is from Louisana Walnut. Long, in making this project did not forget the rest of the States. The first 13 steps leading into the Capitol represent the original 13 colonies and bear their names and the date they were aditted into the Union, The rest of the steps in turn bear the names of the States and dates they were admitted into the U. S. In front of the building is a park consisting of 20 acres as beautifully designed as man can make it—In the center lies the body of Huey Long—A huge spotlight shines on the grave by night.

The roadway leading from Baton Rouge along our way was rich in plantations filled with sugar cane. We saw many refinerits, Further North we found fine cattle grazing land. Still further North we saw the finest of cotton and corn.

In Shreveport, we visited two of the finest Airports and flying fields in the South—Banksdale and Love Fields.

Dallas, Texas, with three whole days crammed full of entertainment spent with the Exchange Club at the Centennial furnished the highlight of our trip. One of the best exhibits at the Centennial was the Calvacade of the Americans-a complete history from the age of the sunworshipers on up to Roosevelt's election. The pageant is a stupenduons undertaking with Stage and scenery on Railroads tracks, and at various times, several hun dredhorses and people were on the stage at the same time. The Federal Building displays all the work that the Government takes part in—The South American Building with its exhibits proved unusually enlightening. The historical and commercial development of Texas was interestingly showned in the Hall of State. The Ford Plant where Fords are built by Texas labor was most worth while our time to see.

Fort Worth was next visited and Swift's Packing Plants reviewed. Here we saw, hogs, cows, sheep and other animals made ready for the American table. 140 cows were killed per hour.

In Fort Worth, we were royally entertained by Vernon Isbell, owner of one of the largest Beauty Salons in Texas, and a former graduate of Shelby County High School. He generously extended an invitation to the entire party of 30 members to attend with him the largest show in the world, a Billie Rose production called Cassa Manna. The production is based upon the four popular novels, Gone With the Wind, It Can't Happen Here, Lost Horizon and Wake Up and Live—Musical score and presentation by Paul Whitman. The entire stage was built on a lake—scenery was shifted by revolving and for a curtain they used founts with colored lights—This was the most spectacular event of the trip.

We attended Church in Dallas, the guests of the Exchange Club. Over 200 young people were in the class we attended at Sunday School, Mr. Gallagher, teacher.

Although the rain come down on our homeward trek, we reached Columbiana on Tuesday night tired but happy—and greatly enriched from the delightful experience."

A vote of thanks from every member to the local Exchange Club and to the American Legion for their kindness is hereby offered.

ATTACKS BRITISH ENVOY

Jap Aviator Shoots Ambassador to China . . . Congress Adjourns . . . Fails to Pass Most of 'Must' Legislation

A breathing spell! Members of the 75th congress, happy in adjournment, at last, file out of the Capitol in Washington.

Jap Airman Courts Fate

A JAPANESE army aviator precipitated the gravest international Far East crisis since the fighting began in Shanghai, and perhaps indeed since the Boxer rebellion, when he swooped down upon a Chinese road to pour machine gun bullets into an automobile flying the British Union Jack from its radiator.

One of the bullets pierced the body of Sir Hughe Natchbull-Hugessen, Great Britian's ambassador to China, as he sped in the car to attend a conference with British foreign service officials. The ambassador, a veteran of 30 years in the service, was rushed 50 miles to Country hospital where an operation was performed.

Sir Hughe was the highest ranking British official in China, where Great Britain has enormous interests at stake. He was attacked by a Japanese airplane which did not even have the right of a belligerent—since no war had been declared—while his conveyance was flying the British colors. The last comparable incident in China was the Boxer rebellion of 1900, when the German Ambassador von Kettler was shot and killed in Peiping.

Hooray! School Is Out!

EVEN if there were more than a few threats of "Wait'll I get you after school," the nation's lawmakers were happy as schoolboys at the end of the term, as the first session of the Seventy-fifth congress came to a close at last. The senators and representatives, fairly bogged down with months of wrangling, much of it futile, through the intolerable Washington summer, were glad of release, even if such release carried the implication that there might be a special session in October.

But the legislators left the Capitol in the realization that the session just ended will probably become known less for what it did than what it did not do.

Four out of five of President Roosevelt's major "must" measures it did not pass; the fifth it passed only with reservations which put a new complexion upon it.

Congress did not pass the wages and hours bill. After being passed by the senate in unacceptable form, with the understanding that it would be improved in the house, the bill was still buried with the house rules committee when the bell rang.

Congress did not pass the new crop control bill which includes Secretary Wallace's "ever-normal granary" project. It was agreed that this legislation be brought up during the first week of the January session or the special session.

It did not pass the President's desired legislation for re-organization of the executive department. It did vote the White House six new secretaries, though.

It did not pass the proposal to increase the membership of the Supreme court by six justices, who would apparently be selected with a view to insuring the constitutionality of New Deal measures. By a vote of 70 to 20 it permitted a substitute measure, which would have added the justices one at a time, to die a natural death in committee.

In addition to failing to enact this legislation demanded by the chief executive, congress defeated the Norris bill to create seven "little TVA's," and the crop insurance bill, proposing a revolving fund of $100,000,000. The senate failed to ratify the sanitary convention with Argentina, modifying the restrictions on imports of meat and live stock.

However, congress did:

Pass the Wagner low-cost housing bill, but with restrictions on the unit cost which will, it is charged, make the program virtually unavailable for New York and other large cities which constitute the principal slum problems. The $526,000,000 measure was on the President's "must" list.

Pass a sugar quota which may be vetoed by the President. He threatened to veto such a bill if it limited the output of Puerto Rico and Hawaii to 126,000 and 29,000 short tons annually, and it does just that.

Extend the neutrality law to prohibit the shipment of arms, ammunition and implements of war to belligerents or extension of credit to them.

Pass the Guffey act, creating a commission to fix prices and control the marketing of bituminous coal.

Appropriate $1,500,000,000 for work relief in the current fiscal year.

Pass a bill to outlaw personal holding companies and other alleged means of tax evasion.

Passed a reform bill for the lower courts, designed to speed appeals to the Supreme court and permit the Department of Justice to intervene in cases involving the constitutionality of a statute.

Ratified the Buenos Aires "peace treaties," which include a consultative pact for common course of action when war anywhere threatens the American republics.

Extended the CCC three years. The President had asked that it be made permanent.

Passed a farm tenancy bill to help share croppers buy their own farms. This provides for the expenditure of $10,000,000 the first year, $25,000,000 the second year and $50,000,000 in succeeding years.

Railroad Strike Threatens

ONLY successful mediation by the United States government appeared as a chance to prevent a nation-wide strike of 350,000 railroad workers as railroad representatives flatly refused the 20 per cent pay increase demanded by the "big five" railroad brotherhoods in Chicago conference. The unions said their only recourse was to call out conductors, engineers, firemen, switchmen and trainmen.

Federal mediation would automatically postpone the strike 30 days. The national mediation board named Dr. William M. Leiserson, one of its members, to conduct hearings.

Railroads' financial condition precluded the granting of wage increases, said H. A. Enochs, chairman of the carriers' committee. The increase requested would add $116,000,000 a year to operating costs, of which $2,000,000 would be for extra social security taxes and $4,000,000 for extra retirement fund taxes, he said.

Planes Land Without Eyes

AT OAKLAND, CALIF., civilian and army fliers proved that air transport planes can now be landed under conditions which prevent the pilot from gaining the slightest glimpse of the ground. Using only a radio beam for "eyes," pilots made 100 perfect "blind" landings at the airport there with a Boeing 247-D plane, of the type now used on several of the nation's commercial air lines.

The cockpit windows were covered with metal screens to prevent their sneaking so much as a peek at the field. Many pilots flew the ship and, although some of them had never operated that type of plane before, not a single landing was made outside the 200-foot runway.

So successful were the tests, the bureau of air commerce, army, navy and commercial airlines representatives present agreed that the system would be adopted for the country as a whole. The system, which makes it possible to bring a ship safely to earth, even through snow, rain, fog or dust, was called by authorities the most dramatic thing of its kind since the first flight of the Wright brothers.

Andrew W. Mellon Is Dead

ANDREW W. MELLON, reputedly one of the four richest men in the United States and secretary of the treasury in three cabinets, died of uremia and bronchial pneumonia at the home of his son-in-law at Southampton, N. Y. He was eighty-two years old.

Shortly before his death he had fulfilled the ambition of his life by giving to the nation what he termed the "nucleus" of one of the finest art collections in the world. The collection he gave was valued at $50,000,000. Excavation is now under way for a $15,000,000 building to house the collection in Washington.

Japanese Turn Tide

SUCCEEDING in landing thousands of reinforcements from its transport ships, the Japanese appeared ready to turn the tide of ground battle in the undeclared war in China, while their navy threw a blockade around 800 miles of the Chinese seacoast from Shanghai nearly to Canton, in South China.

Only at terrific cost were the reinforcements getting ashore. Many entire landing parties were blown to bits as they attempted to take shore positions under a blaze of machine gun fire and in the face of artillery shells and land mine explosions.

More than a quarter of a million men were reported engaged in the fighting along a front stretching from Shanghai northwestward to Tientsin, Peiping, Nankow and Changpei, deep in Chahar province and north to the Great Wall.

At the northern end of the front the pro-Japanese Mongol troops of Prince Teh battled combined Chinese regular and communist armies. Japanese reported the capture of Kalgan, capital of Chahar, shutting off Chinese communication with Mongolia, while the routed Chinese troops fled to the south. Japanese forces broke through the stubborn Chinese defenses at Nankow pass and penetrated the Great Wall. They were reported to have succeeded in escaping narrowly a strategic Chinese maneuver which would have trapped 30,000 Japanese troops south and west of Peiping. Chinese positions south of Peiping were dominated by the well-equipped, well-trained and mechanized Japanese army, which captured the commanding high land.

But despite all this activity to the north it was upon Shanghai that the full horror of the war descended. The international settlement was little safer than any of the rest of the great port, except, perhaps, the native district of Chapei, which was gutted by flames and torn by bombs and shells. After two weeks of fighting in Shanghai, there were reported to be 5,160 casualties in the international settlement and the French concession, including 1,760 fatalities.

Guffey's Unholy Three

SINCE the fight on the President's court plan began in the senate, it has become more and more obvious that a serious split impends in the Democratic party ranks. It was not a secret that certain of the senators and representatives were marked for extinction, fish fries and harmony dinners notwithstanding.

But few expected the bombshell that broke when Sen. Joseph F. Guffey of Pennsylvania, in a radio speech just before the end of the session, openly named Senators O'Mahoney of Texas, Burke of Nebraska and Wheeler of Montana as senators who would not return to Washington after the next elections.

Burke summed up reply of the three men attacked when he said that if Guffey's statement were true "we might just as well forget about Jefferson Island and harmony dinners and get ready for a real battle." Wheeler, on the senate floor, said that if the "Democratic bosses . . . want to drive us out of the Democratic party they will not have any difficulty in doing so. I say to you (Guffey) that if you nominate your governor of Pennsylvania or yourself for President of the United States, you will not have to drive us out."

Admiral Yarnell Protests

UNCLE SAM was brought nearer than ever to the unofficial war in North China when a shell exploded on the deck of the Augusta, flagship of the United States' Asiatic fleet, killing Freddie John Falgout, a seaman, and wounding 18 others of the crew. The ship was lying at anchor in the Whangpoo river in the heart of the International Settlement of Shanghai. It was impossible to determine whether the shell had been fired by the Chinese or Japanese.

Admiral Harry E. Yarnell, commander of the fleet, warned the governments of both nations against shellfire over American and foreign warships. The President and the State department were inclined to leave diplomatic overtures to the military, naval and diplomatic officers in China. The President declared that under the circumstances accidents such as the one which beset the Augusta were bound to occur.

Santander Falls to Franco

SPAIN'S thirteen-month-old civil war drew one step nearer to a close as Gen. Francisco Franco's army captured the city of Santander, last important government outpost on the northern coast. As the insurgent troops filed in to occupy the city, it was apparent that the remaining government army of 50,000 men was trapped in the hills southeast of the city in an area 15 miles square. Probably they were not even aware that Santander's "iron ring" had broken.

During the last of the twelve days of Franco's furious thrusts, the city's streets had run red with the blood of anarchists' victims, as thirst, hunger and terrorism crazed the populace. By the thousands, civilians were fleeing by sea—the only way—to France. Every available craft was put into service; hundreds even attempted a getaway in rowboats, canoes, dories and other small craft, some of them using improvised sails made from sheets.

SEEN and HEARD around the NATIONAL CAPITAL

By Carter Field

FAMOUS WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENT

Washington. — Just one more change on the Supreme court bench and folks will begin wondering why President Roosevelt thought last January that any packing was necessary! Yet two or three more changes are almost certain within a year.

The court now stands as follows:

Left: Brandeis, Cardozo, Stone, Black.

Middle: Hughes, Roberts.

Right: Sutherland, Butler, McReynolds.

So that to obtain a favorable five to four decision, any question need only have a sufficient approach to being within the realm of federal powers to win the votes of one of the two middle of the roaders to be assured of victory.

Which is the more significant when it is realized that Black takes the place of Justice VanDevanter, who belonged in the extreme "right" division.

So that the difference is that the three remaining conservatives, Sutherland, Butler and McReynolds, must now win the support of both of the middle of the roaders, Hughes and Roberts, in order to win.

Both middle of the roaders will probably serve on the court for a long time, but all three of the conservatives are headed for retirement in the near future. As a matter of fact, if there were not the present bitter conflict all three would have retired at the end of the term in June. This is regarded as an undeniable fact by personal friends of the three justices. It has also been well known for some time that Justice Brandeis would like to retire.

Retirement of Brandeis, of course, would not be much of a change. True, Brandeis, with Cardozo and every other member of the court, voted the NRA out the window. Whereas Senator Black, not only publicly, but in his private conversations, denounced the court for that decision.

But even if President Roosevelt had been granted his six justice increase last January it would not have affected the NRA case, assuming that precisely the same question could have been presented to the enlarged court. For apparently nine justices would have voted as they did before, and the new six, presumably, would have voted as the man who appointed them wanted.

That would have left it nine to six against the new version of NRA.

In the picking of Black, of course, the President came pretty close—as close as it was humanly possible to come in calculating ahead—to avoiding a fight in the senate on confirmation. Obviously any lawyer who had expressed the views on economic questions that Black has would have encountered a tremendous fight.

So if Roosevelt wants to fill the vacancies sure to come in a few months by men holding Black's views, he will probably name other senators!

Cotton Plan Wrong

President Roosevelt is not explaining the real reasons why he consented to cotton loans after so positively telling the newspaper men that there would be no loans without crop control legislation. But the tremendously important thing about the whole business is that from the point of view of the economist invoking the law of supply and demand, both the President and the senators and representatives who forced government cotton loans over his protest, are wrong.

Either the President's plan or the plan of the congressmen will lead inevitably to disaster for the South, in the opinion of every disinterested expert who has studied the situation. Either plan would lead to holding the price of cotton up to 12 cents a pound or better. In fact, either plan aims at putting the price higher than that.

Under the so-called "parity price" theory, the price of cotton should be about 17 cents a pound. This "parity price" figure is determined by measuring the buying power of a pound of cotton over the years from 1909 to 1914—the period immediately preceding the outbreak of the World war.

The point is, how many cents a pound would cotton have to be now, or at any given time in order to buy the same amount of other commodities that the average sales price of cotton would have bought in this 1909-1914 period?

If prices go up, of course, the "parity price" moves up with them. Presumably the whole effort of the administration should be to maintain this "parity price."

Well, that is a very pleasant thing for a cotton farmer to contemplate, if he doesn't think of anything else. But there are a few other things which, if he does any reading or thinking in his off moments, might cause some dilution of his joy in thinking about the maintenance of this "parity price."

It is an uncontroverted fact that Brazil can produce cotton at 6 cents a pound—barely over one-third of this "parity price." It is also an uncontroverted fact that Brazil has a tremendous acreage not yet diverted to cotton—an acreage big enough to supply the entire world with cotton, for that matter.

Brazil has already expanded her cotton production something like ten times as much as such optimists on the domestic cotton situation as Secretary of Commerce Daniel C. Roper thought she could three years ago. Like many others, Roper simply would not believe the reports that United States consuls in Brazil were sending him.

A national magazine sent a cotton expert from New Orleans down to Brazil to study the situation. He confirmed the consular reports, but still optimism about the domestic cotton situation radiated in Washington.

It further happens that Germany has been busy at work developing a substitute for cotton. So long as the world price is high, the Germans will work constantly at that problem. They can produce cotton substitute now, but the price is too high. But they are confident they can eventually get the cost of production down.

The terrible part of the whole business is that once Brazil has increased her production sufficiently, or been joined by enough other cheap producers, there is very little the United States government can do. The world will be supplied with cotton from sources other than the United States, and at a price below the cost of production in every state east of the Mississippi river. In fact, there are only two states, Texas and Oklahoma, which can then continue cotton growing at a profit.

Soft Pedal Sugar Fight

One reason the big controversy over sugar is so confusing to the average reader that he just skips over it is that nobody is really saying what he means. Every one involved has motives, but they are not talking about them. They talk about something else.

President Roosevelt and Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes are working in the interest of the island producers—Hawaii, Puerto Rico and the Virgin islands. Senator Pat Harrison, of Mississippi, chairman of the senate finance committee, and those following him are working in the interests of the sugar refiners in continental United States.

Roosevelt and Ickes want to put no limit on the amount of sugar that may be refined in the islands. They claim that to do so would be to discriminate against American citizens, as these islands are all part of the United States.

But the simple fact is that labor is cheaper on the islands. So that if their production were not restricted—and as there is of course no tariff on the sugar they send to the United States—the ultimate result would be that every refinery now working in continental United States would be closed down.

In fact, this is perfectly known to Ickes, who professes a desire to see work provided in new refineries, particularly in the Virgin islands, his special charge. Roosevelt has developed a keen interest in the welfare of the poor people of Puerto Rico, etc.

Underlying this, however, is something else. Roosevelt and Ickes just happen to dislike intensely the "economic royalists" who own the sugar refineries in this country, particularly in Massachusetts, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania and Louisiana. This feeling probably started off against a few of them, but as the fight grew hot it spread to them all. Roosevelt has used plenty of adjectives in describing the "lobby" which was trying to get congress not to strangle the domestic refining industry. In fact, he permitted newspaper men to quote him to the broad general effect that it was one of the most pernicious and wicked outfits working against the cause of the people.

Pat Harrison, however, has certainly proved a thorn in the administration's side on this issue. Down in his heart Pat has not forgiven the President for defeating him for Democratic leader of the senate. There is no doubt, whatever, of course, that it was Roosevelt's influence which elected Alben W. Barkley, of Kentucky, over Pat by one vote.

In this case, however, Pat had a local reason to fight. Many of his Mississippi constituents work in the refineries at New Orleans. Pat did not want them to lose their jobs through the government literally closing these refineries down.

So he offered a "compromise" which would get around the idea of discriminating against American citizens. This compromise would simply provide that all existing refineries could refine sugar up to their previous maximums. This would keep the domestic refineries going and permit the offshore refineries to do just what they had been doing, but would close the door to new offshore refineries.

what Irvin S. Cobb thinks about:

The State of the World.

SANTA MONICA, CALIF.—Up in Montreal a veteran showman says he talks with chimpanzees in their own language. I wish he'd ask one of his chimpanzee pals what he thinks about the present setup of civilization.

Because I can't find any humans who agree as to where we all are going and what the chances are of getting there. In fact, the only two who appear to be certain about it are young Mr. Corcoran and young Mr. Cohen, and they seem to hesitate at times—not much, but just a teeny-weeny bit—which is disconcerting to the lay mind. We are likely to lose confidence even in a comet, once it starts wobbling on us.

I'm also upset by a statement from England's greatest star-gazer—they call him the astronomer royal, which, by coupling it with the royal family, naturally gives astronomy a great social boost in England and admits it to the best circles. He says the moon is clear off its mathematically prescribed course.

Cash Versus I. O. U.'s.

ONLY a few weeks ago the front pages were carrying dispatches saying the adjustment of Great Britain's defaulted debt was just around the corner. Economists and financiers had discussed terms of settlement. Figures were quoted—mainly figures calling for big reductions on our part, but never mind that. They were figures anyhow.

Lately the papers have been strangely silent on the subject. Perhaps you remember the old story told on the late John Sharp Williams, who frequented a game at Washington where sportive statesmen played poker for heavy stakes—mostly with those quaint little fictional products called I. O. U.'s as mediums of exchange.

Early one morning a fellow senator met the famous Mississippian coming from an all-night session.

"I certainly mopped up," he proclaimed. "I won $3,000—and what's more, $8.75 of it was in cash."

Autumn Millinery.

JUST as the poor, bewildered males are becoming reconciled to the prevalent styles in women's hats, up bobs a style creator in New York warning us that what we've thus far endured is merely a foretaste of what's coming. In other words, we ain't seen nothin'!

For autumn, he predicts a quaint number with a slanted peak fifteen inches high, which, I take it, will make the wearer look like a refugee trying to escape from under a collapsing pagoda.

Another is a turban entirely composed of rooster feathers.

A matching coat of rooster feathers goes with this design. But in the old days they used hot tar.

A third model features for its tophamper a series of kalsomine brushes sticking straight up. Naturally, the hat itself will imitate a barrel of whitewash.

But the gem of all is a dainty globular structure of Scotch plaid. Can you imagine anything more becoming to your lady wife than an effect suggesting that she's balancing a hot-water bag on her brow?

"McGuffeyisms."

THE lieutenant-governor of Ohio urges a return to "McGuffeyism" for settling modern problems.

'Twas in a McGuffey reader that I met those prize half-wits of literature—the Spartan boy who let the fox gnaw his vitals; the chuckle-headed youth who stood on the burning deck; the congenial idiot who climbed an alp in midwinter while wearing nothing but a night shirt and carrying a banner labeled "Excelsior" in order to freeze to death; the skipper who, when the ship was sinking, undertook to calm the passengers by—but wait, read the immortal lines:

"We are lost!" the captain shouted,
As he staggered down the stair.

And then the champion of all—the Dutch lad who discovered a leak in the dyke so he stuck his wrist in the crevice and all night stayed there. In the morning, when an early riser came along and asked what was the general idea, the heroic urchin said—but let me quote the exact language of the book:

"'I am hindering the sea from running in,' was the simple reply of the child."

Simple? I'll tell the world!

Enthusiasm in Work

Enthusiasm is the element of success in everything. It is the light that leads and the strength that lifts men on and up in the great struggles of scientific pursuits and of professional labor. It robs endurance of difficulty, and makes a pleasure of duty.—Bishop Doane.

A Translation

Let us learn what death is. It is simply a translation; not a state, but an act; not a condition, but a passage.

He dropped to his knees and touched it. Sticky! He flashed his light on it. Sniffed. Turpentine? He sank down on his heels and choked back a shout of laughter. He had been fooled by red paint.

How had it come here? What was that dark heap beyond it? Overalls! Blue denim overalls still warm from the wearer's body. The driver of the car he had heard a few moments ago must have shed them before he left the garage. Why had he worn them?

Mark projected and rejected explanations with lightning speed. The man who had shinnied from the balcony had come from the room where the scenery was being painted. Wasn't the roof of the cottage on the backdrop red? Why the shower? Why the shave? Was it he who had removed the key from the door of the storeroom tonight? But that man had disappeared via the connecting door, presumably into Lookout House.

He flashed a dim light over the white cover. More red! A clumsy X.

"Make X on cover when—"

The words on the scrap of paper in the storeroom were explained.

"X marks the spot where the body was found."

The sentence flashed into Mark's mind as if set in electric lights. Body! Jed was missing! Perhaps his body had been dumped inside the limousine!

He set his heel on the thought. He would imagine a horror like that. That infernal cross probably meant nothing, but he'd take a look-see so that he wouldn't ask himself later, "Why didn't I?"

Soundlessly he reached the other side of the limousine. The disarranged cover which left the door exposed revealed also a license plate. All set to go! He flashed his light inside. Something long, something rounded on the rear seat was covered with an automobile robe.

Dread paralyzed Mark's hand for what seemed to him hours; then with a muttered imprecation he thrust it under the robe. The silver! Nothing but the silver! That X on the white cover was a sign that it had been moved from his house. Who had moved it? That was easy. It had been removed while he and Jed had been at the Reyburns by the man who had driven away. Sure of plenty of time he had stopped for a shower and shave. Moving the loot to the garage had been his share of the job. Would a pal appear to drive the stuff off?

"He will, and here he is!" Mark muttered, as the frosty gravel outside the garage crunched faintly.

A key in the lock! Not a minute to waste. Where should he go? Inside Brooke's town car! The breaks were with him. It wasn't locked.

The garage door was sliding back. Mark saw a patch of sky. He banged his forehead as he plunged headfirst into the sedan, and saw a million stars. His head spun as he crouched in the space left by the turned back seat and drew the door shut without latching it. He held it in place as barely breathing he listened.

Footsteps on the cement floor! Cautious footsteps. A light on the ceiling! Suppose it should flash into the town car? It had stopped. Whoever it was, was taking his time.

An engine turning over! Was some darn fool starting a car with the garage door closed? Mark raised his head turtle-fashion. No, the door was open. He might have known it. Was it likely that the bandit would allow himself to be bumped off by carbon monoxide? Not that bad boy. He had too much at stake.

He must follow. How? He couldn't trail in another car. He would be heard. Could he hang on to the empty trunk-rack? That was an idea. He would follow the limousine out of the garage, slip into the shadow of a shrub when the man went back to close the door, then grab the trunk-rack when the car started again. A stunt, but he'd make a stab at it. If he were to hold the man now he would learn nothing of his destination.

He cautiously tiptoed after the limousine. He was safe behind the shrubs when the driver returned and noiselessly closed the garage door. A soft hat was drawn low over his eyes, but Mark knew him. Henri.

He was behind the wheel again! The limousine was coasting down the incline! Mark crouched as he ran after it. As the engine started, he drew himself carefully to the trunk-rack. He barely breathed. Had the driver felt a jar? Evidently not. He was increasing speed. He was not headed for the causeway. He was going in the opposite direction. What did that mean?

After spinning past old landmarks, the car slowed down and stopped. Mark saw the white cottage. The filling-station. He must not be seen here. Surely the driver would make contact with someone inside before he left the limousine.

Henri stepped out of the car. He stopped as if to make sure he was not observed.

Mark slipped off the trunk-rack. He was cramped and stiff. He hobbled rather than walked into a deep purple shadow cast by a pine. He could see the cottage. He held his breath as Henri gently turned the knob of the front door and entered. What would he do next? Come back to the limousine? What a chance to grab him.

What was he doing inside the house? He was taking his time. The door was opening again! Mark hardly breathed. A man slipped out. His hat was pulled down over his eyes. He slunk along in the shadows. Reached the shore road. Ran on the dried grass which bordered it as if pursued by furies.

Had that been Henri? Had he delivered his message? Had he been warned to beat it? Couldn't have been a fight inside. No loud voices. Had the limousine with the silver been left for someone else to drive away?

Someone else! What a break! What a break! He would drive it back and park it in his garage—no, that wouldn't do, he would leave it with Mike Cassidy. Mike was as dependable as the sun.

He stole from the shadow of the pine. With every faint scrunch of his feet on the frosty ground his blood stopped running. Could he reach the limousine before someone came? Only a few feet more. He was behind the wheel. With a hand stiff from cold he touched the self-starter. Hang it! Wouldn't you know the motor would back-fire! A light! In the front dormer! He had wakened someone! He hadn't a moment to lose.

With his ears strained to detect pursuit, with his eyes roaming from side to side, Mark shot the car ahead. He went in an opposite direction from that taken by Henri—if the man who had burned up the road making his getaway from the white cottage had been Henri—he wouldn't run the chance of overtaking him. It seemed years before he reached Mike Cassidy's garage at the entrance to the causeway, hours before he could rouse the man, before he partially opened the door.

"Let me in quick, Mike," he whispered to the blinking, cursing proprietor, who was gripping something that gleamed dark and blue and ugly in a hairy, ham-bone fist.

"It's only you, Mr. Mark! Thought it might be a hold-up."

Cassidy's lower jaw swung like a gate on loose hinges. He slipped the automatic into his pocket before he rolled back the garage door.

"Where can I hide this?"

Cassidy pointed.

Not until the limousine was stowed behind a motley collection of broken-down cars did Mark Trent explain.

"I've just rescued the family silver, Mike. The yarn I have to tell you will beat any of the thrillers you get over the radio. Not afraid to keep the car here, are you?"

Cassidy's red-rimmed eyes grew moist. He wiped his nose on a shabby coat sleeve.

"I ain't afraid to do nothing for you, Mr. Mark. You an' your family give me my start; sometimes you've kept me goin' when I didn't know where the next meal was comin' from. I felt mean when I let my Maggie go to work for Mrs. Hunt who treated you so bad, but we needed the money somethin' terrible, so she took the job, though it was at that new fillin' station that's tryin' to put me out of business."

A telephone rang. The two men stared at one another. Mark's blood turned to ice. Cassidy whispered:

"Holy mackerel! Who's callin' this time of night? Have they traced you and the silver this quick? Perhaps there's a gang after you!"

Mark nodded toward the telephone. "Answer!" His muscles tensed as he listened.

"Cassidy's garage—You, Maggie! What t'h'll—Stop blubberin'—What! Who?—I can't hear, you're cryin' so — Something terrible? — Never mind, never mind. I'll call police headquarters—You've got to stay there, girl, till I get Bill Harrison. If anyone comes, don't talk. Don't talk!—Sure, I'll come, just as soon as I get the police."

"Mike! What's happened?"

Cassidy's face was ashen as he shook Mark's hand from his arm.

"Wait!"

He dialled. He spoke into the transmitter.

"Someone's hurt bad at the white cottage—that new filling station on the point—Mike Cassidy talkin'—I got to go. You don't understand—my daughter's there—All right. I'll wait here."

He hung up and wiped a grimy hand across his sweat-beaded forehead.

"That was my girl, Maggie, who called."

"Talk, man, talk! What's happened?"

"Someone hurt bad."

"Who?"

"I couldn't make out."

"Someone hurt at the white cottage! But I was there not more than ten minutes ago, Mike."

"If I was you I wouldn't say that, Mr. Mark. It wasn't just hurtin.' I was breakin' it easy. Someone's dead."

CHAPTER IX

"Don't move! I've got you covered!"

In obedience to the hoarse warning, Sam and Brooke Reyburn stood as if turned to stone in the dark hall of Lookout House.

Lights flared. Brooke stared incredulously. Was that Jed Stewart with his hand on the switch glaring at them with wide dilated eyes, with his mouth open as if he had just swallowed a salt wave? That was a flashlight he was pointing at them, not a pistol. It was Jed Stewart without his coat, with his black bow tie under one ear, with only one shoe on.

"For the love of Mike, Jed Stewart, perhaps you'll tell me why you're holding us up in our own house? Why this Public Enemy No. 1 touch?" Sam demanded.

Stewart blinked.

"What are you two doing wandering round this house half dressed at this time of night?"

"Stop shouting, Jed. You'll have Lucette down here," Sam said. "Come into the living room and tell us what you're doing in this house, Jed."

"Let's go to the kitchen instead, more likely to stabilize our emotions," Brooke suggested. "I'll make cocoa and we'll scramble eggs. Jed must need food after the late ex-excitement — he's fairly twitching with it—and I feel hollow to my toes. Come on, Sam."

"Sounds okay to me. I'm a growing boy, I need lots of nutriment You'd better eat, Brooke; you didn't touch a thing when we came back from rehearsal. I'll run up and get a couple of bathrobes. Take these, Jed." He kicked off his slippers. "I'll put on shoes upstairs."

"Perhaps You'll Tell Us How You Got In and Why, Jed?"

Sam followed her into the kitchen.

"Sam can be speedy when he wants to be," she admitted, as her brother entered with a lurid bathrobe over his pajamas and another all red and green stripes which he flung at Stewart.

"There you are, m'lad."

"Bring the milk, eggs, butter and bacon from the icebox, Sam. Toss me that apron, Jed, the big white one—that's right. Toast some bread, Sammy."

Soon Sam sniffed. "Doesn't the bacon smell dandy! Here you are, folks." He arranged thin, crisp strips around a mound of fluffy scrambled eggs. "You and Jed sit down, Brooke, and I'll bring the cocoa after I find the marshmallows to drop into the cups."

Brooke slipped off the apron and waited until Sam had served steaming hot cocoa with a little melting white island floating in each cup and helped himself lavishly to scrambled eggs and bacon, before, with elbows on the porcelain table, chin on her clasped hands, she suggested:

"Now that the shock of discovering us roaming round in our own house has somewhat worn off, perhaps you'll tell us how you got in and why, Jed?"

Stewart leaned back in his chair with the air of a man whose appetite has been abundantly satisfied.

Snakes Have Quick Tongues

Garter snakes are among the commonest of our native reptiles. The quick, darting forked red tongue gathers many insects for food, which together with frogs, toads, salamanders and worms, forms its principal diet. It is perfectly harmless and of great economic value. It hibernates below the frost line in soft mud or sand and emerges in early spring after being awakened by warming suns.

FARM TOPICS

GRASSES, LEGUMES USED AS ENSILAGE

Can Be Kept in Condition by Adding Molasses.

By A. C. Kimrey, Extension Dairy Specialist, North Carolina State College. WNU Service.

With molasses as a preservative, any green crop that will make hay can be stored in a silo without any appreciable loss of feed value.

Corn silage contains substances that act as a preservative, but legumes and grasses do not have enough sugar to ferment properly. By adding molasses to legumes and grasses, the material can be kept in good condition.

The crop can be cut at any stage of maturity and in any kind of weather. However, greater feeding value is obtained if the crop is cut as early in the season as possible without injuring the stand. Cereal crops should be cut when the grain is in the milk stage.

Start cutting early in the morning. If the crop is wet with dew or rain, so much the better. The crop should be put in the silo within a few hours after cutting.

If the crop must remain in the field more than a few hours on a dry day, water should be added as it is blown into the silo.

Around 40 to 45 pounds of molasses should be added to each ton of cereal and grass crops, while 75 to 80 pounds should be added to a ton of legume silage.

The molasses can be added from an elevated barrel by allowing the proper amount to flow through a spigot onto the green material as it is fed into the cutter.

Egg Producers, Handlers Can Stop Summer Losses

Producers and handlers of eggs are losing hundreds of dollars every week of warm weather from highly perishable fertile eggs, according to O. C. Ufford, extension poultryman for Colorado State college, Fort Collins.

Suggestions for preventing this loss are outlined as follows:

Roosters should be marketed or confined during the summer so that infertile eggs may be produced.

Provide one nest for each four hens.

Gather eggs more than once a day.

Cool eggs before packing them in cases.

Eggs may be cooled and water evaporation from the eggs may be prevented by keeping them in the cellar or by keeping a damp sack over the case.

Market eggs as often as possible during warm weather, preferably about every three or four days.

Keep clean straw in nests.

Handlers of eggs will find it more profitable to keep eggs stored in a cool place until they are sold.

Mowing Weeds Aids Grass

Mowing weeds and removing brush and other tall vegetation encourages the spread of more beneficial grasses, clover, and lespedeza, eliminates the competition for moisture and plant food, and results in a turf more resistant to soil erosion, the Soil Conservation Service has found. In the past 2 years mowing has been extended over more than 100,000 previously unmowed acres of grassland on Soil Conservation Service erosion control areas. Fairly high mowing—from 4 to 6 inches when weeds are about in full bloom —is recommended.

Marketing Milk

Three major adjustments in milk transportation and production practices would save farmers thousands of dollars annually, according to agricultural economists of the University of Illinois. More dollars in the pockets of producers and better service to consumers could be brought about by rearrangement of hauling routes so as to reduce mileage and increase load volume, by marketing more milk through country plants and by narrowing the seasonal variation in milk production.

Protein Feeds for Cattle

High protein feeds have given faster gains, better finish, and lower costs in cattle fattening than rations with less protein, according to observations made by the University of Illinois. Linseed meal, soybean oil meal and cottonseed meal are the protein feeds generally used. It is profitable to give one pound of one of these feeds to each seven to ten pounds of corn, depending upon the age of the cattle and the kind of roughage.

Never swerve in your conduct from your honest convictions.—Horace Bushnell.

They're Cinches to Sew

YES, the sewing bug will get you, if you don't watch out, young lady! And when it does there will be a hum in your life (and we don't mean head noises). Right now is the time to begin; right here is the place to get your inspiration. So all together, girls: it's sew, sew, sew-your-own!

Inspiration Number 1.

The vivacious model at the left is the number 1 piece for your new autumn advance. It calls for taffeta, embellished, as you might expect, with grosgrain. You may use vivid colors too, Milady, for Fashion has gone color mad this fall. Reds of every hue, bright blues, lavender, warm browns, all are being featured in smart avenue shops along the Rue de la Paix.

Morning Frock.

For most of us, each day demands that a little work be done. Sew-Your-Own appreciates this and the need for frocks that are practical, pretty, and easy to keep that way, hence the new utility frock in the center. Five pieces are its sum and total; seven mornings a week its cycle. Any tub-well fabric will do nicely as the material — try one version in printed rayon.

Tailored Charm.

The waistcoat used to be a gentleman's identification, but, alas, like many another smart idea, womankind has copped it. Here you see an attractive example of this modern contraband. Not only does it have suavity, but it is entirely feminine, as well. The exquisite waist line, sweet little collar, and puff sleeves, make this a number you can't afford to pass up.

The Patterns.

Pattern 1363 is designed for sizes 12 to 20 (30 to 40 bust). Size 14 requires 3⅞ yards of 39-inch material, plus 18 yards of ribbon for trimming, as pictured.

Pattern 1354 is designed for sizes 34 to 46. Size 36 requires 4⅝ yards of 35-inch material.

Pattern 1252 is designed for sizes 12 to 20 (30 to 38 bust). Size 14 requires 3⅞ yards of 39-inch material.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., Room 1020, 211 W. Wacker Dr., Chicago, Ill. Price of patterns, 15 cents (in coins) each.

Uncle Phil Says:

The Mania of 1937

There have always been manias in the world. A conspicuous one now is the frantic desire to go somewhere quickly and lose your life at it.

Many a man pulls down his character in an effort to build up his reputation.

Observant old business men know the young men growing up who are going to succeed.

Newspaper publicity can create a "prominent citizen." It is up to him to profitably use the distinction.

Their Influence

A self-made man has a good deal of the tincture of his boy friends.

Nature is not only, or chiefly, a battlefield, but a workshop in which there is co-operation, as well.

It's easy enough to forgive your enemy after you have had a chance to get even.

STOP THOSE CHILLS AND FEVER!

Take a Proven Medicine for Malaria

Don't suffer like a dog!

The minute you feel a chill or fever coming on, start taking Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic. This good, old medicine will soon fix you up.

Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic contains tasteless quinidine and iron. It quickly stops chills and fever and also tends to build you up. That's the double effect you want.

The next time you suffer an attack of Malaria, don't take chances with new-fangled or untried preparations. Get Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic. It's pleasant to take as well as effective.

All drug stores sell Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic, 50c and $1. The latter size is the more economical.

HOW LONG CAN A THREE-QUARTER WIFE HOLD HER HUSBAND?

YOU have to work at marriage to make a success of it. Men may be selfish, unsympathetic, but that's the way they're made and you might as well realize it.

When your back aches and your nerves scream, don't take it out on your husband. He can't possibly know how you feel.

For three generations one woman has told another how to go "smiling through" with Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Oliver Head

Oliver Head, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Head is making his first visit alone, to his grandparents Mr. and Mrs. O. P. Head in Wilton. Young Mr. Head in a most dignified manner came in to the office before "taking off" on his vacation, and stated he wanted to tell all his friends "Goodbye" Getting almost out of town, he ordered his car turned around, as he had forgotten to say "Alaha" to "one of my best friends, Mr. Niven"-so the youthful traveller, after completing this farewell, happily left for "new worlds to conquer" . His cheerful chatter is missed by both his "playmates" and the grown ups who looked forward to his interesting visits.

Vaubon Atkinson

Many friends and classmate throughout Shelby County of Vaubon Atkinson will be delighted to learn of the signal distinction recently won by this another daughter of Shelby County pioneers families, and will read with pride of her outstanding record in Bryce Hospital where she has been in training for the past three years, completing the course in Nursing offered, with an average grade in all studies high in the 90's. Miss Atkinson, since graduation has been offered a scholarship in one of the large clinice in New York for a post graduate course in her profession. She has also had flattering offers from her native State. Just what she will do, the efficient nurse has not yet decided, but we take this method of joining a host of interested friends in sending heartiest congratulations and best wishes for a future career bright with the rainbow of promised merited success, which in the long run, is the only success which carries with it HAPPINESS. So, another Shelby County High School graduate reaches the top! And we proudly procloim it!

Mr. and Mrs. L. H. Ellis guest for the past week end included Mr. and Mrs. Harry Gilmore and daughter, Gail, and Jack Freeman of Wetumpka.

Adams Reunion

One of the most interesting family reunions was held on Sunday August 29th, when members of the Adams family gathered near Chelsea, Ala. at "Uncle Billie" Adams' Spring. Still residing around this picturesque spot are five of the children of this pioneer family, J. R. Adams, Eugene Clyde, Laura and Lula.

A delectable feast was served at one P. M. after which reminiscent talks were made by C. E. Harrison, W. C. Jackson, J. P. Creel, G. L. Guffie, W. J. Weldon and W. W. Adams.

Among those present were: Dr. W. W. Adams and family, Philadelphia, Pa., Rev. and Mrs. G. L. Griffin, Merchantville, N. J. ,W. C. Jackson and family, Akron, Ohio; J. P. Croell and family and Murray Remson of Sylacauga; C. J. Sutton and family, Philip McCurdy, Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Ramson, Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Walton, Mr and Mrs. C. E. Harrison, Rita Lea Harrison, of Birmingham; Mrs. Louise Upton of Mobile, Dick Fulton, Mr. and Mrs T. R. Walton, Mr and Mrs. Luther McGiboney of Columbiana, Mrs. A. A. Newell, Mrs. I. M. Kendrick of Maylene, Mr. and Mrs. Jack Storey, Mr and Mrs C. T. Weldon, Mrs. Alice Ray, Mr. and Mrs. G. Blankenship, Mrs. W. J. Weldon, of Wilsonville, Mr. and Mrs. R. Hunt, Dr. and Mrs. J. C. Embry of Vincent, Rev. I. W. Inzer of Leeds, and Mr. Melvin Cox and family.

Attention Thrifty Shoppers

Before buying your week end supplies and preparing that Sunday dinner, we kindly invite you to read carefully the COLUMBIANA CASH STORE'S unusual bargains in this issue of the Democrat. You may rely on JIMMIE BRASHER to tell you the "truth" about that Western Roast you wanted, and the line of groceries carried in this popular trading center are of the best quality! The local boys will be glad to see you. Go by and leave your want list with, "Elmer", "George" or "Jimmie" It will be filled promptly and satisfactorily!

Scales — Bell

Miss Mary Elizabeth Bell, the daughter of Mr and Mrs. E. W. Bell, of Vincent, is to be Married to Mr. Memonor C. Scales, of Bessemer this evening, September 2, at 8 o'clock, in the presence of an assemblage of relatives and close friends, in the small Auditorium of the First Methodist Church Birmingham, with Rev. Rowleight W. Greene, associate pastor reading the nuptial vows. Miss Bell is a graduate of Athens College and is a teacher in the Shelby County High School at Columbiana.

Mr. Scales is the son of Mr. and Mrs Memnon Scales, of Tuscaloosa. He received his A. B. and M. A. degree from the University of Alabama in trade and industrial education and is located as Camp Educational Adviser in Company 487 of the Civilian Conservation Camps at Bessemer.

B. W. C. August 31st, 1937

The B. W. C. met Monday afternoon at the home of Miss Eleanor Atchison with Mary Woolley in charge of the program. A most interesting and instructive program on the Indians was most offectively carried out by a small artificial bonfire being laid in the center of the room. By the bonfire was a cross on which was placed a small candle by each person on the program. The program was as follows:

Song—The Lord is our Shepherd
Devotional—Mrs. Kathleen Turner
Prayer—Mary Woolley
Indians our Hosts—Mrs Shealey
The Red Race—Mrs Mason Edwards
Treks of Broken Treaties—Miss Irene Bishop
Early Indian Missionaries— Mrs. Curlee
Indian Missions today—Miss Walton
Present Day Problems—Mrs. Stone
God's Friends on the Indian Highway—Miss Mary Woolley.

The program closed with a silent prayer by all members present ended by a most inspiring prayer led by Miss Eleanor Atchison for Our Red Friends.

A delicious course of ice cream and cake was served by the hostess.

SENATOR DIXIE BIBB GRAVES

A distinguished citizen from Montevallo, strolled into the office in the Democrat building on Saturday morning, and stoutly voiced his disapproval of our non-committal attitude upon the recent appointment by Gov. Graves of Mrs. Graves to the United States Senate.

We have read with keen interest the various comments in all weekly and daily papers throughout Alabama, and if our silence has been crashing on this appointment, we were not aware that our personal views regarding the unusual proceeding would have any weight with anybody or hold any interest for our readers, however, since our hand has been called, and a request for our personal view of the signal honor recently conferred upon Dixie Bibb Graves is desired, here goes!

Several years ago, we had the pleasure of remaining in the Capitol city during a hectic session of a certain Legislature, at which time, we spent many months tagging along behind a State Senatorial Toga rather proudly worn by "His Honor"—During this interesting and enlightening experience, we attempted to fall in line and become a part of the "log rolling" extensively indulged in by many dignitaries gathered in the historic halls of the State Capitol—Our role in these activities consisted of attending many dinner engagements, bridge luncheons and other social courtesies generously extended us by cordial Montgomerians after the "log rolling—law—makers" grew tired of the daily grind.

On some of these delightful occasions, we now recall a tall, gracious and very lovely hostess, whose charming southern manner endeared her to all who knew her. It is hard for us to revisualize Mrs. Graves and mentally picture her in an atmosphere so stiffly alive with masculine opposition which she has doubtless encountered since invading the Senatorial Chamber in Washington. Ever since MAN went forth with a club in one hand and a hand full of hair in the other, dragging the cave woman in when she happened to loiter along the way, there has been waged a battle royal for MALE SUPREMACY! The masculine gender naturally resents any feminine intrusion on his domain. His DOMAIN, in his estimation, still knows no territorial limits. So. when Lady Graves gracefully stepped into the sacred senatorial precincts in the National Capitol, and possibly, in her soft, well modulated voice, attempted to persuade and assure the - - - - recalcitrant males that she was fully capable of mentally absorbing, and could-if allowed, possibly assist in the solution of a few of the National and State issues, she likely found, if press reports are true, a solid army of resentful "little boys" who did not want her to play marbles" and who would die by their "political pop guns", if necessary, before they would admit HER "right" to the floor or to the Senatorial toga recently dropped from the MANLY shoulders of one of their own members—same species!

However, remembering the gracious personality of Mrs. Graves, and her inexhaustible supply of that all important requisitea—a keen sense of humor—which, in our opinion, will carry her safely over any masculine aversion or political bump these ELECTED POLITICOS may throw in the way, we predict she will retire from this exalted position, having rendered excellent service and with a creditable record for her five months Senatorial activities. Be that as it may, we personally prefer remembering Dixie Bibb Graves as we knew her in Montgomery, beautifully and tastefully gowned in a soft, clinging afternoon or evening frock, standing against a background of cut flowers in a home teeming with traditional Southern hospitality. Somehow we like this picture of the First Lady of Alabama, better than we do the pictorial display now seen in the papers of a stiffly gowned figure in severely cut black frock, a mannish pose; a pencil poised for action; an alert, rather bewildered look on her erstwhile smiling face as she, with feminine charm attempts to placate the seasoned, scowling Law Makers and "buck" the game. Her days now will probably be spent in training her dainty ear drums to listen for hours and hours to the monotonous roll of a BASS CHORUS - - - - a prolonged Amen! possibly all off key but blissfully ignorant of the fact - - - We seriously doubt even the all time favorite Soprano and Contralto duet "Whispering Hope," if sung by Senators Carra way and Graves could or would soothe or soften to any degree this Anvil Chorus of Masculine opposition over this "unheard of" feminine intrusion from the Black Belt of Alabama. We again wager, that many times, while giving her conscientious attention to "BILLS" now up for Senatorial consideration, Dixie Bibb Graves will wish, with all her "woman's heart" she were back in old Montgomery looking over the BILLS on the first of the month which go to make up the Gubernatorial menu. She will also likely wonder, after the days hub-hub has ceased, and the still quiet curtain of Night falls on Capitol Hill in busy, bustling Washington, just what "Gov. Bibby" is up to Where he is-What he is doing-and if he is, during his "Bach elo- though married-days", receiving the proper care and attention which for many years, Lady Graves has personally supervised, Likely she will often long to hear the rhythmic nocturnal lullaby crooned by the undulating waves from the Gulf, near their Cabin of "Dreams Come True" in Foley, which former restful haven brought surcease and peace after the days tumult-for both!

In other words our idea of Dixie Bibb Graves, from our brief association with her is that she is too much of a "woman" to ever become very famous as a "business man"—But, now that she is in Washington, and a Senator, we further predict that this noisy den of masculine, senatorial highlights, who bitterly resent HER coming, will soon succumb to the Alabama celebrity's feminine charm, and, capitulate as did Senator Black, pull the "gentleman's act, rise, and give the LADY a seat—Yes, where she wants it and when she wants it-and LIKE IT! It isjust an old Southern Custom, "Senatorial courtesy" demands it, and those "HIMS" can't get away from it—Bless 'em!

Put this down too, as we pass along, Senator Graves will play the cards "face up", studving each bid carefully before playing the next card. She will NEVER be the "DUMMY" many journalists have editorially predicted she would be.

It is, we grant you a "GRAVES" situation, but our best bet is, Lady Bibb will meet it and serve her term of office with wise, feminine, firm distinction

We introduce and advocate a highly superior new permanent . . . .

OFF THE PROGRAM

"Hubby dear! Let's do something different tonight, something unusual."

"All right Wife, let's stay home."

Back to Earth

He had succeeded in selling the most expensive all-main radio-gramophone on the stand, and was mentally spending the commission, when the customer's voice brought him back to earth.

"There's just one little adjustment that I would like you to make," she said.

"Yes, madam?"

"We're not fitted with electricity," she told him. "Will you please have it converted to gas?"

IN THE LIMELIGHT

Bug—I hear you have a new job?

Firefly—Yes, I'm the cigar lighter in the Bugtown hotel.

A Few Little Smiles

CELEBRATION

The preacher was giving his congregation a heated sermon on drinking.

"If I had every drop of liquor in this town, I'd dump it in the river."

After a few more comments he stated, even louder: "If I had every drop of liquor in the state I'd dump it in the river." He ended his sermon, shouting: "If I had every drop of liquor in the United States I'd dump it in the river."

Then he called for a song.

The choir director made the following request: "The congregation will please stand while we sing 'Shall We Gather at the River.'"

ONE IN EACH FLOCK

"Jack's mother used to call him her pet lamb."

"Now his old man says he's the black sheep."

Left Out

Little Bobby, aged seven, came into the house looking somewhat puzzled.

"Mother," he said, "why is it some people are so rich and we're so poor?"

"I guess it's just God's will," she replied.

Bobby pondered a moment and then asked: "Why weren't we mentioned in God's will, mother?"

Poor Joking

A colored boy was strolling through the cemetery reading the inscriptions on the tombstones. He came to one which read: "Not dead, but sleeping."

Scratching his head, the boy remarked:

"He sure ain't foolin' nobody but hisself."

United Kingdom

Rector—Good morning, Brown, I hear you have a son and heir?

Brown—Yes, sir. Our household now represents the United Kingdom.

Rector—How is that?

Brown—Why, you see, I am English, my wife's Scottish, the nurse is Irish, and the baby wails!

That's News

Reporter—I've got a perfect news story.

City Editor—The man bit the dog?

Reporter—Naw; a bull threw a congressman.

A Modern One

Vic—Is her father the kind to pursue if you eloped?

Al—No. He's the kind who would move so you couldn't find him when you returned.

Competition

"What rivals those two girls are in dress."

"Yes, each tries to outstrip the other."

TRUE TO LIFE

"What's the trouble, Percy? You look annoyed."

"Josephine called me a fool."

"Don't mind her. That girl never did have any tact."

What's a Stone?

MacAngus—That's a verra braw diamond, MacTavish. Ye say MacNab left it to ye when he died, but I dinna recollect any such thing in his will.

MacTavish—Losh, man, ye didna read it richt. He left feefty punds for a memorial stone, and this is it.

Still Burning

Sandy—I bet you can't give me a bit of poetry by Robert Burns.

Eck—That's easy: Robert M'Guire sits on the fire—Robert Burns.

It Wasn't There

Professor—I forgot my umbrella this morning.

Student—How did you remember you forgot it?

Professor—Well, I missed it when I raised my hand to close it after it had stopped raining.

Oops!

Professor—I won't begin today's lecture until the room settles down.

Voice (from the rear)—Go home and sleep it off, old man.—C. C. N. Y. Mercury.

WHO'S NEWS THIS WEEK...

By Lemuel F. Parton

NEW YORK.—Alonzo B. See, the elevator man, has long been this reader's favorite epistolarian. His letters to the newspapers caused more people to hit the ceiling than did his elevators. Just now his A. B. See Elevator company, which he founded fifty-four years ago, is being dissolved and its properties sold to Westinghouse. It is hoped he now will have time to catch up with his letter-writing. His son, Alva B. See, who has managed his business affairs recently, did not follow in his father's pen-tracks.

See's Letters Make People Hit Ceiling

Mr. See's first big turn in the headlines came in 1922 with his insistence that, for the good of all concerned, we ought to burn down all the women's colleges. He was a vehement opponent of feminine education, "beyond knowing their A B C's forward and backward." In support of this view, he offered the findings of his own research, which were that women's brains were, on the average, five ounces lighter than men's brains. "No college woman can be a fit parent," he contended.

He assailed pedagogues, and all contemporary educational techniques, writing and publishing a book called "Schools," in 1929, in which he insisted education should be "under the guidance of men who have the intelligence to own and run a shop."

Betes Noir by Thousands Enrage Him

He was a porcupine individualist, denouncing governmental parasites and tax-eaters and hinting that Herbert Hoover ought to be examined for his sanity in governing by commission. Cigarettes, high heels, extremes in style, slang and a thousand other betes noir enraged him.

He is a benevolent-appearing elderly gentleman, with steel-rimmed spectacles and white hair, living in a nice house in Brooklyn, where he has lived all his life, building his elevators and registering dissent.

This writer never caught himself agreeing with Mr. See on anything, but hopes he will keep on kicking. Most businessmen, when they get angry about something, sluice it off in some dessicated chamber of commerce committee which takes all the sap out of it. Dissent is too refined these days. I once got all the "Letters to the Editor" contributors together at a picnic and published the first photograph of "Vox Populi" ever taken. They were a quarrelsome lot and we almost had to call out the militia, but you couldn't help liking them.

SENATOR ELLISON D. (COTTON ED) SMITH of South Carolina still follows the cotton boll as his political lode star. Like other southern senators, he has been shaken off-base by the recent Democratic split, but now he is out for the New Deal subsidy medicine, "to keep excesses off the market."

"Cotton Ed" Far Off-Base in Party Split

Seventy-three-year old Senator Smith, in congress 29 years, has a sizable cotton patch which was granted to his family by George III in 1747. In the senate, he has been the leading champion and defender of cotton. With his southern colonel's blow-torch mustache, and his chivalrous defense of southern womanhood, he is the most authentic survival of the days of "Pitchfork Ben" Tillman.

He walked out on the Democratic convention last year, because they had a negro speaker. He remarked, "I don't believe in the Fourteenth or Fifteenth amendments."

As chairman of the agricultural committee of the senate, he is an important figure in the reshaping of farm legislation, to be taken into account in the new agrarian drive for subsidies.

NORMAN EBBUTT, Berlin correspondent of the London Times, loses his four-year battle against Nazi opposition. The German foreign office asked the Times to withdraw him and makes it clear that, if this is not done, he would be expelled. This is the culmination of continuous disagreement between Mr. Ebbutt and the Reich.

Boot of Nazis Is Applied to Herr Ebbutt

The foreign office asked that he be replaced by a correspondent who will "more nearly reflect the official version of the achievements of the regime." Mr. Ebbutt has written his own and not the official version of events in Germany.

In 1933, Mr. Ebbutt was president of the Association of Foreign Correspondents in Berlin. The day before the election which put Hitler in power, he wrote a dispatch in which he said many citizens were afraid to vote for fear of watermarked paper or invisible ink which would reveal them as oppositionists. This angered the Nazis and they demanded retraction. He sent another dispatch, substantiating his story. Many times threatened with expulsion, he has stayed on the job—until now.

Cuba Independent

On May 31 of 1936 a new treaty between the United States and Cuba was ratified. This treaty superseded that of May 22, 1903, and abandoned the right of the United States to intervene in the internal affairs of Cuba under the so-called Platt amendment.

Under the authority of this treaty the United States had intervened on five occasions. The republic of Cuba is therefore completely independent of the United States.

CARDUI

In this modern time something wonderfully worth while can be done for practically every woman who suffers from functional pains of menstruation. Certain cases can be relieved by taking Cardui. Others may need a physician's treatment.

Cardui has two widely demonstrated uses: (1) To ease the immediate pain and nervousness of the monthly period; and (2) to aid in building up the whole system by helping women to get more strength from their food.

"LITTLE STORIES FOR BEDTIME"

by Thornton W. Burgess

SAMMY AND BLACKY BOTH TALK AT ONCE

Two tongues at once are one too many,
And better 'twere there were not any.

WHICH means that when two people try to talk at the same time it is very unpleasant for themselves and even more unpleasant for others who may have to listen to them. When Blacky the Crow came flying out from deep in the Green Forest so excited that he was cawing at the top of his voice Sammy Jay had at once flown to meet him. Now, Sammy was just as excited, and he was screaming at the top of his lungs. You see,

Of Course, All the Little People Within Hearing Hurried Over to Find Out What It All Meant.

he knew that Blacky had found the stranger who had so excited him. Now perhaps the little people of the Green Forest and the Green Meadows would believe him and no longer think him crazy.

But they didn't! No, sir, they didn't! Instead they thought that Blacky the Crow had gone crazy, too. Never was there heard a worse racket than Sammy and Blacky made as they each tried to talk louder and faster than the other. Neither was listening to what the other was saying, which in itself was very impolite, even if they were cousins. Worse still, each kept interrupting the other, and, you know, there is nothing more impolite than to interrupt when another is speaking. But neither seemed to mind in the least. Each kept right on talking and growing more and more excited.

Of course, all the little people within hearing hurried over to find out what it all meant. But they couldn't understand at all what Sammy and Blacky were talking about. You see, Sammy and Blacky interrupted each other so often that all that those who were listening could make out was that there was a great big stranger in the Green Forest, a stranger who wore black fur and was as big as Farmer Brown's boy. Now, none of the little people knew of any one as big as Farmer Brown's boy unless it was another boy or a man. But Sammy and Blacky said that the stranger was not a man. So all their neighbors shook their heads sadly and said: "They're crazy," and then again shook their heads sadly.

"Too bad," said Jimmy Skunk. "I always thought Blacky was smart, very smart, but there certainly is something the matter with him now."

"Yes, sah, there certainly is," said Unc' Billy Possum. "Something's wrong with both Br'er Jay and Br'er Crow. They're foolish in their haids."

"Do you suppose it's catching?" asked Bobby Coon. "You know, Sammy Jay had it first and now Blacky has it."

"What's all this fuss about?" demanded a new voice. It was Peter Rabbit's. He was all out of breath, he had hurried so. You see, he had been way up in the Old Orchard, when he heard the screaming of Sammy and Blacky and he had started right away, for, you know, Peter would feel dreadful to miss anything that was going on.

"Nothing, only Blacky the Crow is just as crazy as his cousin, Sammy Jay," replied Jimmy Skunk. "Blacky says he has seen the same stranger in the Green Forest that upset Sammy so. Just listen to those two birds! Did you ever hear anything like it? I'm going home." With that Jimmy Skunk turned his back in disgust and started up the Crooked Little Path that comes down the hill.

Bobby Coon and Unc' Billy Possum started for their homes, and Danny Meadow Mouse began to run along one of his little paths to get as far as possible from such a noise. But Peter Rabbit suddenly sat up with his eyes popping right out of his head. He had just remembered the strange tracks he had seen in the snow deep in the Green Forest just at the end of winter. Could it be that they were made by the stranger who had so excited Sammy Jay and Blacky the Crow?

THE RIGHT WORD

By W. Curtis Nicholson

© The Associated Newspapers

CONCERNING "PREFER"

THIS verb should not be followed by "than." It probably takes an object, which is followed by "to." One should not say, "I prefer to see than to go," and of course one would not say, "I prefer to see to going," and yet the second "to" is a part of the construction. Therefore, if we use "going" after "to," we should use a similar type of word after "prefer" The corresponding words are "seeing" and "going." Correct: I prefer seeing him here to going to his home.

Frank H. Vizetelly says: "The act or thing preferred should never be followed by 'than.' 'Prefer' is properly followed by the preposition 'to.' Thus do not say 'I prefer to talk than to dance,' but 'I prefer talking to dancing'."

Francis K. Ball says: "Use 'to' (not 'than') after 'prefer': 1. She prefers California to Florida. 2. We preferred walking to riding."

SOME girls are as gleeful over finding a gray hair in a friend's head as an ethnologist is over finding a mummy. And to heck with ethnologists, say we. Also with gray hair hunters.

They should know better. But they don't. It may sound cute to lean over the back of Suzy Ann's chair and squeal: "Look, look, I found a gray hair!" It probably is even cuter when you can carefully separate this hair from all the others in Suzy Ann's head and then with a big ostentatious jerk yank it out.

Curses Upon the Girl Whose Hobby Is Finding Gray Hairs.

But we'll wager Suzy Ann doesn't think it's cute, no matter how many other people in the room may laugh.

So if you want our advice, lay off that stuff. Some people are born with gray hairs in their heads. And some of them grow white just because there are so many gray hair hunters around.

Lesson for September 5

GOD REQUIRES SOCIAL JUSTICE.

LESSON TEXT—Leviticus 19:1-18, 32-37.
GOLDEN TEXT—As ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise. Luke 6:31.
PRIMARY TOPIC—At Harvest Time.
JUNIOR TOPIC—At Harvest Time.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Championing the Rights of Others.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—My Resonsibility for Social Justice.

Labor Day—in this year of our Lord 1937—looks out upon a world deeply divided in opinions of what is right and what is wrong in the relationship between capital and labor. Political and economic leaders are talking much of social justice, of a planned economy in which all shall have a full share of the products of labor. Surely, we would all agree that there should be only kindness and justice in all such dealings of man with man. But how to accomplish that result in a world of selfishness and sin, that indeed is the question.

Unfortunately, many of those in the church who have greatly stressed social relationships have forgotten that the true foundation for such teaching and living is the preaching of the gospel of redemption. In reaction to their impossible position, others who have faithfully preached the necessity of regeneration have forgotten to stress the need of the expression of regenerated life in the social relationships of man. We need God-given balance, with a proper reflection of gospel truth in honest and helpful living. God wants his people to show that they belong to him by

I. Providing for the Poor and Needy (vv. 9, 10, 14, 15).

When Jesus said, "Ye have the poor always with you" (Matt. 26:11), he referred to one of the responsibilities which thoughtful and considerate men have always gladly borne, but which has been a constant problem to both individuals and nations. We have dealt with it in our day on a broad and supposedly scientific basis, but those who are closest to it are quick to admit that we have even now an imperfect solution. In the days of Israel the poor were fed by the purposeful leaving of gleanings in the field—which the needy were free to gather as their own. Thus they had the joy of helping themselves even as they were being helped by others, and, in the final analysis, by God himself.

II. Guarding Another's Reputation (vv. 16-18).

Gossip is a destructive means of breaking down the good standing of another. It is a sin all too common in our day, even within the circle of God's own people. Talebearing and evil-speaking are a blight on our social and religious life. We should put them away.

Akin to this common and awful sin is the bearing of grudges and the seeking for revenge, neither of which serves any good purpose.

III. Honoring the Aged (v. 32).

Old-age pensions undoubtedly have their place in our complicated social life, but it is evident that they would be entirely unnecessary if men and women had in the fear of God honored "the hoary head" and "the face of the old man," even as God gave command to Israel.

IV. Loving the Stranger (vv. 33, 34).

The man who knows what it is to have been a stranger, and to meet with love and protecting care, should never forget to go and do likewise. Living, as many of us do, in great cities makes this somewhat of a problem, and yet one sometimes wonders whether the bustling city is not often kinder to the stranger than the little community, which makes him feel like an "outsider."

V. Being Honest in Business (vv. 11-13, 35, 36).

No stealing, no false swearing, no defrauding, no withholding of wages, for all these things dishonor or "profane the name of thy God."

A good motto to hang up behind the counter or over the desk in a business house is found in the words of verses 35 and 36. False bottoms, trick scales, short measure—oh, yes, they are against the city ordinance, and you will be fined if you are caught. But remember, they are also an abomination in the sight of the Lord.

The closing verse of our lesson reiterates that important truth. In carrying out the tenets of social justice we are not simply being humane and kind. We are observing the statutes and ordinances of the Eternal One, him who says, "I am Jehovah."

Being One in Faith

It is good to know that in whatever country we are found, and under whatever sky, we are, through faith in the divine Saviour, members in the same body, sheep in the same fold, children of one home.

Pay Up Our Debts

Debt comes under the eighth commandment. It hangs a millstone round the neck of the man or woman who incurs it. It corrodes honesty.

A Quiz With Answers Offering Information on Various Subjects

1. Who was the greatest woman financier of all time?
2. Is the "only child" in a family superior, as compared with a child who has brothers or sisters?
3. What is the proper way to address a letter to the President?
4. From how many acres up is considered a farm?
5. What trees are said to build islands?
6. How many miles can a man walkan hour?
7. Who was Casabianca?
8. What makes a violin's tone, the varnish or the wood?

Answers

1. Hetty Green had the reputation of being the greatest woman financier in the world.
2. Psychologists find that the "only child," aged five, in a family is apt to be superior in health, intelligence, play habits and other points, as compared with a child of five who has brothers or sisters.
3. The President, Washington, D. C. Salutation, Sir, or informally, My Dear Mr. President.
4. In taking the census, anything from three acres up is considered a farm. No tract smaller than this is recorded as a farm unless it produces $250 in crops annually.
5. Trees that actually build islands and create extension of coasts are the mangroves, common seaside trees, found in profusion on shallow shores in the American tropics and subtropics. They collect mud in their tangled roots.
6. In 1928, N. Altimani of Italy walked 8 miles, 566 yards in one hour.
7. Louis Casabianca was a French revolutionist and naval officer. At Aboukir bay, in 1798, he was in command of the Orient, which caught fire. He refused to quite his ship and his young son refused to desert him. This event is the basis for Mrs. Hemans' poem.
8. It has been found that wood fiber, not varnish, has a vital effect on violin tones.

What's RIGHT With Alabama?

A person engaging in critical self-analysis so that he may improve himself, occasionally becomes so intent upon reviewing his shortcomings that he loses sight of his virtues. Sometimes a similar thing happens to communities and you find them asking, perhaps too frequently, "What's wrong with us?" and in time seeing much ill, but little good, in most that is about them.

Now, an occasional bit of self-searching and constructive criticism can be helpful to any of us. No doubt there are things and conditions in Alabama which can be, and should be, improved. That is perhaps the case with any individual, community or organization. Many are in the course of improvement. I know that is so with our company.

Great forward strides have been made in Alabama within relatively few years—socially, industrially, agriculturally. Many things are RIGHT with Alabama —things that are getting "righter" as time passes. The biggest thing RIGHT about Alabama is the determination to move forward!

We have recently reviewed the progress made by Alabama during the past 10 to 25 years. It was inspiring to us—we believe that you, too, will find it so.

Therefore, we hope to publish in this newspaper soon a series of advertisements based on this review so that you may have a picture of some of the many things that are RIGHT about Alabama.

DOVE SEASON

The Dove season will open on Sept. 15 in North Alabama and last until October 15, and from Dec. 20 to Jan. 31 north of Southern boundaries of Pickens, Tuscaloosa, Jefferson, Shelby, Talladega, Clay and Randolph Counties. For counties south of this line the open season is Nov. 29 to Jan. 31. The bag limit is 15 birds.

GUS THOMPSON

Gus Thompson, attorney of Birmingham, and also an avowed candidate for the office of Secretary of State is the first candidate for State honors for 1938 to visit the Democrat office. Mr. Thompson has many friends in Shelby County, who were delighted to welcome him and who assured him of their support. He represented Butler County in the House of Representatives in Montgomery in 1935.

FARMERS ADVISED NOT DUMP THEIR COTTONSEED

P. O. Davis, director, Alabama, Extension Service, spent several days in Washington the past week working with various Government agencies in trying to work out a program so that farmers receive better prices for their cotton seed.

" The price of cotton seed is distressingly low , being about $20. per ton, or 1 cent per pound. At this price the seed will not pick and gin a bale of cotton," he said in empasizing the importance that something be done.

Mr. Davis urges that farmers not dump their seed on the market. Apparently, oil mills are being glutted with seed," he says.

Present prospects are that there will be less damage to cotton from boll worms and leaf worms during 1937 than during 1936 or 1935. Boll weevils are more numerous in some sections.

6,557,000 Acres In Alabama Under National Program

The 127,000 Alabama farmers who made application for payment under the 1936 Agricultural Conservation Program diverted 987,000 acres from soil-depleting uses and empoyed soil-building practices on1,747,477 acres, Walter L. Randolph, in charge of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration program in Alabama, says. The total cropland in Alabama covered by application for payment was 6,557, 000 acres.

The payments which Alabama farmers will receive under the 1936 Agricultural Conservation Program will total approximately $10,190,801. 69, a repart just issued by the AAA shows. Of this amount, payments to farmers, evcluding county expenses, through June 30 in this State, amounted to $10,097,843.53. Most of the remainder will be paid by the end of August, Mr. Randolph says.

The anual report of AAA, recently released, showed that in the 9 states of the Southern Region, of whish Alabama is one, the applications for payments covered about 69,775,000 acres of cropland.

Farmers in these states diverted about 10,915,000 acres from soil-depleting crops to soil-conserving crops. Total acreage on which soil-conserving crops was seeded, or on which other soil-building practices were carried out was 14,888,,000 acres. Approximately 864.000 farmers in the region took part in the program

For the country as a whole, payments to farmers. including county expenses. totaled $379,814,149.00 for the 1936 program. State office expenses for the fiscal year for all states totalled $11,076,304.00 while States and county expenses, prior to June 1, 1936, totaled $4,383,700.00. Expenses for administration in Washington, for the year through July 30, 1937, totaled $4,446,960.00.

Heart Drifts

DENOMINATIONS

We come to God by devious ways,
And who am I to say
That the road I take is the only road,
My way, the better way.

The earnest seekr after God.
Can find Him like a flame,
Down any road, no matter what
His creed, or what his name.

So whether we may pause to pray
Where great cathedrals shine.
Or in some little weathered church
Or at a wayside shrine.

The sincere traveler will arrive
Where the welcoming home lights shine,
Although the countless thousands take
A different road from mine.

PRAYER

O let me give my love with open hands,
Ask nothing in return, nor make demands
That might prove wearisome to him; nor press
Too close, seeking response or tenderness.
Help me to walk apart and leave him free
To go untrammelled, or to come to me
When he has need . . . to lay no care of mine
Upon his heart. And may I not repine
If he withholds from me aught I would give. . .
Thus leaving love wide space where it may live.
So let me be, O Lord, until life's end,
That rarest of all things, a perfect friend.

SAPPHO TO HER DAUGHTER

Be lovely, be lovely,
But carefree, my daughter:
Like white sea-gulls floating
Upon the gray water.

Nor envy me ever,
My songs, nor my fame,
I know the sharp stub
Of dagger and flame,

Who seeking a sunrise
Of opaline wonder
Am scourged by the hail,
The rain and the thunder.

Alone as a cloud is,
As snow on the mountain,
I seek for the sunlight
In valley and fountain.

Though dear is my name
To friends and to lovers,
My soul like the wind
Above the world hovers.

Yet you, a frail bud,
Know nothing of sorrow,
Secure in a green sheath—
White flower of tomorrow.

—Antonia Y. Schwab.

NOR BURNED LETTERS

Lips that are stilled cannot communicate
The secret things intrusted to their hold;
Nor can an interloper desecrate
Their sacred silence. Kind earth will enfold
Their confidences. Roots will find a way
Into the sweetness of their cryptic dust,
And carry strength back to the light of day
To blossom in a loveliness of trust.

I laid your letters on my glowing fire,
And watched them curl in hungry, leaping flame:
Deep in my heart there burned a like desire
To hear you whispering, once more, "Je t'aime!"
Ah! Dead men tell no tales. And Love is dead—
Would, God, it were the heart of me instead!

J. E. BRASHER MADE MANAGER CASH STORE

Register In Chancery 7-5-38

The Columbiana Cash Store is now under the Managership of Jimmie Brasher, one of the most successful young business man in the town. His Assistant is the well known and well liked Elmer Davis.

These two enterprising merchants began their first years work in the above official capacity last week, and the writer in an exclusive interview with E. G. Thompson, Representative of the Clanton Wholesale Grocery Co., stated as follws: "We deeply appreciate the splendid cooperation we have received from the customers in this community. Last Week, our store under the Managership of Jimmie Brasher chalked up the most successful week as far as trade is concerned that we have had in almost a year. In fact, only one week. We are grateful for the support we have received, and our stock of goods, we assure you will be of the best in quality and price that we are able to offer. We are highly pleased with our new line up and looking forward to an ever better year than we have known since we entered into your hospitable town. We again thank you and cordially invite you into our store to see the local boys who will we are sure, be grateful for your continued valuable assistance in putting over an up to the Minute Grorery and Meat Market for Columbiana, and will merit your trade and friendship by prompt and courteous service".

We next talked with Manager Brasher and Assistant Manager Elmer Davis who are most enthusiastic over the next year's commercial outlook.

The writer joins of host of friends in extending best wishes for the future success of the new Managers, and heartiest congratulation to the Clanton Wholesale Grocery Co., for their wise choice in selecting these "live wires" for the important positions they now occupy in the chain of popular stores owned and operaed by the Clanton Wholesale Grocery Company.

Go by and see the boys today or give them a ring-they are truly "on their toes" to serve you.

SHANGHAI FEARS PLAGUE

Cholera Adds to Death Toll . . . Chinese Planes Bomb American Liner . . . Britain Protests Attack on Envoy

Edward W. Pickard
SUMMARIZES THE WORLD'S WEEK

© Western Newspaper Union.

'Black Death' in Shanghai

AS IF there were not horror enough in Shanghai, the ill-fated city found itself face to face with a new peril—bubonic plague. The outbreak of the disease, first discovered in the French concession, where most of the American population lives, was traced in large part to the sanitary difficulties in removing the bodies of Hongkew civilians killed by bombings, artillery shelling and machine-gun fire.

Sanitary officers in the concession and the international settlement fought frantically to check the spread of the dread cholera. They were hampered by Japanese military forces which insisted upon keeping closed areas where there still remained bodies to be buried.

Admiral Harry Yarnell, commander of the United States Asiatic fleet, canceled all shore leaves for sailors and ordered Chinese hands off American ships. With the port of Shanghai closed to American shipping other than warships, because of the ever-increasing danger of bombs and artillery fire, 500 Americans who had intended to leave on the next liners out of port were stranded, making a total of 2,000 American inhabitants who remained exposed to the double dangers of warfare and cholera.

Announcement by the Japanese that they had perfected a plan for bombing every air base in China was regarded as a warning to foreign nationals throughout the 3,000,000 square miles of Chinese territory that they had better evacuate if they were to be safe.

Evacuation of Americans from Shanghai was difficult with the ban on shipping. Warships appeared the logical means of rescue, but there were few in the Shanghai area capable of taking aboard large loads of passengers. Accordingly, a cruiser squadron of six ships was being prepared to leave the United States, steam to Shanghai and remove those stranded there.

The Japanese embassy warned foreign nations that they had better advise the Japanese navy of movements of ships into the vast blockaded area, lest these be mistaken for Chinese supply ships. The embassy intimated that cargoes of ammunition and military supplies might be denied admittance and advised foreign ships that it might be a good idea to permit Japanese authorities to inspect their cargoes before entering the blockade.

International Crises

ONE grave international crisis followed another in the new Sino-Japanese war. Britain was still awaiting reply to her protest over the wounding of His Majesty's ambassador to China by a Japanese airman when four airplanes, identified as Chinese, swooped down upon the American liner, President Hoover, flagship of the Dollar line, dropping bombs which killed one person aboard and wounded eight.

The President Hoover, having deposited a load of refugees in Manila, was nearing Shanghai to pick up another load when the bombs struck, tearing 25 holes in the ship above the water line. The ship immediately notified Admiral Harry E. Yarnell, commander of the American fleet, who took command of all American shipping in the emergency. He ordered the President Hoover to continue to Japan, and radioed other vessels that they must not enter "hostile" waters off the Woosung and Yangtze lightships. It was only a few days before the President Lincoln, another Dollar liner, had had to run a gauntlet of artillery fire to get 160 American refugees on their way to Manila.

China's ambassador in Washington, Chenting T. Wang, lost no time in making complete apology for his government in the Dollar liner incident to Secretary of State Cordell Hull. He said the President Hoover had been mistaken for a Japanese transport by a Chinese aviator. He offered to make full financial redress immediately. It was indicated that a court martial was in store for the erring airman.

More spectacular, but only because of the importance of the person it involved, was the shooting of Sir Hughe Montgomery Knatchbull-Hugessen, British ambassador to China.

Britain's note to Tokyo was couched in stringent terms. It said, in part:

"The plea, should it be advanced, that the flags carried on the cars were too small to be visible is irrelevant. There would have been no justification for the attack even had the cars carried no flags at all.

"The foreign and even the diplomatic status of the occupants is also irrelevant. The real issue is that they were noncombatants . . .

"Such events are inseparable from the practice as illegal as it is inhuman of failing to draw that clear distinction between combatants and noncombatants in the conduct of hostilities which international law no less than the conscience of mankind has always enjoined.

"His majesty's government must therefore request:

"FIRST—A formal apology to be conveyed by the Japanese government to his majesty's government;

"SECOND—Suitable punishment for those responsible for the attack;

"THIRD—An assurance by the Japanese authorities that necessary measures will be taken to prevent recurrence of events of such a character."

Tokyo's reply was temporarily withheld, pending a complete investigation.

Wounded by Japanese airmen, Sir Hughe Montgomery Knatchbull-Hugessen is center of strained international relations.

Trouble Ahead for Ford

JOHN L. LEWIS' magic touch effected a compromise between warring factions of the United Automobile Workers of America sufficient to permit the election of officers, but that failed to cover up the fierce dissension in the C. I. O. affiliate's Milwaukee convention.

Several times only a fortunately-timed adjournment saved a day's meeting from breaking up in a riot. The clashes were between the "progressive" faction of the union, headed by President Homer Martin, and the "unity" faction, containing most of the "left" members, who opposed Martin's program. In the end, the Lewis compromise forced Martin to retain several unity group officers he had apparently been anxious to depose. New officers added were, however, chiefly adherents of Martin, and it was believed his faction still held control of the executive board.

Of chief importance in the convention was the decision to go ahead with the campaign to organize the employees of the Ford Motor company. A special tax of $1 per member, which would bring in a net of something like $400,000, was voted for the purpose. Lewis predicted, "Some day Henry Ford is going to be so very tired he will be willing to accord to his employees the rights that are due them."

War May Soon Be Luxury

ONE good argument for peace is that the rising costs of raw materials are making war more expensive than ever. This was demonstrated when London financial circles revealed that parliament will be asked to vote supplementary funds to carry out Great Britain's armament program for the present year.

In February experts figured the cost of armaments at $7,500,000,000 over a five-year period. Now it is apparent that many more millions will be required. The cost of antimony has increased from $385 to $465 a ton, copper from $265 to $275, heavy scrap steel from $18.75 to $22.50, tin from $1,135 to $1,295, and zinc from $105 to $115. Steel ship plates a year ago cost $46.75 a ton; now they are $57.

Jersey Kids Picket Mayor

THE next thing you know babies will be picketing their cradles for more milk. Spurred on by frequent accounts of industrial strike picketing—or by the encouragement of disgruntled politicians—several hundred boys between the ages of seven and thirteen years rose in revolt against the city fathers of Jersey City, N. J.

Shouting their war cry, "We want playgrounds!", the youngsters tied up traffic with their parade. They dug up cobblestones from the streets, sprinkled the pavements with broken glass, built barricades of boxes and stones which made driving hazardous for automobilists.

The boys directed their campaign against Mayor Frank Hague and United States Senator A. Harry Moore, upbraiding them with placard mottoes condemning their alleged failure to provide sufficient playgrounds for the safety of children. Police dispersed them gently at first, but when they reorganized and resumed the picketing, the officers were forced to seize 15.

YOU Figure It Out!

IT IS true that the first session of the seventy-fifth congress appropriated a vast amount of money, but just how much? It depends upon your point of view.

Rep. John Taber (Rep., N. Y.), ranking minority member of the appropriations committee, in preparing a compilation for the last issue of the Congressional Record, estimated that congress had appropriated $10,252,892,556, all for use in the current fiscal year. He contended this amount of spending in one fiscal year would result in a deficit of between $3,000,000,000 and $4,000,000,000, and a national debt of more than $40,000,000,000.

Publication of Taber's statement drew a reply from Clarence Cannon (Dem., Mo.), chairman of the committee. He presented a series of tables which he claimed proved that the last session appropriated only $8,427,605,854, of which only $7,448,648,922 was for the 1938 fiscal year.

Then, just to sharpen the wits of laymen who sought the answer to the puzzle, Carter Glass, Democratic senator from Virginia, who has often differed from the administration on points of expenditures, offered his estimate that $9,389,488,893 had been appropriated. He added that the national debt is really closer to 40 billions than the 37 billions reported by the treasury.

Puppet King for Ethiopia?

WHEN Mussolini captured Ethiopia (or did he?) it was frequently said that he would never be able to control it, much less develop it, for the Ethiopian tribes are wild and terrible. Apparently he is now coming to the same conclusion and is about to turn for help to—of all people!—the former emperor, Haile Selassie.

It is known that the Italian government has made certain overtures to Great Britain to determine how she feels about the "Conquering Lion of Judah" ascending his throne once more, but strictly as a puppet for whom Il Duce would pull the strings. Britain is said to be willing because of the ever-present Italian threat along her Mediterranean lifeline.

France, too, has been approached on the matter. Frenchmen own the important railroad from Addis Ababa to Djibuti, but one of the principal stockholders in the French corporation is Haile Selassie, and the Italians refuse to recognize his holdings. It is believed that if the French agree to the puppet monarchy the validity of the emperor's shares will not be questioned. Then France will be able to buy them.

The fly in the ointment is that Haile Selassie will have none of this. He will rest his fate entirely with the League of Nations, of which Ethiopia is still a member. Meanwhile the continual raids by native tribesmen, still faithful to their emperor, leave no Italian life safe in the African country, and are making Il Duce's "colonization" a joke.

Dictator Visits Dictator

BERLIN was preparing a hero's welcome for Benito Mussolini, Italian dictator due to visit the German capital during September's closing days. Throughout the city Il Duce's obvious popularity was a realistic reminder of the friendly alliance which has developed between the two Fascist nations.

Unter den Linden and the Wilhelmstrasse were being decorated with bunting, colored lights and huge German and Italian flags. Various tours and military maneuvers were planned for Il Duce's visit. He was to arrive in a private airplane, his own hands at the controls. During his stay he was to be the guest of Adolf Hitler in the presidential palace. Plans called for his appointment as honorary leader of der Fuehrer's private guard and as colonel-in-chief of a Nazi cavalry regiment.

Japs Eye Sino-Russ Pact

IN TOKYO it was widely believed that the non-aggression pact signed by the Russian and Chinese governments was accompanied by a secret military agreement which would ally the two enemies of Japan to the extent that Soviet munitions, military advisers and aviators would be dispatched to China.

The charges were that by the terms of the secret agreement China fully recognizes Soviet activities in Outer Mongolia and the province of Sinkiang in return for a joint defense understanding against Japanese advance in China.

Mediterranean Menace

REGARDED as a renewal of attacks on shipping in the Mediterranean due to the Spanish civil war was the submarine attack upon the Russian freighter Timiryazev off Algiers. When the ship sank after being struck by a torpedo the captain and the crew of 29 were picked up by a fishing boat and brought to Algiers.

None of the crew could identify the attacker, although all reported they had seen a submarine's periscope just before the blast.

Louis Retains Championship

TOMMY FARR, the Welsh fighter whom all the "smart guys" thought was a set-up for Joe Louis, world's heavyweight champion, gave the "Brown Bomber" the surprise of his life in New York, when he stayed 15 rounds. Louis got the eminently fair decision, but Tommy was still fighting like a tiger when the final bell rang.

SEEN and HEARD around the NATIONAL CAPITAL

By Carter Field

Washington.—Never very potent, either as an orator on the floor or a manipulator behind the scenes in the senate, Joseph F. Guffey is being advised by close friends to run for governor of Pennsylvania. They contend, as diplomatically as they dare in their advice, that following Guffey's denunciation over the radio of the "ingrates" among his colleagues, his effectiveness in the upper house is destroyed.

Guffey is a very unusual figure in public life. His importance for years was due largely to a general conviction that he played along with Tammany Hall in the days when Tammany was pretty nearly New York. At any convention he was much sought after, on the theory that he would "throw" the Pennsylvania delegation whichever way New York decided to go, and it was much easier to get a deal or a story, according to whether the inquirer was a politician or a newspaper man, from Guffey than from any of the tight-lipped New York leaders.

So Guffey was always in the news, in the days just before and during a national Democratic convention. After the convention he subsided into comparative obscurity, save for occasional visits to national headquarters, when he would tell every politician and every newspaper man with whom he talked that Pennsylvania would be "in the bag" for the Democratic nominee if only he could get a liberal cash donation from the national committee.

His success in wheedling contributions for these forlorn hopes was astonishing. In 1928, for instance, he had John J. Raskob convinced that Al Smith could carry Pennsylvania if Raskob would just let Guffey have enough money.

"It's surprising," said the late Joseph T. Robinson, down at Hot Springs, Ark., for his notification ceremony, "what favorable reports we are getting from Pennsylvania. I believe we are going to carry that state."

"Don't let Guffey kid you," said a newspaper friend. "He just wants some of Raskob's dough."

Four years later, however, the sun really began to shine on Guffey's political fortunes. Right at the outset he came out for Franklin D. Roosevelt, breaking the hoary tradition (never apparently very much justified by developments) of his alignment with Tammany. He was credited with winning a majority of the Keystone state's delegates for Roosevelt. In a way—assuming he could have delivered the same number of delegates to any one of the "allies"—he nominated Roosevelt.

For all of which Jim Farley was profoundly grateful. And so was Roosevelt. Guffey rolled in campaign contributions for Pennsylvania. He didn't carry it, but the gratitude carried on. He was given so much patronage that there was a real revolt among the Pennsylvania Democratic representatives, led by no less a personage than Pat Boland, of Scranton, now whip of the house.

As senator, Guffey has simply been another pro-administration vote. His speeches had a canned flavor. He was accused of having them written for him by the Brain Trusters, and he has never denied it. But he fumbles the reading!

Now he has arraigned against himself every Democratic senator who revolted on the Supreme court enlargement, and, less openly, every Democratic senator who has revolted on anything. They don't like this reprisal idea. They suspect the President is accurately represented by Guffey, but that does not endear the Pennsylvania senator to them.

So Guffey may decide to accept the advice of some of his friends, and run for governor.

Garner Manipulates Bill

Vice President John Nance Garner's holding of the sugar bill after all the formalities had been complied with — preventing President Roosevelt from getting it in reasonable time for a veto, was one of the most interesting, if unnoticed, developments of the closing of the session of congress.

Garner held that bill until late Saturday afternoon—virtually Saturday night—before sending it to the White House, although if he had been in a real hurry to get it there it could have been delivered Friday evening.

The point of course is why Garner did it. It must be remembered that the President had sharply rebuked Senator Pat Harrison, chairman of the senate finance committee, for his proposed "compromise." The President had publicly denounced the lobby of the refiners in mainland America as one of the "most pernicious" in history. When the final compromise was put through, in form totally unsatisfactory to the President, it merely provided that the provisions affecting the refining of sugar should expire ten months before the end of the three-year period during which the quota system should prevail.

Questioned on the floor as to why this had not been made a full year, Senator Harrison frankly admitted that it was because he intended to induce congress, if possible, to extend these provisions in that first two months of the third year. In short, as Senator Harrison and his friends viewed the situation, it was not a compromise at all, but the winning of all they contended for the first 26 months of the law's life, with a chance to win 'everything' also for even the remaining 10 months.

Vice President Garner doesn't talk very much, but he knew what the President had been saying and how the President felt. Also he knew the temper of congress during those last few days. And he knew the extreme probability was that, if the President should receive that bill on Friday night he would veto it. In that event, Mr. Garner figured, there was little doubt as to what would happen—congress would rush the bill through over the President's veto.

This would have been another setback for the President's prestige. It is the kind of thing that a good party man does not like. Garner is above everything else a good party man. Whether he sympathizes with the President's ideas or not has nothing to do with the case, in most instances. The paramount motive with Garner always is that the Democratic party must be supreme—must continue to present as solid a front as possible to the foe.

So smart "Cactus Jack" decided to give the President a breathing spell to cool off. The President of course would know that congress had passed the bill in the form he did not want. Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes could be depended on to rush to the Chief Executive with a little oil for the fire even if no one else carried the bad news. But the President could not veto the bill without having the bill to veto, and Garner saw to it that the White House did not get the document.

As a matter of fact, if the President had vetoed the bill when Garner let him have it, assuming the veto message was dashed off within five minutes of receipt, the messenger with the veto message would have had to hurry to get to the capitol before the final gavel. And at that stage Garner could probably have gaveled his way to adjournment without most of the senators knowing what the "message from the President" was all about.

Fight Only Beginning

President Roosevelt's legislative program for the congress, as outlined in a conference with senate and house leaders on June 5, is very interesting reading now, but it would have been a rash prophet indeed who would have dared predict any such percentage of failure as actually developed.

Not that this means permanent failure. Many of the things that were caught in the stampede for adjournment or went over for other sound reasons may be enacted next year. Only two defeats seem sure. One was actual enlargement of the Supreme court. The other was reorganization of the federal departments and bureaus.

The President has not given up on either of these. Actually in the Supreme court case he has won, though he is not claiming victory. He has the substance, but he wanted terribly to have the technical knockout, shadowy as such a victory might possibly have proved.

On government reorganization, as predicted in these dispatches many times, he can have a great deal when congress finally gets around to voting on the bill—but not the things he particularly wants, notably executive control over such independent commissions as interstate commerce and federal trade.

Wages and hours regulation will of course go through next session, but the chances are now that the bill even then will be much more moderate than the President wished. The little sawmill and factory owners of the South have felt their oats, so to speak, and will be even more outspoken from now on about things they do not like.

Crop control was not mentioned at the June 5 conference. It really was on the agenda all the time, but intended by the White House to come after the bill enlarging the Supreme court had passed. Obviously the only satisfactory plan for contracts not to grow crops with individual farmers would not pass the hurdles set up in the old AAA decision until the court was changed. But the probability now is there will be sufficient change on the court before any such measures can be gotten through the next session to assure fair promise that this legislation will be upheld.

Indeed the President for quite a time was for holding back the wages and hours legislation until the court bill had become law.

National planning, as to water resources for the various regions of the country, was another item on that June 5 program. While the President has not specifically endorsed Senator George W. Norris' seven TVAs measure, this is generally understood as being in accordance with his ideas.

On that bill there will be a real fight next session, but the President has a better chance of victory there than on getting his own tax ideas enacted.

"Well, it was like this. I had said good-night to Mark and gone into my room. I had pulled off my coat, had yanked off one shoe when I began to sniff." He reddened. "Perhaps it's effeminate but I like a lot of 4711 in my tub, and I asked myself, 'Who's been using my bath crystals?' I heard sounds in the bathroom. It sort of took my breath for a minute and my brain whirled like a pin-wheel. Then I grabbed up my flash from the table beside the bed and tiptoed to the door. I banged it open. Water was gurgling out of the tub, dripping from the shower, my shaving things were scattered everywhere, and—a shoe was going out of the window." Stewart pulled out a handkerchief and mopped his red, moist face.

"A shoe!" Brooke and Sam exclaimed in unison.

"I presume there was a foot in it. For an instant amazement paralyzed me. I made a strategic error. Instead of beating it after that shoe, I poked around. The razor was gone. That fact gave me a nervous chill. 'Why would a man take that? Who could it have been? Kowa?' I asked myself. 'But he has his own bath; why should he use mine?' Then I came to and realized I was wasting time."

"I'll say you were and you're fairly spilling it now. Keep going! You did go after him, didn't you?"

"I did, Sam, but first I shouted for Mark. I hadn't much hope that he would hear me but I didn't dare wait to make sure. I squeezed my boyish figure through that window and wriggled to the balcony. I listened. I could hear only the pound of the surf and the crack of frost in the trees. Cautiously I peered over. Nothing moving. A sound! After this I'll never doubt that hair can rise. Mine felt like that green stuff you see growing up straight on one of those terra cotta heads. I listened. Sounded like a curtain flapping. Then I noticed that the window next to mine was open. Had the man gone in instead of over?

"I knew that it was a Lookout House window, Brooke, but I didn't know whose room. I couldn't be fussy about that. All the horrors I'd ever heard rushed through my mind as I thought of the missing razor and of what might be happening to you and Lucette and Sam."

He ran his fingers under his collar.

"It chokes me even to think of it. Where was I? Oh, yes, I squeezed through and dropped softly to the floor. I stopped to lock the window and draw the shade—my late visitor might have a pal, I reasoned—before I tiptoed into the adjoining room. It was a bedroom unlighted. Behind a hanging I reconnoitered. A mirror over a desk in the next room reflected a boudoir with flower panels; then I knew that the room was Brooke's. All the lights were on. No one there. I crept in. A desk drawer was on the floor, its contents scattered in all directions. A chair was overturned. I lived years crossing that room. What could I see? What would I find on the other side of that door? The hall was dark. The man—"

"Call him the Bath-Crystal Bandit and be done with it, but get him out of this house, Brooke's eyes will pop out of her head in a minute."

"Don't interrupt, Sam. Go on, Jed. Did you see anyone?"

"Couldn't see anything. Didn't dare use my flash for fear I might be spotted. I figured that the man had heard me enter my room, had beat it to the balcony, had seen the open window of this house, had crawled in planning to make his get-away from the lower floor. I gumshoed down holding my breath at every creak of a stair board, expecting every minute that I'd be sniped at.

"In the hall I stopped to listen. Sounds upstairs. Faint sounds. I hunted for the light switch. Found it. It seemed years that I waited in the dark with my finger itching to press that button. The house was so still I could hear my brain working. Stairs creaked! Back stairs! A door swung! He was coming! A chair crashed! I had him! I shouted:

" 'Don't move! I've got you covered!' Snapped on the hall light. When I saw you two blinking and staring like owls, you could have knocked me over with a toothpick. That's the end of my installment of the serial. Now, perhaps you'll explain why you were prowling round this house?"

With her arms in the big green mandarin sleeves crossed on the white porcelain table, her eyes deep shining pools of excitement, Brooke leaned forward and told him. Stewart's lips and cheeks puffed and deflated at second intervals as he listened.

Suddenly, Sam raised his hand in warning. "Listen, folks! Footsteps! Stealthy! Outside! Who's coming?"

Jed Stewart sprang up. He caught his chair before it could crash, and swung it experimentally as Sam pressed the light switch and plunged the room into ghostly gloom.

The back door opened softly. Brooke held her throat tight in one hand to stifle an exclamation.

The light flashed on. She closed her eyes. Opened them. Was that Henri, Henri standing in the middle of the floor, with the blinking green parrot making queer noises under his arm, or was this more nightmare? She was awake. Sam was real, as he stood with his finger on the switch. Jed Stewart was real, as he puffed his lips in time to the swing of the chair he clutched. Henri's ghastly face, distended eyes, and the savage invectives which gritted through his chattering teeth, were real.

"Cut that line!" Sam took a step toward the butler. "You should appreciate this little surprise party instead of acting as if you'd stepped into a nest of scorpions. It wasn't but a couple of hours ago I saw you in this very kitchen dressed—or undressed—for bed. Why did you go out?"

Henri made a desperate attempt to steady his quivering mouth. He looked like an innocent prisoner haled before an accusing judge; his expression was incredibly grieved as he huddled the parrot under his arm and twisted his soft hat in one hand. He appealed to Brooke.

"I don't know why your brother should speak to me as if I was a criminal, Miss. Haven't I the right to go out at night, even if I had started for bed?" He attempted to inject the virus of defiance into his uneven voice.

"Of course you have, Henri, but the papers are so full of burglaries and hold-ups that when we heard you stealing in we didn't know but what it was our turn. Where did you find Mr. Micawber?"

"That's why I went out, Miss. Couldn't go to sleep, had him on my mind. Queer where I found him. Everything's queer tonight." Henri shuddered. "Nothing strange has been happening in this house, has it?"

"Nothing at all, Henri, nothing at all," Sam assured quickly. "We sat up talking and got hungry again."

"I'm glad of that, Mr. Sam, that nothing strange happened, I mean,

"Now, Don't Be Frightened, Maggie."

because I—I found things terrible outside."

rong!" Not until she felt Sam's foot on hers was Brooke conscious of her explosive exclamation. She noticed that the butler's long cruel fingers shook as he passed them over his slack mouth.

"I don't wonder you're upset, Miss; you'll be more so when you hear that the old madame's limousine is gone."

"Gone where?" Sam demanded.

Henri shrugged thin sloping shoulders. "That's what I asked myself when I opened the garage door and the big car wasn't there."

"What did you do after you discovered that Mrs. Dane's car was missing?" asked Brooke.

'I ran to the Other House—you'll excuse me, Miss, for going to Mr. Mark first; I've always thought of him as being the heir, you see."

"Don't stop even to explain, Henri. Can't you see that we are frightfully excited? Perhaps something more than the car has been stolen. Did you find Mr. Trent?"

"No, Miss, and there's something queer there too. That Jap, Kowa, came rushing to the door when I kept my finger on the bell, and he shouts:

" 'Where's my boss? I been over house, one, two, t'ree time. Boss gone! He been kidnaped, I t'ink! Loud noise, Mr. Jed's room. I run there quick. Green parrot in bathtub, swearing fine.'

"I ran upstairs for the parrot, thinking the Jap had a bad scare on and I'd see Mr. Mark somewhere. But I didn't. The Jap and I looked everywhere but he was not there."

Tense silence in the white and green kitchen. Chilled and exhausted by his foray into the outside world, the parrot huddled within the curve of Henri's arm making sounds in his throat like a tribal dialect. The faint scent of bacon lingered in the stillness, a stillness haunted by tragic conjectures and possibilities which turned Brooke's blood to ice. Sam laughed from sheer nervous tension. Jed Stewart lashed at him furiously:

"You would do that! It's all theater to you Reyburns, isn't it, and side-splitting theater at that. Where's Mark? That's the only thing I want to know. Where's Mark?"

"Present."

Mark Trent answered from the doorway. Brooke's heart stopped, raced on. What had made that deep welt across his forehead? His face was colorless.

Henri's thin quavery voice broke the spell.

"Have you been hunting for the parrot too, Mr. Mark?"

Mark Trent's hand was unsteady as he held a lighter to his cigarette. His eyes reflected the flame as he looked at the butler.

"Not for the parrot, Henri. I'm hunting now for the man who killed Mrs. Hunt."

CHAPTER X

Mark Trent flinched as he approached the white cottage. It seemed days since he had driven away from this very house in the limousine filled with his aunt's silver; days since the message had come to Cassidy's garage from the police that Mrs. Hunt was dead and he had left there in a flivver with Mike at the wheel. They had stopped at Lookout House to make sure that the Reyburns were safe before they had burned up the road to get here. But it hadn't been days, not much more than an hour had passed. No use waiting, he must go in.

As he entered a small living-room, Inspector Harrison was kneeling by the fireplace. His piercing eyes glittered as he looked up and nodded to Mark.

"They got her all right."

Mark Trent stepped forward, blindly for an instant. He sunk his teeth deep in his lips to steady them before he looked down.

Lola, the woman who had been his wife, lay on the floor. She was dressed for the street—had she been about to drive away the limousine full of silver? The question flashed through his mind only to be instantly submerged in a flood of pity. She looked so young, so shabby, so hapless. Her shabbiness hurt him most, she had been so exquisite. He was glad that he had made her that allowance. Her hat had fallen off. A current of air stirred a lock of her dark hair. Her hands were still now. One gripped an open bag, the fingers of the other were bruised. He dropped to his knee beside the inspector.

"Can't something be done? Can't we move her to a couch?"

"No! No, not until the coroner comes."

"What happened?"

"They got her rings. She had rings, hadn't she?"

"She had when I saw her—a few days ago. Valuable rings. Other jewels too."

"Then I guess we got the motive. Better come away, boy, you can't do anything," Inspector Harrison suggested in his persuasive voice.

"Life hasn't seemed as smooth as a trotting park to me to date, Bill, but tonight it seems a terrifying, horrible thing."

"I know, boy, I know. Bring her in, Tim." The inspector spoke to the policeman with ears like clinging bats, who appeared at the door.

"It's the Cassidy girl," he explained to Mark. "Kinder tough to bring her into this room, but there don't seem to be any other place. We've waited till her father got here before questioning her. Mike's a grand fella and me friend since we were lads together. Here you are, Maggie!"

The hint of joviality in his soft voice missed its mark, for the sixteen-year-old girl, who entered the room as if dragged by unseen hands, regarded him with terrified Irish blue eyes.

The inspector placed a chair with its back to the still figure on the floor.

"Sit here, Maggie."

As she sat down, Mike Cassidy laid his heavy ham-bone hand on her shoulder. The inspector cleared his throat.

"Now, don't be frightened, Maggie. Ain't I just the same Bill Harrison who's been chumming round with your dad ever since you was a little girl, and ain't I got kids of my own? All you got to do is to tell me what happened in this house tonight."

"Course, I ain't afraid of you, Inspector," the girl replied, more at ease. "I'll tell what I know. I sleep in the attic, it's got a dormer back and front. I was dead beat when I went to bed, what with the housework an' havin' to run out to fill tanks. The boss was sick till afternoon an'—"

"Drunk, wasn't he? Tell it straight, Maggie."

"All right, Inspector, he was. I don't know what time it was when I was woke up by a car stopping at the garage; sounded like a classy car. We don't have much late trade—an' the boss told me today that the crowned heads here, that's what he said, 'crowned heads,' had put him out of business—so I got up and looked out to see what 'twas all about. I can see into the garage from my back window."

"Check up on that, Tim."

"Yes, Inspector." The policeman with the ears vanished into the hall.

What Irvin S. Cobb Thinks about

Cures for Communism.

SANTA MONICA, CALIF.—A certain rich man out here—rich but indulgent—got a letter from his heir, a sophomore at one of the big eastern colleges.

The lad announced he had been converted to communism and was contributing to the cause. So what about it?

Irvin S. Cobb

The old man wrote back:

"Son, you have a perfect right to follow the dictates of your conscience. But as a consistent communist you naturally would not continue to live on the ill-gotten gains of a wicked money-grabber. Today I am cutting off your somewhat generous allowance. You will also vacate the luxurious apartment you now occupy because I'm not paying the rent of same any longer. So go ahead, my boy, and commune freely—with my blessings! But from date that'll be about all from this end of the line."

Exactly four hours after the arrival by air mail of this ultimatum, the hard-hearted parent got back a rush telegram stating that the young man had been thinking things over and had decided not to take up the new doctrine.

The Art of Listening.

WE HAD a party at which there appeared what I may call the dumb poets—Sam Hoffenstein and Ogden Nash. At the studios where they're both turning out epics, there's a rule that neither shall burst forth into poetry while he's under contract—no thumbing of the harp, no sounding of the lute. Cinema's gain is creation's loss.

Maybe that explains why they made such good listeners the other night. And isn't a good listener a boon! I don't mind being interrupted, provided the interrupter chooses the right subject. Mute and rapt, I can harken for hours on hours if someone is talking about me, say, or even reading from my published works. But these two minnesingers only broke in to ask that the pickled shrimp be passed or gently to suggest that another little drink or two wouldn't do any harm.

Ogden Nash has attained the highest peak of distinction attainable for a writer. His chief imitator has an imitator who is bringing up his oldest boy to be an imitator.

Resurrecting Old Words.

WHEN a word gets fashionable—especially a new word which some wordsmith thought up right out of his head—it gets too doggone fashionable. The same applies to old words which have been disinterred from their forgotten tombs in the dictionary.

I seem to see grave robbers prowling through the unabridged, starting in at "aard-vark," which is an animal formerly common only to Africa but not frequently found in cross-word puzles; and working on through to "zythum," a very strong beer drunk by ancient tribes. I guess those old-timers imbibed copiously of the brew and then named it. It doesn't sound like the sort of word a dead sober party deliberately would make up.

Do you remember the run "intrigued" had? I never got so sick of a word in my ife. And then along came "provocative," and it turned out to be a pest. People went around just looking for a chance to work "provocative" into the conversation. The only way to lick 'em was to pretend to be deaf and dumb.

And now the reigning favorite is "allergic." Folks spout it everywhere, whether they know what it means or not. I don't mind saying I'm getting awfully allergic to "allergic." There must be many others like me.

Campaign Books.

LET us not cavil too much because high pressure salesmen, working on commission, have been unloading upon the faithful, at fancy prices, the gift book put out by Washington headquarters to pay off campaign debts. In fact, 15 cents' worth would cover practically all the cavil I personally have used up in this connection.

The result tends to prove the gratifying fact that, while more Democrats may not necessarily have learned how to read and write, obviously more of us have got money than formerly was the case when the Republicans were in power.

Besides, think of what the strain would have been upon the poor postman if the national committee had been stuck with all this bulk literature and congressmen had started franking copies out to their constituents with Uncle Sam paying the freight. To give you a further idea about this franking privilege, I may state that it was named for Frank, Jesse's brother—and you'll remember how careless those James boys were with the United States mails!

Favorite Recipe of the Week—

PREPARE a huge crock of apple sauce and your efforts will be well rewarded for this delicious concoction never fails to appeal to jaded appetites. Apple sauce is also the basis for any number of easily prepared desserts that have definite palate appeal during the summer months.

Apple Sauce.

1 dozen apples
1½ cups apple cider
Granulated sugar to taste
1 teaspoonful lemon juice
1 tablespoonful butter
Pinch salt

Wash, core and cut up apples. Put them in a saucepan with the cider and cook until tender enough to rub through a sieve. Mixture should be thick. Stir in the remaining ingredients. Pour into a bowl. Garnish with a light drizzling of cinnamon. Serve hot or cold as desired.

Conceited Beau Brummell

Beau Brummell (1778-1840), the master dandy of all time, was so idolized by the aristocracy of London as an arbiter of dress and manners that, eventually, he became unbearably conceited. One night he even ordered a duchess out of his house, during a reception, because her "dress was cut too low in the back." The gentleman's taste was so offended that he had to cover his eyes while she humbly backed out of the ballroom.—Collier's Weekly.

Econommists of the United States Department of Agriculture expect aattle prices to continue near present high levels the remainder of this year.

September 15 Is Final Date For Applications

Wednesday, September 15, has been disignated as the final date for Alabama farmers to file applications for payments under the 1936 agricultural conservation program, announces Walter L. Randolph, administrative officer in charge of AAA program in Alabama.

The final date was set by the State Agricultural Conservation committee, composed of J. Litt Edwards, chairman, Selma; L. S. Fulker, Livington; W. B. Crawley, Banks; and J. B. McClure Florence, and has been approved by the Southern Division, AAA Washington.

Farmers who have not already made application for payment under the AAA program should do so before September 15, advises Mr. Randolph. The application should be filed with the county agent.

SUNDAY SCHOOL MEETING

A meeting is called for all sunday school superintendents and all departmental superintendents of the Baptist Sunday schools of the Shelby County Baptist Association to meet in Columbiana Baptist Church on Sunday September 12, at 2 P. M. for a general conference.

All pastors and Sunday School workers and all other interested in the promotion of Sunday Schools in Shelby County are invited to attend this meeting.

W. J. Horsley
County Superintendent

Of the 3,249 persons convicted in the County Courts of Alabama last and sent to the State penitentiary 756 were convicted of violating the prohibition law. The second largest number for any one crime was for petit larceny, the number being 690. Public drunkenness comes third in the list with 305. Assault and battery with a weapon accounts for 248 and simple assault and battery for 207.

The Bureau of Agricultural Economics predicts that feed and market conditions will be better for dairymen the last of this year than they were a year ago. Better prices probably will average higher and the relation between the cost of feed and prices of dairy products show promise of being more favorable.

In 1936 Alabama mined more iron ore that all the other Southern States combined and one tenth of all the iron ore mined in the United States. It produced more than one eight of the pig iron.

Mrs. Pernie Hendrick, who is making her home in Talledega, was a visitor in Columbiana last week.

FORECAST for an Aerogene Wave:

COOL AND FAIR HEAD HAIR

Now a permanent may be just a pleasant interlude in our capable hands: No more heavy metal weights, no more hot heaters, no more high temperatures, no smelly chemicals of any kind to steam your curls!

Aerogene, a seeming miracle, is just this simple: A mite of current, no more than it takes to run a child's toy train, flows right through the light little Aerogene Sachets, stopping automatically when the inside moisture is absorbed. Your hair cannot possibly be overdried, nor your scalp overheated.

It is actually beneficial to hair; the wave comes out softer and stays in longer than by any other method. Phone for a "sitting" . . . an Aerogene is as comfortable as sitting for your portrait!

Social and Personal Mention

MILDRED WHITE WALLACE, Social Editor

"THE SMALL TOWN EDITOR"

We were attracted last week to an article bearing the above title, and to you small town editors, whosee spirits are droopIng --if they are,w offer the reprinted article below as healing balm to wounded hearts or much needed encouragement for further discouraging valleys of disappointments thru which you will possibly be called to go. It is written by the internationally famous George Matthews Adam who states as following:

"I once was a small town editor. Iwas brought up on a weekly newspaper in a little town in Michigan. It was an event in our home when the paper arrived. We soon knew what eveybody in the town was about during the week.

"The thing that makes the weekly newspaper so important is its close ness to its readers. It is an intimate orgen. It serves its readers in quite as helpful a manner as does the Minister, the Priest or the town Principal of the school. It is an institution without which no town is complete The country newspaper is one paper that is usually read from front to back ads and all"

By the way there are 10,000 weeklies in the United States.

"The Small Town Editor"- Mr Matthews continues—is a hardwork ing hard thinking individual. He has his readers interest at heart No item of interest is unimportant. His newspaper is the reflection of the thought and tempo of his town. Usually he or she is a brave leader and a fearless fighter for the town's best interests"

The article closes with a worth while verbal tribute by Mr. Adams to a sometimes rather bewildering journalistic trail.

"We could ill afford to be without this small town editor of the weekly newspaper. He earns little-but he gives much. His is a service. His influence is far reaching .His citizenship isa fine gift to civilization. May he never perish fom the face of the earth".

The above chritable view of the worth while-ness of a small town editor's daily routine is a truly welcome light on the subject, It stimulates an inspiration for better work and affords a keener zest for the tasks we encounter in hundreds of subscribers, conscientious endearor to please and in our daily dealings with various types of Editors.

Personally speaking from only five years existence in pushing an errant pen, along the inkey trail, we have found three requisites rare, and of intrinsic worth as far as happily traversing the sea of printer's ink is concerned—namely, GRATITUDE CONSIDERATION - - - COURTESY No other qualities are so highly appreciated, and none so seldom found in the business world yet they cost the total sum of "nothing at all". A little thought a little courtesy, a little tolerance, a little consideration, brings a brighter pathway for we who travel "along the galley way"! I feel sure the same requisites will apply to all professions.

LABOR DAY

The first Labor Day Celebration was staged in New York exactly 55 years ago today. Swinging along to work this Monday morning, exactly as though it were not a HOLIDAY, and it isn't for Alabama Quills which must be pushed right along, we noticed the BANK was closed, Columbiana Leader also locked up tight, but Mr. Max and his efficient crew of workers were observing both Labor Day and the Jewish New York Post office also closed "between mails", and many natives off for a week end holiday. For instance, a stag fishing party composed of Gerald Fulton, Bolin Cooper, James Taylor and Roy Walton are trying to inveigle members of the finny tribe to accept their hook. line and sinker in Panama City.

BUSINESS PICKS UP ON MAIN STREET

In the Cole Drug Company may now be found "Hop" Cole, who has recently accepted the assistant managership of this popular Drug Store owned and operated by his brother, Lloyd Cole. No two more universally liked and popular citizens reside in Columbiana than the Cole Brothers, and their many friends are delighted to know they will be associated in business. The famaliar and cordial invitation "Come to See Us" has such a true and genuine ring to it, that it is one store in the town where friends love to congregate. One store in which is assured service, prompt, and courteous—COURTESY to each customer is a valuable TRADE MARK the COLE DRUG STORE has it.

GRADY STEAK HOUSE

John Grady, another prominent young business man launches out on his own in a most attractively arranged Steak House on Main Street. if we are to judge the futher by the Saturday and Sunday crowds we saw in this new and up to the minute Luncheon Room, Mr. Grady's success is already assured. You may order something dainty-something subsatntial, or-just a sandwich and a cold drink, and whatever it is, wil' meet the requirements of a delectable menu Call by and verify for your own satisfaction what we have already told you. It is a good place to feed "The inner man"!

MRS. L. H. ELLIS, HOSTESS

Mrs. L. H. Ellis entertained with a watermelon cutting and a dance on Thursday night, honoring Miss Imogene Clayton, of Texas, the popular house guest of Mrs. Lena Merrel.

A number of the younger set and collegiates were invited to share delightful courtesy, and after th water melons were served on the spacious lawn of the Ellis home, the entire party motored to the Rebecca Sandwich Shoppe for a dance which concluded the program of entertainment offered.

JESSE HUGHES

Jesse Hughes, who for the pas three years has been a studdent in the Theological College in New Orleans, La., was a visitor in the Democrat office on Saturday. The Rev. Mr. Hughes is holding a meeting in Saginaw, while spending a weeks vacation in Shelby County, after which he will return to New Orleans to complete his ministerial course, where he is also employed full time in one of the churches in the Cresent City.

SHEARER JEAN PEEBLES

Little Miss Shearer Jean Peebles of Columbiana RFD, aged 5 weeks old was a cordially welcomed guest in the Democrat office on Monday Morning. Daintily growned in blue and white she serenely slept their her first visit into the journalistic emporium, but smiled occasionally in her dreams, so we are assured she "sub-consciously" approved. She was accompanied by her Mother Mrs. Peebles, and her grand mother Mrs. Davis.

Mrs. Toni Espocito of New York City, and Madelyn Jacobs Grover of Birmingham, were distinguished guest of Mrs. Fay Miles Benton during the past week end.

CHARLIE ANNE GOODWIN

We have now had the pleasure of verifying all the lovely reports we have heard concerning Columbiana's newest citizens, Charlie Anne Goodwin, aged five weeks, and we can only add our whole hearted endorsement of every thing that spells A-D-O-R-A-B-L-E! little Anne was taking her afternoon's siesta when her pretty Mother sauntered by the office for a little chat with us, on last Monday, but we were allowed to pull back the dainty satin coverlid from her wicker "throne on wheels" an add our O. K. to the chorus of interested friends who were welcoming her on Main Street. "Little Anne" did not even wink one blue optic at us, but we understand she has the bluest of blue eyes, and of course she WOULD, with that titian mop of curly locks on her pretty head Come back again Little One, when you are awake and we can have a real conversation—Sure, Baby Lingo! We understand every little "coo".

Joe Williams and Robert Earl Betts of Birmingham, returned to their home Sunday, after spending the summer vacation with their grand parents Mr and Mrs J. B. Pitts

Mrs. Lena Phillips of Ensley and Mr. and Mrs. Joe Davidson of Helena, were week end guest in the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. B Pitts

Mrs. Felton Goodwin of Birmingham is the guest of Mr. and Mrs Gray Goodwin this week.

Billie Chandler, is now a full fledged Freshman in the Georgia Military Acaemy, and he is delighted over his new scholastic duties for th Fall. Before leaving, young Mr. Chandler chose the Democrat as his medium for keeping up with the news while away from the home base. The comrades on the football field and his class mates in S. C. H. S, and his many friends in Columbiana send good wishes for a successful year spent in Georgia

BOOKS! BOOKS! BOOKS!

The death knell of another happy summer's vacation will sound on next Monday morning when several thousand school children in Shelby County will be cognizant of the fact that it is Book Time again, and 'reading' writin' and rithmetic lessons will be arefully assigned by Teacher,and pupils, whose lagging footsteps reluctantly answer, will be required to report by 8 bells on these cool, frosty morning. Realizing the importance of the school activities, we have been fortunate enough to acquire the services of Frank McKnight of the S. C. H. S. who will report to us the weekly happenings of the High School. If there are other school in the County who would like to send us in items of interest, we shall happily publish them. The Democrat offers its best facilities to the schools, and we hope for the continued splendid cooperation we have enjoyed during the past five years.

A. L. HORTON

A. L. Horton, principal of the Vincent school, one of the strongest in the County, was a guest in Columbiana last week Mr. Horton, as per usual, has his program for the coming semester all mapped out, and a well balanced presentation is in store for both patrons and pupils. Vincent is to be congratulated upon keeping Mr. Horton another year. His work is outstanding and merits the full cooperation he has evidently received from appreciative Vincentoians as he now launches his fifth year of service in this Community

J. A. Wade, formerly of Vincent, now at work with the State Tax Commission and located in Birmingham was a visitor in the Democrat office on Monday.

IRENE—LOU SHOPPE

The announcement you have been wating for is now made. We refer you to the advertisement in this issue of the Democrat of the Irene—Lou Dress Shoppe. The loveliest of Fall dresses, hats, coats and accessories are now available, and for the little Miss just starting to school there are the most adorable Micky Mouse, fast colored little frocks you ever saw. Do go by today and get that Fall outfit you have been wanting and at prices quite within your budget.

A new and very lovely line of underware and the famous Gold Strip line of hosiery assures you the best in silk hose.. Whether you are off to College or remaining at home' you will find a dress to suit any occasion and with accessories to match, By the way, ACCESSORIES this year. are about as important as the dress. Go by today while the stock is complete and before it is sold out, for values as we saw yesterday will not remain long on Main Street.

"YOU CAN'T HAVE EVERYTHING"

You can't have everything says a popular play wright-but if you are popular play wright-but if you are looking for real entertainment that has EVERYTHING, we advise that you go to the Strand Theatre on Thursday and Friday if you desire to see this popular cinema success.

WALTER CHANCELLOR

Walter Chancellor of Chancellor Ferry fame Legionaire, and one of the most likeable one in a crowd of distinguished ex-soldiers who gathered for a reminiscent chat on Tuesday afternoon in our office, was an interesting guest on Tuesday. We are always delighted to welcome Mr. Chancellor in Columbiana, but the predictions these "BUDDIES" made during the discussion regarding future wars are horrible to conaemplate

Woodrow Elliott, Principal of the WilsonvilleJr. High School, goes on record as being the first teacher in the County to accept the Democrat special subscription rate for teachers Mr. Elliott came by the office on Thursday afternoon, and personally expressed his appreciation for this opportunity, and offered kind words of encouragement so much appreciated in an ever whimsical journalistic word. We acknowledge the courtesy with deepest gratitude.

Mr. and Mrs. Harold Harlin have moved from Athens, Alabama, to make their future home in Columbiana. This popular and charming couple will be happly welcomed as permanent residents.

Misses Ruby Long and Mary Alice Long of Guntersville, were guests of Mrs. Grace Carter during the past week end.

Myra Miles, of Camp Hill and Nelle Davidson, formerly of Columbiana, now pursuing her study of Health work in Louisville, Ky., were happily greeted former residents on Main Street this week.

COLLEGIATES

Jean Letson and Jeanette Nivens have left Columbiana to resume their collegiate courses in Alabama College. Harris Milton Gordon, Ruth Luck and Conrad Fowler are Columbiana's representatives at the Capstone this year. Jack McGhee and J. B. Turner are "allset" for another years grind in Auburn. L. B. Riddle will be astudent in Birmingham Southern this year, majoring in FOOTBALL he states.

MRS. GRACE CARTER HOSTESS TO COLLEGIATES

Mrs. Grace Carter entertained with a lovely dance in her apartment on last Friday night, honoring the Colligiates of Columbiana. Those included in her generous hospitality included: Saranel Carter, Elizabath Taylor, Jean Letson, Jeanette Nivens Mary Alice Long, Stella Sloan, Imogene Clayton. Conrad Fowler, Billie Riddle, Ross Bob Mullins, Wales W. Wallace Jr. After the dance a delicious iced course was served.

I love the door of my small house
Although its neither grand nor wide.
When things go wrong it's strong enough
To lock the big strange world outside.

Thanks for following through. Until next week.

The Better Homes Club of Harpersville was entertained on last Tuesday with a Picnic staged on Kelly's Creek, Miss Anne Watson, County Demonstration Agent, in charge of the entertainment offered. Miss Watson urges that more members be invited to join this club, thereby fostering more interest in their many worth while activities.

HAS DIFFERENT VIEW

She—You used to have better success selling poems before you married.

He—Yes. I—I wrote humorous poems then.

What a Builder!

The small builder took his friend over a house he had just completed. The friend was not so very enthusiastic.

"All right!" said the builder, "you go into the next room and listen." Then he called out—"Harry, can you hear me?"

"Yes," replied the friend.

"Can you see me, Harry?"

"No."

"Well—there's some walls for ye—'"

ALWAYS PUZZLED

He—I'm wondering what the women are coming to.

She—And we're always wondering where we are going.

Just a Little Smile

LESSON IN HONESTY

Father and son were out walking when the father stooped and picked up a rather nicely made man's glove, says Ireland's Own.

"There's nothing like honesty," he said to the boy. "I will place it on this railing, and perhaps the owner will return for it."

They continued their walk, but a little while later the man picked up another glove.

"Goodness me," he exclaimed, "This is the neighbor to the other glove!" He tried it on. "And my size, too. Hurry back, sonny, and fetch the other glove."

NO LEFT TURNS

"Speeding has a big element of danger in it."

"Yes—those confounded cops are everywhere."

Wonder He Could Read

"You're back early, Dave," remarked the farmer's wife.

Dave, who had been to a play in the nearby town for the first time in years, nodded a silent agreement, and proceeded to enjoy a pipe and study his program.

"Enjoy the play?" asked his wife.

"No," replied Dave. "Didn't see the end."

"Why not?"

"Well, take a look at the program here. The second act takes place in two years' time."—Pearson's London Weekly.

The Only Spot

"In Heaven's name," asked the prospector, "why did you come out into the middle of this dried up, barren, God-forsaken territory to build a home? There isn't a tree within a hundred miles of you."

"What else could I do? The wife was dead set on learning to drive the car!"—Providence Journal.

Perfection

The young couple sat at a night club table and cooed heavily.

"We could get married easily," whispered the boy. "My father's a minister."

"Okay," returned the girl promptly. "Let's try it. My father's a lawyer."—New York Mirror.

Modern Youth

Did you give Joan that copy of "What Every Girl Should Know?" asked father.

"Yes," replied mother thoughtfully, "and she's writing the author suggesting a couple of dozen corrections and the addition of two new chapters."

Quite

"What does 'superfluous' mean, Ernie?"

"Oh, like the 'will you' in 'will you 'ave a drink?' "

AWAITING THE DIPLOMA

"Highbrow's gotten every honor of the college; his rise has been rapid."

"I should say he's risen by degrees."

Heard in Court

Magistrate—What is the man charged with?

Constable—He is a camera fiend of the worst kind, sir.

Magistrate—But he shouldn't have been arrested just because he has a mania for taking pictures.

Constable—It isn't that, sir—he takes the cameras!

That's Telling Them

"I hate dumb women."

"Aha—a woman hater."—U. S. S. Big Shot.

His Fault

An Aberdonian went to Australia. When he returned three years later he found his three brothers, all with beards, at the railway station.

"What's the big idea?" he asked.

"Ye ken quite well ye took the razor awa' wi' ye," was the reply.—The Watchman-Examiner.

Reason Enough

Husband—I sure miss that old cuspidor.

Wife—You missed it before, that's why it's gone.—Our Paper.

Lesson for September 12

A NATION NEEDS RELIGIOUS HOMES.

LESSON TEXT — Deuteronomy 6:4, 5; 11:18-25.

GOLDEN TEXT—Train up a child in the way he should go: and when he is old, he will not depart from it. Prov. 22:6.

PRIMARY TOPIC—At Our House.

JUNIOR TOPIC—At Our House.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What Makes a Home Christian?

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Influence of Christian Homes in a Nation's Life.

Home! The very word stirs our hearts and quickens the most precious of memories. Toward its comforting threshold turns the one who has borne the heat and the labor of the day. Within its portals are those who gladly give themselves in sacrificial service that it may indeed be a haven of rest and comfort.

The inroads of modern life and of our so-called civilization are doing much to break down home life. All too frequently home has become the place to which one goes when there is nowhere else to go; a place to sleep, and sometimes to eat; an address for mail; a telephone number.

Shall we then abandon the effort really to maintain a true home—one that is in touch with God, and therefore ready to serve man? No; for now as never before we need the influence of a home life empowered by the worship of the true God and guided by his Word. None of us, who are engaged in the determined effort to maintain such a home in the midst of the driving intensity of present day living, speaks too easily on this subject. We know the difficulties; we have heavy-heartedly tasted failure; but we also know the sweetness of victory. By God's grace we press on.

In his dealings with Israel God presents to us an example of what a godly home may be, and what it will accomplish for the community and for the nation. Such a home—

I. Worships the True God (vv. 4, 5).

This is "the first and great commandment" of the law, according to our Lord Jesus. (Matt. 22:36,37.) It is an important part of the Scripture repeated twice daily by all orthodox Jews. In its context, in Deuteronomy 6, it is clearly associated with the home. It is there that he who is the "one Lord" is to be loved, which means far more than that he is vaguely recognized or distantly respected.

II. Honors God's Word (vv. 18, 19).

Loving God and his Word is not a matter for theological speculation or for sanctimonious discussion in some dark cloister. Thank God the Christian faith is at its best in the ordinary affairs of life. It finds its proper place in the tender relationship of parent and child. Its teachings are pure, delightful, simple, and entirely appropriate to any occasion, whether one sits or rises, walks, or lies down. God's words are the words to be laid up in the heart and in the soul, to be taught to our children, to be the constant and normal subject of conversation.

III. Testifies to the Community (vv. 20, 21).

We may not, as did the pious Jew, fasten a little container bearing God's word on our doorpost, but we may make the home itself and the life of its inhabitants an effective testimony for God before our neighbors. It is obvious that the home either speaks for or against God. A profession of faith in him, an outward reputation for adherence to religious principles which does not vitally touch our dealings with one another and with the community in which we live—these clearly testify not for God but against him.

IV. Serves the Nation (vv. 22-25).

God promised that if Israel diligently kept his commandments, loved him and walked in his ways, they would be a nation that would overcome and dispossess their enemies, and prosper in every good purpose.

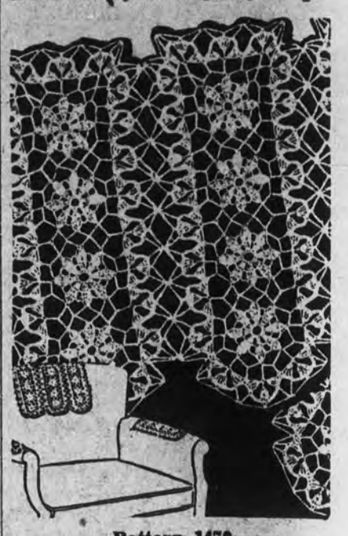
Statesmen clearly see that the home is the unit of society. It was established upon the earth before the nation, in fact, before the church. No nation can ever really prosper without homes of the highest type.

But a house without God is not really a home, even though it stand in the midst of a garden. Neither the school teacher, nor the pastor of a church can take the place of a God-fearing father, and of a mother who not only knows God but who can tenderly lead the steps of trusting childhood in the paths of righteousness. Our lesson title is right: "A Nation Needs Religious Homes," or, better, "America Needs Christian Homes."

Faith that Overcometh

There is no more enviable condition than that of him who has made the pressure of adverse things the means of a deep faith.

A Divine Mission



Know that life is a divine mission, for which you have received and shall receive divine power.

A Mother's Love

No language can express the power and beauty and heroism and majesty of a mother's love.

QUICK! STOP CHILLS AND FEVER!

Take This Good Old Medicine for Malaria!

When you've got chills and fever, you want real and ready relief. You don't want to go through the usual old misery.

Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic is what you want to take for Malaria. This is no new-fangled or untried preparation, but a medicine of proven merit.

Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic contains tasteless quinidine and iron. It quickly relieves the chills and fever and also tends to build you up. That's the double effect you want.

The very next time you have an attack of chills and fever, get Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic and start taking it at once. All drug stores sell Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic, 50c and $1. The latter size is the more economical.

Nature

Nature has perfections in order to show that she is the image of God; and defects, to show that she is only His image.

YOU CAN THROW CARDS IN HIS FACE ONCE TOO OFTEN

WHEN you have those awful cramps; when your nerves are all on edge—don't take it out on the man you love.

Your husband can't possibly know how you feel for the simple reason that he is a man.

A three-quarter wife may be no wife at all if she nags her husband seven days out of every month.

For three generations one woman has told another how to go "smiling through" with Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It helps Nature tone up the system, thus lessening the discomforts from the functional disorders which women must endure in the three ordeals of life: 1. Turning from girlhood to womanhood. 2. Preparing for motherhood. 3. Approaching "middle age."

Don't be a three-quarter wife, take LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND and Go "Smiling Through."

I'm lonesome right this minute.
I've got the blues real bad
It takes a strong, deep nature

WHO'S NEWS THIS WEEK...
By Lemuel F. Parton

NEW YORK.—The McIntyre and Heath partnership of 63 years is at an end with the death of James McIntyre, seventy-nine, at his home at Southampton, N. Y. As McIntyre died, Thomas K. Heath, eighty-four years old, lay suffering from paralysis unaware of his partner's demise. "Under the Gas Light," "Ingomar the Barbarian" and "The Black Crook" were played straight and never burlesqued in the flourishing days of McIntyre and Heath's "Georgia Minstrels," as were Chester A. Arthur's sideburns and Benjamin Harrison's fuzzy plug hat. Boys in short pants who tagged the parade, somewhere out on the kerosene circuit, have grown old and died since the 40 burnt-cork troubadours, stepping high in linen dusters, stirred new life in remote towns.

Burnt-Cork Troubadours Stepped High

Their 63 years was not a record. Fox and Ward of Philadelphia were together, I believe, something over 70 years.

McIntyre and Heath, however, had a record in their 12,500 performances. They never missed a show, and gave 17 performances daily at the Omaha State fair in 1876. Appearing for the last time in New York in 1929, they said stage humor hadn't changed much. All they did in refurbishing their old jokes, said McIntyre, was to put in words like "airplane" and "prohibition" and "radio."

To such oldsters, much that seems glaringly modern was really old stuff. The first authentic syncopation on the American stage was "The Rabbit Song," of jerky measure, with an accompanying hitch-kick, sung and danced by McIntyre in 1879. He said he got it from a former slave.

'Rabbit Song' Learned From Former Slave

They appeared in dance halls, music halls, concert halls, variety theaters, vaudeville, burlesque, musical comedy, light opera, revues, extravaganzas, pantomime, comedies, drama and motion pictures.

They teamed up in San Antonio, Texas, May 12, 1874. They were in separate blackface song and dance acts on a vaudeville bill. Heath's partner became ill and they merged their acts. Their first show was stranded in Louisville. They paid no salaries, but gave Riley, the bandmaster, the bass drum. McIntyre got a job in a livery stable. They pulled the partnership together again and out of it came the Georgia minstrels. "Hennery and Alexander" of "The Ham Tree" will be remembered until all who saw them have gone.

THIS administration helped many Harvard men to "rise and shine." Unhappily, two others come to grief at about the same time. Francis O. French, father-in-law of John Jacob Astor, who confesses bankruptcy, was Harvard classmate and buddy of Ernst Hanfstaengl, former piano player to Adolf Hitler. Herr Hanfstaengl ducked his nazi captors in Spain, as they were planning to drop him out of an airplane, and is now studying Germany in absentia.

Relates How Harvard Pals Came to Grief

The brief stock market slump of 1921 wrecked Mr. French, son of Amos Tuck French. When, trying for a comeback in 1923, he drove a taxicab, the papers spoofed him instead of giving him credit for his courage. All in all, he got a pretty rough deal.

The other taxi-drivers liked him. One of them showed me a copy of the "Taxi News," to which Mr. French had contributed an essay on democracy which wasn't half bad. But he made only $17 in about a month of driving.

Thereafter he sold overcoats on commission and now, at forty-eight, eases down into bankruptcy, owing a Chinese laundryman $1.48, this being one of several small liabilities.

"Little Stories for Bedtime" by Thornton W. Burgess

SAMMY JAY TELLS PETER RABBIT HE IS SORRY

When you've done a thing that's wrong
Just go and say you're sorry.
Don't let an untruth drag along—
Just go and say you're sorry.
There's nothing else will clear the way,
And brighter make the passing day
When you have done or said or thought
A thing more unkind than you ought
Than just to say you're sorry.

YOU remember how Peter Rabbit could find no one to believe him when he told about the great, strange tracks which he had found in the snow deep in the Green Forest at the very end of winter. Of course you do. And you remember how Sammy Jay had made fun of

"They'll Just Think That We All Three Are Crazy."

Peter and teased him until Peter would hardly put his head outside of the dear Old Briar Patch. Now Sammy was learning just how Peter had felt. To be sure, it was nothing new to Sammy to have people doubt what he said. Usually he wouldn't have minded in the least. But now he had such wonderful news—news of a big, black stranger who had come to live in the Green Forest—and it was dreadful to have everybody smile and whisper to one another, "He's crazy."

It was just as bad when Blacky the Crow saw the stranger and tried to tell about him, for no one believed Blacky, and every one thought him crazy, too. But all of a sudden Peter Rabbit remembered those great tracks he had tried so hard to forget, and right away he was as excited as Sammy Jay and Blacky the Crow. When Sammy told about the great claws Peter fairly shouted.

"It's the stranger who made those tracks, just as sure as I'm alive!" he cried. "Now, perhaps you still think I had bad dreams, Sammy Jay, when I told you about those strange tracks!"

Sammy looked at Peter and hung his head for just a minute. "I'm sorry, Peter," said he, "for all the mean things I said and for not believing your story. I truly am. I know just how you felt when you had great news and no one would believe it. No one but my cousin, Blacky the Crow, believes me now unless it is you. Do you, Peter?"

"Of course, I do!" replied Peter promptly. "Didn't I see the tracks? Do you believe that now, Sammy Jay?"

Sammy nodded. "Yes," he replied. "I believe it. But nobody else will excepting Blacky. They just think we all three are crazy."

"But who is the stranger?" persisted Peter.

"Don't know," replied Sammy. "Never have seen any one like him. Why don't you go ask him where he comes from and who he is, Peter?"

"Oh!" cried Peter. "I don't dare to. Why don't you do it yourself, Sammy? You can fly and I can't. You haven't anything to be afraid of. If I could fly I'd go."

FIRST AID TO THE AILING HOUSE
By Roger B. Whitman

ALUMINUM PAINT

ALUMINUM paint is coming into very general use as a priming coat on bare wood, to be finished with any kind of oil paint or of enamel. The liquid part of aluminum paint is varnish, which for satisfaction, should be of high quality; for outside work, spar varnish should be used. The aluminum is in the form of flakes of a fineness that is suited to the work. Aluminum paint should be mixed as it is used, and to make this possible, manufacturers supply it in a double can, the lower and larger part of the can containing the varnish, and the upper and smaller can, the dry aluminum powder. The proportion is about two pounds of the powder to the gallon of varnish.

When aluminum paint is applied, the metal flakes float to the top of the film of varnish. After hardening, the varnish is thus covered with a thin sheet of metal, and it is this that gives aluminum paint its usefulness as an undercoat. The life of paint depends on the firmness with which the undercoat is attached to the surface to which it is applied. The loosening of paint is due to the breaking of this bond. The ultra violet rays of the sun are destructive to the oils in paint and are one of the causes of paint failure. With the first coat of varnish protected by its surface of aluminum, the bond is given a much longer life than when it is exposed to the destructive violet rays.

Aluminum being opaque, this paint is excellent for a first coat when a surface that is dark in color is to be repainted a lighter color, or white. The aluminum will hide the dark tone, and one coat of paint on top of it may be sufficient to give the desired results. With ordinary paint, at least three coats will usually be needed to hide the dark color underneath.

There is a great difference in aluminum paints, and it is always well worth while to get a high grade. In manufacture, aluminum flakes acquire a fine coating of grease, which if not removed will prevent their close bonding with the varnish. The color will then be gray. In high grades of aluminum flakes or powder, the grease has been removed, and the final color then remains brilliant. I had an experience that showed the difference. A ceiling was finished with aluminum paint, with the idea that it would reflect the light; but to my regret, the tone, instead of having the brilliancy that I expected, was gray. Later, when the ceiling was repa'red, I finished the new part with a top quality aluminum paint. This finish was brilliant, and has remained so. In aluminum paint as in almost everything else, high quality is well worth an additional price.

MANNERS OF THE MOMENT
By JEAN
© By The Associated Newspapers

WE FEEL that there are too many baffled and forlorn looking husbands waiting at department store entrances for wives who never appear.

You've seen them, those faithful husbands who have been told to "Meet me at 5:30 at the entrance to Taylor and Crocketts." Faithfully they wait, until the doors have been locked and the "Store Closed" sign hung out. And even then, they continue to wait, peering hopefully through the glass pane of the door, expecting, no doubt, to see a wife emerge from a bolt of cretonne in the foyer.

Now, of course, if they were at their ordinary best, they'd realize that no woman is going to hang around a department store after the salesgirls have left. They'd see that there was no sense to waiting, and go off and have a sandwich. But somehow men never seem to be their brightest in department store foyers.

So we think that probably the only thing for them to do is to give up the practice entirely. A husband should always meet his wife in a place where the atmosphere tends to sharpen his mental processes. Then maybe he'll be able to figure out by himself what to do if his wife doesn't show up.

Costumes in Jugoslavia

Colorful and unusual costumes are the rule in the towns and villages of Jugoslavia. On market days especially, the streets are crowded with shoppers wearing the picturesque native clothes that in some parts of Europe are laid aside for modern dress. The Balkan men, both young and old, wear pill-box hats with black tassels, multi-colored leather waistcoats, embroidered white or black sheepskin coats, baggy breeches and large, heelless, moccasin-like "opanke." The women wear embroidered blouses and full skirts of every color. Many of them spin wool from a small distaff attached to a belt at the waist, as they walk along.

NEGLECTED BIRDS NOT GOOD LAYERS

Low Summer Production May Continue Into Fall.

By Roy S. Dearstyne, Head of Poultry Department, North Carolina State College.—WNU Service.

Low egg production in hot weather often causes poultrymen to neglect their flocks, with the result that production continues low in the fall when it should be increasing.

Good management in hot weather not only keeps birds in better condition for heavy production later, but it also keeps up production through the summer.

Shade to protect birds from the sun during the hottest part of the day is essential to thrifty birds. A portable range shelter provides shade where birds can feed and rest.

Since range crops usually become dry and unpalatable in summer, the birds need an ample ration in their feed hoppers. Plenty of fresh water should be available at all times.

Plenty of grain should be fed during the developing season. A good mash should be fed also as it contains vital food elements that are not provided in a grain diet alone.

Where crippled and subnormal birds are found in the flock, they should be culled out at once. Such birds never pay a profit and their low vitality often makes them the starting point for an outbreak of contagious disease.

Lice and mite infestations occur frequently in summer and result in heavy losses unless checked at once.

Fowl pox can be prevented by vaccinating the birds at an early age. The disease usually breaks out in the fall when the birds are in full lay and making a profit for their owner. Leghorns are especially susceptible to pox.

Creep-Fed Calves Thrive on Corn, Cottonseed Cake

Calves creep-fed made their best and most economical gains on a ration of shelled corn and cottonseed cake in a test by the United States Department of Agriculture in cooperation with the Missouri state experiment station at Sin-a-Bar Farms, Grain Valley, Mo.

At the end of the 140-day test calves fed the shelled corn and cottonseed cake averaged 8 pounds more than another group fed ground shelled corn and cottonseed cake, 13 pounds more than calves fed ground corn, cottonseed cake, and alfalfa-molasses mixture, and 22 pounds more than a group receiving shelled corn, cottonseed cake, and alfalfa-molasses mixture.

The calves receiving ground corn, cottonseed cake, and the alfalfa-molasses mixture, ate 25 per cent more feed and acquired a better finish at the end of the feeding period than those fed shelled corn and cottonseed cake. The difference in market price of the two groups, however, did not justify either the cost of grinding the corn or the additional cost of feed.

Calves from each group, when fed in dry lots for 196 days after weaning, on the same rations they had received before weaning, showed no significant difference in total gains. Those fed shelled corn and cottonseed cake were the heaviest at the end of the experiment although not so well finished as the ones fed ground corn.

High-grade Shorthorn calves were used in the feeding tests and the market value was estimated at the end of the feeding experiment by commission merchants on the Kansas City stockyards.

Three Maids A-Sewing Go

LITTLE lady, it's time to say adieu, so long, good-by to that flimsy but faithful friend—your summer wardrobe. But don't fret, Milady, Sew-Your-Own is right on the job with sparkling new fashions for you; fashions that will make you forget the past and be remembered in the future. So let's not tarry: let's choose the style that's got the most sock for our particular figure and join this group that's going a-sewing!

Stadium Model.

Picture yourself in the trim-waisted little model at the left, if you would have an optimistic viewpoint and a head start on style this season. There's nothing younger than this topper with its dainty collar and cuffs, its snappy row of buttons and fetching peplum. The way it takes to the weightier fall fabrics is news, and equally intriguing is this fact: it's easy to sew!

Young 'n 'Pretty.

Long slender lines of the princess variety make this the lucky number for your first autumn days. Of course you see it's a style to cut in at least two fabrics because it boasts utility plus beauty. If you're going to school you'll want it in acetate jersey or light-weight wool. Neat contrast is here, too, if you wish, in the collar, pocket flaps and buttons. (This is a simple eight-piece pattern.)

A Lift for You.

There's much ado about bodices this fall and unless you have a frock that carries a stylish one you won't feel right. Sew-Your-Own caters to this vogue in its new creation at the right. It is pencil slim and carefully styled to give you that chic young silhouette that distinguishes the lady of fashion. Make this handsome model of silk crepe, sheer wool or jersey and be fit for business or pleasure in town or country.

The Patterns.

Pattern 1376 is designed for sizes 12 to 20 (30 to 40 bust). Size 14 requires 4⅛ yards of 35-inch material.

Pattern 1347 is designed for sizes 14 to 20 (32 to 42 bust). Size 16 requires 4¾ yards of 35 or 39-inch material. With long sleeves 5⅛ yards plus ⅜ yard contrasting.

Pattern 1258 is designed for sizes 12 to 20 (30 to 38 bust). Size 14 requires 4 yards of 39-inch material, with long sleeves, plus 4½ yards of braid to finish as pictured.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., Room 1020, 211 W. Wacker Dr., Chicago, Ill. Price of patterns, 15 cents (in coins) each.

What's RIGHT With Alabama?

INCREDIBLE INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

Twenty-five years ago Alabama was the land of cotton and but little else. But the past quarter-century has been witness to an incredible industrial expansion rarely equalled in the history of any state, in a like period.

This is not a mere "booster" claim. It is disclosed by the latest report of the Census of Manufactures, published by the U. S. Bureau of the Census, which shows that from 1909 to 1935--

- Value of Alabama's manufactured products increased 2½ times
- Purchases by Alabama plants have increased 2½ times
- Payrolls have increased 2½ times.

And what a variety of products manufactured in Alabama today compared to a mere quarter of a century ago—tires and trailers, steel and shirts, golf bags and baby food, trinkets and tools—a host of others growing every year more numerous!

Many things in Alabama have been RIGHT to bring all this about. Vast stores of natural resources to furnish raw materials. Efficient labor for incoming factories. Growing nearby markets to consume finished goods. Rail, water and highway transportation to bring them to the market. Power available at low cost to every section of Alabama.

We like to feel that our efforts to develop a statewide power system, and to interest industry in Alabama, have been helpful—that these, too, have been among the many RIGHT things in Alabama which have promoted progress.

Sheet erosion, not revealed by the tell-tale gullies, is amazingly destructive.

Much Fat in Nuts

Common nuts, such as almonds, brazil nuts, cashew nuts, filberts, hickory nuts, peanuts, pecans, and walnuts contain roughly from 45 to 70 per cent fat, says the bureau of home economics. Their protein ranges from 10 to 25 per cent, and their carbohydrates from 7 to 25 per cent. The proportion of mineral matter is small but unblanched almonds, hazelnuts, walnuts, pecans, and hickory nuts are good sources of iron. In general, nuts are rich sources of phosphorus and poor to fair sources of calcium. Most nuts are good sources of vitamin B, but poor sources of vitamin A.

Copenhagen Ware

Several types of pottery, both underglaze and overglaze, are called Copenhagen ware. They have been produced in Copenhagen since 1760, when a Frenchman, Louis Fourier, made soft-paste chinaware in the French style. Hard porcelain was introduced in 1772. The Royal Porcelain works and other factories have produced especially fine tableware and fluted porcelain of the blue Danish pattern. The modern white underglaze porcelain was first made by Arnold Krog in the late Nineteenth century and found admirably adapted to animal and figure sculptures, including some of Hans Christian Andersen's fairy tale characters.

Flammable, Inflammable

Flammable is a nonce word used in 1813 and again 1867. Inflammable, which has been in the language since 1605, was the result of the bringing together of the two words, in and flame, originally written as separate words, which frequent usage finally combined. The definition of flammable is expressed by inflammable, which has established itself as the accepted word in the language. The double m is due to the Latin form of the root-word flamma, flame.—Literary Digest.

DO YOU KNOW THAT?

Alabama has thirteen establishment prorucing structural and ..ornamental metal works. The value o these products for the year 1935 was placed at $3,558,000.

That Alabama has a woman United States Senator, a Woman Probate Judge, a woman member of the House of Representatives, five women Circuit Clerks, fourteen women Registers in Equity, six women County Treasurers, three women Tax Collectors and one woman Tax Assessor. More women than men are employed at the State Capitol.

That: Six elections are scheduled to face the voters of Alabama next year. Primaries will be held on January 4, and February 8, and a special election on April 26, to select a United States Senator to fill the unexpired term of Senator Black, who resigned to become a member of the Supreme Court. On May3, and June 14, the regular Democratic Primaries will be held to nominate a candidate for Governor and various other States and County officers as well as United States Senator and members of Congress. The general election for the filling of these offices will be held on Thursday, November 8th.

That: The State Tax Commission is responsible for the collection of practically all State revenues. In 1934 the cash receipts amounted to $22,539,945. In the collection of this money the State Commission spent $235,071, including all salaries and expenses. This was a little more than one per cent. In 1936, the net receipts amounted to $28,252,929. In the Collection of this Comission spent $251,197, or less than nine-tenths of one per cent. The figures for the present year are not yet available.

THE COLUMBIANA BAPTIST CHURCH

J. W. Jones, Pastor

A cordial invitiation is extended to all to attend services at the Baptist Church Sunday. Sunday School will be held at 9:45 A. M. with primition exercises and at the close there will be installation of teachers and officers of the church fir another year. The Home—Coming service last Sunday was a decided success. Quite a large congregation gathered for the services both morning and evening.

SLOW DOWN MR. DRIVER

The time has come when automobiles should slow down their speed especially around Davis' corner at the intersection on Main Street of the four roadways. Somebody's little girl or boy who goes toddling off for their first adventure in A B C land may be timidly attempting to find his or her way across the crowded street. This little kiddies has been cartfully shielded and cared for at home, and lovely protected by an ever alert Mother—Each day this Mother will await the coming home of her tiny tot A—Anxious hearts will likely beat rather unevenly until a little checkered blue dress or a stiffly starched white sui comes into view. Mother hopes autoists will use extra precaution now, remembering always that "DEATH rides with them". Mr. Automobile Driver—HEED THE KIDDIES as they carelessly and happily wend their way, lest School-Time prove DEATH-TIME, to one of these fragile beginnings of a mighty end! Let no tragedy be recorded in the history of Columbiana! And, while iwe are on this subject, WHY NOT A TRAFFIC LIGHT ON MAIN? Mr. Mayor? This Precaution might solve a problem rather horrible to contemplate—It might be a LIGHT or a LIFE at stake!

ATTENTION, MAYOR AND COUNCIL

...Gentlemen: Please attempt to drive thru any street in Columbiana The highways are dotted with GULLIES which cut tires, break springs and make even a drive thru the incorporated limits of the town some some hazardous task. Ask ANYBODY what they think about the condition of these streets. There must be some reason for this apparent delinquency in appropriating the gas tax for the upkeep of these roads, With School busses bearing their precious cargo of kiddies to and from school, the risk is doubly great Can't something be done about it?

Best Extradition Laws

At the beginning of the formation of the country the question of criminals who fled from one state to another, as well as those who fled to Canada, was a most difficult one, but our early jurists and law givers were equal to it. In the year 1870 the American extradition laws were called better than those of any other country in the world.

NOTICE

There will be an All Aay Singing at the Jemison High School Auditorium on Sunday September 25 1937 An attractive musical program has been arranged. You are cordially invited to attend.

CASTLES IN SPAIN

I fear that never again . . . again
Will lovers build castles in Spain . . in Spain,
For hate and fury are death to dreams
When the bullet whine and the shrapnel screams,
So lovely who wistfully wish in the night
Must seek for another dream-castle site.

Oh lovers who dream, may I give advice. . . .
Build a little grass-house in Paradise,
With the chain-of-love about your door
And carpets of sun-gold on your floor
And a blue moon to gild your eyes.
You may drink gay toasts from cups-of-gold.
And listen to love songs, ages old,
While the Southern Cross gleams bright above
In a land that the gods designed for love.

If you learn the charm of this graciou land
With its turquoise sea and its golden sand
I fear that never again, again
Will you ever build castles in Spain . . . in Spain.

GARDENIA LEI

It's strange how clearly I recall that night,
The moon's pale misty gold, the palm trees' song
The murmuer of the sea along the shore.
Why should I keep such memoriees so long?
While you, who were so much a part of it.
Are vague as pictures drawn with tinted smoke,
You wore a fragnet lei about your throat,
I see each flower drawn with etcher's stroke.

The outlines of your face are softly blurred
By slow persistent Time's erosive drips.
But this I can't forget. .the night. . the kiss.
Gardenia petals brushed between our lips.

—Don Blanding.

REMINISCENCE

School days, happy days, tiny ladies and men.
Wonderment upon a face, who wil lose or will win?
Recess, report cards, proud heads nobly held.
Sympathy and sorrow for someone who failed.

School days, happy days, the teacher you love best.
Concentration on a brow preparing for a test.
Apples for the teacher, roses for her too.
Pencils, writing papers, a bottle of sticking glue.

School days, happy days, vacation offing.
Tiny boys, sparkling eyes, little caps a doffing.
Little tots off to school bent on knowledge seeking.
Meeting teachers in the hall, voices shyly speaking.

School days, sweethearts, little hearts a-thumping.
Blackboards, shiny black, little hands erasing.
Footprints upon the floor, where little feet are pacing.

School days, children's voices rising in crescendo,
Swelling voices rend the air and float out through the windows.
Memories! Memories snatches here and there
When the smell of rhalk duht faintly scents the air.

School days, new school books, and far-away place.
Foreign lands, geography, interested faces.
Asia Minor. Belgium, foggy England, sunny France.
Promotion, vacation sees one more year's advance.

School days are happy days, far away they seem.
School days of long ago, ink spots on the floor.
Oh, to turn back the years and go to School once more!

—Lola Smith Barnett.

What's RIGHT with ALABAMA

a MONUMENT to an ENEMY

"Not more fatal are these pursuits (certain dangerous trades) to life than is the stupid folly of exclusive cotton culture to prosperity and independence."

—Editor A. H. Keller, at about 1890, as quoted in Moore's "History of Alabama."

ALTHOUGH within the memory of Alabamians it had been known that Alabama enjoyed a "growing season" ranging from almost 200 days in the northern section to 300 days in the coastal areas; that rainfall was abundant and well distributed during the growing season, cotton remained king until 1900, when scientific agriculture and the idea of widespread diversification of crops began to take root in Alabama. In November, 1906, Dr. Knapp of the United States Bureau of Plant Industry launched the farm demonstration and extension work in Alabama.

Since then, progress toward correcting the condition described by Keller in 1890 has been steady. Today we find Alabama importing less and less of farm products from other states to feed her citizens. We find great improvement in the breeds of hogs and cattle in many counties.* Crops are becoming increasingly diversified, and fruits, nuts, vegetables, and forage crops are being grown in commercial quantities. Dairying has made steady progress, and Alabama is gradually approaching the day when it can be said that she is agriculturally self-sufficient and well-balanced.

POWER COMPANY "PROGRESSIVE AND ENTERPRISING"

An Editorial

The Alabama Power Company has just observed its silver anniversary as an Alabama industry. This is a notable event in the economic history of the State.

The ADVERTISER thinks that the Alabama Power Company has had a large and honorable part in delivering Alabamians from an impossible way of life. Politicians, with an eye to popular favor, have made a convenience of the company, to be sure, and intimated darkly that the Alabama Power Company has enslaved more people than it has freed. But The ADVERTISER doubts it for the reason that in its casual quest through the State it has yet to find a citizen who has been enslaved or unfairly abused by this "oc-to-puss".

The Alabama Power Company has been progressive and enterprising in making the most of its natural opportunities. It has developed our wasted streams and used its resources to induce new industries to establish themselves here and so to create new and better payrolls.

The ADVERTISER knows that the officials of the Alabama Power Company, from Thomas W. Martin down, have been ever alert to the higher interests of the people in the matter of industrial and cultural development. The ADVERTISER knows of many generous and thoughtful performances that must be credited to the power company. It is unaware of anything cheap and shoddy that the company has done. The power company has not been able or willing to do all that dreamers and demagogues demanded of it, but it has been more than willing to do all that sane and unselfish persons have asked of it. It has endeavored to build up the State along fundamentally sound lines. It has cooperated with enlightened agencies. The ADVERTISER thinks that upon the whole the Alabama Power Company has done a fine job. It has given an admirable performance.

—The Montgomery Advertiser

Much of the credit for this progress is due the farm extension workers and home demonstration agents who have carried on their work courageously when, at times, it must have seemed that nature was conspiring against them.

But credit must be given, too, to other citizens of the State for their fortitude in the face of adversity. Their attitude is best typified by what the people of Coffee County did, when in 1915, the Mexican cotton boll weevil began his raids and depredation. They took counsel among themselves and with their agricultural agents. By 1917, cattle, hogs, peanuts, hay, corn, potatoes, sugar cane and other crops were planted. An income of more than 5 million dollars was realized from peanuts alone, and hogs and cattle were shipped in carload lots.

The dictatorship of cotton was broken!

And then, in 1919, inspired by R. O. Fleming, a merchant and member of the city council, the citizens of Enterprise erected their famous "Monument to the Boll Weevil"—the only monument to a bug in the world. Some have said that it is really a monument to the spirit of a people. We like to consider it such—one of the "right" things about Alabama.

Truly, Alabama has come a long way agriculturally since that day in 1890 when Editor Keller sounded his grave warning. Yes, she has yet a pace to go before the long-desired balance between agriculture and industry will come about, and before crop diversification will be in ideal proportion.

But she is making progress—and that is right!

ALABAMA POWER COMPANY

Social and Personal Mention

MILDRED WHITE WALLACE, Social Editor

MORNING

"The wind and rain have worked all night;
They polished up the sky;
They swished it in some sudsy clouds,
Then hung it up to dry.

The rain scrubbed every blade of grass—
She got down on her knees—
And then she stood on tiptoe
To wash and comb the trees.

The wind ran puffing, blowing
To clean the air until
The valley smelled all fresh and sweet
From hill to shining hill.

So, here's the morning, darling!
It's bathed and warm and bright—
It seems quite worth the bother
Of all that fuss last night.

ZERA KING WALTON

"A prophet is not without honor save in his own county," cannot be said of Zera King Walton as evidenced by the following resolutions which were passed at the initial meeting of the teachers of Shelby County on September 11, 1937, in the High School Auditorium in Columbiana.

It must be gratifying to live a life of service that warrants the tribute paid Mrs. Walton, by her colleagues and most gratifying to live to realize what those with whom you work think about your honest endeavors Happily do we reprint the lovely article, and join with teachers and public in rendering "honor to whom honor is due"

RESOLUTIONS

"Be it resolved that we, the teachers of Shelby County in assembly September 11, 1937, extend to Mrs. Zera King Walton our, former Supervisor, appreciation of her leadership during the past eight years; for her untiring work and inspiring and uplifting guidance in every phase of our work .

Mrs. Walton has shown a very personal interest in every teacher, and we will continue to claim her as our close friend and adviser.

We have always been proud of Mrs. Walton's progress, not only in our County work, but in our state; and it is through her work that Shelby County has come to be looked upon as one in the forefront and a most disirable county in which to teach.

We have been fortunate through her leadership and high standing with our State Department of Education and Alabama College to have been among the few counties to be chosen as a laboratory for a new curriculum program. We were also the first County to organize the new curriculum work.

Our words are inadequate to express our love and appreciation to Mrs. Walton for her loyalty, faithfulness, leadership and guidance, but we would have her know that we place her in Shelby County's Who's Who of great characters;

Yours sincerely,
Eleanor Atchison
Secretary Shelby County Teacher's Association.

Mrs. Charles Christian and adorable son, Charles Jr., of Montgomery are spending several weeks in Columbiana ,the guests of Mr. and Mrs. James R. White.

Friends of Mr. and James R. White will be glad to learn that both are rapidly convalescing at their home in Columbiana, after several weeks illness.

An old friend whom it is always a delight to see has been a charming guest in Columbiana for the past two weeks, Mrs. John Cuneff of West Virginia. Mrs. Cuneff was the guest of her sister, Mrs. S. A. Lokey, Mrs. Bill Lee and Mrs. Edna Roberts, She returned home Sunday.

Mrs. Ruth Griffiths also of Virginia, former resident, and as pretty as ever, was the the lovely guest of her mother, Mrs L. E. Christian last week.

REBECCA THOMPSON HOLCOMB

The much discussed question, "Can a Woman do Her Duty to Her Home and Have a Career Too?" is quite creditably answered in the affirmative by talented, versatile and ambitious Rebecca Thompson Holcombe, journalist, who has chosen a vocation.

Mrs. Holcombe, for the past three years has been a featured writer with the Reporter. Her columns "Here and There in Columbiana," attracted wide and favorable comment from an interested coterie of readers. On Tuesday morning, while we chatted with the little modishly attired lady, we learned that despite the inviting offer from the East Carolina Progress, which chance will enable her to go further in the newspaper profession, both the journalistic and mechanical phases, for Mrs. Holcombe tells us that she intends to learn linotyping and the mechanism of this ponderous "iron hand" which mechanically slings the nouns, verbs and adverbs into symetrical galleys, thus equipping her for the special work in the ever intriguing profession. There is the poignant tug at her maternal heart strings as she leaves "Buddy" and "Becky Wees," her two adorable "kiddies," thereby taking some of the joy out of another step up Fame's ladder—for after all, to any mother, there is no place like that quiet and restful haven we call HOME. However, the accomplishment of her successful ambition necessitates this sacrifice for a few months—and personally, we glory in her courageous undertaking and join legions of friends throughout Shelby County in bidding her Good Luck and best wishes for everything gloriously bright in the culmination of all her happy dreams along the newspaper trail.

While in Kinston, Mrs. Holcombe will be a member of the household of Mr. and Mrs. Joe Holadaye, who will also be her instructors in the work. North Carolina will be the richer for her coming, and the East Carolina Progress will take on an additional interest for their subscribers. Keep a goin' Becky, our sincere congratulations fly across the miles with you, as we say GOOD BYE for a few weeks and bid you Happy Landing!

SPIVEY - BOZEMAN

Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Spivey, of Columbiana, announce the engagement of their daughter, Frances, to Dow S. Bozeman, of Luverne, Alabama, the wedding to be an event of the early fall.

Miss Spivey is a favorite of the younger set in Columbiana, and is at present employed at the Queen Theatre.

Prince Wellington and his Ten Counts of Rhythm will play the initial dance of the season for the swanky Pilot Club in Clanton Thursday night.

Lovely Lera Holcombe of Calera, and Mrs. J. J. Haynes of Montgomery were heartily welcomed guests in Columbiana on Wednesday. During their short stay in their former "home town" they were luncheon guests of Dr. and Mrs. D. S. Lightcap.

The many friends of Norman Lefkovits will be delighted to learn that he is rapidly convalescing after a serious spell of illness in Montgomery.

Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Russell and son, Billie, of Birmingham, were cordially greeted guests in the Democrat office on Saturday. Mr. Russell stated although he lived in Birmingham, he wanted to keep informed regarding events in Shelby County, and chose the Democrat for this medium. Of course we acknowledge gratefully the subscription, and happily include in the ever widening circle of readers, Mr. and Mrs. Russell and the most interesting little two year old tyke we know anything about-Billie, by name, who kept the office in an uproar the entire time he was in here as center of attractoin. We hope he will soon return, not often do we see one so young, so full of friendliness—That merry laugh of his, and his ready baby chatter will take him far toward his goal in this little old orange ball of a world.

THE POWER OF THE PRESS

When five young ladies in the back woods of Canada sniffle, the whole world takes notice, says the Detroit Free Press-Why? Because these young ladies are the World's eighth wonder, and much more important than the other seven. So, Whatever these babettes do is of world wide concern.

Yet, if they had been born a couple of centuries ago they would have been a local wonder at most. Without the newspaper, radio, telephone telegraph and wire photography, which have carried their tinest little whimper their gurgles and their th they could have sniffled their thmthey could have sniffled their little noses off for all anybody cared outside their immediate family.

The press has kept the lines wide open from their nursery to the hearts of millions who have never even seen the famous sisters, Doubt NOT the "POWER OF THE PRESS."

VILLAGE CHATTER FROM SILURIA

HEY FOLKS! How's tricks? September has brought ns some cool Weather nice if you like it! If you want to meet some friends and not where to find him, just meader down to the post office in the afternoon, after the trains run. Everybody is there! . . . Earl Dukes is a regular fellow we think. That left home last Saturday night was sincerely appreciated, Earl! Hazel is in Montevallo struggling along the Senior Class way. We'd like to meet those two charming young ladies who were guests of Ruby Brown this week end. They were chic in appearance while waiting for the train on Sunday afternoon. . . . It is about time for the crickets to start chirping in the chimney corner. . . . Elizabeth Heins states she wishes it were the last week of school instead of the first. It is long after we have past them that we realize they were golden days. . . . Margie Hughey has about decided to wear her skates where she most needs them-a la Wahoo. . . . Sometimes the Northbound train brings a certain someby very nice that the Southbound train takes away. . . . Mr. and Mrs G C walton of Miranda City Texas, and Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Walton of Wewoka, Okla., are the guests of Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Walton this week . . . We miss the Alabama Power boys at the "Y". . . . Mary and Pete jumped the broom Saturday night, yes-sir-ree-well, here's wishing you children all the luck and happiness life can bring. . . . Mr. and Mrs. Tommy Fallon were guests of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Fallon last week. They returned to their home in Kentucky, Sunday. accompanied by Clara Fallon Brooks. . . . Did you see Lester Gray when he quit work on Friday afternoon? He had his trousers pinned up in some style, reminding us of the joke about the little boy and the safety pin—Remember? . . . If you should enter the "Y" and see a crowd of boys and girls shaking their fingers and making funny wobbly motionst—think nothing of it they are learning to TRUCK! . . . Mr J T Phillips has returned from New York where he has been for the past few weeks.

Well, folks there wasn't much news this week, we must be going—

Plants Always Thirsty

Plants are always thirsty because they lose so much moisture through evaporation. Yet there are some that can go without water for incredibly long periods. For example, one species of Mexican squash can store enough water in its base at one time to keep it alive for 15 years.—Collier's Weekly.

You Can Bank on the WEBER Wagon for Years of Hard Work

IF YOU need a strong, light-draft wagon for nard use over all kinds of going, you can't get any wagon better than the Weber. And it is priced right, too.

Thoroughly seasoned "A" grade lumber is used in the wheels, axles, reach, and tongue. The finest oak and hickory are used in the wheels, and the steel tires and hub bands are put on to stay by a hydraulic press.

Weber farm gears and boxes have been giving the most satisfactory service for nearly a hundred years. Don't buy any wagon until you have examined the Weber. Various capacities and sizes available to meet practically every hauling need.

SYMPATHY

Pup—Poor fellow, he must have fleas, too. He's all covered with bites.

The Wrong Trick

A bricklayer applied for a building job.

Foreman—Are you handy?

Bricklayer—Yes, sir! I can do anything with a trowel.

Foreman (picking up trowel and twirling it in his fingers)—Can you do that?

Bricklayer—Sure! (And starts to do the same).

Foreman—Ah! I'm afraid I can't start you. I have too many of your sort already.

BATTER UP!

"Will that pitcher never run down?"

"Not with his windup."

A Little Bit Humorous

NEEDED MORE LIGHT

The film star's chauffeur was driving him home from Shepperton. They were only a few hundred yards from the studios when the majestic figure of the law darted out nimbly in front of the car. Reclining in the deep back seat, the actor listened to the following dialogue between his chauffeur and the constable:

"Knock, knock."

"Eh?" said the puzzled driver.

"Knock, knock," persisted the constable.

"Who's there," asked the chauffeur, feeling that the law must be humored.

"Butcher."

"Butcher who?"

"Butcher lights on."—Montreal Herald.

IN THE PROFESH

"In my business it's a virtue to steal—I always have the base at heart."

"I don't believe it—you can't be so corrupt."

"Yep, I'm a baseball player."

Seemed Surer of Results

Dorothy had been praying for a baby sister. Her mother, while reading the paper, exclaimed: "I see Mrs. Smith has a little daughter."

"How do you know that, mammy?"

"It says so in the paper, dear. 'Born on June 7 to Mr. and Mrs. Smith, a daughter'."

Dorothy thought a moment and then said: "I know what I'm going to do. I'm going to stop praying and start advertising."—Stray Stories Magazine.

Turkey Trot

"When you asked her to dance did she accept quickly?"

"Did she? Why, she was on my feet in an instant."—Columbia Jester.

Excusable

"But this officer says that while you were in a drunken state you tried to climb a lamp-post."

"Yes, I did, your worship, but three crocodiles had been following me about all night, and they were getting on my nerves."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

Here, Here

Mistress—You know, I suspect that my husband has a love affair with his stenographer.

Maid—Oh, I don't believe it. You are only saying it to make me jealous.—U. of P. Punch Bowl.

One Similarity

Binks (referring to violinist)—He reminds me of Paderewski.

Jinks—But Paderewski isn't a violinist.

Binks—Neither is this chap.—Gay Stories Magazine.

HIS HOPE

"Declare yourself, comrade. The Soviet is disposing of all idlers who have no useful employment."

"I'm safe. I'm a barber."

An Investigator

"Your boy Josh doing anything?"

"Only intellectual labor," answered Farmer Corntossel. "He has decided to study the unemployment problem from personal experience."

First Consideration

Would-be Writer—What do you consider the most important qualification for a beginner in literature?

Old Hand—Small appetite.

Giving Up

"Doesn't this tax riddle sometimes make you feel like giving up?"

"No," answered Senator Sorghum. "My feelings don't matter. What I want to see is a cordial willingness on the part of our citizens to give up."

A Slight Omission

"The lady whom I am going to marry is two heads taller than I am."

"Oh, but you must overlook that."

WHO'S NEWS THIS WEEK...

By Lemuel F. Parton

NEW YORK. — Possibly better than "horse and buggy" days would be "square-rigger" days as a phrase of poignant retrospect.

Sea Ancients Stow Engines in Sail Race

There was a touch of nostalgia in the amazingly expert press stories and beautiful pictures of the Newport getaway of the Conrad and the Seven Seas—the only seaworthy square-riggers left in America—on their recent race to Bermuda. Both boats have Diesel engines, for emergencies, but they stow all that, and it is perhaps a bit tactless to bring it up now. This is a machine age holiday.

With all its shortcomings, the power age does enable some people to make enough money to get away from it once in a while. Young G. Huntington Hartford, owner of the Conrad, is the inheritor of a $200,000,000 chain-store fortune. That's a good beginning for anyone who wants to voyage back into past epochs—whether his taste is for old houses, old prints, old ships, or even a horse and buggy. Simplicity comes high. Mr. Hartford spent $75,000 getting the Conrad in racing trim.

One doesn't think of a demon squash player as a sailing man, but Mr. Hartford was a squash racquets wizard in his undergraduate days at Harvard, in the class of 1933. He is the only son of Mrs. Henrietta G. Hartford, of Newport and Charleston, getting about a lot, having a wonderful time and probably not "wishing you were here."

He takes a hand in all sorts of sports, and probably stirs more envy with this square-rigger race than in anything he has done or will do. He starts many an old gaffer dreaming he is out on the yardarm in a gale, and that—according to the Prophet Joel—is as it should be, providing the young men keep up with their visions.

Mr. Hartford bought the Conrad from Capt. Alan Villiers, Australian book sailor who sailed her all over the world in his literary argosy. She had settled down in the valhalla of old ships at Brooklyn when Mr. Hartford brought her to life again. The ship was built more than 50 years ago by the Danish government, which later used her as a training ship. Her proper name is the Georg Stage. She's a proud, staunch old ship, with two full suits of sails, decks of teak and two brass cannon on the poop deck. She is 100 feet 8 inches on the waterline.

BARON KONSTANTIN VON NEURATH, German foreign minister, asserts the right and intention of Germany to organize Nazi units abroad. The declaration comes at the peak of a drive by the reich to solidify and indoctrinate its minorities in all European countries and to unite Germans everywhere behind the national socialist regime.

In this activity, Herr von Neurath seems to have displaced the frenetic Rosenberg, of whom not much has been heard lately. The foreign minister is of the ancient Junker clan, close in with the monarchists and the army, of aristocratic feudal background, and his new ascendancy is interpreted by some observers as an indication of the increasing dominance of his allied groups, as against the newcomers who head the Nazi party.

He stems from pre-war Germany, a hefty, ruddy, stag-hunting aristocrat, of an ancient Wuerttemberg dynasty, with slicked gray hair and close-cropped gray mustache. He was a student of law, entering the consular service in 1900. Serving in many foreign capitals, he was ambassador to Rome from 1922 to 1930, and formed a warm friendship with Mussolini, whom he characterized as the ideal ruler. He dislikes public appearances and rarely makes a speech or grants an interview.

ican shipping in Far Eastern waters. Since this isn't a real war, just what he can do about such random shooting isn't quite clear—there are no rules to govern the present situation—but, at any rate, he's riding herd on our ships and doing the best he can.

In the Boxer uprising, at the turn of the century, he was an ensign on the U. S. S. Yorktown. As America pursued her "manifest destiny," he hasn't missed any of the major excitements since then. Previously he had been in the Spanish-American war and the Philippine insurrection. He helped occupy Vera Cruz and he was an aide on the staff of Admiral Hugh Rodman when our ships were serving with the British grand fleet in the World war. He rose in the navy through his mastery of engineering techniques.

"LITTLE STORIES FOR BEDTIME"

JIMMY SKUNK MEETS THE STRANGER

WHEN at last Unc' Billy Possum got safely back to his hollow tree he knew, of course, that Sammy Jay and Blacky the Crow and Peter Rabbit were not crazy, as he had so often said they were. Anyway, if they were, why he must be himself, for hadn't he seen the very stranger Sammy and Blacky had told about? If Unc' Billy couldn't believe what they said he felt sure he could believe his own eyes. He just knew his own eyes couldn't fool him like that.

It made Unc' Billy shiver every time he thought of that stranger he had seen deep in the Green Forest by the pond of Paddy the Beaver. He was so big! And he had such great cruel-looking claws!

"Ah—Ah hope he can't climb trees!" said Unc' Billy.

Now Unc' Billy had spoken aloud, for he didn't know that anyone was near. So he jumped almost out of his skin when a voice said:

"Who is it you hope can't climb trees, Unc' Billy?"

Unc' Billy looked down to find his old friend Jimmy Skunk looking up at him. He hesitated a few minutes. He knew that Jimmy thought that Sammy Jay and Blacky the Crow were crazy or else were telling untrue stories, and he didn't like to tell Jimmy what he had seen himself. You see, he didn't want to be laughed at or thought crazy. But he felt that he just had to tell someone, and so finally he told Jimmy Skunk all about it. Jimmy looked at Unc' Billy very sharply, but Unc' Billy was so very much in earnest that Jimmy had to believe that Unc' Billy really thought he had seen this terrible stranger. Jimmy never had heard of such a stranger in the Green Forest. He couldn't quite believe there was one even after Unc' Billy had said so. But he didn't like to say so. You see, Unc' Billy was an old friend and he didn't want to hurt his feelings.

"I think I'll go up to the pond of Paddy the Beaver and see if I can see anything of this stranger," said Jimmy.

"Ah wouldn't if Ah was yo', Br'er Skunk! 'Deed Ah wouldn't! Yo' don' know what he may do to yo' with those great claws. Mah goodness, Ah cert'nly does hope he can't climb trees!" Unc' Billy looked so anxious that Jimmy had to turn his head so as to hide a smile.

"I'll go ask him if he climbs trees and then I'll come and let you know, Unc' Billy," said he.

Now, Unc' Billy knew that Jimmy Skunk is afraid of nothing and nobody unless it is Farmer Brown's boy when he has his terrible gun, but he also knew that Jimmy had never seen and had no idea of this great stranger who had given him such a fright, and he couldn't believe that Jimmy would dare ask him any questions. He watched Jimmy march off into the Green Forest and he grinned just a little.

"Br'er Skunk never hurries, but Ah reckons Ah'll see him hurry right smart if he meets up with that stranger," muttered Unc' Billy.

Jimmy Skunk went on until he came to the pond of paddy the Beaver, which you know is deep in the Green Forest. Jimmy was tired and he sat down to rest. It was very still there. Paddy the Beaver was nowhere to be seen. Neither was the stranger. Jimmy grew sleepy. He made up his mind that he would take a nap before he looked any further, and he started to find a nice soft spot to curl up on when he heard a heavy step behind him. Jimmy whirled about and there just coming out of the bushes was the stranger of whom Sammy Jay and Blacky the Crow and Unc' Billy Possum had told, and he was just as big and just as black and had just such great cruel claws as they had said.

"I don't know who you are, but I'm very glad to meet you," said Jimmy Skunk politely.

Lesson for September 26

GOD IN THE MAKING OF A NATION

LESSON TEXT—Deuteronomy 8:11-20.
GOLDEN TEXT—Beware that thou forget not the Lord thy God, in not keeping his commandments, and his judgments, and his statutes, which I command thee this day.—Deuteronomy 8:11.
PRIMARY TOPIC—To Help Us Remember.
JUNIOR TOPIC—The Giver of Gifts.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—God in the Making of a Nation.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—God in the Making of a Nation.

God in the making of the nation of Israel—this has been our general subject for a number of months. In this concluding lesson we meet up with a solemn warning that even though God's mighty works have been revealed on behalf of a people, it is possible for them to become proud and self-confident, forgetting him whose they are and whom they should serve, and perishing in their rebellion and sin.

I. "Beware That Thou Forget Not the Lord" (v. 11).

How could this people who had come up out of slavery and been led "through that great and terrible wilderness" (v. 15), who had been fed by God's hand, who had received "water out of the rock of flint," who had become a great nation by his grace and blessing, now forget God? It would seem unbelievable, did we not know ourselves. We need this warning as badly as Israel. Shout a stirring "Beware" from coast to coast as this lesson is taught, for America is forgetting God. Space does not permit a review of the appalling facts here, but they are enough to make one's heart sick with sorrow and fear for the future of our nation.

II. "Lest . . . Thou Say . . . My Power" (vv. 12-17).

How trenchant and altogether fitting are the words of Scripture. Nothing could describe our times more succinctly and accurately than v. 17. Men are glorying in their ability to do things. Science has made mighty strides forward. Industry has brought forth so many striking developments that a single company is able to present as a reflection of its own work a veritable "House of Magic."

We honor those who by skillful hand and brilliant brain produce excellent and thrilling results. But our question is, "How many are there who say, 'God has done this thing. He gave the strength and the skill. His is the honor'?" Some there are who thus recognize him, but they are few indeed. Their name is legion who say in their heart, "My power and the might of mine hand hath gotten me this wealth" (v. 17).

God, forgive us, cleanse us, and give us grace to walk humbly before Thee!

III. "Remember the Lord . . . He . . . Giveth Thee Power." (v. 18).

Joseph Parker points out that a deep conviction of the fact stated in v. 18 "would turn human history into a sacrament." He says, "What a blow this text strikes at one of the most popular and mischievous fallacies in common life—namely, that man is the maker of his own money!" He makes a stirring plea (see People's Bible. Vol. IV. p. 188) for bringing God, who has been "crushed like a rose leaf in the Bible," out into the market place, into the office and the warehouse, for if man will make "his warehouse into a church" he will never turn the church into a warehouse.

Would that we could once and for all do away with all "Sunday religion," and bring the gospel of grace and the laws of God into the office, the factory, the school, and the home, for every day and every incident and transaction of life.

IV. "If Thou . . . Forget . . . Ye Shall . . . Perish" (vv. 19, 20).

Reading this passage in the light of our knowledge of what did happen to Israel, we agree that the warning was needed, even though it was not heeded. Shall we then dismiss the matter with perhaps an expression of regret that they so disobeyed God and missed his blessing? If we do we miss the most important point in our lesson, for the fact is that our nation is just as dependent on God, and in just as much danger of forgetting him and perishing.

God punished even his chosen people in the day that they forgot him. Let not America think that she will escape if she goes on her way, forgetting God. We plead again, as we did last Sunday, for a deep going revival among God's people, and a renewed zeal for the salvation of lost men and women.

Every Day

Happy and strong and brave shall we be—able to endure all things, and to do all things—if we believe that every day, every hour, every moment of our life is in His hands —Van Dyke.

Monuments of the Great

Monuments! what are they? the very pyramids have forgotten their builders, or to whom they were dedicated. Deeds, not stones, are the true monuments of the great.—Motley.

When King George Received the Big News from America

Samuel Morse, inventor of the electric telegraph, had only one ambition as a young man and that was to become an artist. He studied under Washington Allston, then the greatest painter in the United States, and with Allston went to London in 1811. There he met Benjamin West who, although an American, was president of the Royal academy, and a great favorite with the king, who later made him Sir Benjamin West.

West was actually at work on a portrait of the king when the latter was handed the Declaration of Independence. Morse heard the piquant story from West himself, says Ernest Greenwood in "From Amber to Amperes." Here it is —as related by Morse:

Turning to the picture of the king, Sir Benjamin West said:

"Do you see that picture, Mr. Morse? Well, sir, the king was sitting for me when the box containing the American Declaration of Independence was handed to him."

"Indeed!" I answered, "and what appeared to be the emotion of the king? What did he say?"

"Well, sir," said West, "he made a reply characteristic of the goodness of his heart," or words to that effect. " 'Well,' he said, 'if they can be happier under the government they have chosen, then under mine, I shall be happy!' "

Morse stayed four years in England where he achieved considerable success as a portrait painter. Then returning to his native country, he afterwards became president of the national academy and an eminently successful painter, his sitters becoming so numerous that he was unable to meet and fill all of his orders. It was during his return voyage to America in 1832, following a second visit to Europe, that Morse got his conception of the telegraph. Twelve years later—May 24, 1844—he gave a public demonstration of his invention, sending a message from Washington to Baltimore.

The rest is well known history. —Kansas City Star.

A Worthy Object

WILL power is the mental experience exercised in bringing about a desired end. Therefore, I say that a man must necessarily have a worthy object in view to bring out the best in him—that a man must see more than a salary to be more than a salaried man. A man must see the position of ownership, partnership, management, or increased award, in order to awaken his will power.

The man who does good to another does even more good to himself.

Funster Ought to Have Recognized His Fellow

Jones de Vere Jones decided it would be fun to spend a day in the country. Back to Nature, and all that.

Meeting a farmer in a field he thought to have some fun with him.

"Good-morning," he started. "I must say I admire your part of the country."

Then he noticed a scarecrow in the middle of the field.

"And is that one of the oldest inhabitants?" he went on, pointing to the scarecrow.

"Naw, zur," came the slow reply. "That be no oldest 'habitant. Just a visitor like yourself."

The Scales

WHAT goes up must come down. Or if you wish to put it in more scientific language: Action is equal to reaction and in the contrary direction.

This is the law of compensation. It is the one fixed, immutable law of life and it applies to everything, everywhere. It cannot be evaded or avoided. The working of it may be immediate or it may be a matter of centuries, but if we keep ourselves aware of it we may be saved disappointment and disillusion.

The extent to which we try to restrict that law is absurd. We speak of balanced budgets, balanced rations, and the balance of trade; but we quite ignore balanced lives and balanced sociology; so, in the end, Nature takes the job off our hands, with the consequent upheavals and disturbances.

We work or play to excess, we indulge our appetites and our senses to repletion, perhaps to gluttony, and when we suffer during Nature's work of restoring balance, we rail at fate.

In monarchy and republic we allow our thirst for power and for money to overbalance our lives, both individually and socially, then blame God and man for the chaos which attends the restoration of balance.

In all the affairs of life we may evolve philosophies and devise systems; but just so long as they are out of balance, individually, socially, industrially or governmentally, just so long will the scale teeter up and down to our discomfort.

If as individuals our lives are out of balance, the structure as a whole must also be out of balance; and in time that balance must be restored—by us or by THOSE WHO FOLLOW.—Ray S. Ayers in Detroit News.

THE INDIAN BOY

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

UPON the plain the Indian boy
Is playing with the white man's toy
And talking in the white man's tongue,
An Indian boy whose fathers sprung
From a long line of braves of yore
Who now are legends, nothing more.

But now and then he lays aside
The white man's toy and looks with wide,
Wide eyes across the ancient plain,
Now ripening with the white man's grain,
Forgets awhile the white man's school,
The white man's bounty, and his rule.

A frightened bird stirs in her nest,
And something stirs within his breast
Beneath the white man's clothes he wears.
From plain to ridge to hill he stares,
Yes, seeking in the sky above
For something he is cheated of.

Only a legend, not a land,
A boy finds hard to understand,
Only a legend he recalls
That echoes like far waterfalls,
The people of his form and face
Only a legend, not a race.

MANNERS OF THE MOMENT

THE person who insists that you have a drink is a type we're getting tired of. He takes you by both shoulders, pushes you into a chair and starts to find out what complex it is that makes you refuse his marvelous cocktail or his best-that-money-can-buy whisky.

If you tell him that you come from a family of teetotalers, he decides that now is the time to break the family ties. If you tell him that you never drink during working hours, he is sure that today is the time to begin. If you tell him that one drink makes you tight, he is thrilled at the thought. The one reason that leaves him cold is that you don't happen to want anything to drink. He ignores that last one.

We know but one cure for him. That is to disappear whenever he's around.

Pepper, Peppers Unrelated

Pepper and peppers are entirely unrelated botanically. From the East Indian variety comes both "black" and "white" pepper, the latter being produced by added refining from the former. From the American family comes "cayenne" pepper and the tabasco in tabasco sauce, as well as the various red and green vegetables which play such a part in Mexican cooking.

FARMERS everywhere are saying that the amazing Firestone Ground Grip Tire is FIRST in performance and FIRST in economy. So many thousands of farmers are changing over to this wonderful tire that production has been greatly increased to meet the demand.

FIRST IN DRAWBAR PULL. The greater drawbar pull of this amazing tire accounts for its ability to do more work in a given time.

FIRST IN TRACTION. The patented Ground Grip Tread takes a deeper bite into the soil. Added strength to resist the strain of heavy pulling is provided by Gum-Dipping the cord body. Every fiber of every cotton cord is saturated with liquid rubber by this patented Firestone process. Two extra layers of Gum-Dipped cords under the tread bind the tread and cord body so solidly together that we guarantee they will not separate.

FIRST IN ECONOMY. Saves up to 50% in fuel over steel-lugged wheels. Covers more acres per day. Low-cost Firestone cut-down wheel program permits using one set of tires on several different implements.

FIRST IN SALES. Firestone Ground Grip Tires have such outstanding leadership in performance that sales are soaring. Don't wait another day—see the Firestone Ground Grip Tire today at your nearest Firestone Implement Dealer, Tire Dealer or Auto Supply and Service Store.

KLAN ISSUE DOGS BLACK

Newspapers Claim Proof He's Life Member . . . Fleet Stalks Submarine Pirates . . . Japs' Big Push Starts

Fiery Cross Haunts Justice

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT suffered what was probably the most embarrassing period of his entire political career as the whole country stormed over the publishment of what was claimed as documentary proof that Hugo L. Black, recently appointed a justice of the Supreme court, was and is a member of the Ku Klux Klan.

The series of articles, copyrighted by the North American Newspaper alliance and printed in the newspapers which subscribe to its service, included reproduction of Black's resignation from the hooded brotherhood, allegedly turned in to the organization in 1925 but never made known to the public or to the Klansmen in general. It also contained reproduction of the minutes of a Klan meeting in the following year at which Black was said to have become a life member and was given a gold "passport," one of the highest honors conferred by the order.

Implications of the revelations, if they are true, are manifold. President Roosevelt asserted that he had no knowledge that Black was a member of the Klan when the appointment was made. He refused to comment further until Black returned from Europe, where he was vacationing. Black, hounded for a statement by the press, went into seclusion in London and refused to confirm or deny the accusations.

Opposition to the administration lost no time in making political capital of the situation. Senators who had been marked for political extinction because they had dared to oppose the administration on the plan to add six new justices to the highest tribunal found it the finest kind of defense ammunition. They pointed out that the President, in his opportunity to appoint one new justice of the liberal character he desired, had appointed a man who, if it were true he belonged to the Klan, was incapable of administering impartial justice to Catholics, Jews and negroes. Other senators declared they never would have voted for his confirmation had they known he was a Klansman.

It was admitted that since Black had already taken his oath of office there might be no means of correcting the appointment other than by influencing him to resign. This the President might do, it was believed, if Black did not deny the charges upon his return to the United States.

Showdown on 'Sub' Piracy

GREAT BRITAIN and France were massing the greatest destroyer fleet ever operated in the Mediterranean sea, to police it and safeguard neutral shipping from attacks by "pirate" submarines, as a result of the agreement signed by nine powers at Nyon, near Geneva. The powers signatory to the pact also included Greece, Jugo-Slavia, Turkey, Rumania, Bulgaria, Egypt and Russia. Italy and Germany had refused to attend the conference when Russia publicly accused Italy of operating the "pirate" submarines which sank two Russian ships, and threatened reprisals if Italy did not pay indemnity.

M. Litvinoff

The principal provisions of the agreement, which Germany and Italy were invited to join, were:

1. Mediterranean shipping will be restricted to the regular ship lanes, which will be patrolled by French and British warships, in both the eastern and western stretches. If Italy agreed, she was to be allowed to patrol the Tyrrhenian sea.

2. Patrolling navies will attack and attempt to destroy any submarine which attacks merchant ships other than Spanish, without first giving passengers and crew opportunity to leave in lifeboats, as outlined in the 1936 London naval treaty.

3. Signatories expressly declare that they do not concede belligerent rights to either party in Spain.

4. Patrol ships arriving on the scene of an attack too late to prevent it will be authorized to attack any submarine in the vicinity, provided they are satisfied it is the guilty one.

5. These measures will be executed by the British and French fleets anywhere in the Mediterranean with the exception of the Adriatic. Eastern powers will protect neutral shipping in their territorial waters.

6. Signatories agree not to let any of their own submarines put to sea in the Mediterranean unless accompanied by a surface vessel, except in certain "exercise" zones.

7. Signatories will not permit foreign submarines in their waters unless in urgent distress or on the surface and accompanied.

It was plain that delegates knew that explosions might occur in half a dozen European capitals if their pact did not get into operation before there were any further attacks on shipping. They were embarrassed in conference by the Russian foreign commissar, Maxim Litvinoff, who insisted on naming Italy as the "pirate." Russia at first refused to sign, on the grounds that the second provision was no protection at all, merely requiring submarine commanders to be "gentlemanly" before sinking ships, and that it implied recognition of both Spanish parties as belligerents. Britain's Anthony Eden was reported to have convinced the signatory powers that it would be impossible for a submarine to sink a ship under those conditions.

HANDS ACROSS EUROPE

Jointly refusing to attend the anti-"piracy" conference, Hitler (left) and Mussolini once more show the complete accord of the two Fascist governments.

China's German Strategy

JAPAN'S long-awaited "big push" in China was believed definitely "on" as the Japanese assumed virtual control of North Hopei, and made important thrusts into the Chinese lines at Shanghai, after the most terrible fighting of a month of undeclared warfare.

At about the same time, the Chinese, heeding at last the advice of German officers generally conceded the "brains" of the central army, began a strategic retreat to the "third area of defense" mapped out by these same officers after the Shanghai conflict of 1932, which was conducted under identical conditions.

Apparently the Chinese plan of retreat was to withdraw defending troops from the range of Japanese naval guns in the Whangpoo and Yangtse rivers. The Chinese were reluctant to leave positions which they claimed had been held against the Japanese invasion, but the German advisers finally won them over to the theory that these positions had been held at a cost far out of proportion to their importance.

The first strategic stage of the Chinese fighting in Shanghai—as planned by the German officers—was to slow down and harass the landing of Japanese reinforcements; the second, to divide the Japanese lines, and the third, to deprive the Japanese of the use of their naval guns.

Realizing what is going on, the Japanese command has ordered rapid advance no matter what the cost, in an effort to change an orderly retreat into a complete rout. As a result, the Japanese for the time being are the heavy losers in men, rather than the Chinese.

No Help for Munitions Ships

ANY American merchant vessels which carry arms or other implements of war to China or Japan will do so at their own risk, President Roosevelt warned shipping concerns. This policy applies to all of the articles listed in his proclamation of May 1, 1937, when he invoked the neutrality act against both parties in the Spanish civil war.

The President's order also forbade any government-owned vessel from carrying war materials to China or Japan. Unless war is declared he has no control over other American shipping, but he warned shippers that if ships carrying such cargo are bombed or attacked they need expect no action on the part of the United States.

Copeland Loses in Primary

TWENTY-ONE arrests were made as violence dogged the polls in New York city's most spirited mayoralty primary in years. Senator Royal S. Copeland, who ran for the Republican nomination although he was supported by Tammany Hall, lost the honor to Mayor Fiorello H. La Guardia, fusion candidate for re-election. Copeland made his bid for the G. O. P. nod by bitterly opposing President Roosevelt, but the stamp of Tammany precluded his nomination. The Democratic nomination was captured by Jeremiah T. Mahoney, who had the backing of Democratic national chairman James A. Farley.

'Keep Us Out of War'

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT, anxious over conditions in Europe and the Far East, cut his vacation short and returned to Washington to discuss developments with his cabinet. After discussing the situation with Norman H. Davis, his European ambassador-at-large, and Bernard M. Baruch, and getting reports from the State department, he was said to be convinced that there was a real possibility of implication of the United States in a foreign war. Baruch called Europe a tinder box, ready to explode at any time.

In an address before an outdoor meeting of Dutchess county (N. Y.) citizens President Roosevelt had said, "World conditions are pretty serious. I am glad to say . . . that we are going to do everything we can in the United States—not only the people of the United States but the government of the United States—to keep us out of war."

Headache for the League

AT GENEVA, the Chinese delegation framed an appeal against Japanese invasion, to be presented to the League of Nations. The appeal, which urged peace-loving members and non-members to join in action against the "aggression," invoked Article 17 of the League covenant, which would invite Japan to sit in on the council of reply.

The Chinese statement charged that since mid-August Japan has thrown 60,000 troops into the Woosung-Shanghai area.

"The intention of Japan . . . cannot otherwise be interpreted than to dominate Shanghai . . . and to attack Nanking, the capital," the statement said. It also declared that the Japanese blockade of the entire Chinese coast was illegal.

Eiji Amau, Japanese minister to Switzerland, made it plain that Japan had no intention of returning to Geneva to sit at any council board that discussed the Far Eastern hostilities. Nippon resigned from the League after it had judged her the aggressor in the invasion of Manchuria in 1933.

$300,000,000 in New Money

SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY MORGENTHAU has agreed to issue $300,000,000 in cash against an equal amount of the treasury's "sterilized" gold. The move was believed to have been made because of recent weakness in the market for government bonds and a 16 per cent decline in the stock market over a period of about four weeks.

Secretary Morgenthau

In addition, the open market committee of the federal reserve board announced that it had authorized the twelve federal reserve banks to buy additional amounts of short term government securities.

In some quarters, the treasury's move was interpreted as an about face by the administration, reversing its year-old policy of trying to prevent an untimely inflation.

Loyalists Ready to Pay Up

IT WAS reported in Geneva that the Spanish loyalist government and the American government had agreed upon $30,000,000 as a settlement for American claims arising out of the Spanish civil war. This, it was understood, would cover every kind of damage suffered by American business in Spain since the beginning of the war, including confiscation and appropriation of private property for military purposes, as well as material damages.

In voluntarily offering a settlement while the war is still going on, the Valencia government shattered revolutionary traditions. It was believed that the loyalists were anxious to emphasize the fact that they are not the revolutionary government, but the real government of Spain, and consider prompt payment of claims one of the best ways of keeping the respect of other nations.

Czechoslovakia Loses a Saint

THE "little father of Czechoslovakia," Dr. Thomas G. Masaryk, founder of the republic, died in Praha. He was eighty-seven years old.

It was the efforts of Dr. Masaryk in the great capitals of Europe during the World war which made possible the creation of his country. Its people revered him as the symbol of their liberty, the patron saint of freedom. He was their first president, serving first in 1918, and being three times re-elected. In 1935, with old age coming upon him, he resigned his office to Eduard Benes, his colleague, who was at his bed when he lost the battle against the death he philosophically considered "the common enemy of mankind." He once said: "If it must come I shall at least know I died fighting it."

Nazis Too Busy to Fight

ADOLF HITLER, German dictator, struck what might have been a cheerful note, in conference with foreign government representatives at the Nazi rally in Nuremberg, when he declared that Germany is too busy to become involved in any war. He said that the plans which he and other Nazi leaders have for the country would take from 20 to 40 years to complete, and that war might be disastrous.

SEEN and HEARD around the NATIONAL CAPITAL

By Carter Field

Washington.—Frank R. McNinch, the new chairman of the power commission, is apparently trying to frighten the electric industry into reducing rates. Which is rather curious, for if the electric industry should reduce its rates sharply, as a result of McNinch's warning, the almost inevitable result would be that there would be weakening of public support for the Norris seven TVA's bill which is supposed to be passed at the next session of congress. And such a culmination would be most unsatisfactory not only to Senator George W. Norris, who has come to approve of McNinch, but to President Roosevelt, who appointed him.

After pointing to the record-breaking figures for sales of electricity in the first seven months of 1937, McNinch remarked:

"This revelation of unparalleled growth and prosperity is the answer to those devotees of that ancient superstition of hydromancy who gazed at the water of a few hydro plants the government was building and predicted the destruction of the private power industry."

"It is both interesting and significant," Mr. McNinch said later, "to note that, as electric rates have gone down, production and consumption have gone up. It has been and is a short-sighted policy to keep electric rates 'as high as the tariff will bear.' Such false economy holds down the 'traffic' and hurts the power industry as well as the public. It has now been demonstrated beyond all cavil that the public wants and needs more and more power in industry, in commerce, in the home and on the farm. Only those who see through a glass darkly now fail to understand that the interests and prosperity of the power companies and of the consumers alike look in the direction of electrifying America."

With all of which, incidentally, the utility executives agree, though, unfortunately for their own good, too few of them probably will heed the warning about high rates soon enough.

Worth Watching

Incidentally, McNinch is an interesting figure in politics—well worth watching. He was an up and coming cog in the Furnihold Simmons machine in North Carolina, years ago. Then he angered the boss, and Simmons retired him to outer darkness. For years he found every road leading to anything politically barred by the relentless Simmons.

But then came 1928, and the nomination of Al Smith by the Democrats. Simmons sulked. Hat in hand, McNinch called on his old chief. He agreed that Smith should be beaten. Simmons encouraged him, first secretly and later openly. McNinch led the North Carolina Hoovercrats, and carried the state, with aid from Simmons and the normally impotent Republicans, by an overwhelming majority.

But mark this. Of all the hundreds of key Democrats, including many far more important than McNinch, who revolted, McNinch is the only one who has ever succeeded in getting to first base since! Simmons himself was defeated on that very issue in the next primary. All over the South the same thing happened.

Normally, in a rebellion, the leaders get short shrift. But in a revolution they come into power. In the South the fellows who won, back in 1928, and who carried Virginia, North Carolina, Florida, Texas, Kentucky, Tennessee and Oklahoma for Hoover, had their reward in political banishment and popular dislike. All but McNinch.

Herbert C. Hoover seemed to feel no gratitude to any one in the South who had risked his political future for him. With the exception of McNinch! Maybe Hoover figured that most of these Hoovercrats were just fighting Smith because he was a wet, or a Tammany politician, and therefore didn't deserve any reward from him. And, of course, in a way Hoover—on this one thing—was right.

But how about McNinch? How did he persuade Hoover that he, alone of all the southern bolters, deserved reward? And how did he convince Franklin D. Roosevelt that his powers should be increased? That man has something.

Boland Has Something

Patrick J. Boland, Democratic whip of the house, is not as well known to the general public as he deserves. The title carries the idea to most folks of a sort of sergeant-at-arms, or call boy, who rounds up the congressmen for a vote. Sounds like a leg job rather than one involving leadership.

Actually, of course, it is rather an important place, which gives its holder the privilege of sitting in on the party councils, and at least the opportunity of demonstrating his ability, if any. Add to that the point that congressmen get to know each other pretty well, and usually form rather accurate judgments of each other's ability, entirely aside from any previous records, and it becomes obvious that Mr. Boland has something.

Which makes his recent statement about next session more important. What Mr. Boland said was that the Norris seven TVA's bill (eight if you add in the modifications of the present TVA) would be stripped of all its phases concerning power before passage next session.

Now President Roosevelt very definitely wants power included in the seven TVA's legislation. So does Senator George W. Norris, daddy of the original TVA. So do all the New Dealers. All of which spells out that there will be a real fight on an unexpected front in the next session, to be added to those already on the sure list—taxes, wages and hours regulation, and, unless Mr. Roosevelt is kidding the legislators, Supreme court enlargement again. It was right after adjournment of the last session—the only one so far since March 4, 1933, when any impartial referee would not give all the rounds to Mr. Roosevelt—that Attorney General Homer S. Cummings took the public into his confidence on this—holding that the Supreme court issue must be settled and settled right.

Listening In

Now, of course, all the senators and representatives, whether at home or taking a holiday, are engaged in their normal between-sessions function of holding their ears to the ground. They are busy finding out what is the safest thing for them to do in the next session.

At this stage, Mr. Boland, Democratic whip of the house, takes a public stand against the President and the New Deal on an issue which most observers and members of congress thought was going to slide through next session without a real struggle.

Mr. Boland proved himself an accurate judge of what is the shrewd thing to do in politics in 1930, and has demonstrated it several times since.

In 1930 there was a vacancy in the Scranton, Pennsylvania, congressional district. Largely a hard coal mining district, it should, on cold logic, be wet. Henry H. Curran, president of the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment, was interested. He sent this writer down there to investigate.

It developed that no one of the candidates for the Republican nomination was really wet politically. The Republican leaders thought it was not safe—thought the dry sentiment still too strong. Over in the Democratic primary, generally regarded as futile because the district was so strongly Republican, Pat Boland was running as a wringing wet against a dry. This writer urged support of Boland as the only chance.

But a little later Boland decided to enter the Republican primary as well as the Democratic. The Pennsylvania law permitted that at the time, though it has since been changed. He won both primaries! And has been re-elected three times since! He has something.

Looks Like Surrender

Foreshadowing events in the next session of congress, particularly as to the cleavage between President Roosevelt and the New Dealers, on the one hand, and the conservatives on the other, the surrender of the President in signing the sugar bill cannot be exaggerated.

Bitterly as President Roosevelt objected to this bill, as expressed not only in private conversations but in writing, there is just one explanation for the signature. Had he vetoed it, it would have been necessary to call an extra session of congress to pass some substitute, as the present quota law expires on December 31. The President had no particular objection to the extra session. In fact, he was undecided for some time whether he would call one, entirely irrespective of the sugar situation.

But he was finally convinced that not all the strength the administration could bring to bear would result in passing the kind of sugar bill he wanted even if he vetoed the present bill and called an extra session.

Most convincing on this was Vice-President John Nance Garner.

All Know Story

The importance of all this now is that every member of both house and senate knows the whole story. They know, in effect, that the President was badly beaten on two issues very close to his heart—sugar and Supreme court enlargement. So they will be less fearful of opposing any of the President's "must" measures from now on. Which bodes evil for the Roosevelt program in the next session.

The conflict of personalities is also significant. It was Pat Harrison who really led the fight for the present sugar bill, a fight which came to a boil during the struggle of the Mississippi senator to be elected Democratic leader in place of Joe Robinson. Everybody knows that it was President Roosevelt's influence that beat Pat, and elected Alen Barkley, of Kentucky. So Pat lost the honor he craved, but the President lost a fight in which he was more determined than on any measure this session except the court bill.

The Subconscious Mind

The expressions, conscious and subconscious mind, are well defined psychological terms. The subconscious mind may be defined as anything that is neither in the focus nor in the margin of the consciousness (that is, that does not receive attention and cannot be regarded as a actual experience of the moment) but which, nevertheless, must be assumed to be influencing the mind in some way.

CHILLS AND FEVER

Fast Relief for Malaria With This Proven Treatment!

Don't go through the usual suffering. Stop Malaria chills and fever in quick time.

Take good old Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic! This is no new-fangled or untried preparation. It's a famous medicine you can depend on.

Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic contains tasteless quinidine and iron. It quickly stops the chills and fever. It also tends to build you up. That's the double effect you want.

The very next time you feel an attack of chills and fever coming on, go right to your drug store and get a bottle of Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic. Start taking the medicine immediately and you will soon get the relief you want.

All drug stores sell Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic, 50c and $1. The latter size is the more economical.

HOW OFTEN CAN YOU KISS AND MAKE UP?

FEW husbands can understand why a wife should turn from a pleasant companion into a shrew for one whole week in every month.

You can say "I'm sorry" and kiss and make up easier before marriage than after. If you're wise and if you want to hold your husband, you won't be a three-quarter wife.

For three generations one woman has told another how to go "smiling through" with Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It helps Nature tone up the system, thus lessening the discomforts from the functional disorders which women must endure in the three ordeals of life: 1. Turning from girlhood to womanhood. 2. Preparing for motherhood. 3. Approaching "middle age."

Don't be a three-quarter wife; take LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND and Go "Smiling Through."

Lazy, bored, grouchy

You may feel this way as a result of constipation

Constipation is an enemy of pleasure. It dulls your enjoyment of the best entertainment and the best friends.

To neglect constipation is to invite serious trouble. For your health's sake, take Black-Draught at the first sign of constipation. You'll soon feel better. Here's a laxative that is purely vegetable, prompt, reliable.

HELP KIDNEYS
To Get Rid of Acid and Poisonous Waste

Your kidneys help to keep you well by constantly filtering waste matter from the blood. If your kidneys get functionally disordered and fail to remove excess impurities, there may be poisoning of the whole system and body-wide distress.

Burning, scanty or too frequent urination may be a warning of some kidney or bladder disturbance.

You may suffer nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—feel weak, nervous, all played out.

In such cases it is better to rely on a medicine that has won country-wide acclaim than on something less favorably known. Use Doan's Pills. A multitude of grateful people recommend Doan's. Ask your neighbor!

—17—

Memory slashed into her self-congratulation. Mrs. Gregory had witnessed a will a week before Mrs. Dane had died. Where was it? Should she go to Jed Stewart at once and tell him what she had heard? But he knew. He had asked Mrs. Gregory to say nothing about it. Why hadn't he told her? What did it all mean? It gave her a panicky feeling, as if she were wandering blindly in the dark on the edge of a precipice. She poked the fire vigorously. It was a physical outlet to her turmoil of mind.

"Take care, Miss, or you'll set the chimney afire," Henri warned from the threshold.

"I think not. It was thoroughly cleaned when I came here to live."

Why was he puttering? He was drawing the hangings over the windows, pulling a rug in place, refolding the morning newspaper on the desk, fussing about the parrot's cage, a parrot who had lost half of his tail and all his self-assurance since his excursion into the outer world.

He cleared his throat and drew long bony fingers over his slack mouth.

"I—I've been wanting a chance to talk with you since—since we—we found the parrot, Miss."

He was avoiding mention of the tragedy at the filling-station. Why?

"What have you to say to me?"

He drew his fingers across his mouth. "It's about that—what happened at the filling station. You know I went to the movies that evening, came home and went to bed. Miss Lucette and the others saw me when I came down to find out what the noise was I heard. You know that after that I dressed and went out to hunt for the parrot, that I brought him in with me, but the police want to check up on me every minute. You can help me very much, Miss."

"How?"

"By swearing that I was in this house at the time of the—the robbery at the filling station."

"But, as I remember it, you weren't, Henri. You said that you were hunting for the parrot."

The butler emitted a sound like the snarl of a savage beast at bay.

"You'd better say I was, Miss, or—or I'll tell how I found this in your desk." He drew a folded paper from his pocket.

"Mr. Sam has overlooked grand dramatic material right here, Henri. You would steal the show as the villain in his comedy. Just what is 'this'?" Her voice was tinged with amused unbelief.

"Take it, Miss."

Brooke thought of the fangs of a wolf as he smiled his secretive smile. She unfolded the paper and noticed that a tiny corner of the sheet was missing. Mary Amanda Dane's writing! Mrs. Gregory's signature! Henri's. Clotilde's. Was it the will of which Mrs. Gregory had spoken only a few moments ago? How had it come in Henri's possession?

"You say you found this in my desk?"

The butler's greedy eyes glittered like black beads. "Yes, Miss. I'm prepared to swear to that in court unless we can come to terms."

"Why didn't you take it directly to Mr. Trent or Mr. Stewart?" Was her voice as icy as her body felt?

"I thought it was too bad to do that until I found out if you and I couldn't work together. Mr. Mark tried to get me in wrong with the old madame." Hatred flamed in his eyes and voice. "Why should I help him?"

"Will this—this—help him?"

"Read it, Miss."

"I'll wait until I'm alone. The paper is torn. Did you tear it when you—pulled it from my desk?"

Henri's teeth showed between suddenly pallid lips.

"I—I—didn't pull it, Miss. I—I took it careful."

The last word was a whisper. What was there about a torn corner of a sheet of paper to terrify him?

"I'll talk with you about it later, Henri; perhaps—perhaps, as you suggest, we may be able to work together."

"I thought you might see it that way, Miss, but—don't take too long."

Brooke stood rigid, listening until she heard the door to the china closet swing. Curious how she had come to know every sound in this house which had been hers for so short a time. Hers! Was it hers? What was in the paper which Henri would swear he had found in her desk? She had pretended to consider his proposition that they work together merely to get time to decide what she should do.

She raced up the stairs, switched on the light in her boudoir, locked the door behind her.

She spread out the paper on her desk, shut her eyes hard, drew a long breath before she looked. There was not much on the page, but what there was, was in Mrs. Dane's fine writing. The date was that of a week before she died. The words burned into Brooke's mind as if written with a red-hot poker:

"I don't know how to word a formal will, but I hereby give and bequeath all my property real and personal—which I left in a previous will to Brooke Reyburn—except the amount as stated in said will to be given to my faithful servants, Henri and Clotilde Jacques, to my nephew Mark Trent, to have and to hold during his life and to dispose of as he wishes. I know now that my ideas of right and wrong should not deprive him of his rightful inheritance. He was a wonderful son. He has been a devoted nephew. I make him sole executor without bonds of my estate. I ask him to provide an income sufficient for frills and fun for my dear young friend, Brooke Reyburn."

Brooke studied the signature. Mary Amanda Dane's without a doubt, unless it was a clever forgery, Anne Gregory's name sprawling under it, and Henri's and Clotilde's tight, foreign writing.

Suppose she destroyed this paper which would deprive her of a fortune? A lighted match under it and it would go up in smoke. Who would know? Who would believe Henri against her? Wasn't he already under suspicion in the filling station hold-up? Suppose he did try blackmail? He wouldn't get far with it.

Was She Two Persons?

What terrible thing was she thinking? The eyes of the white faced girl who stared back at her from the mirror were big with horror. Was she two persons? Had her other self turned craven? Had that thought changed her face? For an instant she had been a criminal at heart. She, Brooke Reyburn, who considered her personal standards of honor and decency of the highest. After this she would understand temptation as she never had understood it before.

A car! Lucette and Sam. She must hurry and dress. Sometime during the evening she would give the paper to Mark Trent. That would be her answer to Henri. Where could she put it meanwhile? She would tuck it inside her frock.

She was fastening the corsage of green orchids Mark Trent had sent her to the front of her gleaming silver frock when she met her brown eyes in the mirror. She dropped the flowers as if they had burned her fingers. She couldn't wear his gift until she was sure that he believed that she had not known until this evening of his aunt's change of mind. Why hadn't he come directly to her when he had heard Mrs. Gregory's story? Because he believed she knew where the will was, that she was dishonest, that was why. Perhaps he was right. What would he think of her if he suspected that for a split second she had thought of burning it?

She would wear Jerry's gardenias; she had chosen Mark the Magnificent's orchids first, simply because he was her host, she assured herself.

She added more color to her white cheeks, to her lips, dusted her face with powder, anything to switch her mind from that nightmare instant of terrifying suggestion.

She waited until she heard her brother's and her sister's doors close before she opened hers. Sam popped his head out and called:

"White tie tonight, Brooke?"

"Of course, Sam. Our promising young playwright must be swanky. I've had your top hat ironed and there's a gardenia in a box on your dresser."

She heard his groan of resignation as she started down the stairs.

She stopped on the threshold of the living-room she loved. Now it would be torn up by the roots, all her father's treasures would go back to storage. And her gorgeous flower - windows would be but a dream. Would she be obliged to return the money she had spent? That would mean dragging a ball and chain of debt the rest of her life. Cheerful prospect. Could Mary Amanda Dane's "little friend, Brooke Reyburn," see herself accepting from Mark the Magnificent an income sufficient for "frills and fun"? Never. She would have to hunt for a job. But she wouldn't have to hunt—she wouldn't! The Palm beach offer! Had the position been filled? She would send a night letter. Better do it now before Sam and Lucette came down.

As she waited for the telephone call to go through, she told herself that she had learned one inestimable lesson: she had learned that for every person the gateway to success was in himself; that achievement was a matter of keeping on keeping on, of giving one's best and trying, everlastingly trying to make that best better. She was returning to business equipped with that knowledge.

She gave her message and turned to the fire. She didn't really mind going back to work, she had loved it, but she had planned to do so much for her mother, for Lucette, for Sam.

Sam! Nothing must happen to distract his mind from the production of the play. If she were to produce that will now, the neighborhood, to say nothing of the cast, would palpitate with excitement, the Reyburns would have to leave Lookout House at once. She knew nothing of law except that it was as relentless as a juggernaut. What the court decreed had to be done. A producer from New York was coming to see Sam's comedy. The Boston manager wouldn't bring him down unless he thought Sam had talent. The performance was only 48 hours away. Could she keep Henri quiet until then? If she couldn't she was the world's worst actress, and Sam had said that she was good. After the play Mark Trent was to keep open house for cast and audience. She would stay until the last guest had departed, then she would give this will, burning against her skin, to him and fade gracefully from the picture. Better lock it up in her desk until then. It wouldn't be safe to carry it around with her.

Back in her boudoir she locked the paper in an inside drawer of her desk and slipped the key into her bag of silver sequins.

Returning to the living-room, she paused before the portrait above the mantel. "This all means that you and I will be on the move again," she said in a low voice. "On the move, but with banners, Duchess! With banners!" She threw a kiss to the woman in green satin and emeralds who looked back at her gravely.

Sam appeared in the doorway, and Brooke quickly asked: "Have you heard any more particulars about—about what you call the crime wave?"

She perched on the arm of a big chair and looked up at Sam standing with one elbow on the mantel.

"Nope, nothing except the usual lot of wild yarns which roll up like snowballs at a time like this. Have you ever thought that one of her ex-lovers might have bumped off the fair Lola?"

"Sam! Where did you hear that?"

"Didn't hear it. That ex-lover motif is a plot, a little thing of my own. It's my conception of what should have occurred to put claws, tearing, digging, ravening claws into the Filling Station Mystery. May use the idea sometime; that's why I asked you to clip all the accounts of the police activities and confessions, if there were any. Have you done it?"

"I have, from every paper I could get hold of. When you want them they are in a manila envelope in the lower right-hand drawer of my desk. I haven't said anything to you about it but I was afraid that after what had happened, Mark Trent might feel that he could not go on with the play."

"Afraid! That's putting it mildly. I nearly had heart failure till he assured me that he would keep his part. He'll make 'Islands Arise.' He does more than play the lead, he puts glamour into the comedy and warmth and strength and vitality. I told him he was a fighting lover. He looked queer for a minute; perhaps he was thinking that he didn't put up much of a battle for that wife of his who walked off with the French count. Why should he change his plans for a woman like that? The shock of the tragedy has practically worn off. Spirits are picking up and by day after tomorrow everyone will be keen to make whoopee, to get the thing out of their minds. Two days! Boy, but I get cold feet when I think of all that night means to me."

He frowned at his younger sister who, in a diaphanous white evening frock sprinkled with gold leaves, appeared in the doorway.

"Lucette, when Jerry Field quotes 'Islands Arise,' look as if he were saying something serious, not as if he were inviting—"

"I've followed exactly the business in my sides, Master Reyburn."

"Don't apologize."

"I'm not apologizing. I'm explaining."

"Remember, kiddo, that tomorrow night will be the last rehearsal."

"For which blessing, praise be to Allah! I'll tell you right now, Sam Reyburn, you'll never get me in another play of yours."

"Boy, I won't want you! 'Islands Arise' will be a smash hit! I'll have the best actors in New York camping on my trail for a chance in it! I'll—" He looked at his sisters watching him with fascinated eyes. Dark color surged to his hair. "I suppose you two girls think I'm a darn fool."

Lucette made a little dash toward him and patted his arm.

what Irvin S. Cobb thinks about:

The Big Book Craze.

SANTA MONICA, CALIF.—We're promised a historical novel longer than any yet—say half a million words or so. Of course, the author probably uses some words at least twice, but that won't reduce the gross tonnage unless they're very short words.

I can't take it. While still convalescent from "Anthony Adverse," I was stricken down by "Gone With the Wind" and had such a relapse that even now I barely can hold on my stomach such comparatively light and trifling stuff as volume VET to ZYM of the encyclopedia.

Irvin S. Cobb

When reading this modern bulk literature, it upsets me to find my legs going to sleep before I do. And the constant pressure makes callouses on my second mezzanine landing.

I admit these mass production books serve nicely as door stoppers and for pressing wild flowers. I also heard of a chap who detected a prowler under his window and dropped a frothy little work of fiction weighing slightly less than nine pounds on the back of the fellow's neck, dislocating three vertebrae. At last accounts, the surgeons were still picking long jagged chapters out of his spine.

In my present mood, what I crave is the romantic stuff of olden days, in which our sainted Aunt Sophie was wont to inscribe "Alas, how sad!" or "Only too true!" in pale violet ink on the margins. What happened to all the Aunt Sophies, anyhow?

An Actor's Temperament.

WE'VE all been waiting for something to top it, but the best wheeze of the month remains the one that was emitted, not by a paid gagster, but by a simple stage-hand at one of the studios when Mr. Leslie Howard refused to go on making a picture until a group of distinguished visitors, including Mr. Charles Norris, the novelist, had been shooed off the set.

"He ain't sore at you gents," stated the stage-hand to the ousted parties, "but he's been playin' 'Hamlet' on the regular stage and he ain't used to havin' a crowd watchin' him while he's actin'."

If Mr. Norris and his friends wanted to see some really great acting they should have patronized the professional wrestling matches. That's where they put on the heavy dramatic stuff—beautifully rehearsed, perfectly done.

Children's Education

I LIKE the way the wealthy classes in England rear their children. Little Rosemary doesn't recite for the company after dinner, and if Master Jones-Terwillager Minor gets uppity at school, he gets thrashed.

Many a rich American has known how sharper than a serpent's tooth it is to see his daughter grow up a wanton and his boy turn out a waster. Yet, with few exceptions—so few that the newspapers comment on them—it never seems to occur to these fond fathers that less of coddling and pampering and spoiling in adolescence and more of wholesome discipline might produce a higher average grade of heirs.

What set me to thinking along this line was being t'other night at a party where a poor little four-year-old, having already the pitiable assurance of a veteran prima donna, was fetched in to give impersonations. She never again could impersonate natural babyhood though, more's the pity! And her pert small brother was encouraged to dominate the talk.

Mark my word for it, that kid is going to come to no good end—not even a well-spanked end, which would help.

Mr. Pincus' Coup.

IN THESE topsy-turvy times liberal-minded patriots who are striving to steer a middle course between ultraenthusiastic left-wingers and ultraconservative rightists might do well, methinks, to follow the example set by Mr. Pincus.

Mr. Pincus had opened a clothing store. Immediately on one side of him was the clothing store of Mr. Ginsberg and immediately on the other side was the clothing store of Mr. Dreifus; and three clothing stores in a row were too many even for Essex street.

So the adjacent competitors framed a plot to put the newcomer out of business. Next morning their rival, coming down to open up, found over Mr. Dreifus' establishment a flaming legend, to wit:

BANKRUPT SALE

And above Mr. Ginsberg's door was this equally prominent announcement:

CLOSING OUT SALE

Within an hour, smeared across the entire front of Mr. Pincus' store, exactly in between the other two, appeared a huge sign reading as follows:

MAIN ENTRANCE.

Vying for Your Favor

ONE, two, three smart frocks on the line ready to go—shopping, kitchenwards, to the office downtown. And as every woman knows, a well stocked wardrobe needs all three.

From Now On.

Says the jaunty model to the left, "I can tell I'm gonna feel well dressed in this little peplum frock: ready for sports, a matinee or dinner in town, and the confident high spirits my new lines give make me sure that I will be wanted at all three.

"I made my version of sheer wool with a subdued herringbone weave. It will be my number one attire for a long spell ahead."

One Who Knows.

Miss Keep-the-Home-Beautiful, in the center, expresses herself: "Even when I do housework I like to look and feel fit.

"When I dash out to the store or go across lots to the neighbor's to borrow an egg, I don't bother to change my dress because I have the feeling I'm doing all right as I am. I wouldn't think of a new season coming on without running up a generous supply of crisp, fresh dresses for myself. They seem to set one right, you know, and give you the spirit to pitch into any day's work like a champion."

The Last Word.

Miss Third Party goes in for that new kind of glamour in the simple model at the right. Says she: "I feel that Fall is really the season to step out and hob-nob with Fashion and the Joneses. This frock, which is my weakness in plum-colored wool, was as easy to make as it is to wear.

"Later on I'm going to have a velvet version with short sleeves—these slim lines and elegant shoulders were just made for this queen of all fabrics—and evidently I go for things royal."

Pattern 1348 is designed in sizes 12 to 20 (30 to 38 bust). Size 14 requires 4⅛ yards of 39-inch material, plus 1⅞ yards for contrast.

Pattern 1304 is designed for sizes 34 to 46. Size 36 requires 3¾ yards of 35-inch material, plus ½ yard contrasting.

Pattern 1374 is designed for sizes 12 to 20 (30 to 38 bust). Size 14 requires 2⅝ yards of 54-inch material. With short sleeves, size 16 requires 4 yards of 39-inch material, plus ⅓ yard for collar in contrast. To trim the collar requires 4½ yards of braid.

All women who are interested are cordially invited to join.

Social, Sociable

The nouns social and sociable, each meaning "a social gathering," are distinctly Americanisms. Of the two, sociable seems to have been the earlier form, and has been in use for more than a century. Both terms are in good usage in the United States; though until recently, sociable enjoyed a preference. Usage appears to be veering toward social.—Literary Digest.

History And Achievements Of The Culture Club

By Fay Miles Benton

To try and get all the activities and achievements of the Culture Club in the years since its organization into a short paper is like trying to get a feather bed into a bandbox. But if I roll up my comments on them tightly and pack them close to-gether, I may be able to shut the lid down on them all. Let's see now it goes.

Columbiana had no Literary and Social Club in 1912 when our belovedMrs. Lightcap assisted by Miss Pardue, then principal of the Grammer School, realized the urge for such an organization. So in the fall of that year an enthusiastic group of women gathered at the home of Mrs. J. W. Brooks and formed the Culture Club. Mrs. Lightcap was the first president and served in this capacity for three years. Upon her retirement, she was presented by the club with a beautiful crystal vase which is still one of her most prized possessions. The membership of sixteen soon grew to twenty, making it necessary to limit the membership to 24. Among the early members whom we all know were Mrs. D. S. Lightcap, Mildred White Wallace, Mrs. J. R. White, Mrs Paul Luck, Mrs W F Davis, Mrs. Rosa Teague, Mrs. T. K. Roberts and Mrs W A Parker. Mrs Lightcap is the only charter member now in the Club.

For the first two years Shakespeare was studied, then a Bayview Course in Art and Music was enjoyed. The game of Dominoes played with cards was the diversion for several years, then changed to Boston oRk. At this time, little civic work was done as a club because Columbiana boasted a Civic League composed of both men and women. However, this club soon dishanded so the Culture Club took over this work, as practically all the members belonged to both clubs.

The first notable Civic improvement by the Culture Club was the paving of sidewalks around the coudt House grounds. To finance this the Board of Revenue issued warrents which were discounted at the bank and paid as they fell due. The 4th District Federation of Club was entertanel by the club in 1914.

During the next few years contributions were made to the Red Cross, and Illiteracy Fund. The Club federated, giving generously to all activities, sent flowers to its members who were in or had bereavement in their families. Five dollars was contributed ot the Girls Industrial School at East Lake through the club delegate to the Federation, and donations made to the Scholarship and Illiteracy Funds of the Federation, but later formed a Scholarship Fund of its own.

In 1919 under the leadership of Mrs. Fred Koeing, president an extensive clean-up was instigated and ingly in an effort to really clean-up the city. Attractive posters were made and placed in every conspicuous spot. All vacant lots were thoroughly cleaned spaded up and planted in flowers, by the women themselves, who were seen with rakes and hoes, assisted by groups of Boy Scouts. Garbage cans were purchased by the club and placed in front of every business establishment. To finance this drive contributions were solicited from every citizen, who gave generously.

A course on "Citizenship" was planned an carried out during the year 1920, which was particularly timely as women Suffrage was the topic uppermost in the minds of both men and women. Each member was assassed $1.00 with which an entire course was secured, the ladies entering into the study earnestly and enthusiastically.

Miss Virginia B Handley was a distinguished guest in October, 1920 when she gave an interesting account of her Red Cross work in France. The club contributed generously to this worthy cause.

In January, 1920, Mrs. Wales Wallace, who was one of the club's most active and helpful members, suggested we use the funds in the Treasury and establish a circulating library. This idea was recarded wholeheartedly. Mrs. Wallace, Mrs. Christian and Mrs. Benton, comprised the committee to select books and book cases. This was done and the library placed in the Columbiana Drug Store to be accessible to the public. After the books were read, they wer sent to the Traveling Rural Library and later a number were shipped to Florida for which a check for $25.00 was received.

At a meeting the same year a motion was made by Mrs. Benton, that instead of presenting gifts for score, a book be presented, lated to be placed in the library. This seems to have been a popular suggestion as the custom has continued for sixteen years.

Eech year since Federating, the club has sent a delegate to the meeting; and instructed her to contribute $5.00 to some worthy cause.

The week of November 1, 1920 was fittingly observed as Art Week and the program arranged appropriately.

The Smith-Towner, and Shepherd-Tower bills were endorsed in 1920 and mailed to each of our Senators. Contributions were made at this time to the Armenian Relief cause, from the library fund and from contributions from each member. The sum of ten dollars was given to both Armenian and European Relief.

In the spring of 1922 the club members attended the meeting of the State Federation of Clubs in a body. This meeting was in Montevallo.

Since 1924 a contribution of five dollars has been sent to Brother Tom Roberts for aiding in cleaning the cemetery, and at intervals, sums have been given to Parent-Teachers Association.

In 1924 the Circulating library was moved to Davis Drug Store. Child Welfare was assisted with a donation in 1925 and this continued for several years.

"Seeing America" was the subject for study in 1926. "Washington, the City Beautiful" being the first topic.

The club members joined the Parent-Teachers Association, making it 100% and most of the ladies retain their membership.

A scholarship fund of $80.00 a year was established and loaned to Josephine Nelson to study at Snead Seminary for two years. This was returned in 1927 and loaned to Geraldine Anderson and satisfied. Later in 1935 Lottie Wolf was sent to Alabama College for one year on the Scholarship fund. While these young women were in school, boxes of clothing were sent them at intervals.

A marker was placed on the grave of an old veteran buried in the Columbiana Cemetery in an unmarked grave.

Shrubry was purchased fod the churches and following the storm at Helena, sheets were sent to the needy.

The Welfare Committee has worked untiringly, sewing for the needly and arranging baskets of food at Thanksgiving and Christmas Time.

An unique program on January 1933 had for its subject "Menu-making and Favorite Receipts". Each club member brought her favoite receipt and exchanged with others. And another intersting program was "Current Events" and another was "Interesting People of Alabama" At every meeting, the programs have been especially interesting and instructive.

As a means of making money for expenditures, the club has depended on fees from its circulating library, dues, rummage sales, serving dinners for Exchange Club and selling articles made by the blind.

A flag for the Court House dome was purchased and erected in January, 1936. At this time a contribution was made to help restore General Lee's home into a National Shrine. The crippled children's clinic was given $12.50 in 1936 and $10.00 was loaned to a young Chelsea High school lad, for his books and matriculation fees at Vincent High.

These are only a part of the noble work the Culture Club is doing for the community. May we continue to carry on with the same helpful enthusiasm. Every one has something to give his community and if these gifts are assembled and put to use, much could be accomplished as has been shown in this History and accomplishments of our Club.

PETER HAS HARD WORK TO BELIEVE HIS EYES

THE very morning that Jimmy Skunk had decided to go see for himself the stranger of whom Sammy Jay and Blacky the Crow and Unc' Billy Possum told such strange stories Peter Rabbit had made up his mind that he just had to see for himself what was going on. He had not been into the deepest part of the Green Forest since the time when he had found the strange tracks in the snow. The truth is Peter had been afraid to go. But now his curiosity had been aroused so by what Sammy Jay and Blacky the Crow had said that he couldn't keep away any longer. First he looked for his cousin, Jumper the Hare. Jumper had not been afraid when Peter had told him about those strange tracks, and he felt sure that Jumper would not be afraid now. But Jumper was nowhere to be found. In fact, Peter had not seen him for some time, not since Sammy Jay had first come screaming out of the Green Forest with his story of the big stranger with the terrible claws.

So Peter had started off by himself. His heart went pit-a-pat, pit-a-pat and he sat up to look and listen so often that it took him longer than ever to reach the pond of Paddy the Beaver deep in the Green Forest. Not once had Peter seen or heard anything to make him afraid, and by the time he reached Paddy's pond he had begun to feel very brave and bold. In fact he had almost begun to doubt if there was any such stranger as Sammy had described.

Then all of a sudden, right on the shore of Paddy's pond, Peter saw a sight that made him quite gasp for breath. Yes, sir, it quite took Peter's breath away. What was it? Why, it was the meeting between Jimmy Skunk and the big stranger Sammy Jay had told about. He was very big, quite as big as Farmer Brown's boy, was the stranger and he wore a black fur coat just as Sammy had said. And there were the great big claws, the terrible claws, the most awful claws that Peter had ever dreamed of. As soon as he saw them Peter knew for sure that this stranger was the one who had made the big, strange tracks he had found in the snow in the deepest part of the Green Forest at the very last of winter. And now here was the great stranger with the terrible claws walking straight toward Jimmy Skunk and Jimmy didn't seem to know it. In fact Jimmy was resting and he looked very much as if he were going to take a nap. Peter wanted to shout and warn Jimmy. Then he thought of thumping. But he didn't do either. The fact is Peter didn't quite dare to.

But there was no need, for just then the stranger stepped on a stick and it broke with a snap. Jimmy Skunk turned about. Of course Peter expected to see Jimmy run as fast as ever he could. "Jimmy seldom hurries, but he will this time," thought Peter.

But Peter was wrong. Jimmy did nothing of the kind. For a minute he just stared and stared. The big black stranger kept right on coming. Then, instead of running, Jimmy went forward to meet him. Yes, sir, Jimmy Skunk just marched straight toward the stranger with his head and tail held high. The big black stranger stopped and eyed Jimmy a bit doubtfully. Then he stood up on his hind legs and he was as tall as Farmer Brown's boy. This made Jimmy stop for a minute. Never had he seen any one but Farmer Brown's boy himself who could stand like that. But it wouldn't do to let this stranger think that just because he was big and had cruel looking claws he could scare everybody, and so Jimmy once more marched forward. You know he really has a great deal of confidence in that little bag of scent he always carries with him. The stranger growled. Jimmy kept right on. Then what do you think happened? Why that great, big stranger began to back away! Peter Rabbit could hardly believe his own eyes.

Porcupines' Quills

Porcupines' quills are concealed in the fur and assume an upright position when the animal is disturbed. They are loosely attached to the body and come out upon the slightest contact with other objects. When attacked the porcupine thrashes about actively with its tail. If the tail comes in contact with brush or other objects the tail quills are likely to be knocked out or detached. Frequently they are scattered over a considerable area.

Use of Books

Books are the best of things, well used; abused, among the worst. What is the right use? What is the one end, which all means go to effect? They are for nothing but to inspire. I had better never see a book than to be warped by its attraction clean out of my own orbit, and made a satellite instead of a system.—Emerson.

How Constipation Causes Gas, Nerve Pressure

When you are constipated two things happen. FIRST: Wastes swell up the bowels and press on nerves in the digestive tract. This nerve pressure causes headaches, a dull, lazy feeling, bilious spells, loss of appetite and dizziness. SECOND: Partly digested food starts to decay forming GAS, bringing on sour stomach (acid indigestion), and heartburn, bloating you up until you sometimes gasp for breath.

Then you spend many miserable days. You can't eat. You can't sleep. Your stomach is sour. You feel tired out, grouchy and miserable.

To get the complete relief you seek you must do TWO things. 1. You must relieve the GAS. 2. You must clear the bowels and GET THAT PRESSURE OFF THE NERVES. As soon as offending wastes are washed out you feel marvelously refreshed, blues vanish, the world looks bright again.

There is only one product on the market that gives you the DOUBLE ACTION you need. It is ADLERIKA. This efficient carminative cathartic relieves that awful GAS at once. It often removes bowel congestion in half an hour. No waiting for overnight relief. Adlerika acts on the stomach and both bowels. Ordinary laxatives act on the lower bowel only.

Adlerika has been recommended by many doctors and druggists for 35 years. No griping, no after effects. Just QUICK results. Try Adlerika today. You'll say you have never used such an efficient intestinal cleanser.

WHO'S NEWS THIS WEEK...

By Lemuel F. Parton

NEW YORK.—George Wingfield, who has been rolling "snake eyes" for the last seven or eight years, is now making six or eight straight passes. I don't know whether the news has reached the East, but the word from Los Angeles is that he has regained ownership of the Golden and Riverside hotels in Reno and is again looking out from behind a tall stack of blue chips.

Wingfield Again "in the Money"

The one-time buckaroo and faro dealer who gained a fortune of $50,000,000 and owned and operated the sovereign state of Nevada for quite a few years, quietly faded out in 1933, told the court he was broke and relinquished the state with a sportsmanlike gesture. He implied that the croupier had stood him on his head. His friend, William H. Crocker, had a mortgage of $800,000 on his two hotels. He owned mines and ranches all over the state, in the somewhat metaphysical way in which people owned things then, but his equities came to just a couple of white chips to be tossed into the kitty. He did this gracefully and started out to get another stake, Senator Nixon of Nevada told me how he got his start.

"He walked into my office," said the senator, "and tossed something on my desk. It was a diamond ring. I haven't any idea how much it was worth. He said he had located a good-looking outbreak south of Goldfield and wanted me to grubstake him on the ring.

" 'I'm not running a hock shop,' I said. 'There's a three-ball joint around the corner.'

"He picked up the ring and started out. Before he got to the door, a sudden hunch hit me like a mule kick. I called him back and gave him $300 on the ring."

Wingfield had already staked his claim, and started a prospect hole.

Nixon Also Profited in Mine Venture

A little more digging, and there was the Consolidated mine, and riches for both Wingfield and Nixon. Also the start of Goldfield, a ghost town now, half-buried in sand, but a roaring desert metropolis for a few years. Wingfield's winning streak was on in those days and it was only a few months later that he broke the bank at the Tonopah club.

He joined the Montezuma club, got himself some nice store clothes, polished up his grammar and moved into circles of finance where the house percentage is doubtless stiffer than that of faro. But it seems that he is beating even that.

A FRIEND of this writer, who lived several years in Japan, suggests that, if, by accident, Foreign Minister Koki Hirota should find himself dressed in spats and pin-stripe trousers, but with an Oriental robe instead of a morning coat, he would find a middle way and solve the dilemma of Japan's half feudal, half modern industrial state.

Jap Minister Works Best in Native Attire

"He hates his morning coat and striped pants," said my friend. "When he gets home at night, he never loses a minute in getting into Oriental clothes. In the dress of an occidental diplomat, he works like one, as wily as the best of them, given to strategy and trick reasoning. At home, in a beautifully embroidered Japanese gown, he reads Confucius, as a pupil of the aged scholar, Mitsuru Toyama. I cite this duality of mind and dress merely as symbolic of the internal contending forces of Japan, vestigeal feudalism and Twentieth century industrial imperialism. In a very literal sense, this dead center of old and new epochs accounts for much in current Japanese statecraft that is bewildering to the modern mind.

"Hirota is not of the Samurai caste," he said, "but he stems from romantic old Japan and goes only part of the way with the Mitsuis and Mitsubishis of the great industrial dynasties who think they can shoot their way through to a vast Asiatic empire. In his youth, he was a zealous leader of the 'Zen' sect, tonsured Buddhists, whose gospel was humility, pacifism and turning the other cheek. Suddenly, he switched to the 'Black Sea' society, a fire-eating outfit of militarists and jingoes.

"HE WAS a stone mason's son, apprenticed as a stone cutter, and educated by the Geneyosha, a fervid patriotic society, with 'simplicity' for its motto. In his first effort, he failed to pass his examinations for entrance to the Imperial university, but tried again and was successful. He began as a government clerk, was advanced, entered the diet and finally the cabinet. He is an intelligent man, keenly aware of the anomalies and anachronisms of Japan's politics and social structure."

Lesson for October 3

CHRISTIAN SONSHIP

LESSON TEXT—I John 3:1-6, 18-24.

GOLDEN TEXT—But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name. John 1:12.

PRIMARY TOPIC—What John Learned from Jesus.

JUNIOR TOPIC—John's Way.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What Makes Us Children of God?

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Christian Sonship.

"Studies in the Christian Life." What an attractive title, and what interesting and instructive studies we are to share during the coming three months!

When setting out on a journey we want to know just where we are going. Just so when we take up a new study we need to define the limits of our subject. We are to study the Christian life—not life in general, not religious life, no, not even life in a Christian land or during the Christian era. It is therefore most appropriate that our first lesson in this series should tell us who the Christian is and how he lives.

I. God's Children—Who They Are (vv. 1-6).

1. They are "Born ones" (v. 1). The Revised Version correctly translates "sons" as "children." We are sons in our position, but we are children by the new birth. A man may attain the legal relationship of a son by adoption, but he can be a child only by birth.

2. They are separated ones (v. 1). The world, that is, unregenerate man, does not belong to this family of God. How hard it is for even church people to understand that fact. They do not appreciate and cannot understand God's children, because they themselves do not know God.

3. They are glorified ones (v. 2). "We shall be like him for we shall see him as he is." What a glorious hope, realized even now by faith in the hearts and lives of God's children. The present difference between God's children and the world is to become even greater, for in that day when Christ "shall appear" (for he is coming again!) God's children shall be like him. Spiritually and morally—yes, and even their bodies shall be transformed.

4. They are purified ones (vv. 3-6). The standard whereby the Christian measures his life is the purity of Christ. The question is not "How much purer am I than my friends and acquaintances?" No, the norm for the Christian life is far higher, we are to be purified as "he is pure."

All sin is a disregard of God's law (v. 4). His children do not thus defy Him. They have taken as their Saviour the one "who was manifested to take away sins." There was no sin in him, and the one who abides in him has victory and does not live in sin. He may fall into some act of sin, but in utter misery and repentance he turns from it to his Deliverer.

II. God's Children—How They Live (vv. 18-24).

Love is the supreme test of Christian profession. "We know we have passed out of death into life, because we love the brethren," says John in v. 14 (R. V.). How far should love go? "We ought to lay down our lives for the brethren" (v. 16).

Such a sacrifice is not often demanded of us, but the writer goes on to say that we may show that spirit in daily service to those in need.

1. In loving and sacrificial service (v. 18). Words may comfort and strengthen, especially when they are words of love. Love does not stop with words, however, but acts, reflecting the spirit of God, who not only is good, but does good.

2. In the assurance of faith (vv. 19-21). Assurance is the blessed privilege of the child of God. Well may we feel condemned when we measure our lives by his divine tests. But after all, even "if our heart condemn us, God is greater than our heart." Salvation does not depend on either our works or our feelings. It is of God. Does this condone sin? God forbid. We are rather so to walk that "our heart condemn us not."

3. In unquestioning obedience (vv. 22-24). The hallmark of character in a child is obedience. Scripture does not countenance the unfortunate standards of men on this point. The children of God "keep his commandments" which are beautifully summed up in v. 23 as believing in Christ and loving one another.

Divine Purpose

What is it after all which gives men the energy to do things seemingly impossible? It is, and always has been, the result of the divine purpose.

Bond of Perfectness

And above all these things put on charity, which is the bond of perfectness.

Honesty the Best Policy

Unimpaired integrity is an incomparable asset.

A Quiz With Answers Offering Information on Various Subjects

1. How much wood will a giant Sequoia tree yield?
2. How many persons out of a million will live to be one hundred years old?
3. Who was the first American to receive the Nobel prize for peace?
4. How fast can currency be counted?
5. Where is the oldest painting of the Virgin and Child in existence?
6. Does it cost more to educate a child in a city school than in a rural school?
7. When gold is hammered into the thinnest gold leaf possible, what color is it?
8. What is the definition of a split infinitive?

Answers

1. A giant California Sequoia tree yielded 3,000 posts, 650,000 shingles and 100 cords of firewood. The upper one-third and the branches of the huge tree were not used.

2. It is estimated about thirty in a million will live to this advanced age.

3. Theodore Roosevelt, for his efforts in bringing about the treaty of peace between Japan and Russia in 1905. It was awarded him in 1906.

4. The expert counters of the Department of the Treasury have counted approximately as many as 40,000 new notes a day, and 25,000 old ones.

5. The oldest painting of the Virgin and Child in existence, done about 150 A. D., is on a wall in the famous Priscilla catacombs in Rome.

6. The average cost to educate a child in a rural school in the United States is $53.31 a year, and the average in a city school is about $96.18.

7. In this condition it appears green by transmitted light.

8. A split infinitive is one in which an adverb is introduced between the word "to," and the verb form, such as "to largely decrease." The word "to" as used with the infinitive is not to be classed as a preposition; it is an integral part of the infinitive and hence should not be separated from the verb form.

Achievement of Peace

YOU may either win your peace or buy it; win it, by resistance to evil; buy it, by compromise with evil. You may buy your peace with silenced consciences; you may buy it with broken vows—buy it with lying words—buy it with base connivances—buy it with the blood of the slain, and the cry of the captives over hemispheres of the earth, while you sit smiling at your serene hearths, muttering continually to yourselves, "Peace, peace," when there is no peace; but only captivity and death for you.

We Humans

In going through life we often bewail our misfortunes, but seldom dwell upon our blessings; the illness is reckoned to a day, the bad debt to computed to a cent, the sleepless night is spoken of with deep self-commiseration; but we forget to reckon the many months of our health; we take as a thing of course, and not worth mentioning, that we enjoyed hours of calm and refreshing sleep undisturbed even by a dream. — Wamego Times.

THAT'S WHY YOU GET MORE FOR YOUR MONEY IN FIRESTONE STANDARD TIRES

FIRESTONE builds a first-quality tire made of top grade materials and sells it for less money because Firestone passes savings along to you in the form of extra values. Firestone controls rubber and cotton supplies at their sources, manufactures with greater efficiency and distributes at lower cost. Because of these economies —

YOU GET EXTRA PROTECTION AGAINST BLOWOUTS—eight extra pounds of rubber are added to every 100 pounds of cord by the Firestone patented Gum-Dipping process. By this process every fiber of every cord in every ply is saturated with liquid rubber. This counteracts dangerous internal friction and heat that ordinarily cause blowouts.

YOU GET EXTRA PROTECTION AGAINST PUNCTURES—because under the tread are two extra layers of Gum-Dipped cords.

YOU GET EXTRA PROTECTION AGAINST SKIDDING — because the tread is scientifically designed.

YOU GET LONGER NON-SKID MILEAGE—because of the extra tough, long-wearing tread.

Make your car tire-safe now for fall and winter driving. Join the Firestone SAVE A LIFE Campaign today by letting your nearby Firestone Dealer or Firestone Auto Supply and Service Store equip your car with a set of new Firestone Standard Tires — today's top tire value.

DON'T RISK YOUR LIFE ON SMOOTH WORN TIRES!

DO YOU KNOW

THAT last year highway accidents cost the lives of more than 38,000 men, women and children?

That a million more were injured?

THAT more than 40,000 of these deaths and injuries were caused directly by punctures, blowouts and skidding due to smooth, worn, unsafe tires?

At right is a section cut from a smooth, worn tire, with non-skid protection worn off. Tires in this condition are liable to punctures, blowouts and skidding.

At left is section cut from a new Firestone Tire. Note the thick, non-skid protection against skidding, blowouts and punctures. Come in and see a demonstration.

The name "capitol," usually spelled "Capitol" for the legislative building at Washington and "capitol" for the various state houses, is limited to the building itself. The seat of government of a country or state is its "capital."

Oriental Rugs Crooked

Most Oriental rugs have a woolen warp. They are apt to be crooked on account of the elasticity of the wool. For this reason cotton is supplanting wool, especially for the large rugs made to order for the European and American markets.

TO UNDERSTAND the heart of a railroad like the L. & N.—to understand why the L. & N. is your "Home Sweet Home on Rails," you have to look beyond thundering locomotives, steel rails, moving freight cars, and know something of its people.

We've been successful in creating a genuine southern "home" atmosphere on our road because, like yours, the lives of our 28,000 employees are bound up in homes and home-making.

Spread over 13 states, these men and women of the L. & N. live much the same as you do. They're useful citizens who send children to school, pay taxes, trade at the corner grocery, go to the movies, contribute to the development and prosperity of the towns and cities in which they live.

Their love of home and community makes it natural for them to think of the railroad they serve as your Home on Rails—helps them to take pride and pleasure in making you feel "at home on the L. & N."

That is why our employes strive—man to man—with one purpose, one creed, to make your journey as their guest so safe and pleasant—to make your shipment of freight in their care move so promptly—that you will want to patronize the L. & N. again.

Try the safe, friendly, dependable L. & N. way then, won't you, when you have a shipment to move or a trip to make?

What's RIGHT with ALABAMA

ALABAMA FORESTS

RIGHT with Alabama are her forest resources, and vast has been their contribution to state development.

Despite the fact that timber has been cut in enormous quantities over a period of many years, Alabama forest growth still remains at about 22 million acres, of which about 4 million is virgin timber, the rest second growth. So favorable are Alabama's soil and climate that our timber lands can be re-forested at an incredibly rapid rate.

Within the past quarter century, chemical discoveries have added vast new values to our forest resources. After experimenting many years with Southern pine, a method was evolved for using it in paper manufacture.

An Interesting Comment

John Temple Graves, II, Columnist for The Birmingham Age-Herald, reading an advertisement by Alabama Power Company, was inspired to write in the March 2, 1937, edition of his paper:

"'A tree that looks at God all day,
And lifts its leafy arms to pray . . .'

"Three cheers for the Alabama Power Company! Eager, as are all the electric power people, for the custom a great paper industry promises, this company is advertising its conviction that a tree must be planted for each tree cut to carry on the industry. And it has practiced what it is preaching to the extent of planting 310,000* pine seedlings near its Martin Dam. It is making of itself a propagandist for forest conservation, for establishing pine as a 'farm crop' in the poorer soil areas of the South. Here is enlightened self-interest at its most enlightened, and we, for one, are glad to give honor where it is due."

*Alabama Power Company has since established a nursery with a capacity of 1½ million tree seedlings annually.

But the Kraft paper industry which pioneered the field was only the beginning. Experiments of Dr. Chas. H. Herty, of Savannah, Ga., demonstrated that newsprint paper and many other paper products could be made from Southern pine. In the opinion of nationally-known paper engineers, the same favorable factors which brought about the tremendous expansion of Kraft paper production in the South will bring to this section a major share of the nation's newsprint industry.

But even this does not fulfill the final promise of the lowly Southern pine, which grows in such profusion in the soil of Alabama. The same Dr. Herty, who proved that newsprint paper could be made from pine, has solved the problem of producing from pine bleached sulphite pulp for the manufacture of high-grade book and magazine papers, household tissues, box board, etc.

And so the future of our forests, which have done so much to promote our progress, should yield still richer fruits for Alabama in the good years just ahead.

Social and Personal Mention

MILDRED WHITE WALLACE, Social Editor

HOW OLD IS THIS NEWSPAPER RACKET?

It is a long trek back thru the centuries to 30 B. C.! You would not likely think at this there existed a daily newspaper, yet records reveal this fact, and also that Julius Caesar was its founder. He introduced the daily publication of the news of the Roman Senate and the people. The "Acts of the Senate" were reported by trained writers and these facts were revised and edited a by Senator appointed for this purpose.

The "Acts of the Senate" grew into a daily of daily news known as the Acts of the City—Emperor Augustus, who reigned in Rome, discounaged the publication of the Senatorial Acts, but encouraged printing news of general interest.

In this age of modern, machinery linotypes and mechanical appliances used in grinding out the news, it is hard to contemplate the tasks assigned the Roman Slaves when copying the large editions of manuscripts—However with Slave labor, voluminous manuscripts were produced at minimum cost-about 12 cents in U. S. coin which included the entire cost of production, material and labor. Reading material was sold cheaply and Roman empire books were plentiful. This period is a memorable one in the art of ltierature.

As stated above, it is a long journey back thru the years from the year 30 B. C. to the year A. D. 1937 yet the importance of daily and weekly recordings of people and things has continued to live thru the ages. Interesting? Yes! Why? Because, after all, HUMAN BEINGS with their various faults and failures vices and virtues, still hold universal interest! A newspaper office brings you in contact with many different types of people. Many members of the Fourth Estate, those who represent this journalisitc field of activity, fail to employ the prime requisites of the Art they represent namely, COURTESY—CONSIDERATION—and— UNDERSTANDING of a fellow craftsman and the many ups and downs that beset the daily grind in News-Land. So it is an especially happy privilege to find one who typifies these requites and who daily puts them into pdactice we pause here to pay verbal to a fellow traveler along the inky trail and offer "honor to whom honor is due"—We refer to W. M. WYATT EDITOR AND PUBLISHER OF THE MONTEVALLO TIMES, who magnanimously and generously came to our rescue last week with his equipment and aided us in getting the Democrat out on time after an unexpected break down in our linotype, and he did it with a smile. For his cheerful respones to our S. O. S. ,for the kind understaning that years spent in this fascinating work has brought the popular Editor, and for the thygreat service he rendered the Shelby County Democrat, we proffer eternal appreciation.

Mack Wyat is a credit to the Craft he represents! He is big enough fod his job! Montevallo is to be congratulated upon acquiring his service as Editor of one of the best weeklies in Alabama; Shelby County is the richer for his citizenship; WE are happier for his FRIENDLY UNDERSTANDING and GENEROSITY. He possesses the qualifications which mert the success he now enjoys. We sincerely hope, down the corridors of Time—To—Be—we shall have the privilege of returning in a measure his kindness. Rest assured, it will be happy task we shall eagerly undertake, when and if we are accorded the chance.

It is indeed a refreshing experience to meet one who can and does rise above a petit selfishness warped with personal prejudice to lend a helping hand. "He who can do this has the whole world with him. He who cannot—walks a LONELY WAY". Mac Wyatt will never be lonely, nor lack for FRIENDS—Heaven's richest gift to mankind!

HITS NAZIISM IN AMERICA

Strong Words by Legion Commander . . . President Refuses to Abandon Fight for Court Rejuvenation

American Legion Members From West Reach New York City by Airplane for Their National Convention.

Edward W. Pickard
SUMMARIZES THE WORLD'S WEEK

© Western Newspaper Union.

Legion Head Hits Naziism

FOUR hundred thousand members of the American Legion and their families and friends gathered in New York for the annual convention of the organization which opened with a memorial service for dead veterans. Parades, sham battles and plenty of fun-making marked the proceedings, but the former soldiers also gave much time to serious business. Harry W. Colmer, retiring national commander, delivered a notable report on his stewardship, warning against dangers confronting the nation from within and without.

Harry W. Colmer

Colmer declared attempts to subjugate judiciary would destroy the "checks and balances" in government; and he proposed that the American Legion undertake an educational program on the principles set forth in the Constitution. He asked each post to hold at least one meeting this fall on the basic law.

The commander's warning against perils from without led him to condemn severely German propaganda in the United States and the alleged action of the German government in fostering the organization of Nazi groups and camps in this country. This he called "a gratuitous insult to our free institutions."

President on Constitution

ALL orators on the one hundred fiftieth anniversary of the signing of the Constitution were loud in praise of that great document. President Roosevelt, speaking from the foot of the Washington monument, was emphatic in his expression of admiration for and loyalty to the basic law which his opponents have accused him of trying to undermine. But he called it a "layman's constitution" and a "lawyer's contract." He reiterated his assertions that the Constitution was intended by its makers to be a statement of objectives and not a rigid document, and declared democratic government in this country can do all things which "commonsense people, seeing the picture as a whole, have the right to expect."

"I believe that these things can be done under the Constitution without the surrender of a single one of the civil and religious liberties it was intended to safeguard," Mr. Roosevelt continued, "and I am determined that under the Constitution those things shall be done."

Sharply condemning dictatorships abroad, Mr. Roosevelt said there is a crisis in American affairs that threatens our democracy and that if that democracy is to survive, it must meet the demands of the people for economic and social security and improved standards of living. Plutocratic and proletarian dictatorships, said he, are equally dangerous.

That the President has not abandoned his fight for "rejuvenation" of the Supreme court was made clear by the tenor of his address, and it was expected that he would continue that campaign on his trip to the Pacific Coast, which he began in a private car equipped with a loud speaker. On his way to visit his daughter in Seattle and on the return trip he was to enter the home states of several senators who were active in opposition to the Supreme court enlargement scheme.

Vandenberg's Battle Cry

"WE HAVE just begun to fight" was the battle cry adopted by Senator Vandenberg of Michigan in a speech at Bay City that was taken as the opening of his campaign for the Republican Presidential nomination in 1940. He made it evident that he hopes to be the standard bearer for a coalition party, asserting that a realignment of political parties is inevitable. Indeed, he declared, this probably was the one thing that could save our national institutions. He was not so sure that the opposition to the Roosevelt policies would unite under a new party name. Said he:

"There may be a realistic realignment which will bring like-thinking patriots into common battle front, whether they live north or south of the Mason and Dixon line, whether they live east or west of the Mississippi."

What Will Hughes Do?

OBJECTIONS to the seating of Hugo Black as a justice of the Supreme court on the constitutional ground that the emoluments of the office were raised while Black was a senator brought Chief Justice Hughes back to Washington before his vacation was ended. Associate Justice Brandeis also returned to the capital and he and Hughes were expected to confer on the matter and to examine the objections. Just what Mr. Hughes or any other member of the court could do was uncertain. Constitutional lawyers agree that Black could not be denied his seat because he was a member of the Ku Klux Klan, but many of them thought the court, if it decides to take jurisdiction, could bar him on constitutional grounds. There was reason to believe this solution of the exceedingly unpleasant matter would suit President Roosevelt. Should the President ask Black to resign, the latter might refuse, and that would be most embarrassing for Mr. Roosevelt.

Eden Still Hopeful

ANTHONY EDEN, British foreign minister, hurried from Geneva to attend a special cabinet meeting to which he reported on developments in the Mediterranean situation that is so threatening to European peace. He told of Italy's reiteration of its demand for parity in the "anti-piracy" patrol, and it was believed both he and Prime Minister Chamberlain were hopeful that a rupture could be averted by a partial yielding to Mussolini in this matter. British public opinion was said to be strongly against a complete concession.

Anthony Eden

Meanwhile events in the Mediterranean were not such as to bolster Eden's peaceful designs. The British aircraft carrier Glorious reported it had been attacked by a submarine near Malta just as it arrived to take part in the patrol of the sea. Also the admiralty announced an unidentified airplane dropped six bombs close to the destroyer Fearless. The British and French fleets began their search for "pirate" submarines,

Spain's premier, Juan Negrin, stood up before the League of Nations and fearlessly presented the evidence of Italian and German intervention in the Spanish civil war, demanding that the league take steps to stop it. He called Mussolini and Hitler "international highwaymen." French Foreign Minister Delbos backed up Negrin's demands in words which were taken to mean that if Italy sends substantial reinforcements to Franco, Spanish rebel leader, or perhaps if she even refuses to withdraw her forces already there, France would consider her security menaced.

The assembly of the League of Nations voted down the Spanish government's request for re-election as a member of the league council.

What Irvin S. Cobb Thinks about

Our National Bird.

LAS VEGAS, NEV. — Those folks back East who're agitating to make the turkey our national bird are late. Benjamin Franklin had the same notion 150 years ago.

Old Ben pointed out that the eagle was a robber and a tyrant and was the emblem of various European monarchies, whereas the turkey was not only our largest and gamest wild bird, but a native of America.

Irvin S. Cobb

To be sure, young turkeys aren't so smart. They love to get their feet wet so they may die from it. In dry sections, young turkeys have been known to jump down an artesian well 90 feet deep in order to get their feet wet. But the adult turkey is wise and wily, a noble spectacle in the woods and popular in a cooked state, owing to his magnificent bust development and his capacity for holding stuffing or insertion, and his superiority when worked over into turkey hash.

But if we are going to make a change in emblems, why not choose the worm—the humble, dumb, unresisting worm—as typical of most of the present populace? It could be a one-sided worm, too, which would save costs in modeling, because so many of us are the kinds of worms that never turn.

The Sucker Crop.

PARLIAMENT, next month, will pass statutes to curb stock market tricksters, fly-by-night brokers, and bucket shop operators who, it's estimated, are fleecing the British public to the tune of $25,000,000 annually.

We've tried it and it doesn't work. As Barnum stated, a sucker is born every minute — and sometimes twins. But the crooks who prey on the sucker crop, like the Dionne quintuplets, come along in batches. That breed spawn close to shore and the young all survive.

Thus is the rule of supply and demand balanced. In good times, there are just enough suckers to go around. In hard times, the suckers grow scarce, but, when one comes along, the crooks raffle him off and the winner takes all.

Anyhow, legislation won't save a sucker from himself—at least not in this country. He'll break through the law in order to prove he's a sucker in good standing in the suckers' lodge.

By the way, brother-member, how many degrees have you taken?

Restrained Statements.

A WAYFARER in Oklahoma, who claimed to have starved himself for forty-one days, on being asked how he felt, replied that he felt sort of hungry. Investigation showed the stranger had been cheating now and then to the extent of a clandestine beef stew or a surreptitious stack of wheats, but wasn't it a magnificently restrained statement?

For underemphasis, I can think of but a single instance to match it. In my youth, we had a policeman in our town with a nervous mannerism of killing folks.

One night, I was passing Uncle Tom Emery's saloon and snack-stand for colored only. A group of subdued-looking customers fetched out the limp remains of a dark person who had been bored thrice through the heart.

"Uncle Tom," I inquired of the proprietor, "isn't that Monkey John?"

"Sho' is suh."

"How did it happen?" I asked.

"Well, suh," said Uncle Tom, "It seem like he musta antagonized Mr. Buck Evitts."

Smoked Glasses for Snakes.

ON THE way here, I attended this year's snake dance. The snake dance has become indeed a strange sight—for the snakes. If the tourists don't modify their wardrobes by next year, I expect to see the snakes wearing smoked glasses. Veteran snakes that have taken part during past seasons are showing signs of the strain. The bull snakes still hiss—as who could blame them?—but the rattlers no longer rattle freely, evidently fearing it might be mistaken for applause.

The commissioner of Indian affairs wants the Navajoes to grow fewer goats. The Navajoes are balking. Goat hair is a profitable crop; goat meat makes good eating—for an aborigine stomach, anyhow—and goat smell is agreeable for Navajo noses. It seems to neutralize some of the other perfumes noticed during shopping hour in a reservation trading post.

SEEN and HEARD around the NATIONAL CAPITAL

By Carter Field

FAMOUS WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENT

Washington.—What amounts to a bad case of jitters over possible war and its effects on America, aggravating a business situation which is none too satisfactory, is obvious in administration circles, particularly in the Federal Reserve board.

This is the second reason for the recent action desterilizing $300,000,000 of the frozen gold. The effect desired to remedy both troubles was to insure continuance of low interest rates. Primarily, putting this huge amount of gold back in use, so to speak, was aimed at preventing the slide in government bond prices.

Government bonds have been selling at a price absurdly high—from an investor's standpoint—even with due allowance for their tax advantages. Moreover, the banks have entirely too large a proportion of their assets tied up in government securities. But just the same the government did not want to see a decline in bond prices. That would spell higher interest rates on future government financing.

But that secondary reason, to make money cheaper for investment purposes in order to encourage expansions by existing business concerns and the development of new business, was also quite important.

Most experts in international affairs do not believe there will be a world war this year. They think the nations most likely to provoke such a war are not ready. But there is constantly in mind the danger that the situation may get out of hand.

Memory is still green about what happened to American business at first, when the war broke out in Europe in 1914. After a while business boomed, the war babies in steel and munitions grew and bloomed. The price of sugar and cotton soared.

But all this was much later. The first reaction was such a crash on the stock market that it was necessary to shut it down and keep it closed for months. The price of cotton dropped until President Wilson himself was encouraging the "Buy a Bale of Cotton" movement.

Take Precautions

Nobody knows just what would happen this time, should the crisis develop this year instead of 1938 or 1939. The year 1939, by the way, is preferred by most experts as the most likely time for the next world war. So the reserve system is just taking precautions, providing in advance the certainty of plenty of cheap money to cushion possible temporary drops in prices, not only of securities, but commodities.

This cushion, most experts figure, would be necessary for only a short time. Ways and means would be found by the belligerents to get needed supplies from America despite any and all obstacles, the neutrality law and the reluctance of this country to buy foreign bonds or extend war credits to the contrary notwithstanding.

Very confidentially, of course, officials admit that the neutrality law would not prevent United States manufacturers from selling airplanes, or tanks, or cotton, or copper to neutral countries from which they could quite simply be shipped to belligerents. But this would take time—that is, to get the new roads to the market in working condition. But the sort of trade that made Holland rich during the last war would certainly develop in some way or other.

All of which, however, does not reassure the people who seem to want to get rid of their securities so as to be ready to jump into something new under changed conditions, or perhaps just with an idea of playing safe. This attitude adds on to the desire of so many to hedge against inflation.

Gets a Laugh

There are lots of chuckles in Washington, and especially in the State department, at James W. Gerard's new job. The idea of the wartime ambassador to Germany and Democratic war-chest fund provider figuring in a tourist agency strikes the average diplomat and the average political bigwig as sort of a comedown.

But the job is far from a joke. Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes does not think it is a joke. Neither do the railroads leading to the West, nor the hotel men from the Rockies to the Pacific. They think "Jimmy" has what it takes to bring them some new business, and very high-class new business at that—suites instead of singles with baths in the hotels, drawing-rooms and compartments instead of tourist sleepers on the railroads.

For Gerard's job is to make desirable to his old friends in Germany and throughout Europe—and to their friends—and through the resulting publicity to many more—the attractions of Yellowstone, Yosemite, Glacier and Grand Canyon National parks, to mention just a few of the highlights. And of course any foreign tourist making this "big circle" would also visit San Francisco, and Seattle, and Portland, yes, and even Hollywood.

All of which means a lot more money spent—money which otherwise would stay in Europe. It means a lot of food sold in the most profitable way.

But that's just the commercial aspect of his "joke job" that Gerard has undertaken.

It's a bromide in the West that the New Yorkers think anything west of the Hudson river is unimportant, save perhaps on election nights. "Out there" is just the provinces, from which one returns, when one has to go there at all, as speedily as possible.

But if that "west of the Hudson river" is changed to "west of the Mississippi" a lot of folks in this country might be included!

An Eye-Opener

The late Charles F. Murphy, famed boss of Tammany Hall when that venerable institution amounted to a lot more than it does now, had plenty to say to friends when he returned from the Democratic national convention at San Francisco. He told friends he thought every American ought to make a trip to the Pacific coast, just to see what this country was really like.

When it comes to Europeans seeking to understand America, and usually writing a book about it after a few weeks' stay, the question becomes even more important. It sounds as if Gerard's job is just to sell the cultured Europeans whom he got to know during his diplomatic service the western scenery of America. Actually of course that is all he is appointed to do, because that is what the national park service is interested in doing.

But a visitor cannot see the Grand canyon, and Yellowstone, and Glacier and Yosemite without seeing a pretty good cross-section of the United States doing it. And he or she would get a very different slant on this country from that which is normally acquired by the average distinguished visitor on a lecture tour, rushing from lecture to reception to autographing stand in the big store's book section.

It may actually prove very important in future international relations!

About Sugar

Sugar always has been political dynamite, is now, and probably always will be. Concern about the interests of the housewives and consumers generally has been the bunk, in the opinion of this writer and most observers, ever since sugar became an issue under the original protective tariff, with just one exception.

That exception was under the Underwood-Simmons tariff bill, passed immediately after Woodrow Wilson entered the White House, and which did not prove very satisfactory. It deprived the government of a revenue of around $60,000,000 a year, which, in those days, was important money from the Treasury standpoint. For a time also it played hob with the Louisiana cane interests. Then along came the war and sugar prices began to soar regardless of any governmental policy.

From the progressive viewpoint, the worst tariff of all was that passed under President Hoover, in which the duty on sugar was fixed at two cents. It happens, however, that Americans were paying, during that period, just two cents above the world price. In short, the duty determined precisely the differential.

But under the quota system, which any economist or free trader will admit is much worse than the tariff system in practical workings, Americans were paying, around the first of this month, 2.38 cents a pound above the world price! So the consumer is getting it in the neck even worse than under the Hawley-Smoot tariff.

Hits Consumer

Assuming this, it becomes interesting to discover just what they are doing to American consumers of sugar in the way of profiteering. According to computations following the formula approved by the United States District court for southern New York, the profits of the refiners during 1936 averaged seven cents on every hundred pounds of sugar. For the year 1935 the refiners' profit averaged six cents on every hundred pounds. And in 1934 the profits averaged five cents on every hundred pounds. The year 1935 was thrown out of line by some bad calculating on the part of the refiners as to advance buying under the quota system. Briefly, they were "caught short." They had sold sugar at a price in advance and then had to pay more for the raw sugar than they had calculated.

This profit seems rather unimportant, from the housewives' standpoint, when one figures that the excise tax on sugar (on both domestic and imported) is one-half a cent a pound, ten times the 1935 refiners' profit. And sympathy with the consumer is rather strained when it is considered that the administration wanted this tax to be three-quarters of a cent a pound instead of half a cent!

"Don't let old inferiority complex get you, Sammy," Brooke warned. "Lucette and I know that this play of yours will be box-office, that it will set your name in lights on Broadway. Can't you just see Mother flying across the ocean—if necessary—for the premiere? We'll all have ravishing costumes and—"

Memory side-tracked her voice. She and Lucette couldn't go to New York for the opening. Suppose she didn't get the Palm Beach job? She would have no money. She shook herself mentally.

"What an emotional gal you are, Brooke. You've gone white with excitement over what may never happen. 'Tisn't likely a break like that will come my way," Sam prophesied gloomily.

Brooke swallowed the lump in her throat. Sam mustn't suspect why she had gone white. She said in a voice drenched with mystery:

"Listen, you two, I'm getting fed-up with country life. The day after the play we'll open the apartment."

"That'll make a big hit with me, but first, unless we want to be late for Trent's party, folks, we'd better start with a hey-nonny-nonny for the big city." Sam added, "You two certainly have the million-dollar look, girls, if you are my sisters."

CHAPTER XII

Mark Trent glanced at Brooke Reyburn seated at his right in the dim Mirror room of the recently opened Supper club. Light from the illuminated table-top brought out the copper glints in her air, the glow in her radiant eyes, and laid a pinkish sheen over the gleaming silver of her frock. Why wasn't she wearing his orchids? Doubtless the answer to that was that she preferred gardenias. Had Field sent them?

What chance had he, a man whose life had been twisted and tangled by a tragic marriage, against gay, debonair Jerry Field? None, he answered promptly, and as promptly told himself that Brooke must love him. That marriage was years behind him. Why allow the memory of it to creep back tonight when for the first time in days his mind had been free of the haunting vision of Lola as he had seen her last?

He forced his thoughts from the past to observe his guests. The rhinestone straps of Daphne Field's blossom-pink satin frock scintillated with rainbow sparks with every movement of her body. Lucette was adorable in a fluffy white and gold thing which accentuated her rich brunette coloring. Sam was observing the crowd through narrowed eyes; Jerry Field was talking in a low voice to Lucette. Jed Stewart was on the other side of Brooke.

The orchestra glided into a rhythmic invitation. The diners sprang to their feet. Old men slipped an arm about women who snuggled. Young men slipped an arm about women who laughed; tough men planted well-groomed hands on the enameled backs of women who stumbled. One couple kissed lingeringly as they passed. Lover's eyes sought lover's eyes; white hands clung; hushed voices questioned.

Jerry Field and Lucette left the table. Sam groaned and held out his hand to Daphne.

"Come on, let's get it over. I suppose you'd like to step?"

"Of course I would, martyr!" She slipped a white arm about his neck.

"Nothing unsteady about her tonight," Mark thought. He pushed into the background the memory of the night he had had to steady her to the car. He had liked her, she had been amusing, but he had not invited her out after that. She had taken little wine tonight, Lucette had barely touched hers, Brooke had refused it. Now her eyes were following her brother. Was she worried about Daphne's influence on Sam?

He watched her, watched the throbbing pulse in her throat which made him think of the beat of tiny wings against bars.

As if she felt his intense concentration on her, Brooke looked at him with questioning eyes. Mark smiled in response.

"Did you know that I was thinking of you? I was hoping that you were not worrying about Sam and Daphne. If you are, don't."

"Thanks, I'm not. If that were all I had on my mind, my heart would be so light that it would be bumping against the ceiling like a runaway balloon."

"What is troubling you? Can't I help?"

"No, thanks. No!"

"That was emphatic, almost as if you were afraid of me. Care to dance?"

Brooke motioned toward the couples packed in so close they could barely move.

"You don't call that dancing, do you? But do dance yourself. You must know every attractive girl here. You have risen to bow at two minute intervals ever since we arrived at this table. I'm just being noble, setting you free to dance with someone else."

"Thanks for the consideration, but the only girl with whom I care to dance is sitting at this table. You wouldn't encourage a host to leave his guest of honor, would you?"

He glanced at the gardenias on her shoulder.

"Don't you care for orchids? I should have sent violets. I know you like them. You wore them the first time we met; no, it was the second time."

"The orchids were beautiful." Brooke traced a pattern on the illuminated table-top. "Sometime I'll tell you why I didn't wear them tonight."

"Are you engaged to Field?"

She shrugged lovely shoulders and glanced up provocatively.

"You fairly gnashed that question. You are miscast in 'Islands Arise'; Sam ought to write something for you in which you could play an ogre. You've just the voice for it."

"All right. I'm an ogre. Meanwhile, how about answering that question?"

"I said that sometime I would tell you why I didn't wear the orchids; that doesn't mean tonight; it means after the play and your party. However, had I been a perfect lady, I would have said, 'Thank you billions' for the flowers long before this. Curious how accustomed we have become to thinking in billions, isn't it?"

"It's Zero Hour, Brooke."

"I don't want your thanks, I want — " Mark disciplined his stormy voice. "Remember that afternoon in Jed's office?"

"The afternoon you refused to marry me?"

"Haven't you forgotten that?"

"There are some things one doesn't forget."

"Then here is something to put beside it in your memory book. Will you marry me, Brooke?"

She looked up with startled eyes, then laughed.

"That proposal—if it is a proposal?"

"It is."

"Has all the fire and ardor of a silent policeman."

"Shall I give a demonstration of fire and ardor?"

"No! Of course not! Don't look at me as if you were trying to see the wheels of my mind go round."

"I hadn't gone much deeper than your eyes. Have you never been told that you have beautiful eyes? You haven't answered my question. Will you marry me?"

The orchestra was playing a soft swaying accompaniment to a baritone voice singing before the microphone:

"I only love one and that one is you,
And that one is you."

There was a burst of applause from the dancers.

Mark reminded:

"You haven't answered my question, Brooke."

Her eyes were brilliant with anger as they met his.

"I answered it the second time you refused to marry me. Perhaps you have forgotten that. I haven't."

Mark crushed back a mad impulse to kiss her contemptuous lips until she went limp in his arms. Repression sent the dark color to his face.

"No, I haven't forgotten that you said that you wouldn't marry me if I were the only man in the world, that divorced men left you cold."

She laid her hand on his sleeve.

"I was sorry the moment I said that. Really I was. Please forget it."

The maitre d'hotel stopped at the table. He glistened from the top of his sleek black head to his patent leather shoes. He looked Italian with a streak of Turk; he spoke American with a French accent.

"Good evening, Mr. Trent. Glad to see you here, sir."

"How are you, Franchot? This crowd looks like prosperity back to stay."

"Business has been good ever since we opened. We had so many reservations for this evening we had to reinforce the staff of waiters and bus-boys. I don't like strange help in a jam like this, but what else could we do?"

The lights in the room dimmed. The dancers returned to their tables. The singer in her glittering sequins stepped to the stage. The orchestra leader nestled his violin under his chin, laid his fingers on the strings and drew his bow with a flourishing sweep. The spotlight traveled about the room, whitening faces, setting rhinestones on a shoulder-strap agleam, brightening already too bright eyes, striking rainbow fire from the jewels on the breast of a grande dame. It lingered at a table.

Brooke gripped Mark's arm. She leaned close, whispered:

"Quick! Where the light is! The waiter! He's the man who ran through my room!"

Behind the scenes in the Club House theater, Brooke, as property woman, checked her list for the last time. Every article which the characters would need to take to the stage was present and accounted for. Almost time for the curtain. If only her heart wouldn't pound so. It shook her body. But hadn't her body shaken with excitement whenever she had seen Sam act? He was coming. He was almost as white as the shirt-front of his evening clothes, his eyes were like flames as he stopped beside her.

"Just had a cable from Mother wishing me luck. It's zero hour, Brooke. Locate the producer and manager out front. Watch 'em. If they go out after the first act and don't come back, the play's washed up; if they sit through the second, it's got a chance; if they come back for the third, boy!" He turned to Jerry Field who was like a stranger in his make-up.

"Go on to that stage, Jerry, and whang the ball!"

Field nodded to Brooke before he disappeared into the wings. Should she wish Sam luck, his sister wondered? Better not.

The stage was cleared. Lucette, Daphne and Jerry Field went on and took their places. Sam was in the wings! Jed was at the switchboard! The curtain man was waiting for his signal! Sam raised his hand. The house dimmed. He wigwagged with two fingers. Jed brought up his lights. The orchestra stopped playing. Another motion of Sam's hand and the curtain rose slowly. Brooke's heart parked in her throat, running on high.

Lucette waited for the greeting of applause to quiet before, without a trace of nervousness, she spoke her first line. Sam nodded approval, frowned as Daphne answered shakily. Brooke couldn't see the stage, but she could hear the voices. Jed Stewart was red and perspiring under the responsibility of getting the actors on and off. Once as he passed her he whispered:

"Get a peek at Mrs. Gregory out front, third row, center. She's blazing with jools."

"Has the New York producer come?"

He nodded. "Second row, center. Sleek blond fella, with a grand marcelle." He caught Sam's eyes glaring at them and disappeared.

Every sentence moved the play forward, unfalteringly. Jerry Field had been on and off before Mark Trent, in his blue lounge coat, appeared to make his first entrance. As he approached the wings, his eyes, smiling, disconcertingly intent, met and held Brooke's and set the blood tingling in her cheeks.

The rehearsal last night had been so hectic he had had time only to tell her that Jed Stewart had left the Supper club to report about the waiter to Inspector Harrison. In the morning paper she had seen a statement that the bandit in the Hunt filling station case was being trailed to Canada. Of course she hoped that he would be caught, but it was a relief to know that he was far away from what newspapers would call the scene of his crime.

She could hear Mark Trent's voice, faintly ironic. It was her cue to start the phonograph which was to produce a song as if sung in the street below.

" 'In the gloaming, oh my darling,
Think not bitterly of me.' "

The sweetness and fervor of the man's voice brought a terrifying ache to Brooke's throat, a burning beneath her eyelids, as with the small machine in her hands she walked away to give the effect of music fading in the distance.

" 'It was best to leave you thus, dear,
Best for you and best for me.' "

The last word thinned into silence. Mark Trent's cue.

"That song is old stuff, but sure fire. Believe it, Madge?"

PAT WINS AGAIN

An American tourist, holidaying by the Lakes of Killarney, decided that he ought to impress the natives with the importance of "God's own country."

He found it rather hard to get any of the "locals" to listen to his wonderful tales of doings in America, says London Answers Magazine, but one evening he came across an Irishman who was willing to listen.

"You know," drawled the American at last, "in my country it's so wet we have to go about the streets in boats."

"Begorrah!" cried Pat, interrupting. "And that's nothing. Here it's so wet that we do be going down in submarines to milk the cows."

POP KNOWS THINGS

Billie—Daddy, do the squirrels live in the trees?

Daddy—Right in the trees, my boy.

Billie—But where do they keep all their things?

Daddy—Why—why—in a trunk, of course.

Saw It All

Two Irishmen came to a railroad crossing. The gates were down.

Stopping the car, they settled down until the train should pass, but both were soon asleep.

With thundering wheels the express dashed past, causing them to open their eyes.

"I say," said one, "wasn't that a well lighted village we passed through?"

"Yes," yawned his companion, "an' did you notice that the first house was on fire?"—Exchange.

Like the Climate

"When your wife gets angry does she cry?"

"Yes," said Mr. Meekton, "it isn't that warmth of temper I fear so much as the humidity."

Short Cut

Wife—Dear, I saw the sweetest little hat downtown today.

Husband—Put it on; let's see how you look in it.—The Rail.

Good Boy

Father (to son at end of school term)—Well, my son, what results have we this term?

Son—Not so bad, dad. I am next to the top boy when we stand round in a ring.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

Two Sides to It

It was a few days after a big party when two friends met.

"Well, old man, how did you get along after I left you? Get home all right?" asked one.

"No, a confounded policeman took me to the station, where I had to spend the night."

"You were lucky. I got home."

JUST LIKE HIM

"Did the shark stick anyone with his worthless stock?"

"Yes, the poor sucker."

Becoming Modesty

"Are you going to conduct a campaign for education?"

"No," replied Senator Sorghum. "My constituents know so much now that I've got to study to keep up with them."

Career Man

"It ain't that I'm afraid to work, ma'am, but there ain't much doing in my particular line."

"Why, what are you?"

"I am a window-box weeder, ma'am."—Farm & Ranch.

Why Men Leave Home

Mr. Newedd—What is the matter, dear?

Mrs. Newedd—I can't understand it. The recipe said to bring it to a boil on a quick fire and then beat it for 10 minutes. And when I came back it was burnt to a crisp.

Securing Relief

"Miss Croonmore is going abroad to finish her musical education."

"Where did she get the money?"

"The neighbors all subscribed!"—Stray Stories Magazine.

The Happiness Trio

PRIDE goeth with Fall and glamor, too, Milady, when you wear distinguished fashions by Sew-Your-Own! Today's trio gives youth a chance to express itself in an individual manner; gives the adult figure an opportunity to display a new high in chic, and last—but we wouldn't say least—a utility model that's as right for daughter as for mother, as attractive on cousin Emma as it is on Aunt Grace.

Swank 'n' Sweet.

Young and inspired is the little two piecer that just stepped into the picture at the left. The topper is one that will set a vogue in this woman's town and make you the swankiest of the whole lot of Lafa-Lots. If you're asked to picnic in the colorful Autumn woods, wear this number in henna-colored wool for real satisfaction and that perfect harmony that makes picnicking a picnic.

For Kitchen Capers.

And before you go, there'll be sandwiches to make, potatoes to peel, and lemons to squeeze—that's where and when the gingham gown in the center comes in. Of course, its novel yoke-and-sleeve-in-one construction makes it a most attractive model to sew as well as to wear. The skirt has flare enough for cutting those kitchen capers one has to when minutes are few and work plentiful. Make this simple five-piece frock in two versions and be sure of everyday chic at minimum cost.

Style Success.

While we go picnicking and places, don't think Mommy isn't going to swing out in style, too. She's certain of success when she goes to her Club; she's sure of well-groomed elegance for Sunday best in the slenderizing frock at the right. It does wonders for the figure that needs it, and it is equally becoming to sizes 18 and 20. So, Mommy, no matter what your size or the color of your hair, you'll be young enough and slim enough in this frock to feel like the very essence of fashion.

The Patterns.

Pattern 1336 is designed for sizes 12 to 20 (30 to 38 bust). Size 14 requires 5½ yards of 35 inch material plus 4⅝ yards of 1¾ inch bias strip for fold for trimming.

Pattern 1381 is designed for sizes 14 to 44. Size 16 requires 3¼ yards of 39 inch material.

Pattern 1286 is designed for sizes 36 to 48. Size 38 requires 4⅜ yards of 39 inch material.

How CARDUI Helps Women

Cardui is a purely vegetable medicine, found by many women to ease functional pains of menstruation. It also helps to strengthen women, who have been weakened by poor nourishment, by increasing their appetite and improving their digestion. Many have reported lasting benefit from the wholesome nutritional assistance obtained by taking Cardui. If you have never taken Cardui, get a bottle of Cardui at the nearest drug store, read the directions and try it.

County Election To Be Held October 11

On next Monday, October 11, the County three mill school tax election is to be held. This election is to determine whether or not this tax will be extended for an additional ten years. The tax is not a new tax It has been levied in Shelby County for twenty years.

According to Superintendent J L Appleton the tax is necessary for the operation of the normal seven months elementary term and nine months high school term. Without it, even with all state appropriations paid in full, Shelby County could not have full term schools.

Superintendent Appleton states that the ten year extension is being asked at this time, mainly, so that the County Board can qualify for federal aid in erecting needed class rooms. Not less than forty new class rooms are needed in the County. Without them the school children of the county are handicapped and in some instances life and health are endange ed A vote yes on nex Monday will help in remeding theseconditions.

A A LAUDERDALE CALLS FARMERS MEETING

Dear Friends:

A meeting is called for 2 o'clock Saturday October 9 at the Courthouse in Columbiana.

The purpose of this Meeting is to discuss National Farm Legislation, and to get an expression from farmers of Shelby County on this important matter.

As you recall, Congress passed a resolution making Farm Legislation the first order of business when they return to Washington. I hope you will take off a few hours and meet with us, so that we may be able to report the wishes of the farmers of Shelby County.

Most people are agreed that we need a better price for cotton and want Congress to work out a program to the best interest of all farmers.

Looking forward to seeing you at the meeting next Saturday, and with best wishes, I am.

Very truly yours,
A. A. Lauderdale

TUSCALOOSA NATIVE STATES .... DARK HORSE WILL ENTER SENATORIAL RACE

According to William L. White, Tuscaloosa Safety Engineer, who was a candidate for Lieut. Govonor in 1930, a Dark Horse who is well known in business and political circle will enter the race for United States Senate before the dead line for filing qualifications, requirements is up. Many thousands over Alabama regret being forced into a choice between the two avowed candidates J. Thomas Heflin and Hon. Lister Hill, Mr. White states, and the aforementioned "dark horse" is now engaged in making a tour of the Counties in Alabama before filing his formal announcement, "but will dose as soon as he visits the remaining 19 counties which he has not yet visited."

Mr. White's statement that a third candidate will enter the race has stired new political interest in thesenatorial race and caused wide flung speculation as to the identity of the "dark horse".

UP AND DOWN MAIN

Mr and Mrs John Thomas Goodwin and daughter moved to Birmingham Monday where Mr Goodwin has accepted a position with T C I

The many friends of Mrs. Jones, wife of the Rev. Jones of the Baptist Church in Columbiana, will be glad to hear she is improving in a Birmingham hospital following a serious operation, Monday.

Jean Letson, Jeanette Niven and Mary Alice Long of Alabama College were home for the week end. They were delightfully entertained at a dinner party on Sat. evening by Miss Saranel Carter. Included in this hospitality besides these Colleglates were Elizabeth Taylor and Stella Sloan.

Mr. Doriety, Publisher and Editor of the Woodlawn Hearald was a distinguished guest in the Democrat office Saturday.

Powell Blair former Advertising Manager of the Democrat will soon be located in his own office at Pell City News where he will be associated with the Dorriety's who have bought this weekly.

Fay Fancher of near Wilsonville, seems to have a veritable "Believe it or not" dog for Ripley, if EARS have anything to do with it, for according to L C Taylor who measured these ponderous appendages, states they measure 23 inches from tip to tip and he is "only a little puppy". If he keeps his "ears to the ground" he should hear a lot which might be interesting to relate, if he could only talk.

Mrs. Charlie Tinney entertained the younger set on last Wednesday night in honor of her son Tom's 15th birthday anniversary. Games and dancing were enjoyed after which a delicious ice course was served.

Friends of Mr. E L Crumpton deeply sympathize with him and his family over the recent loss of his oldest son, I D Crumpton who was buried in the family cemetery on Sunday, having passed away in Kentucky following an attack of double pneumonia.

Mr and Mrs Jack White announce the birth of a son on Sept. 28, whom they have named Charles William White.

Mr and Mrs. J B Partain of Columbus Miss., were distinguished guests of Mr and Mrs T D Edgeworth during the past week. Mrs Edgeworth and Baby Edgeworth returned with them for a visit in Mrs. Edgeworth's former home on Sunday.

Mr and Mrs. J. L. Isbell entertained on Sunday guests which included: Mr and Mrs Alvin Stinson and son Mack of Montevallo, Ruth Isbell of Birmingham Southern College and Pep Curlee of Gadsden.

Nina Faye Reinhardt spent last week in Memphis, Tenn.

Delilah Curry is spending the week on Linger Longer Farm with her Father Sam Curry.

L P Dycus and Mrs. Elmer McGibony attended the funeral of W. F. Holmes in Birmingham Friday.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Holcombe and daughter Joy of Montevallo spent Sunday with Mr and Mrs L P Dycus.

Miss Ruth Luck and Bub Gordon who are attending the University of Alabama, spent the week end at home.

Norman Lefkovits who has been ill in Montgomery spent the week end with his parents Mr and Mrs Max Lefkovits.

Credit Guide Rapid Being Compiled

Results of the Survey by the Medchants Mercantile Company of credit conditions in Shelby County will soon be available to the members of the service in book form

The crop of expefienced workeds have made every effort to see that the books of each client be carefully checked and that those who have failed to discharge their obligations be listed for the mutual prottction of the business and professional men who extend the courtesy of credit. This servey covers old accounts as well as those of recent date that are unpaid. There will be many people listed in this guide who owe accounts of long standing and their record will continue to be so rated until these accounts are satisfactorily disposed of Time has never paid an account.

At an added expense to the subscribers to this service, letters have been mailed to a number of these delinquents explaining that they can protect their credit rating by prompt action. These people have been asked to call on those whom they owe and pay their accounts in full if possible. They have also been informed that they can help their rating by even paying part or by calling on their creditors and taking to them about the debt. The business and professional men report a very satisfactory response to these letters and appreciate the efforts that are being made by many people to establish for themselves a satisfactory credit rating in the new Retail Credit Service. Many accounts of long standing have been paid and customers that have been going elsewhere to trade are now trading with their old friends and creditors to the mutual satisfaction each.

HIGH SCHOOL FAIR OCTOBER 15.

SHELBY HI COPS OPENING GAME FROM TALLADEGA MUTES

After nearly three quarters of punt exchanges, smeared line plays and fumbles in a steady downpour of rain on Friday afternoon, Shelby High's passing attack finally clicked and after reaching the Talladega Mutes 25 yard line, Martin, Shelby back, took a pass from Wallace, and ran the remaining distance to score the only touchdown and won the game for Shelby County High.

The Mutes outplayed the local boys in running plays, but the Shelby line held in the pinches, enabling Martin to gain back lost ground with his punts, which held an edge over the Mute kicker. In fact, punts put Shelby in scoring position at several stages of the game only to be penalized or fumbled at the critical moment.

Immediately after receiving the kick off at the beginning of the third quarter, Shelby continued its passing attack, and after one exchange of punts, made its touchdown march and scored the lone touchdown. Thepoint after the touchdown failed.

Must praise has been heard reguarding the clean, sportmanship displayed by the visiting team who won many friends during their stay in Columbiana.

HOME ECONOMICS NEWS

The Home Economics Department of S C H S has an enrollment of 66 this year. The first year class is studying Personal Relationship and for the past two weeks has spent much time on personal grooming.

The group visited the Health Department and each girl was weighed measured and examined by Mamie Jo Harbin, County Nurse and Dr. Sloan. A letter was then sent to the parents stating the individual's condition.

JUMPER TELLS PETER WHO THE STRANGER IS

PETER RABBIT could hardly believe what he had seen—the big black stranger, with the great terrible claws, backing away from Jimmy Skunk, and Jimmy acting just as if he were in the habit of meeting this stranger every day and making him get out of his way. And yet he knew that Jimmy never had seen him before. Peter always had had a great deal of respect for Jimmy Skunk. He knew that Jimmy just laughed at Reddy Fox, although Reddy is ever so much bigger than he, and he knew that Bowser the Hound always turned aside if he happened to meet Jimmy. But he really had not thought that Jimmy would dare to treat this great stranger so, and if he hadn't seen it himself he wouldn't have believed it because—well, because he couldn't have believed it.

Peter was full of wonder and excitement as he hurried away to tell all whom he should meet what he had seen. He didn't know who the stranger was. Never had he seen anyone like him in the Green Forest. The very thought of him made Peter shake with fright, even if Jimmy Skunk should say that there was nothing to be afraid of, and Peter knew that this is just what Jimmy would say when he met him. Presently as he hurried, lippety-lipperty-lip, through the Green Forest he met his cousin, Jumper the Hare.

"Oh, Jumper! Cousin Jumper! I've seen him!" cried Peter just as soon as he was near enough to make himself heard.

Jumper sat up and looked at Peter curiously. "Supposing you tell me whom you've seen," said he quite as if he had no particular interest in the matter.

"Why, the stranger! The great big stranger who made those tracks in the snow I told you about and whom you tried to find and couldn't. I saw him just a few minutes ago! Who do you suppose he is, and do you suppose he has come to the Green Forest to stay?" cried Peter, talking so fast that the words just tumbled out.

"How should I know?" replied Jumper the Hare. "Suppose you tell me something about him. What does he look like?"

"Well, he's big," began Peter. "He's bigger than anyone else in the Green Forest. Why, he's as big as Farmer Brown's boy! He wears a black fur coat. He stands on two legs and he walks on four legs, and he hasn't any tail."

Jumper yawned just as if he weren't the least bit interested. I've heard all that before from Sammy Jay," said he.

"And don't you believe it?" cried Peter.

Jumper the Hare smiled at Peter, and Peter knew right away by that smile that his big cousin had been teasing him. "Yes," said he, "I believe it because—well, because I have seen him myself."

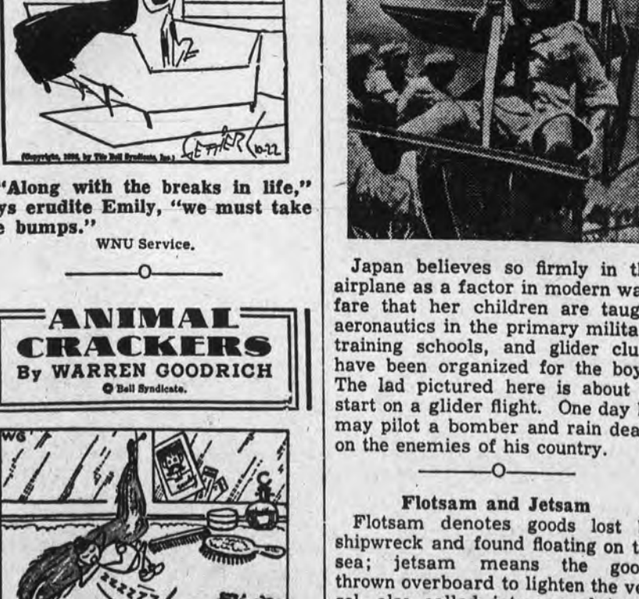
"You have?" cried Peter, "and do you really know who he is?"

Jumper nodded. "Yes," said he, "he's an old acquaintance of mine."

"Who?" demanded Peter, his eyes popping out with excitement. "Tell me quick, who is he?"

"He's someone I used to know when I lived in the Great Woods before I came to live in the Green Forest on the edge of the Green Meadows," replied Jumper, speaking so slowly that Peter thought he would never get it out.

"But what's his name? Do tell me his name, Cousin Jumper," implored Peter.



"His name," replied Jumper slowly, very slowly, while Peter held his breath and leaned forward with eyes and ears and mouth wide open, "His name is—"

"Is what?" cried Peter.

"Is Buster Bear," replied Jumper the Hare.

Flotsam and Jetsam

Flotsam denotes goods lost by shipwreck and found floating on the sea; jetsam means the goods thrown overboard to lighten the vessel, also called jetsom and jetson from the verb to jettison, meaning to throw overboard. We talk of homeless waifs and strays as "human flotsam and jetsam." A third word in this group is ligan, denoting goods sunk at sea with a float attached for their later recovery. YOU CAN THROW CARDS IN HIS FACE ONCE TOO OFTEN

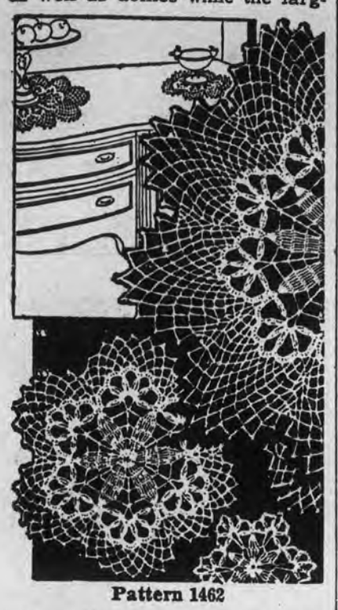
WHEN you have those awful cramps; when your nerves are all on edge—don't take it out on the man you love.

Your husband can't possibly know how you feel for the simple reason that he is a man.



A three-quarter wife may be no wife at all if she nags her husband seven days out of every month.

For three generations one woman has told another how to go "smiling through" with Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It helps Nature tone up the system, thus lessening the discomforts from the functional disorders which women must endure in the three ordeals of life: 1. Turning from girlhood to womanhood. 2. Preparing for motherhood. 3. Approaching "middle age."

Don't be a three-quarter wife, take LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND and Go "Smiling Through."

Doilies Offer Thrifty Way to Set Table

A perfectly appointed table is the dream of every woman's heart. With the simplest of crochet you can make this dream come true. This set of doilies, in four sizes, does the trick. There are a 6, 12 and 17-inch size suitable for luncheon and buffet sets as well as doilies while the largest, a 22-inch doily, is just the thing for in-between cloth on many a table. Use string or mercerized cotton—they'll stand long usage and be decorative too. Pattern 1462 contains directions for making the doilies shown; illustrations of them and of all stitches used; material requirements.

A Three Days' Cough Is Your Danger Signal

No matter how many medicines you have tried for your cough, chest cold, or bronchial irritation, you can get relief now with Creomulsion. Serious trouble may be brewing and you cannot afford to take a chance with any remedy less potent than Creomulsion, which goes right to the seat of the trouble and aids nature to soothe and heal the inflamed mucous membranes and to loosen and expel the germ-laden phlegm.

Even if other remedies have failed, don't be discouraged, try Creomulsion. Your druggist is authorized to refund your money if you are not thoroughly satisfied with the benefits obtained from the very first bottle. Creomulsion is one word—not two, and it has no hyphen in it. Ask for it plainly, see that the name on the bottle is Creomulsion, and you'll get the genuine product and the relief you want. (Adv.)

To Women:

If you suffer every month you owe it to yourself to take note of Cardui and find out whether it will benefit you.

Functional pains of menstruation have, in many, many cases, been eased by Cardui. And where malnutrition (poor nourishment) had taken away women's strength, Cardui has been found to increase the appetite, improve digestion and in that way help to build up a natural resistance to certain useless suffering. Help Them Cleanse the Blood of Harmful Body Waste

Your kidneys are constantly filtering waste matter from the blood stream. But kidneys sometimes lag in their work—do not act as Nature intended—fail to remove impurities that, if retained, may poison the system and upset the whole body machinery.

Symptoms may be nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—a feeling of nervous anxiety and loss of pep and strength.

Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder may be burning, scanty or too frequent urination.

WHO'S NEWS THIS WEEK...

By Lemuel F. Parton

NEW YORK.—Jack Doyle, the Irish crooner and heavyweight boxer, sometimes known as the "mild Irish rose," said the other day he had quit fighting. But now word comes from San Francisco that the mauling minstrel wants to get back in the ring and that he has signed Harry Brodie of San Francisco as manager. However, his fiancee, Mrs. Delphine Dodge Cromwell Baker Godde, insists that he stick to his singing. Fighting, she says, is too brutal. Mrs. Godde is a daughter of the late Horace E. Dodge, automobile maker, and an heiress of the Dodge fortune.

He's Called 'Handsomest' Pugilist!

At fourteen, Jack Doyle was heaving a 15-pound shovel on the coal docks at Queenstown. At fifteen, he was sailing before the mast on a Finnish vessel. At sixteen, he was in the Irish guards, doubling in the characteristically Celtic pastimes of singing and fighting.

He is six feet four and one-half inches tall and weighs 217 pounds. With his wavy black hair and still unmarred features, he is rated as the handsomest fighter in the business. He once smacked down ten big bruisers all at once—but that was in Hollywood, when he was trying out for the screen, two years ago. He didn't screen well and picked up his fighting again, dumping Buddy Baer neatly in one round.

In 1930, he was champion of the Irish guards. Last April, he gave Kingfish Levinsky a handsome 12-round drubbing. As yet he hasn't any very notorious scalps on his belt, but he is still only twenty-four. Judith Allen, film actress, divorced him last April, and he awaits a final decree before marrying Mrs. Godde, whose divorce from Timothy Godde, London and Paris textile exporter, is also coming through. He has been here two and one-half years and writes home that he's having a wonderful time.

This writer thought the articles about the telepathy experiments at Duke university were one of the most interesting magazine serials of recent years. Dr. J. B. Rhine, with a large staff of assistants, made what appeared to be the first scientific laboratory examination of thought transference. They reported it a fact of everyday life. Their finding was that minds can communicate over long distances. Now it is announced that Dr. Rhine's book, "New Frontiers of the Mind," will appear soon. It will cover the Duke university experiments.

Claims Life Exists Apart From Body

Dr. Rhine qualifies as a disinterested observer, having vigorously assailed fake occultism in the past. Mrs. Rhine has been his coworker and collaborator in exploring the world beyond the senses. They both took their doctor's degrees at the University of Chicago, later pursuing studies of abnormal psychology. In 1926 and 1927, they conducted in Boston an examination of "Margery," the famous clairvoyant. They reported that "the whole game was a base and brazen trickery, carried out cleverly enough under the guise of spirit manifestations."

Commenting recently on his work at Duke university, Dr. Rhine said: "Our results have a bearing on the general problem of the survival of life after death. They show that the mind has powers not dependent upon the senses, an assumption that is made under the theory that life can exist apart from the body."

Dr. Rhine is head of the unique parapsychological laboratory of Duke university. His telepathy explorations included 100,000 experiments in which he recorded thought transference over a distance of 1,000 miles. He said their validity, as against chance, was in the ratio of 100,000,000,000 to 1.

How to Choose a Political Philosophy

The Paraguay rebellion is one more reminder that there are no halfway stations on the road to totalitarian rule. President Rafael Franco, Gran Chaco war hero, was driven out several weeks ago, because he wanted to meet Bolivia half way and make concessions in the war settlement. Now the rebels are trying to bring him back.

When he set up his dictatorship last October, Hitler was his model. He invoked the "noble ideal of democracy," but proclaimed his own personal iron-fisted rule. He announced an extreme of both regimentation and freedom. It didn't work, but he may be president again and have another try at it.

Old General Estigarriba chased him out in February, 1936, calling him a communist. By February 20, he was back in power, chasing both the old general and the communists. He is now forty years old, trained in the army, withdrawing in 1934 and back in for the war.

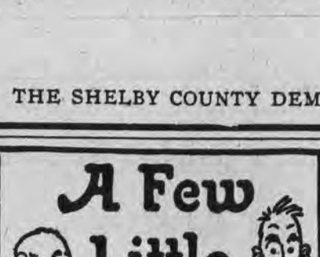
BEDTIME STORY



The v. d. (very dumb) woman tourist was browsing around an antique shop. Suddenly she spied a bed which took her fancy.

"Oh," she gushed, "what a ducky bed! I think it's too, too, charming!"

"It is," said the salesman, reverently. "Many famous people have slept in it. In this very bed, dear lady, have slept George Washington, Andrew Jackson, and Abraham Lincoln."

"How odd," chirped the v. d. tourist. "You'd think with all their money they could afford separate beds."—Prairie Farmer.

GETTING HIS BEARINGS

Golfer—Do you play golf?

Traveling Salesman—No, I don't play it, but it looks like I gotta learn to talk it if I expect to maintain friendly relations with my kind.

Allah Behave

An American baseball team was playing a team of Turks in Istanbul.

First Turk (at the plate)—O, Allah! Give me an eye to see the ball. (He struck out).

Second Turk (at the plate)—O, Allah! Give me skill to hit the ball! (He also struck out).

Third Turk—O, Allah! Grant that I may make a base hit! (But he also struck out).

The side changed, and an American faced the pitcher:

American (enthusiastically)—You know me, Al! (And he hit a home run.)—Chelsea Record.

Culprit

A politician was just finishing an address to a big meeting. Towards the close of his speech he noticed a burly-looking man pushing his way towards the front and brandishing an ugly-looking stick. The man seemed anxious to get at the politician.

"What do you want?" asked the latter, in a frightened voice. "Is it me?"

"No, no," came the reply. "Carry on. I don't want you. I want the guy who asked you to speak."—Tit-Bits Magazine.

Like to See This

Two heavyweight boxers chasing each other round the ring kept treading on the toes of the small referee. At last he lost patience and shouted:

"If you don't stop treading on my corns there's going to be a fight!"

All Ready

Judge—Why have you brought that cudgel into court?

Prisoner—Well, they said I had to provide my own defense.

NOT ALL ALIKE

"I suppose your wife claims she made you what you are, the same as mine does."

"Not much. She says I'm a poor nut."

The Deadly Pull

"What broke up the poker game at Crimson Gulch?"

"Too much political influence," confided Piute Pete. "The sheriff made it plain that he'd enforce the law against gambling if he didn't win at least three out of four pots."

About Due

"Can't stop. Got to meet my husband."

"When have you got to meet him?"

"Half an hour ago."

Posing

"This is a fine upstanding business man you have posing for these advertisements."

"They are posed by an old chap who never made a success of anything. But he's making a go of this."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

Her Ideal

"What is your ideal for a boy friend?"

"One who is clever enough to make money and foolish enough to spend it."

Lesson for October 10

THE CHRISTIAN IN GOD'S KEEPING

LESSON TEXT—Jude 1-4, 17-25.

GOLDEN TEXT—Keep yourselves in the love of God, looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life.—Jude 21.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Why David Sang.

JUNIOR TOPIC—In God's Keeping.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Keeping Oneself Christian.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Safe in God's Keeping.

To be born is only to begin life. The years which stretch out before with their growth, their struggles, their joys, call for courageous living.

So it is with the Christian. He is a "born one," as we saw in our lesson of last Sunday. But when he is born again he is just ready to begin the Christian life.

The Epistle of Jude sheds much light on the dangers which beset the Christian's pathway and exhorts him to holy living and sacrificial service. It opens with a description of the Christian and closes with an ascription of praise to God. It reveals the Christian as one who is

I. Called in Christ (vv. 1, 2).

The entire Trinity is seen to be active in our redemption (See Revised Version). Jude writes "to them that are"

1. "Called"—The Holy Spirit calls men unto salvation.

2. "Beloved in God the Father"—for God is love.

3. "Kept for Jesus Christ"—until he appears.

II. Living for Christ (vv. 3, 4, 17-23).

As Jude began to write of the "salvation" which he had in "common" with his readers, the Holy Spirit moved him to deal with a very urgent and vital problem—the hostility of wicked men toward the gospel of Christ, and their efforts to destroy "the faith." The Christian life includes

1. Contending for the faith (vv. 3, 4). "The Faith" is the body of revealed truth, the gospel, the good news of redemption in Jesus Christ.

The world hates the gospel, and attacks upon it are to be expected, but the most insidious assault is that of those within the church (v. 4) who profess to believe in Christ. Against them and their destructive work Christians must "contend earnestly," at the same time praying that they may be delivered from their sin and its terrible judgment (vv. 15-16).

2. Observing the times in which they live (vv. 17-19). Some folk seem to think that being a Christian means entering into a place of security and rest and promptly going sound asleep. Far from it. The Christian, knowing God's Word, is keenly alert to the dangers of this ungodly world.

3. Keeping their own souls (vv. 20,21). The best defense is a vigorous offense. The way to contend against error is to build up one's own faith by the study of God's Word, by communion with his children, but above all by prayer "in the Holy Ghost." And above all there will be an abiding in the love of God and a looking for the fulfillment of the mercy of Christ at his coming again.

4. Saving the souls of others (vv. 22,23). Soul-winning is (or should be) the normal expression of the Christian's life. It is his crowning joy. It most effectively counteracts error and worldliness. It builds up the church. Why not do it?

Note that there are two types of sinners to be rescued. Some are "in doubt" (R. V.), needing tender and careful instruction. Others are in grave danger, and must be rescued by drastic reproof and decisive action. Soul-winning is urgent business.

III. Kept by Christ (vv. 24, 25).

The doxology at the close of Jude has been a haven of comfort and assurance for God's children throughout the centuries. Hither have come the strong in faith to rejoice and praise God. Here has been found the strengthening of faith by the fearful and trembling soul who had not yet learned that he may fully trust God. These verses present two truths.

1. Assurance. Our Saviour is able to keep us from falling, yes, even from "stumbling" (R. V.), and to present us "faultless" "without blemish" (R. V.), with exceeding joy, before the glorious presence of God.

2. Worship. Such a God and Saviour is indeed worthy of the outgoing of every Christian heart in adoration and worship.

Work and Wait

Haste is not always speed. We must learn to work and wait. This is like God, who perfects his works through beautiful gradations.

Greatness of Trifles

'Commit thy trifles unto God, for to Him nothing is trivial; and it is but the littleness of man that seeth no greatness in a trifle."

Sabbath Days

Sabbath days are quiet islands on the tossing sea of life.

Fall Fashion Parade

BE THE first to wear the new Fall fashions in your group—let Sew-Your-Own help you to step right out in front, in the parade of new Fall Fashions. Today's trio gives you wide choice.

The Popular Basque Dress.

If you are twenty or thereabouts, you'll adore this pretty basque dress with its flaring skirt. The slim wasp waist and short puffed sleeves above a swing skirt are as young as the morning. Have it in a pretty dark print banded in velvet ribbon for every afternoon festivity. It's a dress that you'll wear all through the winter.

Every woman will be quick to see the advantages of this frock, in style and wearability. The round yoke buttons at front and gives a fresh, young look to this design. Best of all, it is cut in one piece from neck to hem so that you can make it in practically no time at all. The waistline is darted for snug fit. You'll look and feel years younger in this model—wear it 'round the house and for afternoon, too.

Look Slim and Sleek.

The newest fashions give you a slim, sleek look even if you are not blessed with a svelte figure. The jabot model in the illustration is designed to make even the woman who is a bit on the plump side look sleek and inches slimmer. Make this dress in one of the new thin wools and see how you'll stand out in your crowd as a fashion leader.

Pattern 1257 is designed for sizes 12 to 40. Size 14 requires 4⅝ yards of 39 inch material and 11 yards of ribbon to trim.

Pattern 1380 is designed for sizes 34 to 48. Size 36 requires 4¼ yards of 39 inch material.

Pattern 1373 is designed for sizes 34 to 50. Size 36 requires 3⅝ yards of 54 inch material and ¾ yards of 39 inch material for jabot in contrast.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., Room 1020, 211 W. Wacker Drive, Chicago, Ill. Price of patterns, 15 cents (in coins) each.

The Only Way for Chap in Such a Fix

Two heavyweight boxers—not, let it be added, in the first class—were booked to fight an important contest.

Each man, secretly, had backed himself to lose the fight.

During the first round one of the men accidentally hit his opponent a light tap on the nose, whereupon the recipient of the blow lay down and let the referee start counting.

The other man was in a quandary. However, just as the referee reached the count of "nine," a brilliant idea came to him.

Rushing over to his prostrate opponent, he kicked him fiercely in the ribs, and was disqualified.

TODAY

Here is this day,
Across the fields of darkness, softly come
Into my silent room,
In the old way.
Stir on the sill and light along the wall
And scent of early dew:
As old as time, yet new
And fresh and fair, as the first day of all.

Today is my own.
To-morrow waits, and yesterday is gone
But, lovely, here and now,
With lifting wind, and light on leaf and brough,
Flutter of flower and stir of wakening wing,
New hope, new opportunity, new power,
Bright dreams for me to fashion, hour by hour,
In my own way—
Here is this day.

THIS IS THE TRAGEDY

God pity eyes that have not seen the dawn,
Twilight, or shadow, or a wind blown tree,
But pity more the eyes that look upon
All loveliness, and yet can never see;
God pity ears that have not caught the notes
Of wind or wave, of violin or bird.
But pity more that, daily, music floats
To ears that hear and yet have never heard.

God pity hearts that have not known the gift
Of love requited, comfort and caress,
But, O God, pity more the hearts that drift
From love's high moment to forgetfulness.
This is the tragedy of common sense:
To dim all wonder by indifference
—Helen Frazee-Bower.

MOTTO FOR A DINING-ROOM

Here in his room,
Laying our little doubts and cares aside,
Light-heartedly We'll come.

The circle that we make
Shall widen willingly for friend or kin
Or for the stranger's sake.

No welcome here
(Not even a crumb), for gassip, spite or grudge.
Only for wholesome cheer.
We'll mix our food

With sweet of happy talk and spice of mirth
And salt of gratitude,

And have the grace
To bear ourselves full-kind and comely when
We gather in this place. . .

So He who blest
And broke the bread in Gallilean homes
May be our honored guest.
—Nancy Byrd Turner.

What's RIGHT with ALABAMA

NAVIGABLE STREAMS MODERN PORTS

FROM Alabama's earliest days, her waterways have played a part in her development. Practically all "cities" of the early history of the so-called "Gulf Country" were visioned on the streams.

Later, the thoughts of men turned toward the canalization of the rivers by means of locks, as in the case of the Warrior River, which now offers an all-water route from the rich coal and iron fields to the ports of the Gulf of Mexico. Others, notably William P. Lay, Coosa River steamboat captain and founder of Alabama Power Company, turned their thoughts to power development, seeing the vision of the gradual transformation of Alabama from a backwoods frontier into the hub of southern industry as the result. Still others, observing the cargoes being moved from shore to ship at Mobile, imagined the Port of Mobile as becoming one of the great gateways of commerce to points on the Seven Seas.

So, today, few states are blessed with a more serviceable system of waterways than Alabama—1,488 miles of navigable streams, three of which have been developed for power production—flowing from the very heart of Alabama's rich mineral regions, through fertile farming lands.

Thus products of Alabama mines, farms and factories may move by an all-water route from deep in the interior, to Alabama's splendid port at Mobile, where facilities constructed by the State Docks Commission constitute one of the most modern and complete port terminal systems in the United States.

Accessibility to consuming markets is today of increasing importance to industrial enterprises. Hence it seems certain that our rivers, ports and railroads which have done so much toward Alabama's development, will play an ever larger role in Alabama's future progress.

Thos. Martin
President,
ALABAMA POWER COMPANY

ENTERPRISE STILL LIVES

Power available to the Mobile area and a large part of Southern Alabama will be doubled by the projected new high tension line of the Alabama Power Company, involving an investment of about $1,700,000.

The announcement is heartening and significant in several particulars.

It shows that despite all the assaults upon it, the power industry in America still lives—and in Alabama, where few, if any, of the broad assaults were justified—may be said to be thriving, alert and enterprising.

This great progeam, we read, is to be financed out of cash resources, although there is a warning that unless the "unfair competitive condititon" declared produced by the TVA, "is soon changed, the company will be unable to finance the extension of its system to supply power requirements which will be demanded by new industries in many parts of the state."

The announcement further calls emphatic attention to the great potentialities of Alabama's great port area and the almost virgin industrial territory in the southwestern part of the state. The Aluminum Company's recent announcement of a great plant at Mobile and the developments in the paper industry are only forerunners of what is to be.

Incidentally, this power line construction will itself be a strong stimulant to employment and the Alabama market for many materials.

The enterprise principle still is strong in America, however dormant it may have seemed to some to be.

MAGIC CARPET

Magicians of old, so we are told,
Summoned from empty space
Magic carpets to travel on
To any and every place.

Today with a turn of a radio dial,
We fly to the ends of the earth:
We hear the voice of the President speak,
Or share in Vienna's mirth.

The geishas dance in Tokyo
To the strumming of samisen:
From the polar seas we hear the tales
Of that crew of gallant men.

Our eyes are filled with blinding tears
As we hark to a weary king
Renounce a crown in the name of love,
A magnificent challenging.

We hear the moan of a stell guitar
On a beach at Pu-nu-luu.
With the turn of a dial the world is brought Into your room for you.

MR. JUSTICE HUGO L. BLACK

The truthfulness of the above poem was again brought to the attention of millions of listerners on last Friday night when Justice Hugo L. Black answered in no uncertain tones, the challenge of prejudicial critics regarding his former affiliation with the K. K. K who had raised the unwarranted attack regarding his eligibility to sit on the Supreme Court of the United States.

In clear, ringing well chosen words Mr. Black affirmed his allegiance to the principles of racial and religious tolerance leaving his critics very little foundation for the cowardly assault. His years of conscientious service as United States Senator speaks for itself. A credit able record meriting the reward generously accorded him by President Roosevelt should have been a joyous culmination to an illustrious career. His appointment brings a national honor to the Southland which Hugo Black represents. Now that he is seated, we sincerely trust the matter will be closed, and that his judicial record will justify the faith his many friends throughout the country have and do maintain in him.

DORIS BENDER

Friends come—Friends go—but none are more sincerely missed than Doris Bender, who for the past two years has efficiently directed the Public Welfare Department for Shelby County. Miss Bender captivated both officials, co-workers and members of the numerous families which she served throughout the County. Doris Bender, will not become "just a memory", with Shelby County citizens. Rather will her gracious personality, friendliness and genuine interest in her work, linger on like a beautiful melody, lasting in the hearts of those who knew her and loved her.

The "Windy City", where she will spend the winter in further studying her chosen work will hold within its portals a Southern charm not heretofore possessed, and when cold Northern winds blow and ice and snow hang over the Lakes in Chicago, Southern breezes from the heart of Shelby County will bear across the miles from Columbiana to Chicago, good wishes for future success and happiness which Doris Bender so richly deserves.

TO MR AND MRS. H. W. NELSON

"Two volumes bound in one complete
A thrilling story old but sweet
No title needs the cover fair
Two golden hearts are blended there"

And we join a host of froends in extending congratulations to Mr. and Mrs H. W. Nelson who were married 58 years ago on September 17th. Mr. Nelson was born and reared in Columbiana and has lived here all his life. Mrs Nelson was Miss Alice Cliett of Childersburg. They have eight living children, 24 grand child ren and 6 great grand children.

CRAZES! THE BIG APPLE

It is always interesting to watch the various CRAZES swept the country. The sillier the craze the faster it sweeps. For instance now spreading in popularity we find the BIG APPLE, which is gathering momen tun with such tremendous force that it is likely to reach the four corners of the earth before its novelty dies.

Dixie land is the Daddy of this dance craze. It is highly infectious and from the top of their voices to the tip of their toes young American is swing ing it". It originated from the Gullah Negroes in Charleston South Carolina a combination of the Charleston and the Square Dance.

Down in Columbia S C, so the story goes, a negro church was torn down and only the floor left standing. This was soon converted by the color ed populace into a Night Club which for no rime or reason, they called the "Big Apple". This new dance now combines some of the queerest sound ing phrases, and some of the wierd est looking figures you ever saw-but it is just a conglomeration of the old Charleston, a little "stompin" a little "Truckin". Black Bottom and it is Shine Sister Shine Suzy Q Praise Allah-and civilization seems to revert back to a savage call and it looks like Jungle Time onmany dance halls now as young America joins in The Big Apple

BUY $43,000,000 worth of COTTON per year

PAY $28,000,000 in WAGES per year

Alabama's cotton mills are its largest industry. They give employment to over 39,000 mill operatives. In addition, they employ thousands of others —mechanics, engineers, executives, clerical help.

Alabama's cotton mills annually consume an average of 667,777 bales of cotton . . . In addition, they are large purchasers of power, fuel, lubricants, hardware and mill supplies. Through their payrolls, they supply the purchasing power for millions of dollars worth of Alabama-grown foodstuffs.

Alabama's textile industry has made rapid strides in recent years. By the understanding cooperation of operatives, management, merchants, doctors and legislators—it will continue to go forward, to the greater prosperity of Alabama and its citizens.

Bar for Free Courts

CONVINCED that the independence of the federal judiciary is still threatened, despite the defeat of the plan to enlarge the Supreme court, the American Bar association, in session in Kansas City, voted unanimously to authorize a committee to keep up the fight to preserve the freedom of the courts, as recommended by a special committee. That committee said: "There appears to be no likelihood that efforts to re-make the courts of the United States will not be renewed. Your special committee is of the opinion that the association ought to maintain itself in readiness to meet such issues as they may recur, rather than to rely upon impromptu organization for the purpose."

The lawyers listened to many speeches, both attacking and defending President Roosevelt's court program and his appointment of Hugo Black to the Supreme court. The climax to all this came when Hatton W. Sumners of Texas, chairman of the house judiciary committee, arose to talk. He had a prepared address, but shifted to an extemporaneous talk in which he declared the people have lost control of the government of the United States and it has passed into the hands of a million people in its executive department, in which only one man was elected, and which the people could not control.

"What are we going to do about it?" Sumners cried. "Are you willing to join a battalion of death to save the Constitution and the government?

"As we look to the future, we are rapidly approaching a crisis when it will be decided whether our economic system and our government will stand or fall.

"I mean actually. A very serious situation is before the people. It means we have got to do something soon. We have got to balance the budget. We have got to decentralize government responsibility."

Cummings Hasn't Quit Fight

ATTORNEY GENERAL CUMMINGS in his press conference intimated strongly that the administration intends to push for the court reforms the President has demanded. To support this position he produced the annual report of the judicial conference composed of the chief justice and senior circuit judges. It recommended appointment of 16 additional federal judges.

"In this report" said Mr. Cummings, "the judiciary has capitulated. They admit now there is congestion and delay in the judicial system. They ask for additional judges to provide relief. This is a complete capitulation and a welcome one."

O'Mahoney Butts In

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT, on the way to Seattle, first entered the "enemy's" country when he crossed the border of Wyoming, the state of Senator Joseph O'Mahoney, leader of the anti-Supreme court enlargement forces. Mr. Roosevelt's train reached Cheyenne in the early morning, and there, among the welcomers, was Joseph, though he had pointedly not been invited to board the train. He walked alongside the President's car and Mrs. Roosevelt emerged, shook his hand and asked after Mrs. O'Mahoney.

Senator O'Mahoney

The senator then entered the private car and he and Mr. Roosevelt shook hands and said "Hello," but the atmosphere was decidedly chilling; he took leave of the party at Casper, Wyo., after accompanying the President and his group on a drive about that city.

The Chief Executive spent two days in Yellowstone National park, and then went on to Boise, Idaho; to the Bonneville dam near Portland, and thence to Seattle.

After a pleasant visit with his grandchildren, Mr. Roosevelt boarded the destroyer Phelps and went to Victoria, B. C., for a "good neighbor" call on Lieutenant Governor Hamber.

His schedule thereafter included a night at Lake Crescent, Wash., a drive around the Olympic peninsula ending at Tacoma, and then the eastward trip with stops at Grand Coulee and Fort Peck dams, Grand Forks, N. D., and St. Paul, and a few hours in Chicago to dedicate the new Boulevard bridge over the mouth of the Chicago river.

Soviet Helping China?

JAPANESE officials in Shanghai asserted they had learned that Marshal Galents - Bluecher, commander of the Russian Far East armies, was directing the Chinese campaign against Japan by telephone from his Siberian headquarters.

According to Domei, the Japanese news agency, munitions and other military supplies are being transported by trucks into China across the province of Sinkiang from Soviet Siberia. If these reports are true it may be Stalin has decided the time has come for Russia to take sides with China openly, and that would make things tough for the Japanese invaders.

Russia Warns Japan

TOKYO officially notified Moscow that the Chinese were plotting to attack the Russian embassy in Nanking with planes disguised as Japanese aircraft, for the purpose of involving the Soviet government in the Sino-Japanese conflict. With the equivalent of "Oh, yeah?", Russia retorted with a stern warning that it would hold Japan responsible for any bombing of the embassy, intentional or accidental. The Soviet officials said they considered the reported plot a "pure prevarication showing the intention of some Japanese military powers to bombard the Soviet embassy intentionally and then try to escape responsibility."

With callous brutality Japan continued the air raids on Nanking, Canton and other large Chinese cities, the bombs slaughtering thousands of helpless civilians. The utter contempt for protests of western nations shown by Japan seemed warranted by the failure to insist on respect for the nine-power treaty guaranteeing the territorial integrity of China. For this failure Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek blames especially the United States. "This war," said he, "will last as long as Japanese aggression lasts in China."

The League of Nations adopted a resolution severely condemning Japan for the aerial bombardment of defenseless Chinese cities, and Tokyo, indignant, charged the league of acting without verifying the facts. To the protests of five great powers, previously filed, the Japanese government replied with the assertion that the bombing of Nanking was "necessary for our purpose."

The British public is becoming increasingly aroused against Japan and there is a general demand for a boycott of Japanese goods. The government has permitted an aircraft company to take a big order for fighting planes that will soon be shipped to China, and they may be manned by independent British pilots.

Yarnell's Policy Wins

ADMIRAL HARRY YARNELL was decidedly opposed to the policy of Washington to withdraw American warships from Chinese waters in the face of danger. His protests have been considered by the general board of the Navy department and his program approved. Consequently our naval vessels will remain there to protect our nationals "as long as the present controversy between China and Japan exists."

Auto Union Shake-Up

SEVERAL times Homer Martin, president of the United Automobile Workers of America, has intimated that there were too many radicals among the leaders of that union. Now, allegedly for reasons of economy, he has got rid of some of them. These organizers have been let out: Victor Reuther, one of the leaders in the General Motors strike at Flint, Mich., last winter; Robert Kanter, Stanley Novak, Melvin Bishop and William Tonn of Detroit; R. D. Richter of Saginaw; Charles Rigby, Ohio; Frank McMillan, Kansas City; Eugene Stauder, Frank Bartee and Frank Schutz, Indiana.

Martin also announced he had promoted Loren Houser to be organizational director for Detroit. Elmer Dowell was made director of all General Motors locals in the nation. R. J. Thomas, international vice president, has been appointed director of all Chrysler locals, and Richard T. Frankensteen, director of the organization program among Ford Motor company employees.

Lester Washburn of Lansing, Mich., leader of the "labor holiday" last spring, was made director of the U. A. W. for western Michigan, and Charles Madden, Pontiac, director of eastern Michigan outside of Detroit.

Italy Wins "Parity"

GREAT BRITAIN and France yielded to the demands of Mussolini and granted "parity" to Italy in the anti-piracy patrol of the Mediterranean. That sea was divided into three zones. The Italian zone includes the extensive Italian coast line, the Tyrrhenian sea around Sardinia and, in the east, the coast of the Libyan colony. The Aegean sea is assigned to Britain; and France will guard the Syrian coast and the sea lane between Marseilles and Algiers.

All three zones extend east to the Suez canal since all three powers are interested in keeping open that gateway to the East.

War Dance for Duce

BENITO MUSSOLINI, visiting Adolf Hitler for the purpose of composing and presenting to the world a statement of the intentions and demands of the Italian and German governments, was received by the Nazis with great enthusiasm. Il Duce, on the way to Berlin, stood on a hill in Mecklenburg with Hitler and witnessed a big war dance staged by the reichsfuehrer that displayed the regained military might of Germany most impressively. Hitler's best officers and troops, armed with the latest weapons of death, put on a sham battle participated in by all land and air forces. In the nearby Baltic the German warships showed how they chase "Red" submarines; and at Wustrow the anti-aircraft batteries gave a demonstration of their effectiveness.

Adolf Hitler

The huge munitions plants in the Ruhr district were visited, and the throngs of workers, given a holiday with pay, cheered the two dictators heartily. Every city and village was decorated. In Berlin there were tremendous demonstrations and elaborate festivities in honor of the visitor from Rome.

In the midst of the display of war strength and preparedness, Hitler and Mussolini made speeches declaring their devotion to the cause of peace. At the same time they insisted the world must grant to Germany and Italy the recognition and the rights they feel are their due.

After a grand review of the Nazi army, the two dictators conferred privately. Details of the conversation were kept secret, but officials said Il Duce and Der Fuehrer not only discussed German-Italian cooperation but also talked about an understanding in southeastern Europe—the inclusion of Austria, Hungary, Jugo-Slavia, Bulgaria, and possibly Rumania in a general European realignment.

Noted Merchant Dies

EDWARD A. FILENE, best known of all Boston's merchants, died of pneumonia in the American hospital in Paris. He was seventy-seven years old. Besides being a business man, Mr. Filene was a noted social economist. He was sometimes called the apostle of mass production and distribution.

Only ten days after he took charge of the American legation in Vienna, Grenville T. Emmet died of double pneumonia. He was sixty years old and was a former law partner of President Roosevelt. He was minister to the Netherlands in 1933 and was given the Austrian post last July.

More Woe in Palestine

GREAT BRITAIN'S contested plan to divide Palestine between the Jews and the Arabs, with a slice for herself, came to the front again when Lewis Andrews, British commissioner of Galilee, was assassinated by a group of terrorists in Nazareth. Three men, two in European garb and one in peasant clothing, ambushed Andrews and shot him and his bodyguard to death.

Andrews had gained the enmity of extremists because of the strictness of his rule as district commissioner.

SEEN and HEARD around the NATIONAL CAPITAL

By Carter Field

Washington.—There are certainly signs in Chicago, at the conference between railroads and labor, that on the part of those particular labor leaders at least there is promise of a rule of reason.

For the first time since this country started to work out of the depression, labor, in these conferences, despite the knowledge that the administration is on its side, has shown a disposition to let the employer live and make a profit. This doesn't sound as though it were much of a concession. Some might think that of course labor would have to take this stand, as, if there were no profits—if the employer did not "live"—there would be no jobs.

Every employer who has had labor troubles, however, believes that it is simply impossible to exaggerate the importance of dealing with labor union representatives who agree frankly that the employer should not only "live" but should make a profit. And it does not often happen that labor representatives, in a conference with employers, have been willing seriously to discuss abandoning restrictions on their employers which they hoped to obtain by law!

A case in point in the railroad labor negotiations is the bill pending in congress, which restricts the length of freight trains—generally called the 70-car bill. Most experts agree that this idea is not primarily in the interest of safety. In fact, some contend that it would increase rather than diminish hazards. It is primarily to force the employment of more men to operate more trains. But the railroads contend that it would not only increase their pay rolls, but would cause congestion in railroad terminals at times when there is a rush to ship perishable freight.

Sounds Reasonable

Now the point is that this bill passed the senate—the "greatest deliberative body in the world"—with hardly any discussion. It was stopped in the house not because of the actual strength of its opponents, but because of other things. Those who wanted to stop it had the advantage of the crowded closing days of a session. They had the advantage of the wages and hours bill and others far more spectacular than the 70-car train bill. But railroad representatives here admit privately that they have small hope of killing it next session if the railroad unions continue to press for its passage.

So the willingness of so many labor representatives at this Chicago conference to call off passage of this law was not an empty gesture. They were giving up something they thought of real importance in order to permit the railroads to make enough money to give them an advance in wages.

It all sounds reasonable enough, but it was spectacular in labor relations history, of tremendous importance to every employer of labor and to every person living in this country as indicating a long step towards industrial peace.

Most observers are inclined to think that this conference is a straw in the wind indicating the trend of labor relations for the next year. This view may prove too optimistic. There is no certainty about it. But it seems probable for several reasons. One is that intelligent labor leaders realize they have a much aroused public opinion to deal with. There is more sentiment than they like for something they would fight to the last ditch to avoid—responsibility of labor unions for their actions, clinched on them by a law forcing incorporation of unions.

Find Ally in Lewis

The bituminous coal producers may find John L. Lewis a very potent ally on one of the problems that is worrying them more than anything else.

This is government competition for the coal industry from hydroelectric power developments. It just so happens that Mr. Lewis is very strongly persuaded that all this hydroelectric stuff is the bunk. He believes that electric current can be produced more cheaply from coal than from water power, even under circumstances favorable to economical water power development. Further he believes that the engineers of the electric industry have long since pre-empted most of the sites promising low cost development.

It also happens that Mr. Lewis has expressed himself very forcibly about the lobbyists who come to Washington paid by local chambers of commerce and other associations and maneuver to get big power developments financed by the federal treasury in their localities.

Naturally, Mr. Lewis has pointed out, this benefits that particular community during the period of construction. So would tearing down a row of houses on one side of a street, and erecting them again in precisely the same condition on the other! The local merchants would be selling groceries and clothing and drugs to the workers. The local doctors and dentists would be getting some fees from the transients.

But when the whole job is completed, Lewis points out, it takes very few men to take care of the dam and the electric plant. Whereas a lot of coal miners are out of work forever as a result!

Agree With Lewis

It so happens that every one in the electric industry agrees with Mr. Lewis in every particular on this particular subject, little as they may think of his C. I. O. and ideas about gratitude in politics, etc. The point they make is that the government right now in this electric business is gambling with the people's money.

The point is that the chief cost of producing electricity from a hydroelectric development is interest on the cost of the project. Due to abnormally low interest rates at present—they being held down by artificial government restrictions—this particular item of cost is very unlikely to decrease. Quite the contrary. When the bonds sold now to finance such developments mature the government is more likely to pay a much higher rate.

But the cost of producing electricity from other sources is extremely apt to become less. Mr. Lewis says current can be produced more economically now from coal than from water power. Most engineers agree. But not after the dams and hydro plants are built, providing the cost of these dams and plants is charged to profit and loss.

Nearly every year the cost of producing current from coal is reduced. Every few months there is some improvement in Diesel engines, which makes the production of current from oil cheaper. No one knows when the terrific waste now involved in cooling systems will be eliminated. But scientists say it's coming and will revolutionize the production of power, cutting its cost to a fraction.

So it might pay the coal barons to have Mr. Lewis discuss this question with them to their mutual advantage. It would certainly dramatize the situation before the country and tend to stop more government competition!

Scribes Snicker

The fiendish glee of anti-administration column writers over the discovery that Charley Michelson, premier Democratic press agent, attacked Hugo L. Black in 1926 as a Klansman, and as unworthy to fill the shoes of Oscar W. Underwood, is a rather interesting commentary on how the status of the once abused press agent has advanced in the last decade. Also on how much this same Charley Michelson has done to advance it.

But it is also rather amazing in that it has always been the accepted doctrine that newspaper men who wrote editorial or policy into their stories at all injected the partisan flavor desired by their bosses! So that unless one assumes that bosses employ writers solely for the brilliance of their writing, or perhaps in order to present all sides of the picture, the slant taken by the writer is in accord with the editorial policy of the paper.

It so happens that the New York World, at the time Michelson wrote this attack on Hugo Black, had been running an anti-Klan crusade. This crusade was conducted by men in the New York office, only helped out in pinches by the Washington bureau, of which Michelson was the head.

It also happens that the World was, of all the outstanding newspapers of its time, the most anxious to have its editorials backed up by news stories, interviews and color in general.

Brought Up Reserves

As a matter of fact, there was a sort of reserve staff, consisting of ten or twelve young men working for other—though never rival—papers. Generally these were youngsters covering the senate or house of representatives for non-New York newspapers or press services. They would be called on the telephone, as soon as the chief of the World bureau received his orders, and directed first to read the editorial for which endorsements were wanted, and then get them.

This policy accomplished the point of indicating to World readers that their paper had a tremendous following among the government officials and important persons generally. The World did not pay money for endorsements. It only paid hacks to get them.

Later on Michelson went to work for John J. Raskob, and did his amazing job of smearing Herbert Hoover, probably the most effective press agenting job ever done in this country. When they were thrown out the window in the 1932 Democratic convention, Michelson was retained by Franklin D. Roosevelt and James A. Farley—has been writing Farley's speeches and many others ever since, and cheerfully blasting his former employers, Raskob and Jouett Shouse.

The whole point is that a good press agent works for his employers, and shoots at whatever target they direct, just as a good lawyer resorts to all sorts of legal technicalities as well as sound argument to attack his client's opponents.

Worthy of Friendship

"MAKE me worthy of friendship, and give me friends; make me worthy of love, and give me love," was the daily prayer of a loyal heart that had learned the saredness of human ties. Many a lonely one, complaining of neglect and isolation would find life's whole environment changed by learning humbly and sincerely to pray that prayer. Friendship, to abide, must find a worthy resting place, and love has its duties. No one can demand either as a right. The heart that is tenderly and unselfishly ready for them will never miss them.

The laughing tenderness of his voice twisted Brooke's heart unbearably. She tore her thoughts from him and watched her brother. She could see his lips move in unison with the lines spoken on the stage.

The curtain fell slowly on the minor climax of the first act. The setting and theme had been established and the characters presented. The audience applauded enthusiastically. From a hole in the curtain Brooke saw the New York producer go up the aisle. Would he return?

"Don't you dare go away, don't you dare!" she flung at his straight back.

"How did it go?" Sam's voice was hoarse.

"It's wonderful, Sam. Not an unnecessary word; every line was 'Forward march!' for your story. The acting is the best I've ever seen in an amateur performance."

"So what? Does it prove anything? They're all good except Daphne; she isn't getting her lines over. I hold my breath every time she opens her mouth. Isn't Trent great? He's the spark-plug of the cast. Wait till you see him in the crucial moment in the next act, when he thinks the girl he loves has double-crossed him."

Jerry Field appeared beside her dressed in leather jacket and knickers, with a gun in his hand.

"How's it going, Brooke?"

"I can't see the stage, but from the response of those out front I'd say it was a hit. You're grand in that sports costume. You've made every point, Jerry."

"Thanks. That's because when I say a word of love to Lucette I'm saying it to you." He caught her hand and pressed his lips to it fervently.

"Please—don't, Jerry."

"You've said that too many times, sweet thing. After the play we'll have a reckoning—get me?"

"After the play." Brooke repeated the words to herself. So much was to happen that would change lives, after the play.

"Hey! Field! Field, come on!" Sam's whisper. Sam's beckoning hand. Brooke followed Jerry as far as the wings from which she could see him drop to a log on the stage, left center.

"Why don't you turn thumbs up and end the poor boy's torment?" asked a low voice behind her.

She turned quickly. Something in Mark Trent's voice made her furiously angry.

"That's quite a suggestion that I end 'the poor boy's torment.' I will. Tonight."

"Don't do it until I change after the show. I want to drive you home, Brooke. There is something I must say to you."

Brooke felt the blood rush to her face and recede. Had Henri double-crossed her and told him about the will? Did Mark Trent think she intended to hide it? She wouldn't give him a chance to accuse her before she produced that paper locked in her desk. She said as steadily as she could with his eyes boring into her soul:

"Sorry. The minute the curtain falls, I shall dash to Lookout House to change into something snappy for the grand celebration. You wouldn't have me come to your grand party in this green knit, would you? Quick! Sam wants the wings cleared."

She backed out, conscious of Mark Trent's disturbing presence close beside her.

"The music has stopped! There go the foots!" She caught his sleeve, looked up and begged in an unsteady whisper:

"Do your best, Mark. This act will kill or make the play."

His lips were on hers so quickly that she had no chance to protest. He kissed her passionately, thoroughly; said in a husky whisper:

"Credit that to the silent policeman. Now, I'll play that part to the hilt."

Brooke tried to ignore her racing pulses. She mocked:

"I seem to be in the path of an emotional cyclose; first, Jerry Field; now you. I suppose Jed will be the next. Your cue! Quick! Quick!"

In an instant he was on the stage.

Brooke shut her eyes tight in an effort to steady a whirling world. Mark Trent's lips on hers had been like an electric current through her body. Every pulse, every nerve responded.

She listened. It was very still in front, a sort of hypnotized stillness. She could hear the voices on the stage, but she couldn't keep her mind on what they were saying. Even as she supplied properties, even as the actors made their entrances and exits she was thinking of Mark Trent's eyes as he had looked down into hers, was wondering what he wanted to tell her on the way home?

How Reyburnish! The incurable dramatic streak in the Reyburn temperament had been in the saddle when she had planned that.

CHAPTER XIII

As the curtain fell with dramatic slowness for the last time, the audience stood clapping and calling. As it rose again, Brooke saw the blond marcelle, second row center, make its way up the aisle followed by a man with sleek black hair. The producer and the manager! They had come back for the third. That must mean something. Were they leaving before speaking to Sam? He was on the stage now in the midst of the cast who had taken their bows; the arms of the women were heaped with flowers. He had put on coat and collar and tie but the white bow had gone rakish. He looked very young as he stood grinning boyishly and waiting for a chance to speak. His voice shook as he said:

"Thanks lots! Glad you liked it. Couldn't have put it across without their help." He indicated the men and girls around him on the stage, and the audience broke into thunderous applause. The curtain fell slowly.

Brooke's eyes were blinded by happy tears as she started for the dressing-room. She must get back to Lookout House to change for the party. The girls of the cast were going to Mark Trent's in the evening frocks they had worn in the last act. Leaving the wings, she collided with the marcelled blond. The New York producer! He was unaware of her murmured apology as he gesticulated and talked to his sleek-haired companion. She listened unashamedly and heard him say:

"It's got everything. Humor, suspense, moving simplicity, fidelity to ideals, and unfaltering movement."

"But has it got box-office?"

"I'll gamble my last dollar on it. It's the old recipe for play-writing carried to perfection:

"'Make 'em laugh; make 'em weep; make 'em wait.' Where'd you say that boy got his start?"

Brooke dodged acquaintances and strangers in evening clothes who were crowding on to the stage to greet the actors. In the dressing-room she slipped into her fur coat and ran downstairs to her town car parked near the rear entrance.

"Get Going! Get Going!"

The snow was falling half-heartedly as if it had not quite decided if it were worth while to come down at all. She drove swiftly toward home. Mark Trent had asked her to plan his party, had told her to go the limit in preparations to make it a success.

"Go as far as you like with everything, only be sure that there is enough to eat and sufficient help. To have plenty is an obsession of mine."

There would be plenty and then some. Just before she left Lookout House for the Club theater, the caterer had arrived with his van and a horde of waiters. They had sounded like an army making camp.

Trent's Japanese cook came forward to open the door of the car when she arrived. Snow powdered his shoulders and cap. His eyes glittered in his swarthy face. His teeth gleamed as he ducked his head in a funny little bow. Brooke let down the window.

"I won't get out here, Taku. I'll run into our garage. All the space outside will be needed for the cars of the guests."

"You right, Mees. Thank you. Much big party, Kowa say."

Would there be room for Sam's coupe? Brooke wondered, as she drove into the garage. One corner had been filled with ice cream tubs. He could leave it outside, she decided. She shut off her engine and partially closed the door as she went out.

As she reached the dark hemlock behind the Other House, she lingered for an instant in its deep shadow. How still the world was. Snow fell as softly as if someone had slit open a pillow and shaken down its feathers. There was no near sound of surf tonight.

She shrank deeper into the purple gloom under the tree as two men came down the back steps from the kitchen—waiters, she knew by their clothing. Not more than five feet from her one of them stopped to light a cigarette. He growled:

"The boss can wait for them ice cream tubs till I get a smoke."

"Sure he can. Light up again and take a look at this."

A hand held a scrap of paper within the light of a match. The same voice said:

"It's the picture of the dame who said: 'He was a swell-dressed fella.' Guess I'll have to date her up!"

The other man closed his hand over the match.

"You an' your dames! Forget 'em for tonight, or you'll crack up on this job. Come on!"

As Brooke dressed in her room, the words and suggestive laugh of the man who had produced the picture kept boiling up through her jubilation over Sam's success, through the inescapable memory of Mark Trent's eyes and voice as he had caught her in his arms.

She was adjusting a rhinestone and synthetic emerald clip to the shoulder of her white satin frock when a thought forked through her mind like lightning. The amber and brown eyes of the looking-glass girl frowning back at her widened with amazement; her red lips moved.

"He said—he said—'I'll have to date her up!'"

In an instant she was on the floor beside her desk with a big manila envelope in her lap. She pulled out a bunch of clippings. She had it! the picture of a girl, Maggie Cassidy, and under it the caption:

"She said that the man she saw in the garage was a swell-dressed fella."

The waiter who had shown the other man the clipping was the Bath Crystal Bandit, the man she had recognized at the Supper club! He was the man who had tied up Hunt in the garage! Was he also the murderer of Lola Hunt?

Why was the man in Mark Trent's house tonight? His pal had said: "Forget 'em, or you'll crack up on this job." What job? Something big must have tempted him to come so near the scene of his last hold-up, or had that newspaper headline stating that he was being followed to Canada made him feel secure? What was he after? More jewels? "Get a peek at Mrs. Gregory out front, third row, center. She's blazing with jools."

Jed Stewart's words answered Brooke's question as clearly as if whispered in her ear. The man had come for Mrs. Gregory's diamonds.

She must notify the police! She snatched her hand from the telephone in its cradle on the desk. Not that. Wires had ears. She would go herself. Across the causeway. To Inspector Harrison at headquarters. She could go and be back before she was missed. Suppose she were stopped on the way! Where was Henri? Was he in on this? She must locate him before she left the house.

She caught up a green velvet wrap, stuffed some bills into her emerald satin bag. Pelted down the stairs, into the living-room toward the bell. Stopped. Where was the parrot? He was not in his cage! Had he made another break for freedom? She looked between the gilded bars. What seemed to be merely a bunch of green feathers lay stiffly on the bottom.

"Well, if this isn't just one of those days!" she said aloud.

"Oh, Brooke!" Jerry Field called from the hall.

As she appeared in the doorway, he exclaimed:

"Of all the gorgeous creatures! You look like a million!"

"Jerry, drive me across the causeway, will you? Quick!"

"What's the matter?"

"I must go. Is your roadster here?"

"Left it by your garage."

"By the garage!"

Brooke's blood congealed. Suppose as they stepped into the car the two crook waiters should appear for a tub of ice cream? Would the men suspect her errand? Into her mind flashed her reply to Mark Trent:

"That's quite a suggestion that I end the poor boy's torment. I will. Tonight."

What a thought for this crisis! What a thought!

"Wait a minute, Jerry! While I'm upstairs, set the parrot's cage in the back hall, please. I—I can't bear to have it here. You'll see why."

She raced up the stairs, charged into her bedroom, pulled a suitcase from the shelf. On the way down, she took the two lowest stairs in a jump. She thrust the case into Field's hand.

"What's the big idea?"

"Don't — ask — questions! Let's go!"

"You can't walk in the snow in those white satin sandals, you'll ruin the green heels."

She pushed him toward the door. "Get going! Get going!"

"Well, I'll be darned! Come on."

Brooke felt the dampness between the straps of her sandals. It seemed miles to the garage. There was Jerry's roadster! A waiter was coming down the back steps. It might be the Bath Crystal Bandit! She called in a guarded voice to the Japanese who was directing parking, but loud enough for the man on the steps to hear:

"Taku! Put this suitcase in the rumble. And, Taku, if you see my brother, tell him—tell him," she raised her voice, "that Mr. Field and I have run away to be married."

what Irvin S. Cobb thinks about:

Rivals for Nudism.

SANTA MONICA, CALIF.—I took part in a parade celebrating old days in California, riding in an ancient open carriage with our postmaster here—he calls Jim Farley "Jim"—and our congressman, who like practically all Democrats in good standing in the southern part of the state, craves to be the next nominee for governor.

If any more aspirants bob up, there won't be anybody left to vote for them. This certainly has been a banner year for orangoes and candidates.

Irvin S. Cobb

Our outfit got a lot of cheers from the crowds and a perfect ovation when passing a given point where the Elks also were giving away beer. All three of us felt pretty proud of ourselves until we realized that probably the applause wasn't meant for us. There must have been thousands in that crowd who'd never before seen a horse-drawn pleasure vehicle.

If Lady Godiva, dressed only in her long hair, rode on a white horse through any modern city street, there'd probably be ten who'd hurrah for the horse against one who looked a second time at the lady. Sight of a white horse would be a treat to one and all, whereas in these days of nudism and public undressing on the beaches—but that will be about all for that.

International Messes.

WITH the great powers tottering on the brink of hostilities to a more tottery extent than usual; with the Spaniards still willing to fight to the last Italian from Brother Mussolini's loan collection; with China battered to a bloody hash-meat in what would closely resemble a war if only Japan had so declared it, which must indeed be gratifying to the ghosts of the thousands already slain and the homeless refugees from ruined cities—this seems a mighty good time for us to keep our shirt on.

Kindly recall that other historic occasion when Uncle Sam felt called upon to hop into a mess cooked up by foreign nations and, as a result, not only lost his shirt, but has never since been able to collect the laundry bills for washing the said shirt. This, if you get the drift, is a subtle reference to those defaulted European debts.

Classifying Bores.

I'VE been classifying bores. Class B bores are those still using the lapel clutch or buttonhole grapple, whereas a class A bore is one whose boast is that he never lays a finger on you—just holds the victim by psychic power.

Lately I've met what I should call a super A type, the same being a gentleman who, in addition to having perfect technique otherwise, had been imbibing garlic to excess—and didn't care who knew it. When finally rescued, they had to use a pulmotor on me.

Meeting this champion reminded me of what I heard the late Wilson Minzer say to a gentleman who insisted on boring Wilson while suffused with the afterglow brought on by combining bourbon whisky and Bermuda onions in his diet. His hiccoughs were not only frequent but had echoes to them.

Finally, when Wilson was practically ready for artificial respiration to be applied, he said:

"Dear sir, your breath would start the windmills turning in an old Dutch painting."

* * *

Typical Texans.

I USED to think a typical Texan was one who said he was going to send you a ten-gallon hat and then didn't do it. But he is a subspecies.

A really orthodox Texan tells you he's giving you a pair of genuine Texas steer horns. They'll be along as soon as he can have them shipped. But he never ships 'em—that's what makes him typical.

So many typical Texans have volunteered to send me sets of long horns that, if all these parties were laid end to end, you'd have one of the finest consecutive strings of born liars ever seen. But they wouldn't stay that way; they'd rise right up and start looking for Easterners to promise long horns to.

Shock of Rattlesnake Cures His Indigestion

Chico, Calif.—Leo Price is confident he has discovered a sure cure for indigestion. On a recent fishing trip he was stricken with an acute attack. While trying to pack his equipment to return home, he suddenly discovered a rattlesnake near his foot, coiled to strike. He leaped to safety and when he had recovered from the shock the indigestion had disappeared.

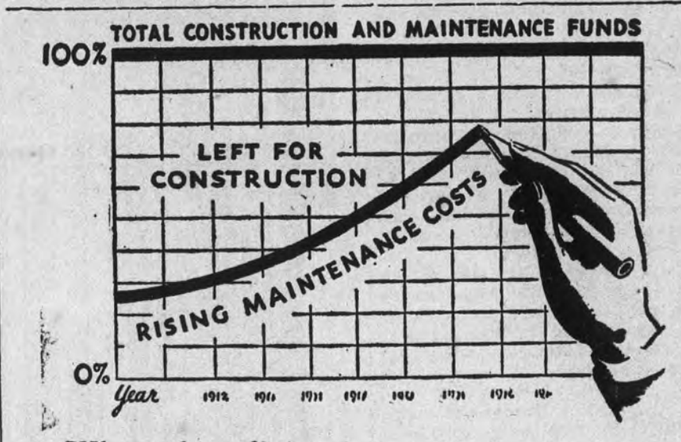
IS YOUR TELEPHONE IN YOUR NEIGHBOR'S HOME ?



It is often embarrassing to ask a neighbor to let you use her telephone. Of course neighbors are gracious about lending, in your household's little emergencies, but sometimes it is troublesome to both parties when an unexpected caller wants to borrow the telephone.

Possibly the embarrassment in using a neighbor's telephone arises from the fact that while one can return flour or coffee in full, borrowed telephone service cannot be repaid in kind.

If you seriously consider the many services the telephone renders many times each day, and compare its value with the small cost, you will probably agree that it is false economy to try to do without it.

It is easy to order your telephone. Just get in touch with the Business Office, or give your order to any telephone employe.

Where these lines meet is "THE END OF THE ROAD"

INFERIOR, temporary highway surfaces clamor for more and more maintenance and reconstruction year after year. Eventually, any new roads are out of the question. All the annual road money goes for upkeep! Then, "the end of the road" has been reached, both literally and figuratively.

But Here's Big News!

Taxpayers save from $88 to $465 per mile per year in the cost of surface maintenance on concrete highways compared with other types of pavement.

This statement is based on the actual reports of surface maintenance costs on 135,000 miles of pavement in 21 states — every state that publishes these records.

Concrete is the standard by which all roads are judged ... insuring maximum safety, comfort and economy for motorists. High visibility at night ...easy on tires, gas and repairs.

Demand concrete for your roads.

SHELBY COUNTY VOTERS

It is now time for loyal and political minded citizens to pay up your poll tax and be ready for the numerous elections which will take place during 1938. Did you know that statistics show that only 20.4 per cent of the Alabamians of voting age are now qualified to vote?

There will be, beside County offices to be filled next year, a United States Senator, a Governor, and Congressmen, so if you want to have a say so in your State, County and National Government, the Poll Tax payment isnecessary for your individual expression.

WHY PAVE STREETS WITH CONCRETE?

here's why —

1. Every street demands a gritty, non-skid surface for the protection of motorists and pedestrians.
2. At night you need a pavement with high visibility.
3. Safety also calls for a pavement that is free from chuck holes, ruts and bumps . . . and stays that way with minimum maintenance.
4. You want a pavement that drains quickly : : : that is easily cleaned and stays clean : : : no depressions to catch dirt.
5. You want a pavement that makes the whole neighborhood look modern, prosperous, attractive.

Concrete : : : and only concrete : : : completely meets all of these specifications.

A Letter From Pope's Store

DEAR FRIENDS:

It seems like the weather man has it in for us again. There is nothing we can do about the weather, but we do want to caution the farmers again to be sure and let the cotton dry out good before picking it, or if you pick it wet, or even damp, be sure to dry it out before ginning it. If you don't the gins will cut it and there is no demand for gin-cut cotton and you cannot borrow on it either.

Again we want to appeal to you to spend your money with the home merchants. We have a full stock of good merchandise and our prices are right, so be sure to inspect our merchandise and prices before going elsewhere to buy.

We have just received a shipment of Sweaters for the entire family, prices from 50c to $5.00.
Part wool, suiting in plain and plaids for 50c per yard.
All kinds of ladies underwear, hosiery, slippers and oxfords.
Ladies cotton hose for 12c per pair. Whoopee socks from 5c to 20c.
Play cloth for boys waists and shirts for 15c.
Good weight outings, 36" wide, for 15c.

In the hardware department we have galvanized tubs in all sizes.
Wash pots, Stoves, and Ranges. Hollow ware Axes in both single and double bit. Axe handles. Cross Cut saws, hammers, hand saws and other items too numerous to mention.

CIRCUIT COURT CALLED BY JUDGE W. W. WALLACE

The Jury term of the Civil week of the Shelby County Circuit Court will begin on November 8. The Crim inal week will follow beginning on November15 and continuing thru the week. Judge W W Wallace, presiding

The Election determining the continuance of the School tax went over in Shelby County by the final vote of 641 to 225.

A. E. Norwood, prominent citizen of Calera and avowed candidate for Sheriff was a distinguished visitor in Columbiana on Tuesday.

There are 272 accredited high schools in Alabama for white children, 2029 teachers are employed and 59,181 pupils are enrolled.

According to the American Petroleum Industries Committee there are more than ten million families in the United States owning automobiles that have never purchased a new car. They have always bought used ones.

Censes report shows that there were 4,141 bales of cotton ginned in Shelby County from the crop of 1937 prior to October 1 as compared with 3,865 bales ginned to October 1, crop of 1936.

SHELBY COUNTY EXCHANGE INC. OFFERS OUTSTANDING VALUES

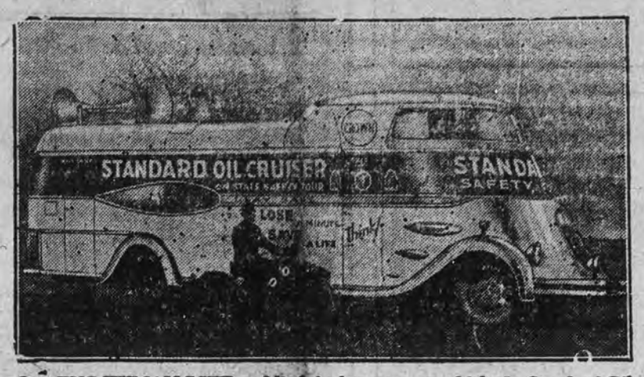
One of the most enterprising and worthwhile organizations we have inspected recently, is the SHELBY COUNTY EXSHANGE INC., located in Columbiana, Alabama,, and under the directorship of Manager W E Findley, well known prominent planter and business man of Shelby County.

This firm is vitally interested in Farmers, there products and requirments and has bought in volume in order that they could serve his needs at the lowest possible cost.

This firm is fully equiped to grind your meal and to crush your feed for you. It is a unique organization and one in which Shelby County citizens feel a just pride. Go by their location today and take your produce you have for sale, and talk over any farm supplies you may need, They also carry a complete line of seeds in bulk.

Their slogan is an arresting one: "Give us a call and you will become a regular customer".

THE COLUMBIANA BAPTIST CHURCH



J. W. Jones, Pastor

Next Sunday, Oct. 24, will mark the first anniversary of pastor and people. The pastor will preach both morning and evening. His morning subject will be "My Desire for the Church." A large Sunday School attendance is very much desired and a full house for the preaching service.

"WE NEED YOU AND YOU NEED US. SO come and fill your place and help carry on the greatest work in all the world.

Attacks Evil

It is part of the very essence of Christianity not to let evil alone but to attack it.

SAVING HUMAN LIFE and limb is the cause to which the Standard Oil Company is devoting the services of the magnificent Safety Cruiser and its crew. In close harmony with public officials, the police, and safety organizations in the State, the loudspeakers of this modern crusader carry the message of safety to public gatherings and especially to children in schools. The Safety Cruiser is of great interest to all wherever it stops. It is an ultra-modern land yacht, equipped with a spacious and comfortable lounge, sleeping accommodations, running water, refrigeration, cook's galley, fireproof projection room, and many other conveniences and necessities. Dedicated to the prevention of accidents on our highways, the Standard Oil Safety Cruiser will preach and sing its gospel of "Live—and let live" into the lives of young and old in all corners of the State.

Safety organizations have pointed out many reasons for careful and safe observances of all traffic rules and regulations. The State of Alabama, in an endeavor to cut down the accidents and deaths rate has placed a motor Patrol System on the Highways. These motocyclists have received favorable and grateful comment from Alabama's citizenry but it remained for the Standard Oil Cruiser on a State wide Safety tour to make Alabama, Safety Conscious!

The writer in an endeavor to get some first hand information regarding this Good Will Safety tour, of which we had heard so much, copped an interview with Paul Scheen who is in charge of the Cruiser and who made an impressive talk in the High School Auditorium on Tuesday afternoon stressing the A.B,C'S of Safety ALWAYS BE CAREFUL!

Mr Scheen is a native of Minnesota, but upon questioning this brilliant exponent of SAFETY FIRST, we learned he had been in all but 6 of these United States—He speaks intelligently on his subject. His facts and figures are at his finger tips and with a dynamically pleasing personality, he captivated the attention of all the school children and Faculties of both schools, with Supt. J L Appleton's good words thrown in for full measure on Tuesday afternoon.

The startling figures of the following facts should cause Alabamians to Play Safe—Look Both ways-Drive Carefully—etc:

There were 37,000 people killed last yearn and over 1,000,000 injured. This is a shameful record! Mr. Sheen stated further that at the present increase in death and accidents caused by motor vehicles, the casualty list would be something between 50,000 and 60,000 next year and over 1,500,000 accidents—due to a 17 per cent increases already noted. There have been 244,000 more motor vehicle deaths, than Americans killed in all the wars in which America has engaged, including the World War. Is not this enough to answer the special appeal now being made on this Good will tour?

In Mr. Sheen's talk to young America, he stressed the importance of Safety to the children who travel the bus lines daily advising them as Follows: "Keep your bodies at all times within the bus" - - - "Peeking out of windows sometimes causes instant death." "Wait until the bus stops and has gone before attempting to get out, and cross the Highway—so that vision may be clear in all directions." "Safety should be taught in the home! "Children should be seen - - - not hurt", "Say it with SAFETY—Save the Flowers"-and many other attractive slogans were left as Food for Thought on this all important influence on the public safety for future citizens of Alabama.

The Standard Oil Cruiser has the personal approbation of Chief W K McAdory—Gov. Bibb Graves— and other dignitaries of the State. Full cooperation was tendered those in charge of the Cruiser while in Shelby County and especially did Mr. Sheen pay tribute to O B Ozley of Calera, who also made a splendid talk on Highway Safety for motor travellers at the High School.

In conclusion, the following advice by Mr Scheen was left with a grateful populace. Appreciation for the opportunity of seeing and hearing this excellent presentation was express d by the interested spectators.

By Motion Pictures, by loud speaker thru the voices of persons whose unselfish devotion to your children is well known to you-the Standard Oil Company thru their representatives and excellently equipped Cruiser hopes to help you reduce the number of highway accidents and deaths. It hopes to make your community conscious of the need for thought and action to save precious lives.

WHAT WILL THE NEXT ELECTION BRING?

The political shuffle and deal in Shelby County for 1938 is about to begin In this deck according to political prognostigators who keep their "ears close to the ground" and who have called by the Democrat office to discuss the "ingredients" to be placed in the simmering proverbial political pot, we are led to believe that the "cards" will yield some new faces —some old. The patient old Democratic Donkey is now taking on "his load", and we also learn from our Republican friends that the Elephant will "carry thru with a full ticket next time" So the political skies look interesting.

Candidates who are, according to their own verbage, "considering it" and "at the proper time will file" "formal announcement", are numerous! Politicos who have completed the mental quandrary and have limbered up their pedal extremities are already "running" and "going places" and who frankly state will "appreciate your vote and influence" along the way, include according to a personal interview the following incumbents

CLARENCE ABBOTT

CLARENCE ABBOTT, W e l l known and universally popular bachelor, wil stand on his record of excelent service to the people of Shelby County, and will again seek the honor of representing them in the Tax Collector's office.

LUTHER FOWLER

LUTHER FOWLER, will be a candidate to succeed himself as Tax Assessor.

HENRY NAISH

HENRY NAISH, states he is feeling as "fit as a fiddle" now after several weeks illness, and is in better shape than ever and "ready for the race".

J. L. APPLETON

J. L. APPLETON, who has held the educational situation in Shelby County well in hand during the past five years, will again tackle this intricate phase of County activities.

J. M. LYON

J. M. LYON of the Board of Revenue will again offer his services as Chairman of the Board of Revenue

A. E. (BUD) NORWOOD

A. E. NORWOOD is the only avowed Candidate for Sheriff's office which we have interviewed however, we HEAR that Bun White, R. C. Foster and Clyde Gardner will add color and excitement to this important official race. There may be others we do not know.

GERALD FULTON

L. G. FULTON (Gerald), dropped by the office last week and stated he had definetely made up his mind to toss his hat in the political arena again as a candidate for the responsible position of Tax Assessor for Shelby County. Mr. Fulton, entered the last race rather late, but piled up a nice roll of votes. This announcement comes he states, after many of his friends throughout Shelby Co. have voluntarily interviewed him recently regarding his intentions for the political race in 1938. He states with their encouragement and an honest effort to attain his ambitious goal, he hopes to go "over the top".

J. F. McGraw

J F McGraw of Vincent will make the race for Senatorial honors from this district.

No mention has been made of offices to be filled on Board of Education and Board of Revenue-Or House of Representatives-We shall try and "get a line" on this by next week for you.

S. C. H. S. COMMUNITY FAIR WINS COUNTY APPROVAL.

On Friday, October 15, the Shelby County High School sponsored a Community Fair which was attended by hundreds of interested visitors. Beautiful floral displays consisting of Dahlias, Roses, Ferns, Chrysanthemums, and Potted Plants, caught the artistic eye, while more practical optics were turned in the direction of the many lovely hand made articles and Canned Products.

The Antique Room in which was shown furniture dating from "ante bellum" day-Old, old books whose pages were yellowed by centuries and many valuable heirlooms held a merited spotlight of attention, wandering on thru the corridors and rooms of Shelby County High School, we were intensely interested in an Exhibit of County wide pride in its possession— THE BUCK CREEK COTTON MILLS OF SILURIA, ALABAMA. We learned much about King Cotton which we had not known before, In fact we travelled from BALE TO BOLT with the gentleman from Siluria who was kind enough to answer our many questions and who was in charge of the Exhibit.

Our pilgrimage along the White Golden Trail began beside a huge bale of Cotton which was courteously loaned the Buck Creek Cotton Mills by Gordon & Friedberger, estimable and well known cotton buyers of Columbiana. On a table near by, was an example of the first step in the mill toward the finished bolt of goods which is manufactured right here in our own County and which products are in great demand throughout the Northern and Eastern markets.

From this bale of cotton we followed the workers in to the "Picker Room," Here the cotton is turned into lap-From here the "lap" is taken into the "Carding Department" and we find Card Sliver and Drawing Sliver. The Slubber Roving or Twister Process is next employed and the cotton cards are graduated on thru intermediate and speeder into the Spinning Room where the final twist is given. The cotton is then wound on Bobbin Cones-From these Cones, the warp is rewound on larger cones, and from these cones wound on to beams-then sized and the material is ready for weaving.

After the cloth has been woven, it is then napped to make Flannel-There was on display the single nap and the double nap finished material. There was also a bolt of soft filled Sheeting-nicely finished.

Attracting our attention next was a Coated Fabric about which we eagerly asked many questions. So often we have purchased this rubberized cloth, but we had never for on minute given the credit to Buck Creek Cotten Mills for the foundation upon which this rubberized fabric was made. This product, we learned is used extensively in the Eastern Markets and we saw colors of gold, yellow lavender, grey, white, and brown, which were receiving the univesal acclamation of many persons around the unusual display.

It was Shelby County to the front again Friday and Buck Creek Cotton Mills walked off with meried recogintion, blue ribbons, and whatever it takes to make theExhibit 100 per cent. The Democrat proudly joins hundreds of visitors in extending congratulations to those in charge of this annual event. It is Entertaining, Educational and altogether interesting from every standpoint and warrated the enthusiastic approval i received from those fortunate enough to have attended.

HALLOWEEN PARTY AT S C H S

Lesson for October 24

CHRISTIAN RENEWAL

LESSON TEXT—Titus 3:1-11.

GOLDEN TEXT—For the grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men.—Titus 2:11.

PRIMARY TOPIC—The Good Shepherd.

JUNIOR TOPIC—In His Likeness.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—A New Life in Christ.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Renewed Life Through Christ.

The pastoral epistles, of which Titus is one, were written by Paul to his young brethren in the faith who had been called to the ministry of the gospel to instruct them concerning three important matters—(1) Church order and organization, (2) sound doctrine and (3) holy living.

The third chapter of Titus, our lesson for today, deals with the life of believers in Christ in their relation to unbelievers. The great underlying reason why Christians should conduct themselves in meekness and humility toward others is that except for God's grace we who bear the name of Christ would be, and indeed were before our regeneration, just like the unbeliever.

We shall best study our lesson, therefore, by considering first of all v. 3 which indicates the lost condition of man by nature, then follow him through the miracle of redeeming grace, vv. 4 to 7, and finally see him as a living testimony in vv. 1, 2, and 8 to 11.

I. Lost—by Nature (v. 3).

It is not a pleasant picture that is painted in the graphic words of this verse, but, remember, it is God's picture of the unbeliever. He is said to be "foolish"—that is, irrational and senseless in his course of living. He is "disobedient" to the law of God. He is "deceived," literally "out of the way," misled by Satan. He thinks his pleasures and lusts are serving him, but alas, he is only a slave in bondage to and serving them. Such a life can only result in a man's becoming hateful to his fellowmen. They in turn are hateful to him, and so he hates them. Thus the whole world becomes a hateful place where men are "living in malice and envy."

How we thank God that we need not stop at this point. Man is by nature lost in sin—but he may be

II. Saved—by Grace (vv. 4-7).

How sweet are these three words in the sinner's ears! Saved by grace, not works, and made heirs of eternal life.

1. "Not by works" (v. 5). Someone has said that man is determined by one means or another to claim salvation by his good works. To do so may flatter the flesh, but it surely finds no support whatever in Scripture. We are to work for Christ because we are saved, and after we are saved, but no man can be saved by works.

2. "By his grace" (v. 7). God shows his unspeakable kindness and love toward man—saving him by grace, through Jesus Christ. Grace has well been defined as "unmerited favor." We deserve but the just condemnation of our sin, and God in his mercy saves us, through faith in his Son.

3. "Made heirs" (v. 7). Saved now? Yes, thank God! Satisfied? Yes, praise his name! But there is more yet to come. We who deserved only God's judgment are now made heirs of an eternal hope. 'Tis indeed no small thing to be a child of God.

Now—we are ready to approach in the right spirit the admonition to live out our salvation as a daily testimony to others.

III. Witnessing, by Holy Living (vv. 1, 2, 8-11).

The young preacher Titus is told to "put them in mind" to be

1. Subject to rulers (v. 1). True patriotism (and we did not spell it "pay-triotism") stands very close to godly living. National leaders would do well to recognize that the decay of our national life will follow the decadence of spiritual life. A man who is right with God will be right with his fellowmen, and a noble and useful citizen.

2. Meek and kind to all men (v. 2). Meekness is not weakness. Gentleness is the attribute of strong men and women.

3. Maintaining good, avoiding evil (vv. 8-11). It is the tendency of man to divorce morals from religion, to profess a faith which does not touch his daily life. Let us affirm "constantly" and "confidently" (as the R. V. has it) that those who believe in God should "be careful to maintain good works"—yes, and at the same time to "avoid" that which is "foolish," contentious, "unprofitable and vain."

Knowledge and Ignorance

The best part of our knowledge is that which teaches us where knowledge leaves off and ignorance begins.—O. W. Holmes.

Justice

Justice is the idea of God, the ideal of man, the rule of conduct writ in the nature of mankind.—Theodore Parker.

The truth makes free, brings joy, hope, encouragement.

Wool Is Going Places

LADY, lady, lady have you anything in wool? Smart women everywhere are clamoring for wool. They're wearing it to work in, to play in, to date in, to go to church in. Yes, wool is going places! Sew-Your-Own is here today (and will be here tomorrow) with three ultra-smooth new models for you to choose from—just to make sure you won't be a poor little lady without "something in wool" for Fall.

Needs Slim Lines.

That "something in wool" might well and easily be the handsome model at the left above. Especially does a weightier fabric need slim lines and here you have them pared down to hairline precision. The zipper from throat to hemline gives this frock additional chic, and the far-reaching collar takes care of that all-important need for contrast. French wine, black, duck green, and gendarme blue are the popular colors.

Compliment to Youth.

Youth and the blouse 'n' skirt have always gone sporting together. That's a compliment to youth and real flattery for the two-piecer above, center. This engaging combination has a waist-coatish topper and a simply cut, flaring skirt. A singular asset is its size range: 14 to 42. And because it is figure flattering every size is benefited. Acetate crepe is lovely for the blouse; velvet or thin wool is smart for the skirt.

For a Busy Body.

If you're a busy body or a lady of legion labors, you'll thank Sew-Your-Own for the charming new frock at the right. Now is the time to cut two versions: one in gingham for housework, another as your "something in wool" in the long sleeve style for all occasions. Remember then, double your chances for day-in, day-out chic with this one becoming model and save one-third on time and one-half on the price of your new Fall wardrobe assets.

The Patterns.

Pattern 1375 is designed for sizes 12 to 20 (30 to 40 bust). Size 14 requires 2½ yards of 54-inch material. With short sleeves, 3½ yards of 39-inch material. Collar and cuffs in contrast take five-eighths of a yard.

Pattern 1302 is designed for sizes 14 to 20 (32 to 42 bust). Size 16 requires 4⅞ yards of 39-inch material.

Pattern 1382 is designed for sizes 34 to 48. Size 36 requires 2½ yards of 54-inch material with long sleeves; 3¾ yards of 39-inch material with short sleeves.

READY TO BRING YOU RELIEF IN MINUTES

THE REASON
BAYER ASPIRIN WORKS SO FAST

Drop a Bayer Aspirin tablet into a tumbler of water.

By the time it hits the bottom of the glass it is disintegrating.

This speed of disintegration enables genuine BAYER Aspirin tablets to start "taking hold" of headache and similar pain a few minutes after taking.

YOU can pay as high as you want for remedies claimed to relieve the pain of Headache, Rheumatism, Neuritis, Sciatica, etc. But the medicine so many doctors generally approve — the one used by thousands of families daily — is Bayer Aspirin — 15¢ a dozen tablets — about 1¢ apiece.

Simply take 2 Bayer Aspirin tablets with a half glass of water. Repeat, if necessary, according to directions.

Usually this will ease such pain in a remarkably short time.

For quick relief from such pain which exhausts you and keeps you awake at night — ask for genuine Bayer Aspirin.

HELP KIDNEYS
To Get Rid of Acid and Poisonous Waste

Your kidneys help to keep you well by constantly filtering waste matter from the blood. If your kidneys get functionally disordered and fail to remove excess impurities, there may be poisoning of the whole system and body-wide distress.

Burning, scanty or too frequent urination may be a warning of some kidney or bladder disturbance.

You may suffer nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—feel weak, nervous, all played out.

In such cases it is better to rely on a medicine that has won country-wide acclaim than on something less favorably known. Use Doan's Pills. A multitude of grateful people recommend Doan's. Ask your neighbor!

"LITTLE STORIES FOR BEDTIME"

by Thornton W. Burgess

REDDY FOX HIDES

REDDY FOX stole swiftly through the Green Forest in the direction of the pond of Paddy the Beaver. Reddy took the greatest care to keep out of sight of all the other little forest and meadow people. It would not do to let one of them see him because — well, because you know, he was supposed to be down on the Green Meadows. He had said that he had a very important errand down there which prevented him going to look for Buster Bear as Prickly Porky had asked him to. Of course he hadn't had any errand down on the Green Meadows. It was just an excuse. The truth is he was afraid to look for Buster Bear. And so he had made up that excuse.

Then Jumper the Hare, who, you know, is one of the most timid of all the little people who live in the Green Forest, had offered to go look for Buster Bear. Reddy Fox didn't believe that Jumper really would dare do it, but if he should why Reddy knew that everybody would say that he was a greater coward than Jumper, and would laugh at him ever after. There was just one thing to do and that was to give Jumper such a fright that he would forget all about Buster Bear. So as soon as he was out of sight of the other little people Reddy had turned into the Green Forest and run as fast as ever he could to head off Jumper the Hare.

Now, Reddy couldn't have done this had Jumper started in a great hurry to look for Buster Bear, because fast as Reddy can run Jumper can run faster. But Jumper had not been in a hurry and so it happened that Reddy was nicely hidden behind a big pile of brush when Jumper came hopping alone. When Reddy saw him coming he smiled and it was a wicked hungry smile. He had started out to scare Jumper, if he could. Jumper would make a very good dinner. Yes, indeed, he would make a splendid dinner. Reddy's mouth watered at the thought.

Now it isn't for nothing that old Mother Nature gives things to her children and so, of course, there is a reason for the long ears of Jumper the Hare. It is that he may be able to hear the slightest noise so that he can run away from danger, for you know he cannot fight. So as he came through the Green Forest he kept stopping every few jumps to look and listen. He had almost reached the pile of brush behind which Reddy was hiding when his long ears caught just the teeniest weeniest sound. Perhaps in his eagerness Reddy rustled a tiny dead leaf. Anyway, Jumper stopped short and looked very hard at the pile of brush. Reddy held his breath and his yellow eyes looked very fierce and hungry. Still Jumper sat there looking and looking and looking. It seemed to Reddy as if he never would move.

Just as Reddy had about made up his mind to rush out and try to catch Jumper where he sat a heavy step sounded behind him. Reddy turned his head hastily. There was the big black stranger who had come to live in the Green Forest. Reddy didn't need to be told that it was Buster Bear. He gave one hasty look at the great claws on Buster's feet and then with a yelp of fright he tucked his tail between his legs and started for home as fast as he could run, the most frightened Fox who ever ran through the Green Forest.

A Mean Eye

Little Joan was learning to sew, and had been trying for several minutes to thread her needle. At length, losing patience, she said crossly: "I do believe the nasty eye isn't looking for the cotton."—Windsor Star.

"Turbo-Fusee"

Monsieur Millet of France, the inventor of this vehicle, called it the "Turbo Fusee," but for practical purposes it is still an automobile. The strange road craft is equipped with a five-horsepower motor, which gives it a speed of 180 kilometers an hour. But the motor itself does not directly drive the car; it compresses the air which supplies the actual power. The inventor claims an increase of speed, reduction of fuel consumption and a bigger cruising radius.

Lizards, Salamanders

Lizards are reptiles, salamanders are batrachians. Lizards are near relatives of snakes, and like them are clothed in a coat of tough scales, live on land or in trees and among rocks, utter calls, and belong to warm contries. Salamanders are mainly water dwelling, are closely related to frogs, have smooth, leathery, moist skins, are voiceless, hatch their eggs under water and their young develop through a tadpole (larval) stage. They are able to exist in cooler climates than most lizards because they hibernate.

87 SPEED RECORDS BROKEN TO MAKE TIRES SAFER FOR YOU

Never Before Have Tires Been Put to Such Gruelling Torture

Ab Jenkins, World's Safest Driver, Establishes 87 New Records for Safety, Speed, Mileage and Endurance . . . He Drove 3,774 Miles in 24 Hours on the Sharp Granite-like Surface of the Bonneville Salt Beds at Average Speed of 157.27 Miles an Hour

AT SPEEDS as high as 180 miles an hour — with the hot, coarse, abrasive salt grinding, tearing, scorching his tires — Ab Jenkins' special racer, weighing nearly three tons, pounded over the Bonneville Salt Beds at such terrific speed that it caused the surface to break up. Before the end of the run the track was so pitted and rough that it was almost impossible to hold the car on its course. Yet Jenkins set 87 new World, International and American speed records on Firestone Tires.

Building tires capable of establishing such records is made possible by patented Firestone manufacturing processes. These exclusive features enable Firestone to provide car owners with extra safe tires.

For the greatest protection equip your car with Firestone TRIPLE-SAFE Tires. By TRIPLE-SAFE we mean —

1 PROTECTION AGAINST SKIDDING —The scientific tread design stops your car up to 25% quicker.

2 PROTECTION AGAINST BLOWOUTS —The Firestone patented Gum-Dipping process counteracts internal friction and heat that ordinarily cause blowouts.

3 PROTECTION AGAINST PUNCTURES —Two extra layers of Gum-Dipped cords under the tread give extra protection against punctures.

Make your car tire-safe for fall and winter driving. Join the Firestone SAVE A LIFE Campaign today by letting your Firestone Dealer or Firestone Auto Supply and Service Store equip your car with a set of new FIRESTONE TRIPLE-SAFE Tires—the safest tires that money can buy!

OCTOBER DAY DREAMS!

Monday morning! October 18th! A day peculiarly fitted only for a Melancholy Mood! Dismal raindrops play a sad melody on thhe window panes of the office! A broody-moody-musing conjuring up of a 'bit of this" a "bit of that." The leaves have said 'G o o d b y e" to t h e trees! We kicked them out of our way or crunched them into the ground on our way to this journalistic re-treat this morning, and got a certain satisfaction out of it! The typewriter is crashingly silent! The linotype finger is pointed accusingly in our direction as "No Copy" marks its status! What CAN we do to get an idea revolving? It is hard to make dormant brain cells click on a frosty, cold, rainy, dreary October morning! We shall continue to just SIT—and SIT and see what happens! - - - - At this point an old friend meanders lazily by with the following sarcastic remark-"Hello—Still DAY DREAMING"? Ho! Hum! Even this verbal javelin failed to arouse any resentment-for we are firm adherents of that DREAM AHEAD—It's what holds you up on a rainy, dismal cold October morning? If DREAMING is the unpardon able sin, mon ami-then we stand condemed! We believe if by dreaming one can clear himself of any suspicion of idleness like lounging around in an easy chair before a fire-or lazing about the colorful red dappled woodlands- or just "hanging around Main Street, just DREAMING and doing nothing about it-well-thats terrible! But to be a Dreamer and a Doer-Ah! thats the perfect combination!

Little old DREAMS-just shadows of things we should like to make real! Yet-who would be brave enough to go thru this old world without them? Clouds may sometimes obscure our guiding star, but carefully let us guard the spark that kindles the dream of the secret soul, this MUST NEVER DIE!

Do you recall "wise one" the dream that once upon a time became a realization Do you remember the boy who sat on the shores of the Mediteranean and watched white ships on blue waters and DREAMED, and a new hemisphere was linked to an old world? Another youth, shunned by his school mates for his shabbiness and provincialism, walled himself within dreams of power and victory and kingdoms fell, an empire rose and Napoleon ruled over a continent?

Listen my friend, one is never lonely or entirely without HOPE unless he has LOST the power to DREAM! Of course there's the song-"When I Grow Too Old to Dream" but we would not dare suggest this to be your trouble this morning-However, IF it is - - - - We refer you to Dr Sam H Wallace of Birmingham who stated when one got in this condition he was in a "H - - - - of a fix" and thats diagnosis a plenty! Now, follow on thru these columns, you gave us an idea, and this possibly was the cause of the DAY DREAMING! Maybe-we were chasing an idea to warrant our existence. Maybe, we were just WONDERING what this week would bring forth! But with this early pop call, and the Irony and Sarcasm employed on this frosty morning-an IDEA forged its way thru our mental laboratory, and there You are and here I am, with at least h half column off my hands! Now isn't that a good start on a ten page paper this week? We think so! Purely piffle you say? We say so, too, but we still think we are worth the two cents you paid for this paper you are now reading-or did you? Come on Follow thru! You might find something interesting before its all over. Let's get going Up and Down Your Little Old Main Street and Mine! For whatever else you may be able to do—"YOU CAN'T STOP ME FROM DREAMING!

Mr and Mrs O R Head, former residents of Colmbiana, more recently connected with the outstanding Cheahau Federal Park project near Anniston, were distinguished and friendly guests in the Democrat office on Tuesday. Mr and Mrs. Head are enjoying a months vacation and are spending several days with their parents Mr and Mrs O P Head in Wilton.

CIRCUS CAPTIVATES "OLD" AND "YOUNG"

Clarence Abbott, Shelby County's confirmed and well beloved Bachelor was as "pleased at punch" over his trip to Ringling's Big Tent perfor mance in the Magic City last week, reports "eveything that it takes to make a Circus", the fascinating event it always proves—Something magnetic about the Circus, and always will be. We also saw Frank Fulton na son Dick, Mrs Cecil Duke, Jim and Warren Duke and Mrs J H Fulton who motored over to "take the children" - - to see the Elephants" etc.

THE MAIL BAG

Uncle Sam can be the best messenger to bring a bit o' cheer on a rainy day we know anything about-Among interesting missives received this week is a letter from Doris Eender who is spending the winter in Chicago and enjoying the breeziness of the Windy City, but secretly longing for the charm of the native Southland. A letter also from Mrs. Josie Elliott Field Secretary of the National Kindergarten Association with headquarters in Montgomery, and former resident of Vincent. Mrs, Elliott will contribute some articles on her edicational activities thru the colums of the Democrat which we know will be of interest to Shelby County readers. Watch for them!

GAIL GILMORE

The cutest little lady from Babette Land we have seen in many moons is a charming tiny Miss from Wetumpka, Gail Gilmore, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Gilmore, who are guests of Mr and Mrs L H Ellis this week. Gail was adorably dressed in a blue sunbonnet and dress to match-a veritable picture which would be a creditable artistic design for a magazine cover, when we interviewed her on Main Street on Saturday. Gail laughed her merriest, at our Baby Lingo, and from the depths of her Snuggly Blanket, she succeeded in exhibiting her new pearly molars, and captivated her audience during her sojourn near the postoffice where she was holding the spotlight of attraction, while she waited for her adoring "Grand-Dad" Ellis to cease his busy activities in his law office and render proper homage to "Her Majesty" which he homage to "Her Majesty" which h did-with prono alertness!

JUDGE CAGE HEAD

Scores of inquiries from interested friends, have been received in the Democrat office regarding the illness of Judge Cage Head. we are delighted to report that he is convalesc ing satisfactionly in the Veteran's Hospital in Tuscaloosa.

MRS. CAGE HEAD

The many friends of Mrs. Cage Head willregret to learn of her decision to spend the winter months on herplantation near Montevallo, known as "Linger Longer Farm". With the return of Spring, however, we shall happily look forward to welcoming her back in Columbiana. Her charming and gracious personality and her genuiness, endeared her to all who were privileged to claim her frinedship. Mrs Head will be sincerely missed from social, religious and patriotic circles in Columbiana.

Mr and Mrs H A Miller and sons Dicky and Hugh of Boothton, were the guests of Mr and Mrs Charlie Tinney last week end.

CharlieVerne Tinney who is teaching in Samson, spent the week end with her parents, Mr and Mrs Charlie Tinney.

Idell Turner wro is making an enviable teaching record in Siluria, spent the week end in Columbiana with her parents, Mr and Mrs J B Turner.

SPIVEY — BOZEMAN

The marrage of Miss Frances Spivey, lovely brunette daughter of Mr and Mrs C W Spivey to Dow Bozeman of Luverne, Alabama, was beautifully and impressively solemniz ed at the home of the Rev. and Mrs T K Roberts on last Thursday night, October 16, in the presence of only a few relatives and clost friends.

Immediately after the ceremoney the young couple left for their new home in Luverne, Alabama, where the groom holds a responsible managerial position in the Drug Store.

J. W. HARBIN CELEBRATES BIRTHDAY ANNIVERSARY

Mamie Jo Harbin left Satunday for Montgomery to attend the annual birthday dinner of her Father, L W Harbin on Sunday, October 17th which was given at the home of his son, Kirk Harbin. Stxty members of this aristocratic old family of South Alabama were present at the bouuteous dinner served. During the afternoon friends of the distinguished gentleman called and it was Open House Time in the Harbin home until late in the evening. Among those who enjoyed this hospitality were Grace Carter, Saranel Carter and Rux Carter of Columbiana. Miss Harbin remained over for the Nurse's Convention held in Montgomery.

Football fans who enjoyed the Auburn—Mississippi State game included: Paul O. Luck, Harry Gordon, Mr. and Mrs. A. P. McGhee andJack McGhee, Frank Head, Joe Stone,Mr. and Mrs. A. A. Lauderdale, Yeager Horn and many others.

Nelson Archer, Postmaster of Westover was in Columbiana on Mon day, and we acknowledge gratefully a thoughtful call from this former High School graduate who is another Shelby County boy who has made good in his own County.

Mrs A R Cooper is visiting her Mother in Jemison.

Cecil Duke popular Clerk of the Board of Revenue, has returned from a visit to Atlanta, where we regrett fully learn his brother, Green Duke, former resident of Columbiana, lies seriously ill.

We are glad to report that John Grady who has been on the sick list for the past few weeks, is recuperat ing at the home of his uncle, Hop Cole in the Wooley Apartment.

Fred Harrison of Montevallo was a heartily welcomed guest in the Democrat office on Monday. Several months have passed since Fred check ed in on former friends from his former home town, and we were delighted to see him again.

Mr. O. P. Head and O R Head of Wilton and Anniston were distinguish ed visitors on Monday, whom Columbiana friends are always happy to greet. They were Luncheon guest of Mr and Mrs. Frank Head.

Friends of Mr. and Mrs. James R. White are delighted that they are well on the road to recovery and are both at home. That "little boy" known as Jim White is like Tommy Tucker "singing" for his supper, only it does not sound like a very smooth melody. He wants "some thing to eat" and prontissimo!

Week end guests in the hospitable home of Mr and Mrs Joe Stone included: Mr and Mrs Y R Stone of Uniontown and Pearson West and David Stone of Auburn.

A congenial motorcade of Columbiana Football fans who attended the game in Birmingham, Saturday, included Mr and Mrs Frank Ellis, Mayor and Mrs Harry Gordon. Misses Ruth Luck, Marjorie Friedaum, Marris Milton and A D Gordon, Odell Turneer and J B Turner.

Mrs Dick Martin, Doris and Peep Harper visited during Sunday their mother and Grandmother, Mrs Nora Lester in Columbiana.

Miss Majorie Friedown of Gadsden, A D Gordon of Gadsden, and Harris Milton Gordon of the University were making merry in the home of Mayor and Mrs Harry Gordon during week end.

$5000 invested to provide each Job

In order to supply a cotton mill worker with a job, an average investment of five thousand dollars in plant, equipment and machinery is necessary... In other words, to supply the 39,000 cotton mill operatives in Alabama with a place to work, the machinery to work with, and an opportunity to ply their trade, it was necessary for stockholders (most of them Alabama citizens) to make an investment of 195 million dollars!

Alabama's cotton mills are its largest industry. It is an industry that has developed phenomenally in recent years... By the intelligent and sympathetic cooperation of management, operatives, legislators, farmers, and consumers, it will continue to grow to the greater prosperity of all Alabamans.

HOW TO CHECK JAPAN?

United States Doesn't Wish to Take the Lead . . . No Peace in Labor Ranks

Hull, Davis and Welles Going to Confer With President.

Edward W. Pickard
SUMMARIZES THE WORLD'S WEEK

© Western Newspaper Union.

May Meet in Brussels

HOW far President Roosevelt is willing to go in the effort to stop Japan in China is what other powers, especially Great Britain, are eager to know. The people of the United States also would like to be informed in that matter. The British statesmen wish America to take the lead, and also they would like the suggested conference of the nine-power treaty signatories to be held in Washington. This latter suggestion is definitely opposed in our capital, and so it was believed Brussels might be selected as the meeting place. Cities in Switzerland also were considered.

Mr. Roosevelt, who conferred with Secretary of State Hull, Undersecretary Sumner Welles and Norman Davis, his roving ambassador, was represented as being strongly averse to taking a solitary lead in the action to check the Japanese. Apparently he preferred that the "quarantining" of nations guilty of "international lawlessness" which he proposed in his Chicago speech should be limited to a united international moral stand.

The National Council for Prevention of War, representing a part of the extreme peace sentiment in the United States, announced that its annual meeting had declared for immediate invocation of the neutrality law which the President has not seen fit to put in operation. The council was strongly against a boycott on Japanese goods, believing this would only aggravate the situation.

Japan Denies Violations

IN A formal reply to the charges of treaty violation the Tokyo foreign office flatly denied responsibility for the Sino-Japanese conflict and asserted that China, not Japan, had violated the treaties. The anti-Japanese attitude and the mobilizing of Chinese troops, said the statement, forced Japan to take military action, entirely in self-defense. Japan disclaimed any desire to annex parts of Chinese territory, and declared the accusing nations misunderstand the situation.

—*—

Italy Supports Japanese

THERE was considerable doubt whether Italy would take part in the Pacific treaty conference, but it was assumed that if it did, it would defend the course pursued by Japan in China and would do what it could to frustrate the designs of the other conferees.

Giacinto Auriti

This was assured by the message conveyed to the Tokyo government by Giacinto Auriti, Italian ambassador to Japan. According to a Japanese news agency, Auriti promised Kensuke Horinouchi, Japanese vice foreign minister, that "Italy will never spare general support to Japan."

—*—

Japs Win Big Battle

DISPATCHES from Shanghai said the Japanese forces in north China had won a big victory in Hopei province, breaking through the Chinese lines at Shichiachuang on a vital railway after three days of fierce fighting. However, the Chinese claimed to have strengthened their positions in that region and it was reported the communist eighth route army was heavily attacking the rear and flank of the Japanese columns in Shansi province.

Neutral observers thought the Japanese conquest of North China would soon be complete.

In Tokyo Prince Konoye, the premier, formed a supreme war council of national leaders.

Japan's plan to set up an autonomous republic comprising the five northern provinces is revealed in the Tokyo press. The capital is to be Peiping under its old name of Peking.

No Peace for Labor

WAR between the rival factions in American organized labor is not going to cease in the near future. The C. I. O. leaders gathered in Atlantic City for their first "war council," and John L. Lewis, their chief, revealed plans for setting up a permanent dual organization. He condemned the suspension of the C. I. O. unions from the American Federation of Labor as "cowardly and contemptible" and said those unions considered themselves now out of the federation and awaited any further action by the federation with complete indifference.

John L. Lewis

In the federation convention at Denver it was taken for granted that the ten C. I. O. unions would be finally expelled, and President Green announced plans for the attack on the rival organization in several great fields. The first vigorous blow will be struck on the Pacific coast in a drive to organize workers in the cannery and agricultural field. The second battle ground will be among the white collar workers generally, and an effort to offset the C. I. O. maritime groups on the Pacific coast was considered.

One of the speakers in Denver was Senator George L. Berry of Tennessee. He has kept his pressmen's union within the federation, although he was closely associated with Lewis in "Labor's Non-Partisan league." Berry maintained his seat on the fence, wishing success to the federation organization campaign, and also to the organizing efforts of "others."

More TVA's Opposed

ONE of the bills which President Roosevelt wants congress to push through in the expected special session is the measure introduced by Senator Norris creating seven more TVA's to preserve and develop natural resources throughout the country. The bill was approved by a senate subcommittee, but publication of hearings held by the house committee on rivers and harbors shows that interested departments of the government oppose the plan.

In these published hearings the Department of Agriculture especially excoriated the authority idea, saying that "it would permit and seems even to propose duplication by the conservation authorities of a large part of the work of the Department of Agriculture."

The Treasury department objected to construction, operation, and maintenance of sewage and industrial waste disposal plants by federal authorities working "independent of and not subject to health laws of the respective states."

The Department of Justice "preferred" not to offer any suggestion. The Department of Labor reported "no specialized knowledge" of flood control and conservation.

Court Upholds Black

FOR the present, at any rate, Hugo L. Black's seat on the Supreme court bench is secure. The court refused to permit Albert Levitt, former federal judge in the Virgin Islands, and Patrick Henry Kelly of Boston to contest the legality of Black's appointment. The ruling was announced by Chief Justice Hughes, who said the two men did not have sufficient interest in the litigation. Levitt indicated he might start other proceedings.

SEEN and HEARD around the NATIONAL CAPITAL

By Carter Field

Washington.—Water power development by the government and the blessings of cheap electric current were the theme song of President Roosevelt's speeches on his western trip, and by a curious coincidence it is questions affecting federal powers in this direction which are more important, from the White House standpoint, in the term of the Supreme court just opened, than everything else put together. As a matter of fact, the high court has ruled on most of the questions affecting New Deal legislation.

So that perhaps Mr. Roosevelt was not ignoring the high court enlargement issue as much as some commentators seemed to suspect on that western trip. He made a flank attack, and it is generally conceded by Washington lawyers that he improved his position considerably.

He has now put the court in a position something like this: either the court must go all the way in approving federal power policies, or it will strengthen the President's contention that the court needs rejuvenation.

Every correspondent writing from the President's train stressed the apparent fact that the folks out West didn't give a whoop about the Supreme court issue, but that they were mighty strong for federal spending in their own necks of the woods. And they agreed very generally also that more water resource developments ware wanted.

The President did not mention the court fight, nor the senators who beat him on it, but it just so happens that many of the water resource developments are in the states of senators who fought him on the court issue, Montana, Oregon, Wyoming and Idaho particularly.

Expect Court Backing

Putting all the pieces together, experts here are predicting that the high court will sustain the government in every phase of its electric power program. For instance, on the right of the federal government to subsidize local governments which desire to go into competition with, or supersede, privately owned electric systems, either by outright grants of money or by loaning the money at very low rates of interest. For instance, on the right of the government to engage in the electric business. In the famous TVA case the language used by the court held that it was all right for the government to sell power "incidentally produced." That is, of course, power produced by a project the main reason for which was not the production of current, but for some clearly constitutional reason, such as navigation.

It is true that in all the TVA dams—there is another TVA case coming up before the high court before long—there is the possible contention that electric power was not the only reason for construction. But sometimes this is a hairline decision, and the government has been uneasy about the attitude the court might take.

This suspicion among experts here that the court may take an expedient course is based very largely on the general acceptance of the belief that at least two of the Supreme court justices "switched" in the Wagner labor act decision. The very generally held view in Washington is that at least two justices—enough had they stood by their original position to have overturned the act—changed. The alleged reason for the supposed change is that the justices feared that if they did not they would contribute importantly to President Roosevelt's case against the court then pending in the senate.

High Hopes

Always optimistic, the chaps who have been predicting erroneously ever since 1933 that President Roosevelt would "turn to the right in the near future" are at it again. This time they base their hopes on his promises in western speeches that he would balance the budget in 1939, and would do it by checking spending. The implication of course is that tax raises would not be necessary.

The process of reasoning which arrives at the result that the President will turn to the right is a little intricate, but rather interesting. First, the optimistic conservatives point out that the President cannot reduce spending appreciably. They point out that in those very speeches in which he promised to balance the budget he made lavish promises about bigger and grander projects—"more dams on the Columbia river," etc. Whereas his talk of economy was in most general terms.

Further, they point out that there is all sorts of pressure for increased spending.

On top of this they point to the well-known position of Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau, Jr., and his aides. They are frankly worried about the tax situation. For instance, they are sure that the income tax returns to be made on March 15 next will fall far short of those made last March. There are several explanations. One is that the calendar year of 1936, for which last March returns were made, was one of rapidly advancing security prices. Hence every one who sold, nearly, had a profit. The Treasury does not give out figures showing the amount of income taxes resulting from security profits, but the Treasury officials know them, and they are perturbed at the prospect of the decline in revenue unless there is a totally unexpected boom in the market between now and December.

Need Higher Taxes

Hence the Treasury is figuring on the necessity for much higher taxes to keep it from going further into red ink. Also it knows that the real revenue producers are few. Sales taxes and lowered income exemptions are politically verboten, leaving only boosts in the higher brackets and in levies on corporations as likely. Business knows this too, and that is a contributing reason, in the opinion of the Treasury experts, for the present timidity of investors.

So, the optimists figure, the President cannot stop spending, and he cannot head off higher taxation, which would seem to leave them little to be encouraged about.

Except—that they then proceed to look into the reason that made the President promise to do something they do not think he can do. This reason, they figure, is concern about the business situation, concern about this same timidity of investors; the unwillingness of present business to expand, and new business to start.

Conceding that the President does want to reassure business, and that he will find it impossible to carry out the reassuring promise, the alternative, they deduce, will be some assurance of another breathing spell—a period during which no further government regulation of business will be imposed. This, some think, would be just as satisfactory to business as a tax reduction.

But it takes a mighty optimistic mind to go all the way through on this solution and get that answer!

Anti-Trust Suit

The biggest anti-trust suit in history, involving corporations whose capital runs to more than six billion dollars, and threatening with jail sentences 58 key officials, most of whom are millionaires, with a sprinkling of multimillionaires, makes Madison, Wis., the oil capital of the country.

Apparently not one of the 58 officials is trusting his own company lawyers to get him out. That threatened jail sentence is too menacing. The progressive sentiment of La Follette-educated Wisconsin is too disturbing as one contemplates jury material. So each of the 58 is dragging along his own lawyers, or group of lawyers.

If there is a firm of lawyers in the United States which has ever had any anti-trust suit experience and is not employed on this case, it's not the fault of the oil millionaires. They have been hiring everybody in sight who had the slightest chance of knowing his way around in a trust suit, or with any particular knowledge of the government lawyers who might be used.

Accommodations in the town of Madison have long since been snapped up.

Most of the bigwigs, both executives and lawyers, have organized in little groups and leased private homes, turning them into clubs for the duration of the war. Some are wondering plaintively if they will get home by Christmas. Which is very funny to old-timers in trust suit matters, as they recall the duration of some of the more historic anti-trust suits.

Charge Conspiracy

The government alleges in the suit that the big oil companies have been violating the anti-trust laws by conspiring on prices. The practice, according to government officials, really flowered under the NRA, when anti-trust laws were virtually suspended in return for agreements by the employers to certain wage and hour conditions, as well as promises with respect to the number of people they would employ.

But on the day that the Supreme court knocked out the NRA, all the oil companies and their officials were in technical violation of the anti-trust laws. The government probably would not have prosecuted, officials say privately, if the oil men had thereupon stopped cooperating in price fixing. But they kept right on, the government lawyers say.

Another wrinkle is the provision in the anti-trust laws that an aggrieved party can sue violators of the law for triple damages. Thus if some one can prove that he lost one million dollars as a result of this price fixing conspiracy by the companies alleged to be violating the anti-trust laws, he can recover, according to the law, three million dollars.

This is such a serious angle in the situation that there has actually been talk of pleading guilty and taking light punishment stipulated with the government in advance. The object would be to prevent placing in evidence testimony which would give outsiders all the material needed for these triple damage suits.

The Place of Radio.

SANTA MONICA, CALIF.—"Deke" Aylesworth says radio can never displace newspapers. "Deke" is with Roy Howard's newspapers now and naturally wouldn't care to have his job shot out from under him by a loudspeaker. Most of us feel that way about our jobs, unless we happen to be working in some state institution, such as a penitentiary.

Radio never can displace newspapers any more than milk-tickets can displace milk. The newspaper reader chooses what he pleases from the day's coverage—gratifying obituary notices of people he didn't like; convincing statements from financial wizards explaining why his investments turned sour after he'd bought them on advice of aforesaid wizards; and, about once in so often, exciting special articles about the Hope diamond or the William Desmond Taylor case or the lure of Mr. Robert Taylor. But, the listener-in on radio must accept what somebody else already has predigested, which puts him in the same class with tapeworms.

So long as you can't wrap up a picnic lunch in a radio or use short wave sets to line pantry shelves with, we'll have newspapers.

Thanks, "Deke," I'm working for a string of newspapers myself.

The League's New Head.

I TAKE back all I ever said about the League of Nations being as futile as a fly swatter in a saloon brawl.

The league has a new president—the Aga Khan, who has the largest private income on earth because 40,000,000 Mohammedans regard him as divine and pay for the privilege, often going hungry in order to do so. And he certainly is qualified to head a society dedicated to peace—he never parted from any of his wives except with the utmost harmony.

Well, to celebrate his election, the Aga Khan gave the most gorgeous banquet ever staged in Geneva—1,500 bottles of champagne and 300 pounds of caviar.

Thus did the league justify its right to existence. There were but few flies in the ointment. Ethiopia's delegates were either deceased or missing, the league having drawn the color line, so to speak, which was more than Mussolini did when he wiped out their country last year. Spain's delegates likewise were absent, being mostly dead or else fighting one another.

Sick Calls De Luxe.

PAT O'BRIEN, the actor, tells this one about an Irish cop at the crossing who waved a car containing three priests to proceed after the stop signal had gone up and then, with harsh words, checked another driver who sought to follow along, too.

"But you let that other car with those three clergymen in it go through," protested the halted one.

"They was on their way to a sick call," stated the officer.

"Now wait a minute," said the citizen. "I happen to be a Catholic myself and I know about those things. Who ever heard of three priests going on one sick call?"

For a moment only the policeman hesitated. Then he snapped:

"Say, young feller, tell me this, you that knows so much—did you never hear of a solemn high sick call?"

French Slickers.

POLICE are still trying to round up the slickers who, in one day, raided twenty-nine banks scattered all over France. This reminds a fellow of 1931, when the bank examiners were coroners simultaneously sitting on the mortal remains of an even larger number of American banks, the main difference being that these French banks were looted by outside parties.

According to dispatches, this job was accomplished through fraudulent credentials for strangers presenting forged drafts. But I beg leave to doubt that part, remembering when I turned up at various outlying points over there with proper identifications and a perfectly good letter of credit. What excitement then on the part of the cashier (spade beard) and what deep distress for the president (trellis whiskers) and what stifled moans from the board of directors (assorted beavers) when, finally, they had to fork over. Why you can wreck a perfectly good bank here in less time than it takes to get a certified check for $9.75, less exchange, cashed in a French provincial bank.

But should it develop that any of these recently stolen francs were earmarked for payment to us on account of that war debt—brethren, that would indeed be news.

The Oppressor

IF WE should look under the skirt of the prosperous and prevailing tyrant, we should find, even in the days of his joys, such alloys and abatements of his pleasure, as may serve to represent him miserable, even in the hour of his prosperity, and independent of his final infelicities; and although all tyrants may not have such accusing and fantastic consciences, yet all tyrants shall die and come to judgment; and though such a man may be feared, he is not at all to be envied.

Jerry Field was breathless from the effort of shaking off congratulatory hands which had tried to detain him.

"Changing her sandals at Lookout House. I've got to speak to you, Trent! Quick!"

Relief stopped the thumping of Mark Trent's heart. Had Brooke married Field, would he be here? He would not. He turned to Kowa still standing beside him and asked in a voice he had difficulty in keeping steady:

"Is anyone in the print room?"

The Jap disappeared and returned with incredible speed.

"No person there, sir."

Mark spoke in a low tone to Jerry Field:

"Slip into the room back of the stairs. Sam, tell the musicians to play something loud and gay; then join us. Now that we know Brooke is safe, Mrs. Gregory—"

"Mrs. Gregory is coming with us," Jed Stewart interrupted.

Even with the door of the room closed, the beat and rhythm of the music outside set the air within vibrating. A cheery fire crackled on the hearth. Incredibly long-stemmed Templar roses in a tall vase made a splash of gorgeous crimson against the neutral tinted walls hung with Japanese prints, scented the air with their spicy fragrance. Mrs. Gregory resisted the seductive depth of a large chair and sat erect on the edge.

"What's happened? What's happened?" she demanded testily.

"Wait a minute. Thought I heard something." Field pulled aside the hangings at the window and peered out; Jed Stewart on his toes looked over his shoulder. "Yep, there they go. Police are no respecters of supper parties."

Jerry Field drew the hangings close and returned to the mantel. The lighter he held to his cigarette was not quite steady. "Now, folks, listen to my bedtime story."

For an instant there was no sound in the still room save the purr of the fire and the tap of a snowy vine against a window. Then it seemed to Mark Trent that the woman in the deep chair, Sam Reyburn with his elbow resting on one corner of the low bookshelves, Jed Stewart backed against the door as if to barricade it, stopped breathing as Field told how Brooke had commandeered his roadster and himself to take her across the causeway, of the reason she had given for her going, of her suspicion that the man she called the Bath Crystal Bandit might be serving as waiter at the party because of interest in the jewels of one of the guests.

Mrs. Gregory instinctively put one hand to her tiara and one of the blazing plastron at her breast.

"I suppose you mean mine. W-when did they in-intend to take them?" she quavered.

Mark Trent crossed the room. He sat on the arm of her chair and put his hand on her shoulder.

"Steady, Empress, they can't get them now. Go on, Field. Then you and Brooke are not married?"

"Married! No such luck. Didn't I make that clear? Brooke told that yarn to avert suspicion from our get-away. Do you think I'd be here if we were married?" There was a glint of steel in his eyes as they met Mark Trent's.

"Where was I—oh yes. We made headquarters in record time. Brooke told her story. Your kitchen, Trent, was the scene of the neatest, quickest clean-up in the history of crime in this state, I'll bet. No, don't go. Inspector Harrison sent special instructions to you to keep things moving here so that the news of the arrests wouldn't get out until he had the men safely in jail. Sorry to report that you've lost your chauffeur, Mrs. Gregory."

"Dominique! Not Dominique? He's been with me for years. Why have I lost him?"

"He's been taken along for questioning. The inspector didn't have time to go into it here. The Jacques at Lookout House also are being personally conducted to headquarters. Quite a party, if you ask me. I didn't hear much, but your man Dominique, Mrs. Gregory, was to have engine trouble on the way home. While he tinkered, you were to be relieved of your jewels."

Anne Gregory's face was gray; it dropped into sagging lines, her mouth quivered childishly. Suddenly she was an old defeated woman.

"Isn't there anyone in the world I can trust?" she whimpered.

Mark Trent moved closer to her.

"Of course there's someone you can trust, you have Brooke and Sam, Jed and me, and—"

"Don't forget me," Jerry Field interrupted. "Now, who's come?" he queried.

The low quick knocking at the door was repeated. Jed Stewart opened it cautiously and let in a drift of dance music and Lucette.

Her lips were startlingly red in contrast to the whiteness of her face. The rhinestone straps which held up what there was of the back of the bodice of her pale blue frock sent out a million or two iridescent sparks. She caught the lapel of Mark Trent's coat as he took a quick step toward her.

"They're whispering outside that Brooke and Jerry Field have eloped. It isn't so, is it? Brooke wouldn't—"

Mark Trent turned her by the shoulders that she might see Jerry Field standing by the mantel. He saw the look in the girl's eyes, saw something in the man's spring up to meet it. He felt the quiver that ran through her body, felt the effort she made to overcome it as she said flippantly:

"News flash! Eloping bridegroom returns without lovely bride. Where's Brooke, Jerry?"

"Changing her wet sandals at Lookout House."

"Wet sandals! Where has she been?"

"She'll be here in a minute and tell you herself, Lucette. Better go back to the party," Mark Trent suggested. "The New York producer and the Boston manager are still here, aren't they? We're depending on you to see that they have the time of their lives."

"Boy, when Brooke didn't appear, I forgot those bozos, forgot that we'd had a play." With his hand on the knob of the door, Sam stopped. "Come along, Lucette."

Lucette caught Field's arm.

"Come with us, Jerry, and stop the rumor that you and Brooke have eloped; also we'll let people tell us what hits we were in 'Islands Arise.'"

"Suppose we go back to the party," Mark Trent suggested, and offered his arm to Mrs. Gregory.

As Mark Trent stepped back that Mrs. Gregory might precede him

"Sorry to Report That You've Lost Your Chauffeur, Mrs. Gregory."

into the hall, Jed Stewart caught his arm.

"Just a minute, fella!" He lowered his voice. "The inspector wants us to wait up until he gets here, no matter if he doesn't come till daylight."

Mark nodded assent. The throb of a harp, the singing of the violins, the quaver of the horns, the brooding of the obie were muted to a caressing minor, heart-breakingly sweet, as he piloted Mrs. Gregory to a throne-like chair in the hall. He left her and went in search of the New York producer. It required considerable finesse to evade clamorous friends. Even as he acknowledged praise of his acting, congratulations on the party, he was thinking what a queer, aching, vivid thing love was, with its ecstasy, its inevitable misunderstandings, its quarrels, and he wondered why he bruised his heart against Brooke's dislike, wondered if she would ever forgive him for that kiss. At least he—

"Mark! Mark!"

Before he had a chance to evade her, Daphne Field flung a bare arm about his neck.

"Dance with me, please! Mark! Mark! You must love me!" The girl's voice caught in a sob as she pressed against him.

Too annoyed to answer, he put his arm about her to guide her out of the room. As he turned he saw Brooke Reyburn standing directly behind her. There was a curious light in her eyes, a mocking smile on her lips.

Even as Brooke smiled and accepted congratulations on the success of her brother's play, did her best to entertain the New York producer who attached himself to her from the moment Sam presented him, she was asking herself impatiently:

"Will the party never end? Who stole that paper from my desk? Can I make Mark Trent understand why I held it back? If it is lost, will he ever forgive me?"

But all parties end. The last of the guests, with Mrs. Gregory carefully tucked into their limousine, drove off in a flood of moonlight which transformed the world into an enchanted land of dazzling purity. The producer and manager left in a powerful car after hearty handshakes with Sam and a backward look at Brooke as she stood between her brother and Mark Trent in the hall. Except for the Reyburns, the Fields were the last to go.

She drew an unsteady breath of relief when the front door had shut out the brother and sister. They were outlanders in the present situation. She couldn't have told her story before them, and she must tell it quickly; that will must be found. She wanted Lucette and Sam to hear what she had to tell Mark Trent and Jed Stewart; the sooner they knew of the change in her fortune, the better.

Mark Trent linked his arm in Sam's.

"Don't wig-wag the let's-go signal at the girls, maestro. Jed and I can't let you off yet. Come into the library. Half the fun of a party is talking it over. I told Kowa to bring in some eats. I don't believe you Reyburns ate a mouthful of supper; you were too busy receiving congratulations. I'm starving myself."

Sam grinned.

"Now that you call the matter to my attention, I could toy with a little food. Come on, Brooke."

Lucette was curled up against the pillows in a corner of the library couch hugging her knees, when they entered. Stewart was backed up to the mantel. The girl's eyes were brilliant, her cheeks were pink, the voice in which she greeted them was bumpy from excitement:

"Come in, folks, and hear Jed tell me how good I was. He predicts that I would be an overnight sensation on Broadway."

"Snap out of that idea and snap out of it quick."

"Don't growl, Master Reyburn; he has been handing bouquets to the play too. I done you wrong, Sammy, when I crabbed about the last minute changes you made in the script; they were the high lights. Where's Jerry?"

Mark Trent answered Lucette's question.

"He and Daphne have gone home. You put it all over the other women in the cast of 'Islands Arise,' Lucette."

"She was a knockout and so was the leading woman," Sam agreed, "but, if you want to know who had the New York producer eating out of her hand, it was our little sister Brooke. After she arrived—trust a Reyburn to realize the dramatic value of a late entrance—I couldn't pry him away from her; lucky I got my option before she appeared. What were you saying to him, Brooke?"

"We talked theater fast and furiously. It was a wonder that I could think of anything but the near escape the party had from a hold-up."

Kowa entered with his quick catlike tread. His eyes sparkled like black diamonds as he set a Chinese teapoy of red and gold lacquer beside each chair.

"Boy, I'm tired! I feel all in," Sam confessed.

"It's reaction, and I'll bet you haven't eaten for hours and hours." Mark Trent spoke to Kowa as he returned with a laden tray.

"Serve Mr. Sam first. Here you are, maestro."

Sam's grin was swift and a trifle sheepish.

"I'm all right, m'lad; slumped for a minute, that's all."

"Don't apologize," Lucette mimicked.

"I'm not apologizing. I'm explain—" Sam broke off with a grimace at his sister. "Humorous, aren't you, kiddo? Fuss over Brooke, Mark, she needs it more than I. What with bracing me every time I got cold feet about 'Islands Arise' and getting dragged into the crime wave, she's had a hectic time since she came to Lookout House to live—I'll take another shot at those rolls, Kowa—I don't wonder she has decided to trek back to the town apartment. What will we do with the parrot when we go, Brooke?"

Brooke felt her color rise in response to the flash in Mark Trent's eyes as they met hers reflected in the great mirror. This was as good an opening as any she could bring about to tell the story of the paper Henri had produced. She rose and stood behind her chair.

"We won't have to consider the parrot, Sam. Mr. Micawber has gone."

"Gone!" Sam and Lucette chorused.

"Did he make another get-away, or has Henri kidnaped him?"

"Neither, Sam. He's in his cage, just a heap of green feathers."

"Poor old duffer. He hasn't had any pep since the night he took off in a hop for freedom. I liked that bird. Something's always taking the joy out of life."

"Cheerio, Master Reyburn, you still have your option," Lucette reminded. "Why can't we move to town tomorrow? No more commuting! What a break! I suppose you'll close Lookout House, Brooke?"

Brooke tried to force a gay note into her voice:

"I'll close Lookout House, Lucette, because I have accepted an offer—"

The sentence trailed off as Inspector Bill Harrison strode into the room.

"Well, Mark, I got it!"

"Got it'! You're too modest, Inspector, you got the whole gang, I understand."

"Cripes, I'm not talking about those dirty thugs, Mark. That isn't what I came for. I got the will you was telling me about."

Cause of Hail

Hail, differing from sleet, is not an exclusive by-product of winter. It results when an upward gust of wind carries raindrops high enough to freeze. They fall, pick up more water, are again lifted, frozen. A little more of that and the stones are heavy enough to fall straight to earth.

The most severe hailstorms have occurred in tropical countries. South Africa probably has the most dangerous. Stones weighing more than 1½ pounds have bombarded Natal.—Washington Post.

Beware Coughs from common colds That Hang On

No matter how many medicines you have tried for your cough, chest cold, or bronchial irritation, you can get relief now with Creomulsion. Serious trouble may be brewing and you cannot afford to take a chance with any remedy less potent than Creomulsion, which goes right to the seat of the trouble and aids nature to soothe and heal the inflamed mucous membranes and to loosen and expel the germ-laden phlegm.

Even if other remedies have failed, don't be discouraged, try Creomulsion. Your druggist is authorized to refund your money if you are not thoroughly satisfied with the benefits obtained from the very first bottle. Creomulsion is one word—not two, and it has no hyphen in it. Ask for it plainly, see that the name on the bottle is Creomulsion, and you'll get the genuine product and the relief you want. (Adv.)

HOW OFTEN CAN YOU KISS AND MAKE UP?

FEW husbands can understand why a wife should turn from a pleasant companion into a shrew for one whole week in every month.

You can say "I'm sorry" and kiss and make up easier before marriage than after. If you're wise and if you want to hold your husband, you won't be a three-quarter wife.

For three generations one woman has told another how to go "smiling through" with Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It helps Nature tone up the system, thus lessening the discomforts from the functional disorders which women must endure in the three ordeals of life: 1. Turning from girlhood to womanhood. 2. Preparing for motherhood. 3. Approaching "middle age."

Don't be a three-quarter wife; take LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND and Go "Smiling Through."

SHELBY DEFEATS VERBENA 31-2

A heavy but inexperienced Football team from Verbena was stopped by Shelby High's Wildcats on last Friday in Columbiana by the Score of 31-2 as Shelby's passes flew thru the game.

First Quearter

Shelby took the kick off and on consecutive plays, took the ball on Verbena's 15 yard stripe,. where Martin fumbled and Verbena recovered. Failing to gain, Verbena kicked and Shelby scored after 5 plays, driving from Verbena's 40. The extra point failed. Score-Shelby 6 Verbena 0.

Second Quarter

Verbena received and again kicked to Shelby's 20. Martin's punt was blocked, but Martin recovered behind his goal line, giving Verbena a safety. Score Shelby 6 Verbena 2. With control of the ball on her own 20. Shelby failed to make first down, in three tries, and punted.

Verbena made her first down but was forced to punt after two plays. Punts were exchanged three times with neither team gaining consistently in running plays, when the half ended.

.... Third Quarter ....

Verbena kicked off and Shelby carried the ball to Verbena's 40. After two plays, Letson, left end for Shelby took a forward pass, and later alled it to Martin who scored. The point was converted on a line buck. Score Shelby 13 Verbena 2.

Shelby kicked off to Verbena and held for downs. The passes were completed in succession, placing the ball on Verbena's 5. Thorngburg went over for the touchdown. Score Shelby 19 Verbena 2.

After Shelby had kicked off to Verbena had failed to gain on two tries, which represents an increase of approximately 15 per cent over last year. Eighty-three per cent of those enrolled at Auburn are residents of Alabama, approximately this percent age having remained constant at Auburn for many years. Of the 464 out-of-state students, 361 are from Georgia, Florida, and other southern states.

The complete list of Shelby County students at Auburn is as follows: They are Ehney Addison Ambrose, Wilton; Charles Henry Bailey; Montevallo; Arthur Wiggins Cooper, Montevallo; Fred H. Frost, Jr., Montevallo; James Ellwood Gunn, Calera; Harold Millman, Siluria; Douglas Marshall Kent, Siluria; David Hames MacKnight, Columbiana; Miller Miles Jackson McGhee, Columbiana; Sammie Elwin Pate, Shelby; Louisa Fowler Taylor, Columbiana; Joseph Bloomer Turner, Columbiana; Preston Monroe Wilder, Wilsonville; Unmer Wilson, Montevallo; and Mansel Wolf, Wilsonville.

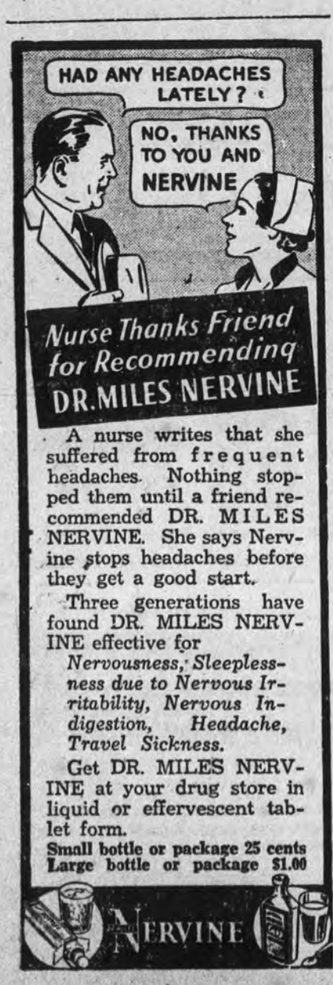
All States and Many Nations at New York Fair

NEW YORK (Special).—That the New York World's Fair of 1939 is to be both a national and an international exposition is held to be certain even at this early date.

Thirty-one States and two Territories have already passed legislative measures which their Governors have signed providing for participation in it in response to the nation-wide invitation extended by Governor Herbert H. Lehman of New York and Grover Whalen, President of the Fair Corporation.

State response has been both prompt and generous in the amounts appropriated for representation at the exposition. Some of the States are awaiting only legislative sessions to add their names to the list. There is every indication that by the time 1939 arrives, all 48 will have joined their fellow commonwealths in this demonstration of national unity.

The States which have passed bills, with gubernatorial signature, to take part in the Fair are: Arizona, Arkansas, California, Connecticut, Georgia, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Missouri (the first to come in), Montana, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Mexico, New York, North Carolina, North Dakota, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, Utah, Vermont, Washington, West Virginia, Wisconsin and Wyoming. The two Territories are Puerto Rico and Hawaii.



Foreign Nations Active

Among foreign nations there is every manifestation of enthusiasm for the Fair and for the opportunity which they realize it gives them to make extensive displays of their latest achievements in industry, science and art.

Thirty-four nations are now definitely a part of the Fair. Of these, 21 have officially accepted the invitation to participate. They are: Great Britain, Italy, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, France, Brazil, Argentina, Paraguay, Cuba, Finland, Guatemala, Roumania, Dominican Republic, Haiti, Uruguay, Sweden, Norway, Irish Free State, Ecuador, Netherlands, Chile and Japan.

First definite allocation of space to a foreign government was made to Russia. Her commissioners visited the Fair site and after inspecting the available area for a Soviet exhibit, signed up for 100,000 square feet of space. The housing of a national or governmental exhibit will occupy 10,000 feet of this area. The remainder will be used for exparsion of the exhibit through Soviet industries.

Italy, not to be outdone, selected an even larger area for its display, taking 110,000 square feet not very far from the site chosen by Russia. Then the Netherlands, one of the smallest of the European nations, came to the fore with an agreement to take 75,000 square feet. Meanwhile, Great Britain has sent a commissioner to New York to gather data so that his Government may determine the extent and nature of British participation in the exposition.

There were 137,188 white school children being transported in buses to and from school in Alabama in 1935. Of this number 87,929 are in the elementary grades and 49,259 are in the high school grades. The number of negroes transported was 2,500.

Under authority of the legislature Governor Graves reduced the State ad valorem taxes from 65 cents on the hundred dollars to 60 cents. This becomes effective on property now being assessed and on which taxes will be due on October 1, 1938.

The State of Alabama paid more for the operation of her schools in 1935 than has ever been paid before in the history of the State. Local revenues were less because of the shrinkage in ad valorem tax values. There were more children enrolled in the schools than ever before.

During the entire history of this nation only one attempt has been made to impeach a justice of the United States Supreme Court and it failed. That was in 1805 when impeachment proceedings were brought against Associate Samuel Chase for remarks he made before a federal grand jury criticising President Thomas Jefferson. He was acquitted.

Republican Party Polled Largest Vote In 1928

The Largest vote polled by the Republican party in Alabama in many years was in 1928, when the Republican electors received 120,725 votes and the Democrat electors received 127,796. The Democrats carried forty counties and the Republicans twenty-seven. In the general election in 1930 J. H. Bankhead the Democratic nominee for U. S. Senator, received 150,985 votes and J. Thomas Heflin, running as an independant, received 100,952 votes. Heflin carried eleven counties. They were Chambers, Chilton, Clay, Conecuh, Coosa, DeKalb, Henry, Shelby Escambia, St.Clair, and Winston.

Camp Branch Sponsors Community Fair

The Camp Branch School, under the able leadership of energetic and progressive M. W. Sims, sponsored a successful Community Fair on Wednesday afternoon, the proceeds of which will be used in building and financing a lunch room for the children.

The plan as outlined by Mr. Sims is a novel one and will be the first Room of this type to be built in the County. Mrs. Sasser is cooperating with them, and lending her versatile talents and experience toward furthering this decidedly worthwhile and ambitious program for this community.

Special Investigation Mulga Mine Explosion

Governor Bibb Graves is awaiting a report from special investigators into last week's explosion four miles underground in the Mulga shaft of the Woodward Iron Works in Jefferson county which snuffed out the lives of 34 men, 14 of them white. Hundreds of others working on other shafts escaped. Preliminary investigation indicated an effort to light a safety lamp with a match caused ignition of gas and the subsequent explosion, but Governor Graves demanded a detailed report on what happened.

GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE FOR AIRPORT DEVELOPEMENT REQUESTED

The Alabama Aviation commission is petitioning the federal government for assistance in further development of 80 airports and landing fields in the state at an estimated cost of $4,000,000. New Hudson Terraplane Dealer ... Bowdon Jr.

The Bowdon Service Station, recently appointed Hudson dealer for Shelby Co. and vicinity will hold a formal opening and "housewarming" celebration today and all this week at the new sales and service headquarters for the line located at Calera in Alabama, according to an announcement today by R. E. Bowdon Jr. Dealer. The new Hudson Terraplane, will be a feature display of the "housewarming" , R. E. Bowdon Jr., announced.

Commenting upon his appointment, which was made public last week by Hudson motor car officials R. E. Bowdon Jr. said: "I feel particularly fortunate in securing the sales franchise for these new 1938 Hudsons not only because I believe them to be the greatest value achievement in Hudson's history, but also because the motoring public seems to agree that in any of the three new Hudson cars their 1938 dollar buys not only a better looking car, a finer performing car, and a more comfortable and more economical car, in addition to greater luxury in a bigger, roomier package than ever before. I look forward to a very happy and successful association with the Hudson Motor Car Company and right here and now I want to extend a cordial invitation to everyone to attend our "housewarming" celebration and see and drive these new 1938 Hudson cars. Hudson and Hudson Terraplane owners are particularly invited to inspect our new enlarged service department.

Alabama's Indebtedness Reduced

Alabama reduced its bonded indebtness to $71,020,000 during the fiscal year ending September 30, according to a financial report submitted to Governor Bibb Graves. Retirement of the bonds reduced the per capita for debtedness to $26.84, based on the 1930 census. Governor Graves announced an additional $500,000 in refunding bonds would be retired about December 1, far ahead of schedule and that thousands more of the State's outstanding paper will be called as revenues permit.

SHELBY SMOTHERS THOMPSON 52 — 0

Shelby County High School defeated a lighter team from Siluria on the local field last Friday Oct. 20. Smooth running and passing attack greeted the visitors and took its toll before the game had progressed a quarter. The first blood was drawn when Wallace broke through on a slant off tackle and ran 70 yards for the first touchdown. The point was converted on a pass to Letson.

After that the game was all Shelbys with the entire local squad seeing service. This resulted in 8 touchdowns and 5 extra points.

Summary:- Touchdowns, Wallace, 4 Martin 2, Letson1, and D. Martin 1 Points after touchdowns-Riddle, Riley Martin 2, Letson .

The Local team next travels to Piper where they meet the strong Piper High on Friday afternoon Oct. 29

CHEMISTRY EH

So, you like Chemistry? Last Tuesday our Chemistry Class consisting of 7 boys instructed by Mr Childs, was preparing an experiment with sodium (to be exact, the decomposition of sodium in water). Wales Wallace, Frank Martin and Ray Atchison were performing the ceremony, when all at once the whole thing blew up, and sodinm by-dioxide (the liquid produced when sodium combines with water) got in Frank's eyes, causing dangerous infection Mr Childs sensing the danger of such work, promptly took charge and stated that he would finish the experiment himself. He was filling a bottle with Hydrogen from the reaction, and loudly informed the boys, "Its full!" when Bang! The trough of water blew up, throwing water all over Mr. Childs, but fortunately everybody was at a safe distance, and no casualties were caused. Thus, we perceive, what power these chemicals have, and the necessity of good equipment in our Lab. of which we are sadly lacking.

LITTLE STORIES FOR BEDTIME

by Thornton W. Burgess

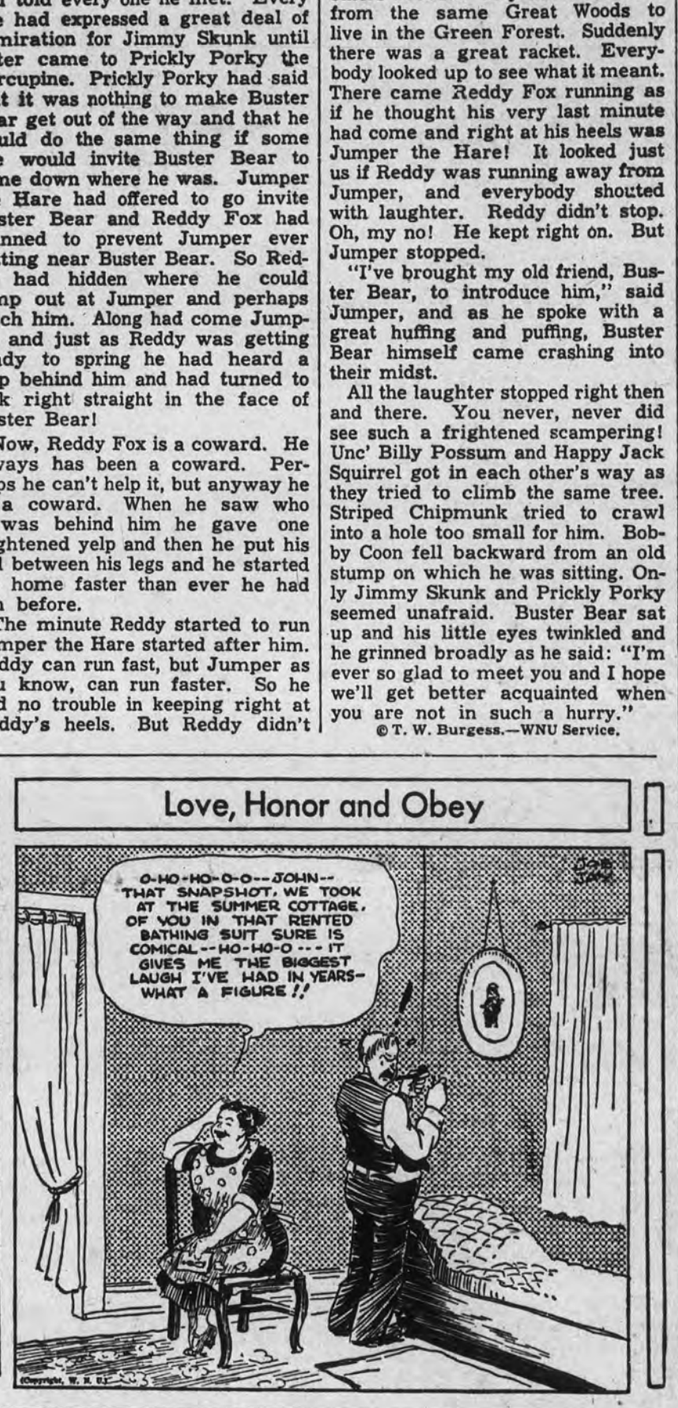
BUSTER BEAR IS INTRODUCED

NONE of the little people who were there ever will forget how Buster Bear was introduced in the Green Forest. It was the funniest introduction any of them can remember. They laugh now whenever they think of it, though at the time some of them didn't laugh at all. No, indeed! The truth is some of them were too frightened to see anything funny. You see, it happened like this:

Jimmy Skunk had met Buster Bear up by the pond of Paddy the Beaver deep in the Green Forest and he had made Buster Bear get out of his way. Peter Rabbit had seen him do it, and of course Peter had told every one he met. Every one had expressed a great deal of admiration for Jimmy Skunk until Peter came to Prickly Porky the Porcupine. Prickly Porky had said that it was nothing to make Buster Bear get out of the way and that he would do the same thing if some one would invite Buster Bear to come down where he was. Jumper the Hare had offered to go invite Buster Bear and Reddy Fox had planned to prevent Jumper ever getting near Buster Bear. So Reddy had hidden where he could jump out at Jumper and perhaps catch him. Along had come Jumper, and just as Reddy was getting ready to spring he had heard a step behind him and had turned to look right straight in the face of Buster Bear!

Now, Reddy Fox is a coward. He always has been a coward. Perhaps he can't help it, but anyway he is a coward. When he saw who it was behind him he gave one frightened yelp and then he put his tail between his legs and he started for home faster than ever he had run before.

The minute Reddy started to run Jumper the Hare started after him. Reddy can run fast, but Jumper as you know, can run faster. So he had no trouble in keeping right at Reddy's heels. But Reddy didn't know this. He was so frightened that he didn't stop to look back, and when he heard some one just behind him he thought it was Buster Bear, and tried to run harder. As for Buster Bear himself, he was so tickled at the sight of Reddy Fox chased by timid Jumper the Hare that he started after them as fast as he could go so as to see what would happen next.



At the foot of the tree in which sat Prickly Proky, were several of the little people of the Green Forest gossiping about Buster Bear and wondering if Jumper the Hare really would invite Buster Bear to meet them. No one excepting Prickly Porky believed he would. Prickly Porky knew Jumper better than the others because they had both come from the same Great Woods to live in the Green Forest. Suddenly there was a great racket. Everybody looked up to see what it meant. There came Reddy Fox running as if he thought his very last minute had come and right at his heels was Jumper the Hare! It looked just us if Reddy was running away from Jumper, and everybody shouted with laughter. Reddy didn't stop. Oh, my no! He kept right on. But Jumper stopped.

"I've brought my old friend, Buster Bear, to introduce him," said Jumper, and as he spoke with a great huffing and puffing, Buster Bear himself came crashing into their midst.

All the laughter stopped right then and there. You never, never did see such a frightened scampering! Unc' Billy Possum and Happy Jack Squirrel got in each other's way as they tried to climb the same tree. Striped Chipmunk tried to crawl into a hole too small for him. Bobby Coon fell backward from an old stump on which he was sitting. Only Jimmy Skunk and Prickly Porky seemed unafraid. Buster Bear sat up and his little eyes twinkled and he grinned broadly as he said: "I'm ever so glad to meet you and I hope we'll get better acquainted when you are not in such a hurry."

Home Heating Hints

By John Barclay, Heating Expert

THERE is an easy way to keep dust from sifting through the cracks of the ashpit door when shaking furnace grates. Quite a few readers have asked me how it can be done, and I'm sure many more of you will be interested. Here's how:

Have a spray made of small pipe, connected with the cold water system installed in the ashpit of the furnace. Only a short length of pipe will be needed. In it have small holes drilled and cap the free end.

Just before shaking the grates, turn on the spray. It will throw a fine mist over the whole ashpit, wetting down the ashes as they drop through the grate openings and settling the dust immediately. Then remove the ashes from the ashpit. They will be sufficiently wet to prevent the dust from rising and settling in the cellar.

The cost and installation of such a spray will be but little, and it certainly will save you considerable work in dusting off things on which the dust would otherwise settle.

GOOD RELIEF of constipation by a GOOD LAXATIVE
Many folks get such refreshing relief by taking Black-Draught for constipation that they prefer it to other laxatives and urge their friends to try it. Black-Draught is made of the leaves and roots of plants. It does not disturb digestion but stimulates the lower bowel so that constipation is relieved.

MAGIC CARPET
It doesn't matter what you're thinking of buying—a bar-pin or a baby grand, a new suit for Junior or a set of dining-room furniture—the best place to start your shopping tour is in an easy-chair, with an open newspaper.
The turn of a page will carry you as swiftly as the magic carpet of the Arabian Nights, from one end of the shopping district to the other. You can rely on modern advertising as a guide to good values, you can compare prices and styles, fabrics and finishes, just as though you were standing in a store.
Make a habit of reading the advertisements in this paper every week. They can save you time, energy and money.

OF INTEREST TO THE HOUSEWIFE

Opening Jars.—A strap with a buckle on one end can be used to good advantage in opening glass fruit jars. Run the strap through the buckle and tighten it around the cap. This enables you to get a good grip on the lid.

* * *

Preserving Bright Color.—Cooking preserves or jelly rapidly helps to retain the bright color of the fruit. The addition of pectin shortens the necessary cooking time.

* * *

Spaghetti and Cheese.—A nice way of preparing spaghetti that does not require lighting the oven. Fry one chopped onion and one-half pound ground meat in olive oil until nicely browned. Add two cups tomato puree or sifted tomato pulp, one teaspoon paprika, salt and pepper to taste. When nicely blended serve over plain boiled spaghetti and over the top sprinkle finely grated cheese.

* * *

Crab Savory.—1 crab, 3 tomatoes, 1 lettuce, watercress, 1 egg, pepper and salt. Shred the crab meat finely and mix with a little mayonnaise. Wash the lettuce and arrange leaves around and at the bottom of the dish. Place some crab in the center, then season with pepper and salt; add slices of tomato and hard-boiled egg and watercress.

* * *

Just for a Change.—If you cannot afford to buy anything new for the house and you are just a little bit disinterested this fall, try changing the position of the furniture and see if that bored feeling will not depart.

* * *

Small Molds for Pudding.—In place of one large basin for a steamed pudding, try several small molds, placing them all in one large saucepan. They will take half as long to cook as one large pudding.

* * *

Polishing Linoleum.—Dissolve a lump of sugar in the water when washing linoleum or oilcloth, and a brilliant polish will result.

* * *

Using Kerosene Safely.—One of the safest ways of using kerosene is to mix it with wood or coal ashes, then use a few spoonfuls of this mixture when starting or re-kindling a fire. This can be stored for regular use in a gallon bucket or other suitable container.

A Little Bit Humorous

SICK OF IT

"I am sick of reading about the heroine's eyes," he remarked, as he threw the magazine on to the floor.

"Why, dear, what's the matter?" she asked tenderly.

"Well, first she threw her eyes up to the ceiling. Then she let them drop on the floor. After that she darted them down a long corridor and rested them on the cool waters of the lake. Soon she must have got them back again, for when we next hear of her she was bathing them in sad, salt tears, wiping them, and sweeping them with long, long lashes. Once she was fool enough to rivet them on the dome; and when I left off she was just fixing them to an overmantel.—London Answers Magazine.

Lesson for October 31

THE MORAL ISSUE IN THE DRINK PROBLEM

LESSON TEXT—Romans 13:12-14; I Corinthians 6:9-11; Galatians 5:16-24.

GOLDEN TEXT—Walk in the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfil the lust of the flesh.—Galatians 5:16.

PRIMARY TOPIC—My Neighbors.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Greatest Law.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Why Is It Wrong to Drink Alcoholic Beverages?

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Moral Issue in the Drink Problem.

The title for our lesson is well-chosen—"The Moral Issue in the Drink Problem."

First, let it be clear that there is an issue. Those who have business, social, or political connections with the liquor traffic would like to have us believe that the repeal of prohibition settled the matter once for all. But let us be sure of this fact—the liquor problem is at our very door, and it must be met.

In the second place, many would have us think that the matter of drunkenness is a social, political, or even a physical problem, without any moral implications whatever. But those who are informed know that even the supposedly innocent beer is inextricably tied up with vice and crime. A prisoner in a federal penitentiary writing before prohibition was repealed said, "Criminals hail with delight . . . the return of liquor via the beer route and the greater license that the return of the saloon will inevitably bring. With the return of beer will come open prostitution and gambling." His words were true.

I. Drunkenness Is a Work of Darkness (Rom. 13:12-14).

Just as there are darkness and daylight in the physical universe, so there are two contrasting spiritual realms, of darkness and light.

Men "loved darkness rather than light because their deeds were evil," according to the Lord Jesus. (See John 3:19.) This spiritual realm of darkness is directed by "rulers of the darkness of this world" (Eph. 6:12), and their purpose is "spiritual wickedness." With the "works of darkness" the believer is to "have no fellowship" (Eph. 5:11), but is to "reprove them" and bring them into the light where their true nature is made manifest (Eph. 5:13).

"God is light, and in him is no darkness at all," and those who have fellowship with him "walk in the light." (See I John 1:5-7.)

Drunkenness is a work of darkness. It separates man from God and makes him fear the glorious light of his countenance. The solution for that awful condition is revealed in v. 14. "Put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ."

II. Drunkenness Is a Work of Unrighteousness (I Cor. 6:9-11).

No drunkard "shall inherit the kingdom of God" (v. 10), and the man who takes his first drink has put his foot on the path that leads to the drunkard's grave. Of course no man plans to go that far, but the fact is that such is the tragic conclusion for hundreds of thousands of men and women—damned for time and eternity by drink.

Again in this passage we have the answer to our problem. Not reformation, not education, not culture (desirable and useful though we recognize these things to be), but being "washed," "sanctified," and "justified" in "the name of the Lord Jesus and in the Spirit of God." Try that on your town drunkard. Thank God, it works!

III. Drunkenness Is a Work of the Flesh (Gal. 5:16-24).

The flesh—that is our bodies ruled over by self-will as opposed to God's will—is revealed in the Scriptures to be thoroughly bad, and in opposition to God. Consider the appalling list of the works of the flesh in verses 19 and 20. And note that in the midst of them stands drunkenness.

It is the lowest in man that responds to intoxicants. Little wonder that the Brewers' Journal came out right after the election of 1932 with the statement that "not one tenth of one-per cent of American youths know the taste of real beer. We must educate them." In other words the normal taste of an intelligent person would revolt at the stuff, but once give it a chance to stir the lusts of "the flesh" and the victim is caught.

Once again, note the antidote—live in the power of the Holy Spirit, and the flesh with its lusts is crucified (v. 24). How shall we have the Holy Spirit and his power in our lives? By taking the Lord Jesus Christ as personal Saviour.

Words Without Action

Few men suspect how much mere talk fritters away spiritual energy—that which should be spent in action, spends itself in words.

Killing Time

People partial to this crime of killing time might be pardoned if they'll only kill their own.

Kindness

Kindness is a language the dumb can speak, and the deaf can hear and understand.—Bovee.

A Trio of Triumphs

THE way to day-in, day-out chic for the woman who sews is shown in today's attractive new three-way plan. It goes deeper than the surface, you see, in the presentation of a sleek new slip. Ah, and it gives great thought to the surface, too, as you can't help but note in the two wing-side models. This is one triangle every woman who sews should want to know all about.

Spicy New Model.

As shipshape as a Parisian streamline fashion and, in its own role, as important—that's the little number at the left above. It does wonders to give one that up and doing feeling that's handy to have around the house in the morning. Make this frock in gay cotton: shantung, print, gingham, or crash.

A Congenial Slip.

Beneath a well-groomed surface hangs a perfect fitting slip! That's an old and honest notion and one Sew-Your-Own abides by religiously. Today's five piece version is as easy to put together as it is congenial to your comfort and outward superbness. Make two while you're about it: one with a plain top for everyday, the other with a bit of frou-frou for dress-up occasions.

Deft Design.

The "girl in the little green hat" wears a dress with many tucks in this her latest picture. It is the dress for you, Milady, to star in at familiar Fall festivities. Deftly but definitely it gives you emphasis where you want it; soft pedals worry-areas. Wool is smart material and it fits this frock's personality to a T. Let's sew and be seen places this Fall. Okay?

The Patterns.

Pattern 1389 is designed for sizes 36 to 52. Size 38 requires 4⅜ yards of 35-inch material, or 4½ yards, with long sleeves.

Pattern 1988 is designed in sizes 34 to 46. Size 36 requires 3⅛ yards of 39-inch material, plus 1 yard of ribbon for shoulder straps, and 1½ yards of edging for finishing upper edge.

Pattern 1392 is designed for sizes 14 to 20 (32 to 42 bust). Size 16 requires 2¾ yards of 54-inch fabric.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., Room 1020, 211 W. Wacker Dr., Chicago, Ill. Price of patterns, 15 cents (in coins) each.

Uncle Phil Says:

Distrust Is Your Responsibility

Is it more disgraceful to distrust one's friends than to be deceived by them?

Whenever it is "officially denied" there is a "catch" somewhere.

Because you are suavely asked to give your candid opinion, don't necessarily do it.

No cow feels vain because she is taken for a deer by the hunter and her hide filled full of shot.

Do you like to conquer obstacles? Try to get over disliking a man you have no reason to.

With Good Companions

They are never alone that are accompanied with noble thoughts.

Life is like a trip in a car. You never seem to be going very fast if you start fast.

The deaf aren't entirely unfortunate. Most of our worrying is caused by the talk we hear.

Even when you have plenty of money you sometimes don't know how to spend a lonesome evening.

Why Fly From the Unhappy?

The state of the unhappy makes us more sensible of the value of the happiness we possess.

A nature lover is like other lovers. His love is most ardent when he doesn't know much about it.

Romantic names given children may plague them in later life.

Constipated?

Many doctors recommend Nujol for its gentle action on the bowels. Don't confuse Nujol with unknown products.

What's RIGHT with ALABAMA

A TREASURE CHEST OF MINERALS

Let's look into this buried chest of treasure which Nature stored in Alabama long years ago.

In Alabama's northern counties are vast beds of red iron ore (hematite) estimated by geologists at some 1,970,000,000 recoverable tons, and lesser deposits of brown ore (limonite), first used to make Alabama iron in 1818.

Coal bearing formations in four fields—the Warrior, Cahaba, Coosa and Plateau—underlie some 8,000 square miles.

Dolomite, used for furnace flux in our great iron industry, outcrops in extensive belts and at many points is practically adjacent to both coal fields and iron ore deposits.

Limestone, principal ingredient in cement manufacture, valuable ally of agriculture and important in the manufacture of many chemicals, is found throughout the state.

Marble, noted for its fine texture, variegated colors and beautiful veining, occurs in many sections and has been used in many prominent buildings.

Clays of varied composition for making brick, tile, holloware and sewer pipe are widely distributed.

Asphalt rock for paving roads is another mineral whose full possibilities have not been developed.

There are many other minerals in Alabama which remain to be commercially developed on any considerable scale. Among these geologists list bauxite, barytes, manganese, mica, graphite, slate, corundum, and Fuller's earth.

How may one survey these mineral riches—how may one observe the many growing industries which they have already caused to be located in our state—without a feeling of confidence in Alabama's future?

Thos. Martin
President,
ALABAMA POWER COMPANY

The Alabama Power Company and Our State

Because the Alabama Power Company is a neighbor rather than a kinsman, The Advertiser feels free to come to its side from time to time and say a good word for it. We think that the Alabama Power Company, as led by Mr. Thomas W. Martin, is the most progressive, economic force in Alabama. We think that in pursuing its natural interests it is performing a high service to all the people of Alabama. The Advertiser does not profess to be an expert upon the question of electric rates, but, speaking for itself and for those whom it knows best, it does not think that the power company is an exploiter. It thinks that electricity in Alabama is low in cost, and at all events a blessing to all of our people. . . .

As native industries require electricity, the power company will accomodate them and so withdraw service to consumers in other states. This policy is well known and it is grossly unfair to attack the power company because it sells its surplus to other states pending the consumption of its surplus by native industries, all of which it stands ready to serve.

Why should business interests in Alabama malign and misrepresent so useful a public agency as the Alabama Power Company? That company is doing its best to make this state prosperous. All that it is or hopes to be depends upon the good-will of Alabamians. The Alabama Power Company is not a thief striving to escape the state with a lot of loot. It is a home industry whose natural self-interest requires that it benefit the highest possible number of people. Why should any good citizen make himself the enemy of the Alabama Power Company?—The Montgomery Advertiser.

OCTOBER GOBLINS! HALLOWEEN! CEREMONIES! HOLD WEEK END SPOTLIGHT

"When the stars shoot and the owls hoot
And bats fly in and out
When the fire burns blue, and the candles, too
Witches are about"

The fact that Halloween falls on Sunday will take away some of the zest with which pranksters have been going about making things hum around Main Street on this gala occasion. Yet, it will pay everybody to be on the Look Out-lest Goblins get you-if you don't Watch Out. The fact that Sunday is Halloween may make you safe-for somehow Sunday and Halloween do not make sense! They do not harmonize! Saturday Night precedes Sunday-Here's hoping merry makers will not become mischief makers and destroy property. We have never seen any advantage or sportmanship in this so called "amusement".

Halloween however, is a holiday we have inherited like other customs and traditions, and we cannot fail to observe it. Its ancestry is gay and versatile, some of it dating back to religious festivals, some purely to superstition that deals with the harvesting of crops etc.

The Romans dedicated it to the goddess of fruits. The Isle of Britain during the Pagan Age held an Autumn festival at this time in honor of its Sun God. The Druids lit bonfires as an expression of Thanksgiving. No wonder this crazy quilt pattern yields a wide field for celebration. During the early Christian Era the present observance was instituted as a season of prayer for the souls of the departed, the event being called "All Hallow Eve". What an excellent chiasoscuro of ancestral background for a picture which must include shadowy spooks, witches in black,skeletons, and many dark and weird patterns as shadows from the flickering of candles placed in spook faced pumpkins, grinning black cats, and other creatures who are supposed to roam across our path on this Eve, greet you.

Halloween as we celebrate it, is a gay and happy holiday which primarily is planned to intrigue and entertain the youngsters. So, if you have not lost your power to bob for apples, or enjoy a pop corn ball, or have your fortune told, you might fall in line with the crowd which will join the Elementary School in celebrating this occasion in Columbiana on Friday night at the High School when special "favors" and "foods" typical of the occasion will be served with proceeds donated to the most worthy causes of School Improvement. Frights as well as thrills are being planned for your entertainment.

Miss Myrtle Miles of Birmingham spent the week end with her mother Mrs John Miles in Columbiana.

Nathan Pitts and Mr and Mrs Joe Davidson were Sunday guests in the home of Mr and Mrs J B Pitts.

Mrs Lena Merrell and Delilah Curry spent Wednesday in Birmingham.

CULTURE CLUB MEETING

The Culture Club held its regular meeting on October 21, with Mrs. Ed Lovelady presiding as hostess. Beautiful Dahlias and colorful Chrysanthemums adorned the living room.

After a discussion of a play to be presented in November, the Club decided to sponsor the Cinema-Love Under Fire, thru the courtesy of the Queen Theatre Management. This well known picture features Loretta Young and Don Ameche and will be played in Columbiana on November 4 and 5. The full cooperation of the town is cordially urged in order that these plans may be successfully carried out.

A delicious salad course was served the members and five guests. The book-Lamb In His Bosom by Caroline Miller was given to the Circulating Library.

The next meeting will be held on Nov. 4, at the home of Mrs. Yeager Horn.

PELHAM P T A

Pelham P. T. A. is sponsoring a Halloween Festival Friday night, October 29, for the benefit of the school.

We observed Parent-Teacher Week last Friday night with a program and an hour of "fun." The central thought of the program, which was given by several of the parents and teachers, was thequestion, "What do we need, what can we do, to make our school near standard?"

Lula Atkinson

Mr. and Mrs. Tom Whitesides of Anniston, were distinguished guests of the Rev. and Mrs. T. K. Roberts during the past week end-Tom Whitesides will be remembered as the son of his illustrious father, Chancellor Whiteside who has many friends in this territory which he, at one time, served in an official capacity. Tom Whitesides was on his way to St. Petersburg Florida where he holds the responsible position of Bacteriologist for Veterans Hospital.

Doris Merrell, daughter of Mrs. Knox Wooley celebrated a birthday anniversary at her home on last Monday afternoon. Halloween games and favors marked the gala occasion after which the guests gathered around a Bon Fire and roasted Weiners and Toasted Marshmallows.

Mr and Mrs Roy Walton and son of India arrived in Columbiana on last Wednesday to be the distinguished guests of Misses Ella and Ethel Walton.

Hazel Ruth Swann of Pell City, former resident and much feted visitor, was a charming little guest in the home of Dr and Mrs James Crawford during the past week end.

Mrs Horace Holmes of Birmingham is visiting her sister, Mrs Elmer McGiboney.

Miss Era Pitts has returned from an extended visit with relatives and friends in Anniston, Ensley and Birmingham.

REV. JONES HOLDS 1ST. ANNIVERSARY SERVICE

Sunday marked the first anniversary of distinguished service to this community by the popular and universally beloved pastor, Rev. Jones of the Columbiana Baptist Church. The record of 58 additions to the Church and a newly remodeled Church House, with many personal congratulations assured Mr. Jones of the high esteem in which he is held in Columbiana, and the gratitude that is sincerely felt for his personal interest and loyalty to the cause he so nobly represents.

CONRAD (Bully) FOWLER ELECTED PRES. FRESHMAN SCHOOL OF COMMERCE U. of A.

Friends of Conrad (Bully) Fowler son of Mr and Mrs Luther Fowler are delighted over the signal recognition recently conferred on this representative of Columbiana, at the University of Alabama. Mr Fowler has been elected President of the Freshman Class in Commerce and we join in sending hearty congratulations to "Bully" as he begins his brilliant career in this College.

ATTENTION EVERYBODY!

It is called to our attention by Prof. Childs that the proceeds from the Halloween Party to be given at the S C H S on next Friday night will bedonated to a fund now being raised to extend the Elementary School term to a nine months, instead of the present out look for only a seven months duration. Every one is cordially invited to attend and bring the KIDDIES.

"OCTOBER ANNUAL"

Long a lover of the great out of doors-we know we have never seen the woods so redolent nor radiant with color. The time for another days work has ended and we find ourselves heading the motor straight for the Highway leading toward Mt. Dixie-where strength of mountains in their glorious majestic beauty will bring, calm restfulness after a very busy, busy day.

We have read no finer tribute to this favorite month of ours—OCTOBER than the one clipped from the Age Herald last Tuesday. We reprint it for your scrap book-It brings a renewal of FAITH-The whole world needs it to calm FEARS that lurk in any undertaking:-

"October's FAITH is the FAITH that accepts LIFE--ALL OF IT! In the cycle of the year she has seen, known and left many things, perhaps something of all things, known to earth.

This year, especially, October has come only after a passage through great excesses of hope and misgiving.

"But consider October now. October accepts it all. For October is embattled peace. October accomplishes its joy only with an aching wistfulness in the heart. October's glalness in the moment is ever touched with a sense of the great transiency of all things. Wisest of all its acceptances. October takes the sorrowful with the glad and would not change the very nature of things.

If it be sorrow, October says to accept that sorrow; it is woven into the full fabric; do not attempt to tear it out lest the whole garment be rent. If it be gladness, be glad indeed, says October, lustily glad.

And above all, October counsels, be not afraid. Know that at the heart of every storm there can be a place of quietness and peace. But be not so immature as not to know that tranquility gets its only meaning from the tensions that vibrate through, around and all about it; that the beauty which now reassures and calms and sets enchantment amid all the ugliness of the earth—even this beauty grows out of and finds its significance through all the unsightliness of the World.

October accepts—and proclaims that in the end beauty shall be greater than ugliness peace shall survive and dominate all the terrors of men.

Davis Heads American Delegation to Brussels . . . Trying for Labor Peace . . . Special Session

Secretary of the Navy Swanson pinning a special congressional medal on Admiral Richard E. Byrd for the contribution he, with other members of the second Byrd antarctic expedition, which ended in 1935, made to science. The other members of the expedition received similar awards. Looking on are Admiral William Leahy, center, and William C. Haines, meteorologist.

Davis Sent to Brussels

NORMAN H. DAVIS is on his way to Brussels, Belgium, as head of the American delegation to a conference of the signatories of the nine-power treaty which, the optimists hope, will put an end to the warfare between Japan and China. More realistic observers of the course of events have no such expectation, for the pact has no "teeth" and the conferees can do little except talk.

Norman H. Davis

Associated with Mr. Davis, the administration's roving ambassador, are Dr. Stanley K. Hornbeck and Pierrepont Moffat as advisers. Robert T. Pell is the press officer and C. E. Bohlen is secretary of the delegation.

Before sailing for Europe the delegates received instructions from President Roosevelt and Secretary of State Hull, but these were not revealed to the public.

The invitation to the conference was issued by the Belgian government "at the request of the British government and with the approval of the government of the United States." China and Japan are both signatories to the treaty. The former accepted the invitation to the Brussels meeting, but it was believed Japan would not be represented there. Tokyo has maintained the policy that the Sino-Japanese troubles must be settled without the intervention of other nations.

Labor Peace Parley

LEADERS in the American Federation of Labor and the C. I. O. gathered in Washington for a conference designed to end the warfare between those divisions of organized labor in America. Some of them thought the negotiations might result in an early settlement of their disputes or at least a truce. Neither President Green nor John L. Lewis ventured any prediction as to the outcome of the deliberations. Some students of labor politics were inclined to think peace was not yet in sight and could not be brought about without the removal of Green from the A. F. of L. presidency and the elimination of Lewis from consideration for that post. Their suggestion was that peace might be negotiated eventually by replacing Green with some such labor figure as Charles P. Howard, president of the International Typographical union, or Edward F. McGrady, former assistant secretary of labor and now Radio Corporation labor relations chief, and by giving industrial union groups stronger representation in shaping the federation's policies.

Secy. Perkins

President Roosevelt displayed active interest in the labor controversy and received Secretary of Labor Perkins at his Hyde Park home, where for three hours they discussed the subject. The restoration of harmony in labor's ranks is considered of great importance to the administration for both economic and political reasons.

Secretary Perkins announced in Washington that she had named a federal committee on apprentice training to become a permanent agency in the Labor department. Its purpose, she said, is "to provide a sufficient number of highly skilled workers to supply the country's growing needs and to guarantee a thorough trade preparation for apprentices."

Straus Heads Housing

NATHAN STRAUS of New York city was named administrator of the $526,000,000 federal housing program by President Roosevelt. He is the son of the late Nathan Straus, philanthropist, and has been connected with the housing work in New York. His appointment was considered a victory for Senator Wagner over Secretary Ickes who wanted Howard Gray of the PWA named.

Arkansas Picks Miller

JOE ROBINSON'S successor as senator from Arkansas will be Congressman John E. Miller, Democrat, for he defeated Gov. Carl G. Bailey in the special election by an impressive majority. The Republicans had no candidate. Miller has been a rather lukewarm supporter of the New Deal in congress.

Airliner Wrecked; 19 Dead

SMASHING against Hayden peak, in the Uinta mountains of Utah, a big transcontinental airliner of the United Air Lines was totally wrecked and its passengers and crew, numbering 19 persons, were killed. The debris was sighted by scout planes some 10,000 feet up the mountainside, but efforts of rescue parties to reach the scene were hampered by heavy snow.

Special Session Called

CONGRESS was called in extraordinary session to start November 15, and immediately afterward President Roosevelt explained in a "fireside chat" over the radio the necessity for this as he sees it. Reporting cheerfully on his western trip, he outlined the legislative program which he declared the American people need to promote prosperity. These are the five measures he said should be passed without delay:

President Roosevelt

Crop production control to "build an all-weather farm program so that in the long run prices will be more stable."

Wage and hour standards to "make millions of our lowest paid workers actual buyers of billions of dollars of industrial and farm products."

Regional planning to conserve natural resources, prevent floods and produce electric power for general use.

Government reorganization to provide "Twentieth century machinery" to make the "democratic process work more efficiently."

Stronger antitrust laws in furtherance of "a low price policy which encourages the widest possible consumption."

Chairman O'Connor of the house rules committee predicted the house would pass a farm bill in the first week of the session and then take up the wage and hour measure. Some Democratic leaders said the labor bill, which was passed by the senate in the last session but held up in the house rules committee, would probably be the only one of the five measures to get through congress in the special session. Even that is strongly opposed by southern Democrats and has been condemned by the American Federation of Labor.

SEEN and HEARD around the NATIONAL CAPITAL

By Carter Field

FAMOUS WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENT

Washington.—The whole method of breaking up "trusts" and "conspiracies in restraint of trade" will be changed if the Department of Justice is able to persuade congress to revise the laws at the coming session. Details have not been worked out, but the idea is that if certain practices, whether in conformity with the old construction of conspiracy or not, produce identical prices, or are to eliminate weak competitors, or to concentrate control of the market in any given line in a few hands, those practices shall constitute a violation of the law. The whole point is to be that the practices shall be judged not on their own merit, lack of morals, or whatnot, but on the results that flow from them.

The best interpretation of the administration's attitude is revealed in the prosecution now going on, at Madison, Wis., against oil companies, oil executives, and publications which printed news about price intentions. It is contended by the government that mere publication, in certain journals, of price changes, served actually as notice to all in the oil business to make their prices just that.

But the difficulties of proving a violation of the present statutes in this practice is just what the government would like to overcome in future actions. Hence the desire for new laws which will make the result a crime, regardless of the apparent innocence of the actions which led to that result.

What is really burning the government up is identic bids on government supplies. Officials mention 17 bids for re-enforcement bars at Denver, 14 of which were precisely $1,144.16 each; 12 bids for such bars at Los Angeles, with 11 of them precisely $194,051.89; every one of 10 bids at Fort Peck for such bars exactly $253,633.80. Then in February, 1936, there were 16 bids of just $3,483.50 for a steel sheet order, followed in June by 15 bids for the same order at the same figure.

Lawyers Are Irked

The prize case, officials complain, was on steel pipe, where the navy found 59 bids by 59 companies, each one of which was exactly $16,001.83. These are just a few of the cases of identic bids which have gotten the Department of Justice lawyers red-headed—cases which seem almost miraculous unless one assumes, which is what the government lawyers want the public to assume, that there actually was collusion among the bidders—conspiracy in restraint of trade.

This is the result the government wants to make illegal, without compelling the government to prove that in achieving that result some practices at variance with the anti-trust laws were employed.

Not for one minute do the government attorneys concede that for the corporations doing this bidding to agree on such an absurd proceeding in advance would convict them of incredible stupidity. They would never admit that such matching to the penny could be a coincidence due to the combination of freight rates, wages and supplies.

But it's pretty hard to prove that there is really "conspiracy" in the meaning of the present anti-trust law language. That is why the government is so avid, first in prosecuting this present oil case, and second on amending the law to get at the results instead of the steps leading to the results.

The oil case, they think, will convince the country and congress that the law needs amending.

Midterm Conventions

The plan of Herbert C. Hoover and of Chairman John D. M. Hamilton, of the Republican national committee, to hold a midterm Republican national convention, is calculated by Republican senators and representatives who happen to be in Washington to insure the election of three or four more Democratic senators and from 30 to 100 more Democratic representatives next year than would otherwise have any chance.

It is proverbial, these opponents of a midterm convention point out, that the party not in power makes a stronger showing in the midterm election. In fact, there are very few instances where there was not a swingback two years after a landslide, frequently strong enough to lose control of the house for the party in power. President Roosevelt's enormous popularity prevented this natural swingback in 1934, pointing a prophetic finger at what was to happen in 1936.

The Democrats gained the house in 1910, after President Taft's enormous victory in 1908. The Republicans captured both house and senate in 1918, foreshadowing the overwhelming Republican victory of 1920.

But aside from these big swings, it is the normal law of politics that the "outs" do very well when they have no national ticket running to handicap the local candidates.

The answer is very simple, and explains why so many Republican senators and representatives, and so many Republicans who plan to run in districts and states now represented by Democrats, do not want a midterm convention.

Here's the Point

The point is that a Republican running for the house of representatives next year, say in Massachusetts, can run on any platform he pleases. He can tell the folks in his district, for instance, that he wants all restrictions on cotton planting stopped, so that cotton will be cheap, and there will be plenty of work for the local textile mills, thereby enabling them to compete with those of other nations. He can promise a fight to the death to bar all textile imports, especially from Japan. He can promise to fight every appropriation for water power, irrigation and reclamation projects out West, which help to keep up taxes but bring no local benefit to his district. And in doing all this he will not be handicapped by any national party platform, or any party leader's promises or speeches.

Out in the West, where water resource appropriations are wanted, the Republican nominee can promise to work like everything for big appropriations for this type of work. He can promise anything he believes will help his candidacy, regardless of the attitude on the same question of any or all other Republican candidates.

Sen. David I. Walsh is fond of telling a story of when he was chairman of the Democratic senatorial committee in an off year election. He tells of how he changed his line of speeches every time he crossed a state line, making speeches in each case in line with the campaign being made by the local Democratic senatorial candidate.

Neutrality Law

The present neutrality law, on which so many political leaders and pacifists pinned their hopes for keeping the United States out of war, is virtually in the scrap basket. It was repealed, so to speak, by edict. Not a formal edict, but a presidential speech, which not only disclosed clearly the attitude of the administration, but which also received overwhelming approval from the country.

There were a few criticisms, notably that of Representative Hamilton Fish, New York's widely known windmill tilter, but they were just the exceptions that proved the rule.

Incidentally Mr. Fish was one of the few commentators who pointed out just what the new policy laid down by President Roosevelt means, for there is no doubt whatever that it puts the country squarely on the road to entanglements, which the neutrality law sought to avoid, and might very easily lead to war.

The President's plan is nothing less, in fact, than economic war, started with a view to making physical aggression unprofitable. The President approves "sanctions" but would rely on economic pressure rather than go as far as Article X of the League of Nations covenant. Article X provided for contribution of man-power by all the member nations of the league to constitute an international army which would police the world, crush the aggressor in any war and virtually impose judicial settlement of all international disputes.

President Wilson thought Article X the "heart of the covenant." He bitterly resisted any reservation with respect to it. Opponents on the treaty, looking for issues on which to arouse the country, made much of the fact that enforcement of Article X would mean American boys again fighting in foreign wars, with which, they insisted, we had no concern.

Never Invoked

Article X has never been invoked by the league. No one has really ever tried to invoke it. Which, some think, proves that Wilson was right about this being the heart of the covenant. They say that failure to invoke Article X against Japan five or six years ago, and Italy last year, showed the hopelessness of the league as an agency for maintaining world peace.

But now President Roosevelt is willing to go just as far, and then on beyond, anything the league has actually done or contemplated doing. "Isolation" and "quarantine" for aggressor nations are proposed by the President as the British appear to be moving toward a boycott of all Japanese goods.

Support from the country has assumed such magnitude that the President will find it difficult to take a backward step, should this later seem desirable. This means less exports to Japan, and sharply curtailed purchases from Japan despite the old motto that "Trade will find a way—so long as there is a profit."

Lawbreaking is successful in the long run only when the law is unpopular, as was the case with prohibition.

Roosevelt's plan pleases most of the country because it enables the angry anti-Japanese and anti-fascist pacifists to eat their cake and have it. No war, but punish the wicked.

What Irvin S. Cobb Thinks about

Relief for Aliens.

SANTA MONICA, CALIF.—If an American were dependent on public charity in any continental country, he'd be out of luck and out of that country, too, as quickly as they could him out.

If, in addition, he openly attacked the government of that country, he'd still be out of luck because he'd be in jail.

Irvin S. Cobb

Hundreds of thousands of aliens are on relief here. Many of them slipped across the borders through leaks in our immigration laws—and brought their folks with them, also to be cared for at the taxpayers' expense. Some are avowed enemies of our form of government.

Steps to oust such parasites are balked on the ground that to do so would work hardships on their families. You could say the same thing for bedbugs.

We're starting to register these non-residents. But it's to be a "voluntary" registration, not compulsory. Any person in the audience, besides Madame Perkins, who believes the undesirables will come a-running to list themselves, and risk deportation thereby, kindly raise the right hand.

Champion Crooks.

TRUST California to turn up with a world's champion of something. They arrested a man on suspicion of burglary and forgery and organizing a training school for juvenile criminals and first one little thing and then another.

Surely that would seem to be career enough, but this party had additional claims to recognition. He admitted he had been sentenced to forty-nine terms in various jails and penitentiaries, which in itself would seem to constitute an international record, and said that in forty-three of these cases he had been paroled. He didn't explain how the big hearted parole boards failed to turn him loose before he finished those remaining six sentences.

It must be profound regret to the boys in Alcatraz and other bide-a-wee homes conducted by the federal government that, owing to the cruel refusal of Uncle Sam to go into the paroling business on a wholesale basis, none of them, however ambitious, has a chance to equal this splendid showing.

The honor remains where properly it belongs, constituting a magnificent tribute to the beautiful mush-headed theory that a state's prison should be a clearing house and not a strong-box with a time lock on it.

Nazi Influence.

I'VE been talking with a friend just back from Germany. In old days, I liked Germany as a land flowing with gemuetlich and good beer and a superior line of liverwurst. I wonder whether I'd like it so well now.

Because this fellow says every minute everybody must give the Nazi salute and say, "Heil, Hitler!" If a citizen wants his eggs fried, he says first to the wuiter, "Heil, Hitler!" If he wants 'em turned over, he says it twice—once for each egg.

There's a swastika flag flying over practically every house. Absence of a swastika flag signifies that the folks who used to live there are now in the hoosegow for failing to fly same.

My friend may have exaggerated somewhat, but, I think, not much, because while talking we came abreast of a Leiderkranz cheese in a delicatessen store window and involuntarily he said, "Heil, Hitler!"

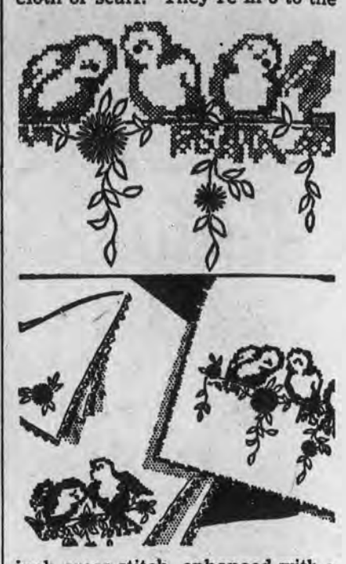
* * *

Nominating Barkley.

CANVASSES show Senate Leader Alben Barkley gaining as a possible Democratic nominee in 1940.

It's high time we had somebody from Paducah for President. For a hundred and fifty-odd years this republic has fooled along without one of our local boys sitting up there in the White House, writing messages to congress condemning the use of sugar in cornbread and proclaiming that, if any traitor dares to pull down fried catfish, shoot him on the spot.

With Alben on the job, we'll not only have homegrown statesmanship in job lots, but silver-throated oratory, which, by comparison, would make Patrick Henry seem like a tongue-tied man suffering from chapped lips. For Al can talk an hour and never use the same word twice or the letter "r" once.



Nominate Barkley and that night there won't be a dry throat in McCracken county. Elect Barkley and—well, I always did think I'd make a middling fair Secretary of the Interior; certainly nobody could botch up the Indian bureau worse than it is.

It Took a Child to Stump the Prof

"All it wants is practice," pointed out the professor. "There is no earthly reason why each of you ladies and gentlemen shouldn't use your left hand with the same dexterity as your right."

With a piece of chalk he began to draw a figure, using his right hand, then finished it with his left.

"There," he said, "I defy anyone to mention a single action which I can perform with my right hand and which I can't do equally well with my left."

Silence; then a small voice:

"Mummy," it said, "can he put his left hand in the bottom of his right-hand trouser pocket?"

HOW LONG CAN A THREE-QUARTER WIFE HOLD HER HUSBAND?

YOU have to work at marriage to make a success of it. Men may be selfish, unsympathetic, but that's the way they're made and you might as well realize it.

When your back aches and your nerves scream, don't take it out on your husband. He can't possibly know how you feel.

For three generations one woman has told another how to go "smiling through" with Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It helps Nature tone up the system, thus lessening the discomforts from the functional disorders which women must endure in the three ordeals of life: 1. Turning from girlhood to womanhood. 2. Preparing for motherhood. 3. Approaching "middle age."

Don't be a three-quarter wife, take LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND and Go "Smiling Through."

The inspector pulled a paper from his pocket. Mark Trent glowered at it as if it were a rattler with head raised to strike.

"Here it is. The real thing. Signatures and everything o. k. I found it—"

"You found it in my desk, didn't you, Inspector?" Brooke interrupted icily.

Mark Trent's eyes were stormy, his lips were white.

"That's enough. Don't go on with this, Brooke."

"But I am going on with it."

"Let her tell her story, Mark. It's only fair to her."

Sam joined the two men before the fire.

"Jed's right, m'lad. The inspector found the paper in your desk. That's your cue, Brooke. Go on from there."

Brooke went on.

She told of her suspicion the first time she had come into this very library that there was a reason other than a passion for the sea in winter which had brought two men from the city to live in Mark Trent's house; and she told of Mrs. Gregory's admission, the afternoon before the Supper club party, that she had witnessed a will of Mary Amanda Dane's and that she had been warned by Jed Stewart not to speak of it. And how, almost before Mrs. Gregory's car was out of the drive, Henri Jacques had confronted her with a paper and the lie that he had found it in her desk.

"Don't speak! Don't!" She interrupted her story sharply as Mark Trent opened his lips. "Let me finish!

"I took it with the idea that if I didn't, he might make more trouble with it. I let him think that I was considering his proposition that I pay him for keeping quiet. Of course I wasn't, but I can't expect you two men who have been suspicious of me from the moment you learned of my friendship with Mrs. Dane, to believe that. I was coming directly to this house with it. First, locked in my room, I looked at it to be sure it wasn't a blackmailing scheme of Henri's. It wasn't. It was Mary Amanda Dane's will leaving all her property, except legacies to the Jacques, to her nephew, Mark Trent."

"Stop and get your b r e a t h, Brooke; you'll crack-up if you don't," Sam warned.

"I won't crack-up and I won't stop till I get this thing off my mind. It has been a hideous nightmare, holding back that paper, I mean. Of course the contents of that will were a shock for a minute; but I knew that Mrs. Dane had been just. Then I thought of the play, that the sudden appearance of a missing will—there's drama for you, Sam—might upset the performance; so I locked the thing in my desk. I had planned to bring it here this evening. When I got back from headquarters tonight, I went to my desk to get it. The drawer was empty. Now I know that Inspector Bill Harrison, your sleuth, had found it, Mr. Trent."

"That's enough, Brooke." Mark Trent's voice was low and authoritative. "I don't believe that you have had that will. I know—"

"Wait a minute!" Inspector Bill Harrison cut in. "Come over here."

He spread out the paper on the desk. He drew a flat leather case from his breast pocket and removed from it a white scrap.

"Exhibit A. Watch!"

The scrap fitted into the torn corner. There was a glint in his eyes as they passed from face to face of the three men bending over to read the finely written lines.

"I don't know what the rest of you folks think," his voice was as soft as velvet, "but, in spite of the fact I found it in her desk, I'm sure Miss Reyburn hasn't had the will in her possession ever since it was signed, because—"

He laid the tip of a square-topped finger on the torn-off corner:

"Because I found this scrap caught in Mrs. Hunt's bag the night her diamonds were snitched."

CHAPTER XV

For the length of time it took the old clock in the hall to chime the quarter hour, there was silence in the library, a silence as tense as if the still body of a black-haired woman with the open bag gripped in one bruised hand lay in their midst. Inspector Harrison broke the spell.

"And that ain't all I've got to show you. Bring him in, Tim!"

Brooke's breath stopped as a tall policeman with huge ears pushed a cowering figure into the room. Henri! Henri here! Would he dare persist in the lie that he had found that will in her desk?

"Sit down, Brooke."

With hands on her shoulders Mark Trent drew her from behind the chair and forced her gently into the seat. She felt his presence behind her as he said sharply:

"It's your move, Inspector. Let's get this thing over with."

"It ain't my move, Mark. It's Henri Jacques'. He's going to tell you what's kept him the busiest butler in the U. S. You're on the air, Jacques. Spill it!"

The command held the crack of a lion-tamer's whip. Henri drew his fingers over his slack lips. He made two attempts to speak before he produced a voice.

"I'll tell the whole story, Mr. Mark, and it isn't so bad as the inspector's trying to make out, I swear it isn't. I didn't kill—"

"Start at the beginning!"

"I will, Inspector, I will."

Brooke looked down at her clenched fingers. She couldn't keep her eyes on Henri. Once she had seen a dog being beaten who groveled as he groveled now. His voice shook as he went on:

"It was like this, Mr. Mark. Madame Dane sent for Clotilde and me to come to the living-room one afternoon. It was the nurse's day off. She was in the wheel chair and Ma-

"I Won't Crack Up and I Won't Stop."

dame Gregory was there. Your aunt said as how we were all to sign a paper in her presence and then she was to sign in our presence. She laughed kind of shaky and said:

"'I don't know much law, Anne—Anne was Madame Gregory—but I've learned how a will has to be signed to make it legal.'"

"Did Mrs. Gregory say anything?"

"Yes, Mr. Mark. She said, 'Do you think you should do this without consulting your lawyer?' and your aunt said that Mr. Stewart was away and she didn't dare wait till he came home because she hadn't been feeling well. We wrote our names. Mrs. Gregory left, Clotilde went back to the kitchen, and then the old madame handed the paper to me and said:

"'Put that in my safe upstairs, Henri. I'll give it to Mr. Stewart when he gets back, but first bring me a glass of sherry. I'm tired.'

"She looked so white I thought she was going to faint. I jammed the paper in my pocket and ran. When I came back with the wine, Miss Reyburn was standing by the mantel laughing; you remember that afternoon, don't you, Miss?"

"Yes."

"Direct your question to me, not tc Miss Reyburn, Henri. What did you do with that paper?"

"I was coming to that, Mr. Mark. The old madame was taken very sick that night. Not until after she'd been gone a week or two did I think of it."

"Then of course you read it?"

"Yes, sir."

"You showed it to Clotilde?"

"Yes, sir."

"When did you and she decide to fasten the theft of it on Miss Reyburn?"

The voice which came from behind Brooke's chair set her a-shiver. A steadying hand rested on her shoulder.

"We—we didn't think of it, Mr. Mark. Mrs. Hunt suggested that."

"How did she know about it?"

Henri passed shaking fingers across his lips.

"Some way she found out that we were going to sell your aunt's silver. Clotilde and I thought we might as well have it as the strange girl she'd left it to."

The glance Henri Jacques cast at the inspector was green with venom.

"Mrs. Hunt said, if I'd get the silver to the white cottage, she'd dispose of it; that it was rare and worth lots of money, that a dealer would believe that it was hers, that he might suspect me. That seemed reasonable. Mrs. Hunt knew of a man to help. She said she'd take care of that will, too, she'd get money out of you for it and we'd go fifty-fifty."

"Go on, Henri!" Mark Trent's voice was hoarse.

"I gave it to her. The afternoon before the filling station mur—hold-up, I showed the man she sent where the silver was, forgot the keys and left them in the doors. I remembered them in the middle of a movie, came home, went upstairs very quiet and got them. The man who was to move the silver to the old limousine was waiting in my room. While you were all laughing and eating downstairs I let him through into the Other House by the upper connecting door. He took the stuff through your house—the Japs were out, and I pretended to go to bed. He was to make a cross on the white cover when he had it in the car. I drove it to the cottage. I went in to tell Mrs. Hunt the silver was outside, ready to take to the city. She—she was on the floor. I swear she was. I swear I didn't touch her."

"But you took that paper over there on the desk out of her bag, didn't you?"

"I told you once I did, Inspector. I felt it belonged to me. But I swear I never touched her."

"Take him out, Tim."

Henri stopped to hurl defiance at Inspector Bill Harrison.

"You think you're smart, but you wouldn't have known anything about this till we were safe out of the country, Inspector, if that expert thief Mrs. Hunt brought into the game hadn't stopped to wash and shave in Mr. Stewart's bathroom. Pretty snappy guy he was. I suppose he had to dress up fine before he called on her. She paid for pulling him in. He got her jewels all right, and he was out to get Mrs. Gregory's tonight. I wasn't in on that deal, Mr. Mark."

"Take him away, Tim." Inspector Harrison's eagle eyes followed the two men from the room before they came back to Brooke.

"Sorry I had to touch your desk, Miss Reyburn, but a high falsetto voice phoned me you had the will—I know now that it was Henri Jacques—so I went through your room while you were all at the play. I guess you're glad the truth is out. The minute I heard of that bath stunt I knew who to look for. That guy has made a specialty of breaking into houses week-ends where the folks were away, of making himself at home in the tub and carrying off what he wanted when he left, mostly men's clothes. Maggie Cassidy was right when she said he was a swell dresser. He ought to be. He's had his pick of the best. It's kind of funny when you think of it, ain't it? When I accused him of killing Mrs. Hunt, he crumpled and spilled the whole story. He had seen her rings when she engaged him to move the silver. Wanted them. Knocked Hunt out first. He's a quick worker. He and his pals aren't killers. There wasn't a gun in the gangload. There's a joke to it, they don't one of them know yet that the coroner's verdict was 'heart failure from fright.' I've kept that under my hat so I could scare the truth out of them. Well, Mark, your silver's safe and you've got your aunt's money."

"Thanks, Inspector, I'll tell you how much I appreciate what you've done, later. Sam, get Brooke's wrap. I'll take her home. You and Lucette stay here and get the inspector something to eat. Wait for me, Bill, there are a few points that need clearing up. I have something to talk over with Miss Reyburn, then I'll come back."

"You are not going home with me and we have nothing to talk over." Did he think that he could wipe out the memory of his suspicion of her in this lordly manner? Brooke asked herself.

"Oh yes, we have."

Sam chuckled.

"One of the thirty-six dramatic situations. Snap into it, Brooke. It is apparent even to this boyish intelligence that Mark wants to talk to you alone. Fair enough. Why make him go on the air? Be kind to him, he deserves well of his countrymen."

They crossed the terrace in silence. The snow had not been cleared from before the door of Lookout House. Mark Trent swept Brooke from her feet and carried her into the vestibule. He kept an arm about her as he opened the door. Something turning like the wings of an autogiro in her throat, cut off her protest. The green living-room awaited them, softly lighted, faintly fragrant. Above the mantel the Duchess looked down with grave eyes; below, coals, murmurous as purring kittens, gave out a gentle glow.

"Take off your wrap."

Brooke slipped from beneath the velvet and the hands tightening on her shoulders. She barricaded herself behind a high-back chair. With one arm on the mantel, Mark Trent faced her. His eyes, smiling a little, maddeningly cool, filled her with rage. She challenged:

"You would come. Why? Didn't you want to tell me before the others that you had known about that will all the time?"

for WOMEN only

CARDUI is a special medicine for the relief of some of the suffering which results from a woman's weakened condition. It has been found to make monthly periods less disagreeable, and, when its use has been kept up awhile, has helped many poorly nourished women to get more strength from their food. This medicine (pronounced "Card-u-i") has been used and recommended by women for many, many years. Find out whether it will help you by giving it a fair trial. Of course, if not benefited, consult a physician.

Of Greater Value

Good instruction is better than riches.—William Penn.

What Two Things Happen When You Are Constipated?

When you are constipated two things happen. FIRST: Wastes swell up the bowels and press on nerves in the digestive tract. This nerve pressure causes headaches, a dull, lazy feeling, bilious spells, loss of appetite and dizziness. SECOND: Partly digested food starts to decay forming GAS, bringing on sour stomach (acid indigestion), and heartburn, bloating you up until you sometimes gasp for breath.

Then you spend many miserable days. You can't eat. You can't sleep. Your stomach is sour. You feel tired out, grouchy and miserable.

To get the complete relief you seek you must do TWO things. 1. You must relieve the GAS. 2. You must clear the bowels and GET THAT PRESSURE OFF THE NERVES. As soon as offending wastes are washed out you feel marvelously refreshed, blues vanish, the world looks bright again.

There is only one product on the market that gives you the double action you need. It is ADLERIKA. This efficient carminative esthartic relieves that awful GAS at once. It often removes bowel congestion in half an hour. No waiting for overnight relief. Adlerika acts on the stomach and both bowels. Ordinary laxatives act on the lower bowel only.

Adlerika has been recommended by many doctors and druggists for 35 years. No griping, no after effects. Just QUICK results. Try Adlerika today. You'll say you have never used such an efficient intestinal cleanser.

HUBBY DINES ON DOG FOOD; CAN'T TELL DIFFERENCE

The Board of Health calmed the fears of a housewife today, who called for help after giving her husband their dog's breakfast.

"I gave our dog chopped meat, which I was going to make into patties for my husband," she explained, "and gave my husband patties made of canned dog food." Told that no harm had been done, she was relieved, and said that neither her husband nor the dog seemed to have noticed the error.

DIPHTHERIA

Diphtheria is unusually prevalent this Fall and all parents are urged to have their children immunized against this disease. Toxoid can be given at any time after the age of 6 months; there is practically no reaction and one does is usually all that is needed to produce immunity. This immunity does not develop for some weeks after the Toxoid is given it is therefore of no use to protect a child after it has been exposed to a case of Diphtheria.

Children who have not been immunized should be taken to their doctor or to the County Health Department and given the Toxoid.

Parents are also urged to be suspicious of any sore throat of which they may complain. It may be an ordinary Tonsilitis or may be Diphtheria or possibly a begining Scarlet Fever.

If your child comlains of sore throat and especially if it has some fever, it should be put to bed and your family doctor called.

Gave First Minstrel Shows

The introduction of minstrel shows in the United States is credited to Thomas D. Rice (1808-1860), a white comedian who was inspired by the "Jim Crow" song of a negro stage driver to reproduce song and character in costume on the stage in Pittsburgh in the early Nineteenth century.

Walton Funeral Home Holds Formal Opening

On last Saturday interested friends and townsmen thronged the new Walton Funeral Home Parlors and whole heartedly extended their congratulations to Homer J. Walton, young and enterprising business man who owns and operates this long needed convenience for Columbiana and vicinity.

Amid a refined and testefully decorated entrance, the new and commodious location offers complete funeral service accomodations. Mr. Walton has recently completed a course in Nashville, Tenn., and it modernly equipped for Undertaking and Embalming. Ambulance service is also maintained night and day.

The new Funeral Home is a distinct and creditable addition to the business cirdles of our town, and the Democrat joins a host of friends in extending congratulations to Mr. Walton upon this noteworthy achievement and upon the realization of his successful business career.

Graves Bewails, But Will Retain 1938 Auto Tags

MONTGOMERY ALA.— Highway patrolmen may as well purchase eyeglasses because the state is not going to recall the 1938 license tags which are indistinguishable at a relatively short distance.

"I think we made a mistake," said Gov. Bibb Graves "in making the colors so hard to read. However, it would cost too much money and time to recall all the license tags that have been issued."

The 1938 tags are crimson and blue, representing the color of Howard College.

Cost of New P. O. Stamps

The Post Office department says: "The cost of engraving a new postage stamp is from $300 to $500, depending on the size of the stamp and the amount of detail work. However, the department is reimbursed many times for this expense through the sale of the new stamp to collectors. Therefore, every new stamp issued is a source of profitable revenue to the government."

CARD OF THANKS

I take this on behalfor the P T A to express my personal appreciation to all members, patrons, friends and firms who so generosouly responded to our call for funds to make possible the extension of the Elementary School term in Columbiana. STELLAR RADIO NAMES TO APPEAR HERE UNDER TENT

Registered In Chancery 7-6-38

On Thursday evening, Nov. 11 Columbiana's amusement going public will be treated to an outstanding innovation in the field of popular-priced entertainment when Ollie Hamilton, one of America's better known showmen, brings his tented Radio Barn Dance to town for one performance only.

UNCLE EZRA

Nationally known, and headlining an unparalled aggregation of other familiar radio names, Lew Childre, "the boy from Alabam' " star of Station W W L New Orleans, will positively appear in person at each and every performance rain or shine! Lew's side-kick, Wiley "Flash" Walker, will be seen in conjunction with this feature as, too, will Uncle Ezra Fletcher and his Radio Gang.

Numbered among others lending further support and colorful enhancements to this splendid, attraction are: "The Three Dancing Buddies"; Naomi Barrett, blues singer; Dolores Frauz, acrobatic dancer; Kelle and Williams, "the Two Dancing Pats" of Texas Centennial fame; Johnny Finch; Kirk and Kirk; and "Ponchita" with her Rhumba troupe of exotic, glamorous, gloriously-gowned girls, persenting the Dance of the Argentine.

Housed in a-huge, waterproof tent theatre seating 3,500 people, transported upon a fleet of specially built trucks and busses and carrying its own light plants and special scenic offects, the Ollie Hamilton Radio Barn Dance company will show on the Court House lot. Doors open at 7 p. m. and the performance starts promptly at 8 p. m.

The Halloween Carnival at Pelham School netted an appreciable little sum of money for the school. What with masks, costumes, snappers and horns fished from the "fish pond," a cake for "the prettiest girl," freak show, amuseum, house of horrors, fortune teller, etc. besides sandwiches, coneys, coffee, peanuts, popcorn and candy to eat, there must have been "fun" enough for all.

S. C. H. S. HIGHLIGHTS

Shelby High continued its winning streak last Friday by trouncing the heavy but inexperienced Piper team by the score of 32 to 0, on the Piper field.

The first score came after several exchanges of punts and a fumble of one by a Piper back on his own ten-yard line which was recovered by a Shelby man. The touchdown followed after three plays. The point was converted. The quarter ended with Piper in possession of the balk.

Piper made its only gains during the second quarter. The visitors held for downs in the latter part of the second quarter however and on several passing plays, crossed the Piper goal for the second touchdown; the point failed. Shelby again kicked off to Piper. The half ended after several plays.

Shelby received the kick-off, and showing some good line play and a deadly passing attack, scored their third touchdown without losing the ball. The Piper defense was completely baffled during the last half as the Shelby boys were using forward to a good advantage and fooling the Piper boys with laterials that kept the defense unbalanced.

The fourth quarter was featured by fancy running of Shelby's backfield; notably Martin,B. Thornburg, and Wallace, and excellent blockng by Connell. Passes clicked perfectly, enabling two more touchdowns to be made during the last quarter.

Much improvement was noted in the line plays of the locals especially in the tackles and ends. Letson at end played an excellent game.

Score by quarters:

Shelby	7	6	7	12	— 32
Piper	0	0	0	0	— 0

NO 'DARK HORSE' IN SENATE RACE

With the entry list closed, Alabama's special Senate race moved into the campaign stages this week with three candidates seeking the Senate seat recently vacated by Hugo L. Black's appointment to the Supreme Court.

Rumors that a "dark horse" candidate might make a last-minute entry failed to develop as Nov. 1, marked the deadline for candidates to qualify for participation in the special Democratic primary to be held Jan. 4.

Thus the race was left to two veteran campaigners, Congressman Lister Hill of Montgomery and former Sen. J. Thomas Heflin of Lafayette, and a newcomer in politics, Charles W. Williams of Shelby County.

Almost Satisfied

A Swedish farmer who wanted to make his permanent home in this country appeared for his naturalization papers.

"Are you satisfied with the general conditions of this country?" he was asked.

"Yah, sure," he answered.

"And does this government of ours suit you?"

"Well, yah, mostly," stammered the man, "only I lak see more rain."

WHY JUMPER THE HARE WAS NOT AFRAID

THE most surprising thing about the meeting of Buster Bear with the other little people of the Green Forest was that he was introduced by Jumper the Hare. Now you know, Jumper the Hare is very, very timid. Everybody knows that. He is so timid that some people say he is afraid of his own shadow. Of course, this isn't true, but it is true that he is very, very timid. So no one could understand how it happened that he dared to introduce Buster Bear. In fact, he didn't seem any more afraid of Buster than were Jimmy Skunk and Prickly Porky the Porcupine. But everyone knows why they are not afraid; Jimmy has a little bag of scent and Prickly Porky has a thousand little spears to make other people, even those a great deal bigger than they are, respect them.

But Jumper the Hare has nothing of the kind. He has nothing with which to win respect save his long legs, and as he uses those to run away with, of course, he never wins respect with them, for you know people who run away are seldom respected. So it was that when Jumper appeared not in the least afraid of Buster Bear and introduced him as a friend, the other little people, most of whom were frightened almost to death, couldn't understand it at all. Peter Rabbit wasn't there at the time, but, of course he heard of it, and it puzzled him more than it did anyone else. He is timid himself, is Peter Rabbit, but he isn't as timid as his big cousin Jumper. And yet here was he himself having little cold chills of fright at the very thought of those great claws of Buster Bear, while Jumper was not afraid at all. It was too much for Peter, and the first chance he got he asked Jumper about it.

Jumper smiled. "Why," said he, "Buster Bear comes from the Great Woods where I came from, and I know all about him and he knows all about me. So we are friends."

Peter scratched his head thoughtfully. Somehow he didn't understand any better than before. "Aren't you afraid of those great big, cruel claws?" he asked.

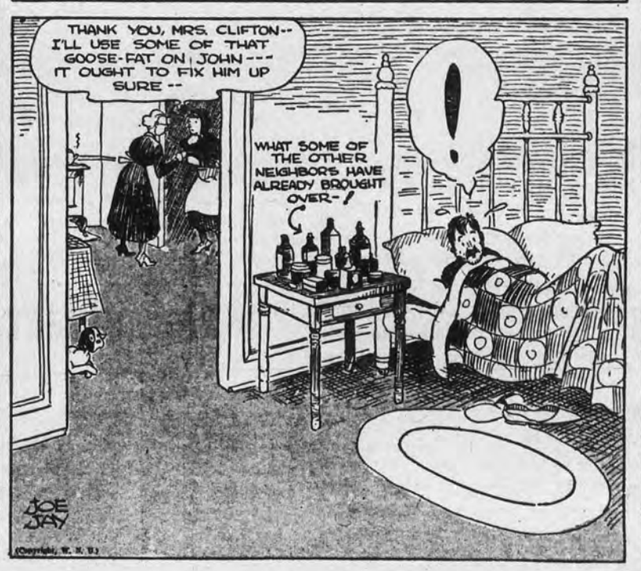
Jumper shook his head. "No," said he. "Why should I be afraid of them?"

"Because they can tear you all to pieces!" yelled Peter promptly.

"But they can't!" cried Jumper happily. That is just what they can't do, and that is why I am not afraid!"

"I don't see why they can't," persisted Peter.

"Because they can't catch me!" Jumper made a long jump, a very long jump, twice as long a jump as Peter could make, as if to show why those cruel claws could not catch him. Peter began to see what Jumper the Hare meant.



"You mean you are not afraid of Buster Bear because you think Buster cannot catch you; is that it?" asked Peter.

Jumper nodded his head so fast that he made his long ears flop. "That's just it!" said he. "Buster Bear can't catch me. I know it and he knows it, and so he doesn't waste any time trying. Instead we are very good friends. The only things to be afraid of in this world are things you know may hurt you, no matter how sharp you watch out. Now, I am afraid of Granny Fox and Old Man Coyote because they are so sly and swift that I am never sure that I am safe from them. But Buster Bear is not swift enough or sly enough to make me afraid. When you have known Buster as long as I have you will know that he isn't half so terrible as he looks, and that he really can be very nice and no end of fun. I'm not afraid of Buster because I've learned how to keep out of his way, and when you've learned the same thing you won't be afraid either."

Peter looked as if he would like to believe it, but found it a little more than he could quite credit.

1. What is the origin of the acre?
2. What is the difference between a Zeppelin and a dirigible?
3. What queen of a foreign country married an American citizen?
4. What is the length of the Great Wall of China?
5. What is the shortest verse in the Bible?
6. Have ships ever sailed through a northwest passage above Canada?

Answers

1. Originally it was the area a yoke of oxen could plow in a day.
2. A dirigible is any aircraft lifted by gas which may be guided and propelled by mechanical means. A Zeppelin is a rigid dirigible of the type invented by Count von Zeppelin.
3. Queen Liliuokalani of Hawaii married John O. Dominis, a native of Boston.
4. The length of the Great Wall of China, including all spurs and loops, is estimated at 2,500 miles.
5. "Jesus wept," John 11:35.
6. Two ships recently met in Bellot strait, one from the east and one from the west, thus effecting intercommunication, which has been the object of navigators for four hundred years.

Still Coughing?

No matter how many medicines you have tried for your cough, chest cold, or bronchial irritation, you can get relief now with Creomulsion. Serious trouble may be brewing and you cannot afford to take a chance with any remedy less potent than Creomulsion, which goes right to the seat of the trouble and aids nature to soothe and heal the inflamed mucous membranes and to loosen and expel the germ-laden phlegm.

Even if other remedies have failed, don't be discouraged, try Creomulsion. Your druggist is authorized to refund your money if you are not thoroughly satisfied with the benefits obtained from the very first bottle. Creomulsion is one word—not two, and it has no hyphen in it. Ask for it plainly, see that the name on the bottle is Creomulsion, and you'll get the genuine product and the relief you want. (Adv.)

WHO'S NEWS THIS WEEK...

By Lemuel F. Parton

NEW YORK.—Young James Delmage Ross rode a bicycle from Chatham, Ont., to New York city to get a job as a chemist. He got the job, but noted that everybody in the factory did nothing but work pestles. Pestling seemed piffling, so he pedalled back to Chatham and kept on going, on his bicycle, on foot and on boats.

Pestling Is Piffling to Young Ross

He's been around a lot and now, at sixty-four, the President hands him a job which no mere pestler or pedaller could handle — boss of the Bonneville project, the biggest dam in the world. He will resign from his S. E. C. post to become administrator of the huge power plant.

Mr. Ross was for 20 years head of the municipal power development of Seattle. His selection for Bonneville is taken as an administration declaration that it is going all the way through on its power plans.

He has not only been a vigorous champion of public development, but he has fought for public distribution. Here, he says, is the kernel of the whole business. He says private companies could manufacture power at possibly a lower cost than could the government, and makes his fight on distribution costs. He stakes out big regional power hookups through the Northwest, existing and planned. His policies are aggressive and far-reaching and his appointment would seem to sharpen the disagreement between the President and the power companies.

He has taken and administered a lot of punishment. Several years ago, a newly elected Seattle mayor tossed him out of his power plant job. They recalled the mayor and named a mountain after Mr. Ross, a rocky peak overhanging the Skagit river, which Mr. Ross wants to rope and hog-tie for the good of all concerned, as he sees it.

Knows How to Absorb Punishment

Then his partisans, just to show that they were with him, spotted up a mountain side, on the Cascades, for a Gutzon Borglum bas relief, like the sculptures of Presidents in South Dakota. The project is still being worked up.

His was one of those "roll your own" educations. After his bicycle trip to New York, he headed for the Alaska gold fields in 1898, bicycling to the fade-out of the road, tramping up through Edmonton, making his own boat for the rest of the trip.

Later, in Seattle, he helped design the first municipal power plant and stayed on the job 32 years.

He loves kilowatts and amuses himself in his rambling old house by keeping a copper ball in the air with no visible support and by frying eggs in an electrified pan held in his hand. On his living room table is a book on the natural sciences, published in 1832. He says it started him on his career and he keeps on reading it.

Keeps Trick Gadgets in His House

He was consulting engineer for the New York power authority when Franklin D. Roosevelt was governor; also consultant for the St. Lawrence seaway and power project. He went to Washington as consultant for PWA power development and later was appointed a member of the S. E. C.

As he caroms around mountain cliffs, a violet by the roadside brings a yell to the chauffeur and a screech of brakes. He just has to get out and look at it. He is childless, but he and Mrs. Ross have reared five children.

MRS. ANNIE NATHAN MEYER, founder of Barnard college, is against women "scabs." "I feel it would be better," she says, "if women, instead of scabbing for lower wages, would seek out new fields in which there would be no competition with the men."

Lady 'Scabs' Are Bane to Mrs. Meyer

Mrs. Meyer dislikes being called a feminist, but, in her early youth, she dropped her subscription to Godey's Ladies' Book and urged women to do something on their own account. Women as people have been her absorbing life interest.

She was an anti-suffragist, but now qualifies her opposition. She thinks women ought to be honest and admit that, when they take a job, they are out for a husband. And that, she thinks, is as it should be. She has written 15 plays, 8 of which were produced, some of them on Broadway.

She is a small, merry, white-haired woman, living her life with keen zest at seventy, in her book-littered Park avenue home. She is known as a writer, lecturer and playwright.

What Irvin S. Cobb Thinks about

Intriguing Construction.

SANTA MONICA, CALIF.—Downtown I saw some sort of siege-wall going up. At first I thought it must be a part of the proposed plaza leading from our new terminal.

Our new terminal has been under construction almost as long as New York's unfinished Cathedral of St. John. Inch by inch it progresses, giving creeping defiance to those critics who say that what Los Angeles needs is not any additional entrances, but more exits.

Irvin S. Cobb

On second glance I decided the owner of the business property behind this strange rampart probably made the same mistake I did. I saw a picture in the paper and I said, "Pretty late to be printing a photograph of Fifth avenue showing how it appeared when the World's war heroes got through pranking last month." I looked again and saw it was only a scene in Shanghai after the Japanese finished bombing.

So I figure this forehanded Los Angeleno is just getting ready for next year's convention of the vets out here. When his wall is absolutely impregnable against assault, he'll no doubt paint a big sign on it reading:

"Welcome, American Legion."

Kindness for Reptiles.

UNDER the slogan, "Kindness for reptiles," the National Park service discourages people from destroying every creature they encounter, merely because it wriggles or crawls.

I'm what you might call an occasional snakist, indulging in snakes only in moderation. In other words, I can take my snakes or I can leave them be. But realizing that practically all snakes destroy noxious vermin, I refrain from murdering every passing snake, regardless of his private habits and personal disposition, just for being a snake.

I was raised in a locality where moccasin snakes were so numerous the Republicans used to accuse us of voting them at county elections. Yet I recall only one instance of a moccasin snake biting anybody, and it must have been tempted beyond all power of self-control, for the fellow bitten was a pious party who didn't think little children should be suffered to believe in Santa Claus. I regret to state that he recovered. It was the snake that died.

Movie Preferences.

I DON'T like movies about hospitals where an impossible young surgeon performs impossible operations, in four strokes under par, using his irons all the way 'round; and then, while replacing the divots, makes love to an impossible although beauteous nurse. But between operations he washes his hands. Dadgum him, he's always washing his hands! Who does he think he is, Pontius Pilate?

I don't like movies about newspaper offices where the hero is a drunken reporter who behaves in a manner peculiar to newspaper reporters (in the movies); which is so darned peculiar that, in a real newspaper office, somebody'd beat out his brains with a wet towel.

I like movies showing Myrna Loy, when not playing nurse; and Spencer Tracy, when not playing reporter.

Anyhow, nothing could be an absolute failure that has a Walt Disney short separating the ultra-colossal or regular feature from the extra-special four-star absolutely unparalleled super-stupendous preview feature.

Gossip About Cobb.

JUST a little effort to trace down gossip now going around:

(I) The claim that I am going to play Scarlett in "Gone With the Wind" is absolutely unfounded. Latest word is that the coveted role will go to Fannie Brice, although the Ritz brothers are being mentioned. If they should be chosen, Scarlett will be played as a three-handed quartette.

(II) Dame Rumor hath it that the Atlantic sperm whale will be renamed the Justice Black sperm whale. Not yet confirmed, but sounds sort of plausible. The Atlantic sperm whale has a hide almost two feet thick.

(III) The statement that Charley McCarthy may join the reorganized brain trust at Washington remains unsettled. Probably without foundation. For while Charley is trained to sit upon his master's knee, he cannot be depended on to keep silent and has too many brains to be trusted.

(IV) Stories to the effect that Representative Ham Fish will be Republican nominee for President in 1940 may be regarded as absolutely authentic so far as Representative Ham Fish is concerned.

WISE GUY

Our weekly nut story has to do with the screwball who was sitting in his cell, playing solitaire. Another nut was watching. Finally the kibitzer spoke up.

"Wait a minute!" he cried. "I just caught you cheating yourself!"

The first nut placed a finger to his lips.

"Shh," he whispered. "Don't tell anybody—but, for years, I've been cheating myself at solitaire."

"You don't say," said his amazed pal. "Don't you ever catch yourself cheating?"

The first nut shook his head.

HOW TO SEW

by Ruth Wyeth Spears

There May Be Many Reasons for Making Quilted Chair Pads.

IF ALL the reasons for quilted chair pads were lined up in order of their importance the most intangible reason of all might head the list. Yes, it is quite likely that any decorator, amateur or professional would place atmosphere at the top. But then it is also possible that first rating might be given to the reason that the pressure of slats across the backs of chairs is softened by quilted pads. Then, though it might not be mentioned, it is a known fact that worn out cane seats are sometimes replaced with inexpensive composition seats which may be disguised by gay quilted pads.

Chintz, calico or gingham chair pads are in fact one of the simplest and most inexpensive ways of adding color and charm as well as comfort to a room. Such pads are often used on the backs of chairs and not on the seats, and especially for side chairs, the seat pads used without any back covering. In making such small things as these it is quite easy to do the quilting on the machine. Or, if you wish to take the other point of view about it, the work of quilting them by hand would not consume an unreasonable amount of time. There is no doubt that handwork has a certain quaintness that machine work lacks.

The pads shown here are made with one layer of sheet wadding between the two layers of the chintz. The edge bindings and ties are made of bias tape. Cut the three layers of the pad material exactly the size and shape you want them to be when finished. Place the sheet wadding between the two layers of covering material as shown here at A. Either pin or baste in this position, and then quilt as shown here at B. Make the ties by stitching the lengthwise edges of the bias tape together, and then tack them to the corners of the pad as at C before it is bound. Now, bind the edges, sewing the ties right in with the binding as shown here at D.

Every Homemaker should have a copy of Mrs. Spears' new book, SEWING. Forty-eight pages of step-by-step directions for making slipcovers and dressing tables; restoring and upholstering chairs, couches; making curtains for every type of room and purpose. Making lampshades, rugs, ottomans and other useful articles for the home. Readers wishing a copy, should send name and address, enclosing 25 cents, to Mrs. Spears, 210 South Desplaines St., Chicago, Illinois.

Why of Eiffel Tower

Although the Eiffel tower is perhaps the most distinctive structure in Paris, how many know what its uses are and why it was built? The Standard American Encyclopedia tells that it was built for the Paris Exposition of 1889, and now, aside from being one of the chief ornaments of the city, it is immensely valuable for meteorological purposes.

Since 1910 the tower has been used as a wireless station and also serves as a time signal center, an electrical illumination system flashing forth the hours and quarters.

For Safety's sake
PAVE THE GAPS WITH Concrete

Why do state highway departments warn the public: "Concrete pavement ends"?

Because it is universally accepted that speeds which are reasonable and safe on concrete become dangerous on other surfaces.

To save lives, to prevent accidents . . . demand concrete all the way.

True and even, it has no high crown—is usable to its full width. Brakes are at their best on its gritty non-skid surface. Its light gray color and sharply defined edges give high visibility at night. Any car is a better car on concrete.

And concrete saves money for motorists and for taxpayers. Insist on concrete for your roads.

REMEMBERING!

Passing along the Highway of life we experience many joys and sorrows. It is well that BITTERNESS lasts only a little while, and BEAUTY lingers on forever.

Beyond the windows of our days the changing seasons pass, lingering touching with elusive fingers the inner-most recesses of our hearts, bringing to us perhaps some shattered dreams, but always leaving behind a greater spirit of love and understanding-so, we shall, as we begin another pilgrimage thru these colums this week attempt to:

"Remember only pleasant things,
Clean, wind swept clouds; a magic moon on high:
The sparkle of the stars across the sky.
The song of Birds in grateful ecstasy
The dance of leaves on every tree and plant.
The notes of Nature's deep unending chant" - - -
And in addition to the above reprint a very favorite little request of ours: I ONLY ASK
"Two things to fit me for my task
COURAGE to stand unwhimpering when
My share befalls the ills of men;
Grace so to live that there may be
Some few to thank my God for me."

POLITICOS! PATRIOTS! OLD FRIENDS!

Business plus a pleasure trip carried us to Montgomery on last Friday, and traditionally hospitable Old "Capitol City", was gowned in her most patriotic attire as her citizens played host to the members of the United States National Guardsmen. The Exchange Hotel lobby, where we were to meet our host for luncheon, was gaily reminescentof pre-war days, the Band Concert drawing the spotlight of attention while hundreds of interested visitors thronged the stairway, lobby and mezzanine paying appreciative tribute to the stirring melodies played as only a soldier can interpret them and vividly recalling to many minds the clarion cry from OVER THERE some twenty years ago. Memorable Echoes of marching feet to the thrill beat of fife and drum, crowded up for review! The Bandsmen excellently rendered these melodies under the under standing baton of their leader, and a sincere heart felt response answered each note as troublous times were recalled thru the all potent medium of MELODY. Six distinguished Generals from the United States Army added a note of dignity to the occasion. We were simply captivated with it all! In fact, got all tangled up with the "brass button"s-"French Horn," "officials" and "buck privates," before we were gently recalled from the scene by a friendly handclasp, and looked into a pair of twinkling blue optics, which belonged to none other than your own Congressman Pete Jarman, who inquired quite soilcitously if we were "lost" or "something" - - - - By the way, our genial pilot stated he would swing into Shelby County within the next few days to see his many friends in this territory before leaving for Washington. He looked quite Dapper Danish and debonair as he greeted his "Buddies" on all sides-Another prominent figure who commanded much attention was Frank Dixon, prominent and formidable candidate avowed for Gubernatorial honor. Congressman Lister Hill, who maintains political headquarters in the Exchange, was busily engaged in entertaining a Military official from Washington, and Judge Hill, with Chesterfieldian manner took "time out" from his many duties to renew a very old and treasured friendship. We thoroughly enjoyed seeing the brilliant Judge again.

About the time we had made up our minds, after viewing the colorful parade of Uncle Sam's Guardsmen, that this old country was a pretty safe spot in which to remain as long as it was in the hands of these stalwart Americans, an EMPHATIC tug at our coat sleeve, announced with proper "Judicial Authority" that "His Honor" had arrived. That he had "looked everywhere" for us! That he was "hungry"-That and That- - - - So, we hastily chucked Martial Lingo for Marital Chatter-and you, who are MARRIED know the rest of the story-You who have not yet tried the sailing of a little barque all your own-well. far be it from us to enlighten you It will be so much more fun just to leave you WONRERING about this.

At any rate, we shall not soon forget th emany generous courtesies extended us during our short stay in this charming old town where CORDIALITY and HOSPITALITY are synonomous terms ofr Montgomery, and in no other town will you find these desirable qualities more predominant than in the hearts of the citizenry who make up this historic spot in this treasured Southland of ours.

COLLINS — MURRAY

Maxine Collins of Columbiana and Wayne Murray formerly with the Brown Lumber Company located in Shelby, were married at the home of Mrs. Edna Roberts, Chief Clerk of the Probate affice on Sunday, Oct. 31. The theme song could have appropriately been, "Three O'clock in the Morning" for this was the Magic hour the happy pair were saying the vows for "better or worse so long as we both do live" - - But TIME - Any old TIME is Cupid's, and it is never too late or too early for the little Love God to shoot his arrow straight into willing hearts who want to say "I do" or "I will" - - - The Democrat joins a host of friends in sending heartiest congratulations and in wishing a happy and successful voyage together for the youthful cople.

LEE HORSLEY PASSES

Mr. Lee Horsley, aged 85 years, father of Mr. Joe Horsley of Columbiana, we regre to learn passed away on Sunday at his home in Boaz, Alabama. Mr and Mrs Joe Horsley of Columbiana attended the funeral services which were held in Boaz on Monday, November 1st.

WM ALLEN OATES

We are always delighted to have old friends renew their subscriptions to the Democrat, and we are doubly happy when we make new friends who join our ever widening circle of activety engaged in the practice of fully acknowledge a subscription to the Democrat from Wm Allen Oates, young barrister who has recently located in Colsmbiana and who is actively engaged in the practice of his profession. .....

Mr and Mrs W T Smith and children an Mr and Mrs J C Reinhardt of Penson were guests of friends and relatives Sunday.

JOAN CAROL NICHOLS

If every day could close on as happy a note as the presence of lovely Little Joan Carol Nichols brought to a close last Thursday afternoon, we would have less cause to worry. Baby Joan, on this occasion, was a picture of dainty loveliness tastefully gowned in a delicate shade of coral crepe with a bonnet to match the modish coat. This charming, friendly and O, so adorable tiny Miss proceeded to charm away the last work hour and after a friendly chat with her talented Mother-well-somehow, we left for that little rustid haven we call home, in a much happier state of mind than is usual after a days grind in a busy newspaper mart. Come again Little One-You are always welcome!

TOMMY ELLIOTT

Tommy Elliot, 14 months old son of Mr. and Mrs. Tom Elliot of Opelika was a popular figure on Main Street on Monday morning, as he came down with Grand Dad Dycus to greet his many admiring friends in Columbiana. Dressed in a blue corduroy over-all suit with cap and spot oxfords to match, this young Americano was a dear little manikin whom we were honored to have call on us. "Tommy" weight twenty-five and one half pound and is truly something to talk about!

L. B. RIDDLE JR.

The many friends of L B Riddle Jr. will be delighted to hear of his outstanding record in Howard College where he is a medical student this year. L B received a Scholarship from Birmingham Southern College after finishing Shelby County High School, if he would play football, but the professional urge for a medical career proved stronger, and he is now enrolled as a Medical Student in Howard and making good in his chosen avocation.

MRS. A. R. COOPER

Mrs. Cooper of Columbiana is now energetically soliciting your subscdiptions to the Democrat, and we congratulate this untiring and loyal worker on her excellent record during the past two weeks-Many new and renewal subscriptions have been received, and we shall appreciate it if you will cooperate with this Representaties and renew your subscription thru her.

We are delighted to report that James Crawford, who has been on the sick list for the past few weeks is again able to be out again.

A CORRECTION

We offer apologies to Charlie Vern Tinney for changing her perfesion and location in our locals several weeks ago. We were in error when we stated she was teaching in Samson. This efficient graduate from Montevallo College, is now holding a responsible position with the Unemployment Bureau in Montgomery.

Myra Hammer Miles, former resident, was being cordially greeted by her many friends in Columbiana last week while she was the guest of her mother, Mrs John Miles.

We were delighted to meet Allie Pace (Allie Nelson) in Montgomery last Friday while circulating around the "square" and her words of encouragement regarding her personal interest in the Democrat each week, and the cordial welcome this "verit able "letter from home about my own people" statement she graciously made, was sufficient compensation to us who weild-rather reluctantly some times an errant, pen point.

Mrs Cecil Duke. Mrs H Cole and Mrs Homer Bearden spent last wednesday in Birmingham Shopping.

Mr and Mrs J P Mansfield of Montgomery were the week end guest of Mrs W W Carter.

Mr and Mrs Norman Lyons of Gadsden were the guests of their parents Mr and Mrs Frank Lyons last week.

Mr and Mrs Harry Harper and children of Birmingham were the week end guests of Mrs Nora Lester and Mr and Mrs Homer Bearden.

The Rev. and Mrs Augustus Cox of Montevallo were distinguished guests who were kind enough to call by this little journalistic retreat on Wednesday, on their way to Talladega for the Synon meeting -Gratefully do we acknowledge their thoughtfulness. It was a joy to see them again.

Mrs Lena Merrell had as her guest over the week end her niece Emma Jean Clayton of Howard College.

S. M. LAWLEY

S M Lawley, prominent citizen of Marvel made a personal call in the Democrat office on Monday and renewed his subscription to this weekly we happily represent, stating he had felt "lost" without its news since his subscription had expired, and he had not had time to come to Columbiana to see us about it. A hearty greeting is accorded Mr Lawley as we draw up his chair in the circle of Democrat readers each week-and we are delighted to have him back again with us.

GRAVES — RILEY

The Rev. Hope of the Methodist Church in Columbiana officiated at a quiet but imperssive ceremoney in his home on last Saturday afternoon, when he united in marriage Hardy Riley and katty Cobb Graves of Montgomery, Alabama.

Mrs Alvin Stinson and son Mack of Montevallo were the guests of her parents Mr and Mrs Leney Isbell last week.

Miss Alice Roberts, who teaches in Talladega was the week end guest of her mother Mrs Edna Roberts.

Mr and Mrs Roy Walton, Mr Tom Walton and Frank Fulton were called to Birmingham Sunday because of the death of Ottis Walton.

Mr and Mrs John Little of Montevallo and Mr Mack Fancher of Wilton were visitors in Columbiana last week.

Mr and Mrs H Harkin spent the week end in Athens with family.

It is now closing time may we say with a columnist friends of ours:
"In after years whtn I am old
And all my plans have come to naught,
I hope my friends will not be told
Why I lost, but how I fought.

TO MEET THE NEED FOR MORE AND BETTER SERVICE

Southern Bell spent eighteen million, eight hundred and twenty-seven thousand dollars during 1936 for improvements and replacements in telephone "plant" in order to meet the public's service needs in nine Southern states.

This money was required for such items as land and buildings, switchboard and other equipment, subscriber telephone equipment, local and long distance lines. The estimate for 1937 is that nearly twenty-three million dollars will be needed.

The increased demand for service in 1936 resulted in a net gain of 83,000 telephones. Local calls increased 9.8 per cent over 1935, and toll and long distance messages gained 15.9 per cent, the greatest number of telephone calls in the Company's history.

Better business was reflected also by the addition of 1800 employes, bringing this total to almost 19,000 by the end of the year. The payroll was over twenty-one million dollars.

Taxes, too, increased to the highest sum in the Company's history, when seven million, three hundred and twenty-six thousand dollars was paid to federal, state, county and municipal agencies. This was an average of 63.8 cents per telephone per month, or $7.66 per telephone for the year.

Calls were handled efficiently—service criticisms decreased eight per cent and voluntary commendations of the service increased 32 per cent, despite a new high average of 8.62 originating calls per telephone per day.

Such facts as these show how well telephone folks are accomplishing their determination to give the most service and the best, at the least possible cost.

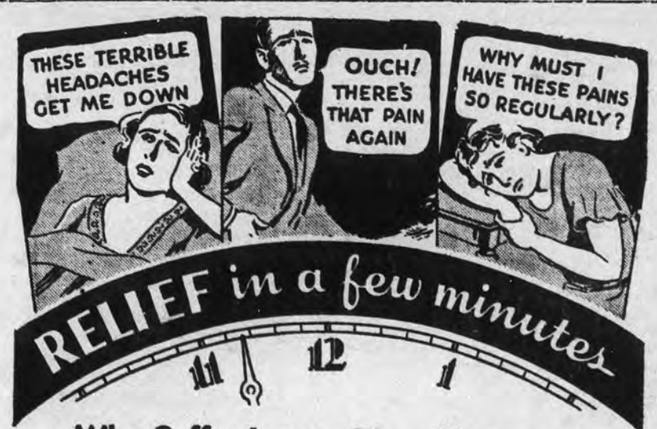
DICK FULTON

The "Kiddies Kollum" has been one of our favorite diversions since we entered the journalistic field, but we have not been able to foster regular interest from the little folk who make up the contributions to this feature we began several years ago-However, the most original and clever little man we know in Columbiana who is 9 years old next Saturday, took a trip to Florida with his Dad Frank Fulton and others durig the Summer and since returning home, this young fellow has written of his experiences while in the Land of Flowers. We asked him to allow us to reprint it just as he has written it—and he graciously consented-Here goes the letter in Dick's own verbage:

MY TRIP TO FLORIDA
By Dick Fulton



Months ago. We went to Ft. Walton. Daddy, Aunt Eddy, Warren and Jim all went. We left one Sunday morning at 4 o'clock. Werode 'till about 12 o'clock, then we got a cabin That afternoon I saw the ocean for the first time.

I had a good time, if my face hadn't craped so much. The next time I went out it didn't chape. I had a good time in the water.

One day we went boat riding I got soaking wet and I was so sick. The next day I could spot my eyes and could still rock. Jim was the craziest cat of all of them. One day when he was out swimming I lernt to go under. We was chasing a fish, I was stooping to grab it up and a big wave nocked me flat of my back. They all got blistered but me. Even Jim and warren blistered.

I had the time of my life, but the next day we moved to another cabin I liked it Better. We stayed five and a half days. Almonst ever day we went swimming. We left for home at 12o'clock and got there at 8 o'clock, and I was just in time to get to the show.

Why Suffer Longer Than Necessary?
Dr. Miles Anti-Pain Pills Relieve Quickly

DR. MILES ANTI - PAIN PILLS were made for just one purpose—to relieve pain. Users write that they "work like magic". They contain an effective, quick-acting, analgesic—pain reliever.

Try Dr. Miles Anti-Pain Pills before you lose a day's work—and pay—or break a social engagement because of HEADACHE, MUSCULAR, PERIODIC, OR NEURALGIC PAINS. They may be just what you need to relieve your pain and put you back on your feet again "rarin' to go".

DR. MILES ANTI - PAIN PILLS act quickly. You don't have to wait forty minutes to an hour for them to take effect as is the case with many analgesics. You'll get action in from ten to twenty minutes.

DR. MILES ANTI - PAIN PILLS are pleasant to take, handy to carry, prompt and effective in action, and do not upset the stomach. Their cost is small. One, or at most, two, is usually sufficient to relieve.

At your Drug Store. 25 for 25c. 125 for $1.00.

A Wide Difference

The difference between perseverance and obstinacy is that one often comes from a strong will and the other from a strong won't.

The increase of knowledge only produces more to wonder about.

By courage and holding one's nose much can be accomplished.

To make a rooster, the vainest of creatures, run, is the first triumph of a very small boy.

Sport that is sport only for the onlookers, is not sport.

You're the Smithy

You cannot dream yourself into a character; you must hammer and forge yourself into one.

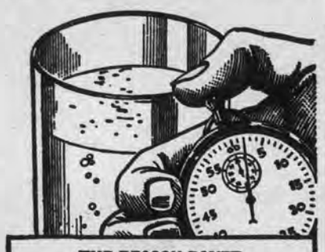
A gossip makes a mountain out of a molehill and then brings it to you.

Not All Can Laugh



A person with a sandpaper tongue may create more gayety, but he with a velvet one is more comforting.

Intimate fellowships sail the sea of Give and Take.

A man never forgets a snub. That is the reason it does him so much good, by stirring him into action.

Strive to be patient. Work steadily. Remember the dictionary was not compiled in a single day or year.

THE REASON HEADACHES ARE RELIEVED SO FAST

THE REASON BAYER ASPIRIN WORKS SO FAST

Drop a Bayer Aspirin tablet into a tumbler of water.

By the time it hits the bottom of the glass it is disintegrating.

This speed of disintegration enables genuine BAYER Aspirin tablets to start "taking hold" of headache and similar pain a few minutes after taking.

All people who suffer occasionally from headaches ought to know this way to quick relief.

At the first sign of such pain, take two Bayer Aspirin tablets with a half glass of water. Sometimes if the pain is more severe, another dose is necessary later, according to directions.

If headaches keep coming back we advise you to see your own physician. He will look for the cause in order to correct it.

The price now is only 15¢ for twelve tablets or two full dozen for 25 cents—virtually, only a cent apiece.

Chautemps Gives Warning

IF THE necessity arises, France is prepared and ready to employ force in defense of her vital interests. At the same time she offers peace to all nations "that will prove by their acts their desire to keep their engagements loyally."

M. Chautemps

Such was the warning, evidently directed especially to Italy and Germany, which Premier Camille Chautemps uttered before a congress of the central federation of his Radical Socialist party.

"I hope especially in the grievous affair of Spain this pacific, prudent, and courageous action will succeed in cutting short the violations of justice which cannot be renewed without constraining France and Britain to renew their liberty of action," Chautemps said.

The premier's declaration recalled French insistence that unless the nonintervention committee soon pulled foreign troops out of Spain France would open her frontier to aid the Spanish government.

Mussolini insists there are only 40,000 Italian volunteers in Spain and Fascist organs in Italy said these figures must be accepted by the nonintervention committee without argument.

Dispatches from Paris say that Mussolini and Hitler at their recent meeting in Germany reached an agreement by which Italy was given the right to order some long range guns from the Krupp works and armor plate for a new warship. In return Hitler was promised a free hand in southeastern Europe to obtain the foodstuffs and trade Germany needs. Italy is plainly menacing France's African possessions, but the danger of an advance by Germany through Czechoslovakia and Austria has delayed a showdown in the Mediterranean.

Chautemps' declaration of policy may give Il Duce pause.

Franco's Progress

GENERALISSIMO FRANCO, having completed his conquest of Gijon and the rest of the loyalist territory in northwest Spain, began moving his insurgent forces eastward to the Aragon front, where his officers said the "decisive offensive of the war" would be begun.

Government dispatches announced the Madrid-Valencia loyalist regime was prepared to block the insurgents on all sectors of the 300-mile line from the French frontier south to Teruel, east of Madrid.

Ecuador Coup de'Etat

GEN. ALBERTO ENRIQUEZ, war minister of Ecuador, and officers of the army executed a coup d'etat which forced Provisional President Federico Paez to resign and leave the country. Enriquez at once assumed power as "supreme chief" with a cabinet composed largely of army officers. He decreed the establishment of a popular tribunal to deal with persons accused of tampering with public funds and announced "a national political purge." The people accepted the change of government quietly.

Japanese Drive Checked

SIX days and nights of intensified fighting around Shanghai brought from the spokesman of the Japanese army the admission that its general advance of more than 100,000 men with tanks and planes was "slowed down." The Chinese had blown up bridges, mined highways and erected barbed wire entanglements, and all the time had battled the invaders desperately.

Bullets from a Japanese plane killed one British soldier and endangered Americans and other foreigners on the edge of the international settlement in Shanghai. Official protests were lodged immediately and the matter was so serious that it was referred to London and Tokyo.

Reports indicate that Japan has lost a part of North China which she had occupied. It was said Mongols and Chinese of Suiyuan had declared the independence of that province and set up a new regime at Kweisui.

F. D. R. on Farm Bill

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT, returning to his Hyde Park home, was giving especial attention to the farm legislation which he wishes passed by congress in the extraordinary session. He sent duplicate letters to Chairman Ellison D. Smith of the senate agriculture committee and Chairman Marvin Jones of the house committee urging them to speed up the legislation, but warning that it must be kept within budgetary limits unless congress was prepared to impose new taxes.

"The new national farm act should safeguard farmers' income as well as their soil fertility," the President wrote. "It should provide for storage of reserve food supplies in an ever normal granary, so that if severe and widespread drouth recurs consumers will be assured of more adequate supplies with less drastic increases in price than otherwise would be the case.

"It should provide for control of surpluses when and if necessary but at the same time it should preserve the export markets that still are open to our farmers.

"It should protect both farmers and consumers against extreme ups and downs in prices of farm products. It should be financed by sound fiscal methods. Local administration should be kept in the farmers' hands."

Urging sound fiscal relations, Mr. Roosevelt said that it is important not to interfere with the expected balancing of the budget in the fiscal year 1938-'39.

Experts in Washington figure the new farm program may cost as much as $1,000,000,000 in the first year.

Farmers Warned on Loans

EDWARD A. O'NEAL, president of the American Farm Bureau federation, headed a group of farm leaders who called on the President for the purpose of asking loans of 60 cents a bushel on corn to improve prices. It was understood Mr. Roosevelt warned that crop loans should not be pushed so high that the drain on federal revenues would become too heavy; and that he intimated that the budget would not permit great extension of loans at this time.

However, Secretary of Agriculture Wallace subsequently told a press conference a government loan on this year's large corn crop "should be exceedingly desirable."

Steiwer to Retire

SEEN and HEARD around the NATIONAL CAPITAL

By Carter Field

Washington.—Frank R. McNinch is going to blow away the smoke that has been hovering over the Federal communications commission and put out the fire if there is any. Primarily that is what he was put in there for. Scarcely anything pending on Capitol Hill has worried President Roosevelt more than the Wallace White resolution providing for a sweeping senate investigation into FCC. Particularly in that this resolution would be handled by the senate interstate commerce committee of which Burton K. Wheeler is chairman. The President correctly interprets Wheeler's attitude as one of active dislike for himself, despite Wheeler's approval of many of the New Deal economic and social objectives.

Whatever may be the truth about the "fire," certainly many folks in the industry just assumed that it was there. They gave no open indications of a suspicion that anything so gross as actual passage of money would be effective, but many approved the policy that the distillers followed, when they offered the job as their czar first to James A. Farley and then to Forbes Morgan, Mrs. Roosevelt's uncle. There were little signs of this, such as the hiring of Charles Michelson by one radio station which wanted its license extended.

Actually, whatever the fact may be, it has been the common assumption in Washington and in the industry that wave lengths were awarded according to the political influence those seeking them were able to bring to bear.

McNinch, although formerly a politician, has shown no evidence of being swayed by politics in any action since coming to Washington. He is honest beyond question, and punctilious about merit as he sees it. In fact, it is often commented that it is worry about which is the right thing to do that causes his bad spells of nervous indigestion.

Three Plums Less

Just two weeks after taking office McNinch killed three birds with one stone by abolishing the set-up by which the seven-man commission had been divided into three water-tight compartments dealing, respectively, with telegraph, telephone and radio matters, thus neatly removing three juicy political plums from the Washington tree. For when the three divisions cease to function on November 15 there will be no further need, of course, for the services of Robert T. Bartley, A. G. Patterson, and Joseph F. Killeen, the directors of the three divisions. Bartley just happens to be a nephew of Representative Sam Rayburn, house majority leader; Patterson is a close friend of ex-Senator Hugo L. Black (who now has a better job), and Killeen is an old associate of Postmaster-General James A. Farley and of Edward J. Flynn, Democratic leader in the Bronx in New York City.

To analyze the action justly, it should be explained that the reduction in personnel was a secondary result. It is generally acknowledged that the purge victims have performed adequately the rather superficial duties of their respective positions. It is also admitted that the commission's work will probably be carried on without noticeable lag after they leave. The real objective can be read between the lines of McNinch's official statement: " . . . Experience has shown that to subdivide a small commission has a divisive effect and tends away from co-operation and mutual understanding; the assignment of such important work (to division) . . . has resulted in two members of the commission . . . exercising an undesirably large portion of the power and functions of the commission, while denying the other commissioners any practical opportunity to participate in decisions . . . Commissioners not on a particular division have felt a natural reluctance to inquire into the work committed to others . . . The aggregate wisdom and judgment of seven minds is surely greater than any two or three of the seven." In other words, it is harder for seven men to fall into error than for two to do so.

Word About Hard Coal

Most people think of hard coal—anthracite—as rather an expensive luxury. And what with oil and gas heating, occasional coal strikes, etc., as pretty nearly a dying industry.

So it's rather interesting that a study has been made of the situation in northeastern Pennsylvania, with a view to determining how the use of anthracite can be increased in producing electricity! And this in this era of government subsidized water-power, with President Roosevelt's eulogies of Bonneville and Grand Coulee so recently on the front pages.

The fact is that anthracite has been used for the production of electricity for some years. It is more economical in that little section of the country where the hard coal is mined. They have become rather efficient in using it under boilers in generating plants, too, being able now to produce a kilowatt hour from a pound and a half of low-grade anthracite. It took twice as much back in 1919.

Another strange thing is that the use of anthracite in power production is virtually the only market for hard coal which has not diminished in the last few years. Actually it has increased slightly. It is now running about two million tons a year.

There are points about this situation, which caused this study and inspire optimism among the hard coal miners, which are interesting in connection with the whole power problem.

As to Freight Rates

For example, freight rates. One of the reasons why so many folks are skeptical about the success of the big western power projects is just that. They figure that the manufacturer who goes to Bonneville to get cheap power is going to run into freight rates. Partly on his raw material, but mostly on shipping his product two thousand odd miles to where the consumers are.

It's not a new story. Back in the early '20's lots of farmers went broke on irrigated land in western Montana. They raised potatoes and shipped them to Chicago, considerably more than a thousand miles. Potatoes are heavy—for their value. Maybe the railroads ought not to charge so much. But it's a long haul. So one hears a lot about "intermountain freight rates."

Now the fact is, as the bureau of standards will tell you, that there are more units of heat in a ton of bituminous coal than in a ton of anthracite. And you can buy a ton of bituminous at the mine mouth cheaper than you can buy a ton of anthracite.

But it is cheaper to use anthracite to produce power than bituminous, if the production occurs in anthracite territory. The answer is freight rates.

Whereas right in the anthracite territory there are all the industries a power salesman could ask, and all the consumers for the products of those industries one could desire.

A Sore Spot

Apprentice training is one of the sore spots in the present business management problem, but there is little prospect of any corrective action. There is plenty of lip service for the idea of doing something—of opening the door to employment at the more lucrative trades to more boys and young men—but union opposition plus lethargy seems too strong for the irritated employers who suffer in times of shortage of skilled employees. Especially as the employers have never put up anything remotely resembling a real fight.

In most skilled trades it is more difficult for a youngster to get aboard the bottom rung of a ladder than it is for him to get into a very exclusive Greek letter fraternity at college.

Once the youngster has been "tapped" for apprentice training, it is fairly simple. Of course he has to put in four years' training before he is recognized as a mechanic, palpably absurd in most trades, and absolutely essential in none. But by the same token he does not have to display any special aptitude or mental ability, or physical dexterity to master something in four years which another boy would be able to do in from six months to a year—or he himself for that matter.

This has been the labor union rule. Recognizing the need for more skilled mechanics and for more young men trained so as to take care of the future, the government stepped into the picture and set up the Federal committee for apprentice training. This body has solemnly stood by the union requirements—four years, frills, Greek letter "tapping" to get started, and all.

Makes It Worse

But along comes another government agency and makes the situation still worse—for the small employer. This is the government employment agency. Here is what has happened again and again in the last few months, when despite the alleged slowing down of business there has been a scarcity of skilled mechanics.

Mr. Big Employer needs 100 skilled mechanics of a certain variety. He informs the government employment agency of this need and tells what he is willing to pay. Whereupon the government agency rounds up the men for him, taking them from anywhere from 10 to 30 small competitors of Mr. Big Employer.

Mr. Big Employer is able to pay more. Mr. Little Employer cannot hold them. Mr. Little Employer does without.

When this situation is pointed out to New Dealers, with the possibility that, if carried on indefinitely, such a course would lead to the gradual elimination of all the little fellows, New Dealers do not seem frightened.

"This practice tends to force wages up to their proper level," they answer. "These little employers you are feeling sorry for are exploiting their workers. They should meet the prevailing wage scale. This would boost the buying power of their communities, and help general prosperity."

—23—

"But I hadn't known."

"You suspected that there was one, didn't you? You and Jed Stewart came to live in the Other House to watch me, didn't you? Do you think that I have forgotten that you called me a schemer?"

"This seems to be turning into a question and answer period. Suppose you let me tell my side of the story. Sit down, please."

"I prefer to stay here. Go on. I hope it doesn't take long. I have a lot to do before I leave in the morning—sorry to have to ask to let the furnishings stay here until Mother gets back, but—"

"Don't be so breathless, dearest."

"I'm not breathless, and I'm not your dearest. I wish you would say what you forced your way in here to say and—and go."

"All right, remember, you asked for it. I came to say that after I knew who you were that day in Jed's office, I didn't believe that you had used 'undue influence' with my aunt. I admit that for a while I tried to fool myself, but I couldn't keep it up. I didn't open my house because I wanted to 'watch' you. I decided to do it on Thanksgiving day, because I—liked you and your 'whole darn family.' As the weeks passed, Jed and I were sure that if the second will had not been destroyed, Henri knew where it was. Not knowing its contents hampered us."

"But you know now?"

"Yes. And it hurts infernally to think that you should have been drawn into this sordid mix-up."

"Why shouldn't I be? It's what might be called poetic justice, isn't it? Didn't I start the trouble when I went to Lookout House to see your aunt the first time? I'd been warned that business and friendship won't mix any better than oil and water. Now I know it. You had suspected for weeks that I had no right to your aunt's money, and yet you and Jed Stewart let me keep on spending and spending. When I think of those two cars I bought I almost lose my mind. How can I ever pay it back?"

"Pay it back! Don't be foolish. There is no question of paying it back. Have you forgotten that Mary Amanda Dane left an income to you?"

"You don't think for an instant, do you, that I would accept a cent of that money? Would you take any from me when I tried to divide with you? I'm surprised, I'm really surprised that you don't play the martyr and ask me to marry you."

"No. I shan't ask you to marry me. I've made a lot of mistakes in my life, but, believe me, I've learned enough not to make that one."

His cool denial hurt Brooke intolerably. He hated her, she told herself. Why shouldn't he?

"In the library a while ago you told Lucette you were leaving here because you had accepted an offer. Are you engaged to Jerry Field?"

A gate in the wall! A way out without letting him know that she cared, how desperately she cared for him. She laughed.

"I—Here come Sam and Lucette. They are stamping snow from their feet outside as a warning that they are about to interrupt our conference. Amusing, isn't it?"

"Amusing to you, perhaps. It isn't to me."

Sam's face was as red as the fire as he and Lucette entered the room.

"Sorry to interrupt, but—"

"Don't apologize."

"I'm not apologizing." His face went from red to crimson. "I'm only trying to explain, Brooke, that the inspector's walking the floor and gnashing his teeth and muttering something about keeping the Law waiting. He wants you, Mark, and he wants you quick."

"I'm going." Mark Trent paused on the threshold. "Good-night, Brooke. We'll finish our talk tomorrow."

CHAPTER XVI

"We'll finish our talk tomorrow." A month had passed since Mark Trent had flung those words as her, since she had left Lookout House. They had echoed to the accompaniment of the whir of the wings of the great plane in which she had flown south at the urgency and the expense of Carston's Inc.; they had intruded in business hours; they had flitted like wraiths through her dreams.

The days slid past breathlessly. She was conscious of a sort of breathless urge to keep up with something which was escaping her.

Keep up with what, she asked herself, as in the flower scented dressing room of Carston's, Inc. she slipped out of the green organza number she had been modeling and into a frock of cool yellow linen. She was looking out unseeingly at the palm bordered white street when Madame Celeste entered. Her thin white frock rested Brooke's eyes after the rainbow collection she had put on and off for the last two hours.

"You done noble, cherie," the woman approved heartily.

There was something in her nasal twang as refreshing as a breeze from a thousand New England hills blowing through this tropical paradise.

"That last customer is one of the richest girls in the country. She ordered all the gowns you modeled. You look kind of tired, you've a right to, cherie, after landing that whale of an order. Get some lunch here, go home and rest until four, then come back. You will dress here, the society models will dress at the Shaw's sports house. Sidone will be there to help them. You'll be the only professional mannequin, but I wouldn't trust an amateur to show that wedding gown. The charity fete begins at five. The wedding party will be the last feature of the style show. Look your best. We expect that some prospective bride will snap up the whole outfit when she sees you walk up the ribbon and flower bordered aisle in that heavenly white satin veiled in a mist of tulle. You'll make a ravishing bride, cherie; it will be your last appearance, so knock their eyes out."

The words "last appearance" penetrated the turmoil in Brooke's mind.

"Last appearance! What do you mean?"

Madame Celeste twisted her amethyst beads. "Cherie, don't go white on me. You know business hasn't been too good, and I have my orders. After the fashion show I'm to hand you a check for your commissions and a month's pay and you're through."

"Last Appearance! What Do You Mean?"

"But—but I thought I had sold a lot of frocks since I came."

"You have, and you can search me for the boss's reasons. Never knew him to turn a trick like this before—but, I ask you, is any business being run as it ever was run before? I'll tell the world it isn't. I'm terribly sorry to lose you."

For an instant, emotion threatened damage to the enameled calm of the woman's face.

Brooke was still puzzling over the dismissal when she reached the small Bermuda-type house, with its whitewashed roof and walls built around two sides of a patio, in which she had been living since she had come to Palm Beach, and entered her room.

She changed from the yellow cotton frock to white shantung pajamas. She picked up letters from a desk, pushed open a window, stepped out on the gallery and breathed deeply of the light thin air.

She opened a letter from Lucette.

For the first two pages the word "Jerry" monopolized space; to even a feeble-minded person it would be evident that Jerry Field was leading in a long stag line.

Brooke was glad of that, but how did Lucette manage to take on all the festivities and be fit for her work in the morning? As if she had anticipated the question, Lucette wrote, with words heavily underlined for emphasis:

"After this evening I'll cut out the night spots. There's nothing in them for me."

"So stop worrying about little sister, darling, and get this: I want to be like you, Brooke. You don't smoke, you don't drink, and yet I've never seen a man who, when introduced to you, didn't stand a little straighter, fuss with his tie, and get that I've-found-her-at-last look in his eyes; and you're grand fun and the life of the party.

"There, you have the inside story of my life, so what? Never thought I would let you know how I adored you—bad for you—but here it is.

"Lucette."

"P. S. News flash! Sam's play may be produced any day. Its predecessor is folding up; it was a terrible flop."

Brooke shut her eyes to keep back tears. She had known that Lucette loved her, but that she set her on a pedestal was unbelievable. As to that "I've-found-her-at-last" look in a man's eyes, she should have seen Mark Trent's when he had called her a "schemer" in Jed Stewart's office.

Why think of it? Hadn't she plenty of happier things to think of? She glanced at the clock. Sam's play might be produced any day. She had lost her job. She was free to go to New York! Could she afford it? Why did that grubby question have to pop up to take the joy out of life? Of course she would go. She had flown to Palm Beach at the expense of Carston's Inc. She would take a bus in return on her own. She would go tonight, go on to a new adventure in living.

Tingling with excitement, she telephoned for a reservation on the night bus; packed a small trunk to be sent by express; folded her silver evening frock and accessories into the air luggage suitcase which Carston's Inc. had provided. She would want the gala clothes for the premiere—thrilling thought. She laid out an amethyst tweed suit with crimson scarf and beret, to wear on the journey. It would be cold when she reached New York.

All ready and somewhere to go! She glanced at the clock. There was time for a swim before she started for the style-show. It would set her up and refresh her. She must look her best for her positively last Palm Beach appearance.

She slipped into the white waterfrock and caught up a beach coat. Life was gloriously worth while even if the man one loved did think one a "schemer," she told herself, as she ran down the steps which led to the patio.

She was humming a snatch of gay song as she crossed the strip of yellow sand steeping in golden sunlight which the march of fashion had left behind. Arms extended, she slid into the sparkling water. It parted. Buoyant, foamy, it closed over her. Marvelous feeling. This would stabilize her mind, drown haunting memories. She swam with quick strokes, turned, floated, came back arm over arm, and, dripping with coolness, waded out to the shore.

A man rose from the shadow of the dark hibiscus hedge outside the patio. Its scarlet flowers seemed to nod at her in amused derision as she stopped in surprise. Mark Trent! This was the cue for cool sophistication.

He held out the beach coat she had dropped on the sand.

"Put this on, Brooke. Let's sit here. I want to talk to you and we may be interrupted inside."

"How did you know where I was?"

"I've been playing round with Lucette, more or less. Saw Sam when I came through New York."

"Sam! How was he?"

"Nerves taut as violin strings, otherwise in great shape."

"When does his play open?"

"Day after tomorrow."

"So soon!"

"Why that sudden look of horror?"

"It wasn't horror, it was—I've lost my job and I had planned to leave here tonight by bus, but traveling that way I can't possibly make New York in time for the premiere of 'Islands Arise.'"

"I know that you've lost your job. I had a talk with your boss before I left the city. He agreed with me that you shouldn't miss the opening of Sam's play."

"You mean that you told him to fire me? What right have you to interfere in my life?"

"The right of a sort of guardian; didn't Aunt Mary Amanda so request in that last will?" Eyes on a pelican fishing in shallow water, he accused:

"You haven't answered Jed's letters notifying you that the amount of income you had been receiving from my aunt's estate would be deposited monthly to your account as usual. I had to come to find out if you had received them."

Brooke sprang to her feet. Her beach coat slipped off. Slim and golden-skinned in her white waterfrock, she dug pink toes into the hot sand.

"I didn't answer because you both know without being told that I won't touch that money."

Mark Trent loomed over her.

"Put this on again," he commanded grimly. "Why won't you touch that money?"

Brooke thrust her arms into the beach coat he held and stuck her unsteady hands into the pockets.

"Would you take a cent of Mary Amanda Dane's when I thought it mine? Didn't you say in that snobby voice of yours the afternoon we met in Jed Stewart's office:

"'Hope you'll enjoy the house and fortune,' Miss Reyburn.' Now it's my turn:

"'I hope you'll enjoy the house and fortune,' Mr. Trent. I'm sure Daphne Field will be crazy about it."

"Daphne!" He caught her wrist in a grip which hurt. "Where did you get that crazy idea?"

How crude, how unbelievably crude she had been to mention Daphne's name, Brooke accused herself hotly. But, having blundered, she'd better see it through with the light touch.

"From a letter from Mrs. Gregory the other day It was full of news, all about Mark Trent and Daphne Field, the current lady of his heart. She's a grand gossip."

Mark Trent's eyes drew Brooke's like a magnet. Was the light in his laughter?

"Anne Gregory is more than a gossip; she's a strategist. I haven't spoken to Daphne Field since the night of the play and she knows it." He loosened his hold on her wrist. "What are you doing this afternoon?"

Lesson for November 7

CHRISTIAN CHARACTER AND PEACE

LESSON TEXT—Colossians 3:1-17.
GOLDEN TEXT—And let the peace of God rule in your hearts, to the which also ye are called in one body.—Colossians 3:15.
PRIMARY TOPIC—In His Name.
JUNIOR TOPIC—In His Name.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How May I Have Peace?
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Christian Cure for Strife.

Armistice day is but a few days away, a fact which was probably in mind when the title of our lesson was chosen, for while it speaks of "Christian character" it also refers to "peace." But the peace spoken of here is the peace of God which is the result of peace with God and which issues in holy living. The only hope of this world for a real and lasting peace is in the winning of men and women to glad allegiance to the Prince of Peace, our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ.

Altogether proper is the close connection in Scripture between the most profound spiritual truth and practical holy living. Whether it be done in a land of enlightenment or in the midst of heathen darkness the teaching of the deep things of God brings forth in the receptive heart an appreciation of God's provision for our redemption, a consciousness and hatred of sin and an appropriation of victory in Christ. All three of these factors emerge in the study of our lesson.

I. "Seek Those Things Which Are Above" (vv. 1-4).

Faith in Christ makes us one with him in his death and in his resurrection. We are therefore to live in resurrection power. Our Lord has entered into heaven, and is there seated at God's right hand. If we are in him, if we have died and arisen with him, we are dead to the things of this world and our one desire is to "seek those things which are above."

The mystic union of the believer with Christ brings us so close to God our Father that we may say with the poet:

"Near, so very near to God,
Nearer I could not be,
For in the person of His Son
I am as near as He."

We are "hid with Christ in God." He is our very life. Note however that this union with Christ expresses itself in a most practical manner for we as Christians are admonished to

II. "Mortify Your Members . . . upon the Earth" (vv. 5-9).

The most spiritual Christian is the one who is most sensitive to sin and most earnest in his purpose that it should be mortified—which means "put to death." We may not temporize—we must not compromise with sin. Put it to death.

The list of things which are to be put away include a number of sins which we recognize at once as utterly inconsistent with a Christian profession. But note also that there are a number of them which are all too common among Christian people — covetousness, anger, wrath, malice, and so forth. Lying and shameful talk are condoned by some (and practiced by many).

III. "Put On the New Man" (vv. 11-17).

Christianity is positive. We put off sin—we put on righteousness. Knowing no lines of racial or creedal distinction we recognize Christ as "all and in all." Then as "God's elect, holy and beloved," we are clothed with the Spirit of Christ. Tenderhearted, kind, lowly, meek, of a forgiving spirit, long-suffering; all these Christlike ways of living should appear in those who are hid with him in God. As the encircling band which holds together these beautiful and precious virtues, we have love, "the bond of perfectness" (v. 14).

These outward manifestations of our oneness with Christ have an inward controlling power—for in our hearts "the peace of Christ" is to "rule." The word means to serve as "umpire," as a referee in times of difficulty. There in the Christian man's inmost being we also find the "word of Christ" dwelling, really abiding, and not in scarcity but "richly." Small wonder that there is in such a heart a never-ending song which glorifies God's grace and which helps and admonishes others.

Our final verse sums up the life of the Christian, for in whatsoever he does there is but one motive, one purpose—a willing thankful response to the will of God. He does nothing that he cannot do in the name of the Lord Jesus.

Interpreters of the Mode

SO LONG as you Sew-Your-Own, Milady, just so long will Yours Truly strive to interpret the mode for you. Today the trio brings you frocks for every size (from four years to size 52) for almost any occasion. Each has been designed to bring you the ultimate in style in its particular class and all claim a new high in simplicity and comfort.

Ultra-Smart Dress.

It's nice to know you're easy to look at even if the occasion is only another breakfast session. That's why the ultra-smart dress at the left is so handy to have. Note the clever detail all the way through even to the inverted skirt pleat. See how beautifully the sleeves set-in—you just know at a glance how simple it is to put together. Cotton, of course, is the material.

Typical of Youth.

The surest way to be a big little-body is to wear dresses that are as expertly planned as the grown-ups'. The little number above, center, has the smart styling of a sub-deb's frock. It is typical of youth's freshness and activity, and is one model that gets little girls' complete endorsement. It is the number one dress for the number one sweetheart in anybody's family.

An Orchid to You.

Do you think of a charming sorority tea with lots of atmosphere and plenty of style when you look at the handsome new two-piecer above, right? Would you like it made in one color and material, or, perhaps with a topper in gold lame or satin combined with a skirt of a rich dull fabric? Why not make it yourself to suit your own fancy and step into a swell little world of glamour crowded with fans and fun and festivity?

The Patterns.

Pattern 1401 is designed for sizes 36 to 52. Size 38 requires 4½ yards of 35-inch material.

Pattern 1366 is designed for sizes 6, 8, 10, 12, and 14 years. Size 8 requires 2⅜ yards of 39-inch material, plus 1¾ yards of machine-made pleating to trim, as pictured.

Pattern 1396 is designed for sizes 32 to 44. Size 34 requires 1⅞ yards of 39-inch material for the blouse, 1⅞ yards of 54-inch material for the skirt.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., Room 1020, 211 W. Wacker Drive, Chicago, Ill. Price of patterns, 15 cents (in coins) each.

YOU CAN THROW CARDS IN HIS FACE ONCE TOO OFTEN

WHEN you have those awful cramps; when your nerves are all on edge—don't take it out on the man you love.

Your husband can't possibly know how you feel for the simple reason that he is a man.

A three-quarter wife may be no wife at all if she nags her husband seven days out of every month.

For three generations one woman has told another how to go "smiling through" with Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It helps Nature tone up the system, thus lessening the discomforts from the functional disorders which women must endure in the three ordeals of life: 1. Turning from girlhood to womanhood. 2. Preparing for motherhood. 3. Approaching "middle age."

Don't be a three-quarter wife; take LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND and Go "Smiling Through."

UNDER THE COURTHOUSE DOME

DECLARATORY JUDGEMENT ON ROAD QUESTION AFFIRMED BY SUPREME COURT

On November 4, the Supreme Court of Alabama, affirmed the Declaratory Judgement and decision of Circuit Judge W. W. Wallace wherein he held that the Board of Revenue for Shelby County, Alabama, could legal ly borrow funds with which to construct paved roads and could pledge anticipated revenue to be derived from gasoline taxes for any number of years to secure a loan for such purpose.

With this law being established there remains no reason why the proposed Highway from Bibb County to St. Clair County line should not materialize as all legal entanglements and obstacles have been removed.

The laws of Alabama require every person using, operating, or driving a motor vehicle over the roads and highways of the State to bring said motor vehicle to a complete stop before passing a school bus or other vehicle used to transport school children, while such bus or other vehicle, is engaged in taking on or discharging school children. The punishment for violating this law is a fine not ot exceed $300.00, to which may be added imprisonment for not exceeding ninty days.

Cottonseed meal, when used as a fertilizer, is exempted from the state two cents sales tax, under an opinion of Attorney-General Albert A Carmichael. The opinion was rendered at the request of Probate Judge S. P. Poyner, of Huston County.

JOIN THE RED CROSS ROLL CALL NOV. 11-25

A cavalcade of misery, a million strong, routed by the sprawl of a great river rising. Men, Women and children seeking safety in the flooded drenched Ohio basin, their homes gone—even livelihood swept away Numb with shock, sick with apprehension for the future, they turned to the Red Cross. And the Red Cross helped them, helped each one of this million, because their resources were gone. The people's chosen disaster relief agency fed and sheltered them, nursed them, clothed them, rebuilt their homes and restocked their small trade marts.

This the Red Cross did following the winter's assault by the hungry waters. This the Red Cross did following 105 other disasters of fire, storm, and flood during the years. This the Red Cross will always do.

The quality of Red Cross mercy is not strained, for it is an expression of the mercy of the people of America Just as enrollment in the Red Cross during Roll Call is practical assurance of the continuation of a nation's merciful regard.

MRS. NORA REYNOLDS PASSES IN MONTEVALLO

Mrs. Nora Reynolds, for a number of years one of the most dearly beloved Matrons of Alabama College, passed away at her home in Montevallo on Saturday morning after suffering a severe heart attack.

Funeral services were conducted from the Presbyterian Church in Montevallo on Sunday afternoon, with interment in Centerville.

Serviving Mrs. Reynolds are two sons, John Reynolds of Hawaii, and Eugene Reynolds of Montevallo.

Toll Bridges in Alabama Now Free

All toll bridges in Alabama have been made free and there are now only a few ferries being operated on State Roads.

Fifteen toll bridges were constructed in this State, under an Act of the Legislature passed [illegible] These bridges took the place of ferries on important State Roads. Under an Act of the Legislature passed in 1935 the tolls from these bridges were lifted.

Through an Act of Congress the State is being re-imbursed for one half the amount of the cost of construction of these bridges, that are located on Federal Aid Roads. The balance of the indebtedness on these bridges is being retired from funds received from the gasoline tax.

Another toll bridge that was not included in the original Act was the Cochrane Bridge across Mobile Bay. This was built with private funds and was recently acquired by the State, the indebtedness against it being retired in the same manner as the indebtedness against the other toll bridges.

This removes the tolls from the last of the highway bridges in Alabama.

SHELBY HIGH PLANS ANNUAL HOMECOMING

[illegible] County High School resumes [illegible] custom of homecoming Fri[illegible] their annual clash with Pell City.

The two teams have both been beaten one time each this year and it promise to be the classic feature of the year. Coach Wilson has put the locals through a series of stiff workouts this week and with the new plays he has given out he feels confident of victory despite thefact that Pell City is the light favorite.

Shelby played Pell City on Meehan field in Pell City last year and were defeated ina closely contested battle by a score of 6 - 0. With this fact in mind the locals will go into battle to revenge last years defeat.

Shelby has had an unusually good year this year winning four of the five games they have played by impressive scores. In fact their goal has yet to be blemished on their home field and they are out to keep their record clear.

Census figures show that the population of Alabama has steadily increased since it was admitted as a State. The greatest percentage of increase was during the first ten years, or from 18 20 to 1830, when the increase was 142 percent. The lowest percentage was from 1860 to 1870 when the increase was only 3.4 percent. The oppulation in 1870 was 996,992. The last census shows it to be 2,646,248 in 1930.

The estimated population of Alabamo in 1936 was 2,851,000, which is a million more than it was in 1930, the population according to the census that year being 1,828,697.

ARMISTICE DAY!
NOVEMBER 11, 1937!

A bright gold and blue November day! The Highways, a veritable tapestry hung in a curtain of color over the mountain tops. Trees bend rainbow—like, and pastel shades of coral and lavender vary the deeper shades of purple and gold as we gaze enchanted along the roadside while we wend our way toward a restful spot aften the hub - bub and clackety clack clack of machinery incident to a newspaper office—but, how vividly we recall a certain other "November Day" when amid the solemn hush of the Twilight hour, when Silence, brooding like a gentle spirit, over the still and pulseless world there was borne on the winds the sounds of a hugle clear- 'Twas the clarion call from "OVER THERE"! - - - Nineteen years have not dimmed this memory-and in retrospective reverence do we take this method of recalling to your minds in panoramic review - - -

"A bit of color 'gainst the BLUE
Hues of the morning, BLUE for true,
And RED for the kindling light of flame
And WHITE for a nation's stainless name."
He's home again this boy of mine
And again the moonbeams dance-
But in my Garden of Remembrance
Still bloom my MEMORIES OF FRANCE.

AGAIN: As the "Long Long Trail" again goes winding
Thru the Land of my Dreams - - -
"Did you see him in France, just a wee little chap,
With his dark curly hair underneath khaki cap
Did you meet him out there under neath foreign skies.
With a laugh on his lips and a laugh in his eyes-?"
That was — — — — MY BUDDY!

Time rolls on - - - - A new day dawns-but may we repeat to you Kipling's immortal.

RECESSIONAL

"God of our Fathers known of old
Lord of our far flung battle line
Beneath whose awful hand we hold
Dominion over palm and pine
Lord, God of hosts, be with us yet,
Lest We Forget! Lest We Forget!

WINTER PROMISE

If I but learn to meet these days which bring
Sharp winds to test this dreaming, I may save
Within my heart the beauty that you gave
To me in passing hours of Spring,

There is wise patience in the proud reserves
Of a midwinter land whose coldest skies
Canopy this hard earth, beneath which lies
The seed of beauty that it guards and serves

And when earth softens and winds cease to fling
Menace against my heart, then I will know
That love in beauty grown beneath the snow
Outlives a transient loveliness of Spring.

H. H. T

Who will take it wide—
To the mountain tops
And the rising tide;

And will say, "I love—
Oh I love you yet!"
Lest when Winter comes,
You forget—forget!

SONGS

"Out of the earth they come, these songs of mine,
Pleading in winds and suppliant in the grass,
Seeking in faltering phrase and stumbling line
To leave a glimpse of glory as they pass.
There is no dawn that stirs a sleeping tree,
No hill that sorrows with the daylight dead,
That does not fling the challange down to me
To say the things that never can be said.
Out of the earth they come, and if I find
A ship to bear one singing voice across
The still and stolid waters of the mind,
I shall not count these fragments utter loss,
But shall rejoice that I have found a tongue
For just one note that never could be sung."

(Scruggs)

I will dip my pen
In the Summer's pool,
And will gild its point
With the sun's own tool!

I will write a line—
Glowing, word for word
And will send it off
By a gay, small bird,

MILTON BIRD — JOURNALIST

It is with keen pride that we tell our thousands of readers that we have copped a new feature written by Shelby County's cracy short story writer and Beau Brummel of the Board Walk-Milton Bird, who has a most interesting feature column which will begin in next weeks issue of the Democrat.

Mr. Bird is a native of Columbiana He knows the "natives", and has some interesting news about them told in his own inimitable style. You will enjoy it. The column will be called GOODMORNING - - by Milton Bird and if there is anything in the old saying about "The Early Bird catches the Worm" - - - Well, we believe we get up early enough this time to really "get something" - In other words, we think we "have something here" in this unique column Watch for it!

THE REV. W. B. HOPE

The Democrat happily joins Columbiana citizens in welcoming the Rev. and Mrs. W. B. Hope again in Columbiana. Mr Hope is universally beloved. His friendliness and personal interest in us since he came to reside in our town and serve the Methodist Church as Pastor, has been one of the joyously happy comradeships we have known and treasured thru the past year. Always genuine in his dealings with Main Street inhabitants, we have found a keen delight in his merry banter and always ready joking ability-A smile goes a long, long, way in this old world and COURTESY and TOLERANCE perhaps a bit further. We wholeheartedly extend our greetings to the Rev. and Mrs Hope. Long may they linger among us.

Frank Dixon is the only candidate for Governor of Alabama who received over one hundred thousand votes and was not elected.

For seven years Alabama's government existed under a Constitution that its citizens refused to ratify. This period was from 1868 to 1875. Many negroes were members of the legislature during this period.

REDDY FOX IS LAUGHED AT

REDDY FOX was miserable. Yes, sir, Reddy Fox was miserable. To be continually laughed at is enough to make any one miserable. No one ever likes to be laughed at unless they are trying to make people laugh at them. Reddy Fox wasn't doing anything of that kind. Oh my, no! No, indeed! Reddy considers himself a very fine gentleman and so, of course, he wouldn't think of doing anything to make people laugh at him. But they did laugh at him just the same,

Reddy Fox Was Miserable—to Be Continually Laughed at Is Enough to Make Any One Miserable.

even the very smallest, and it was all because of the way he ran from Buster Bear with Jumper the Hare right at his heels. You see everybody pretended to believe that it was from Jumper that he was running away.

So Reddy was very miserable. If he went down on the Green Meadows Danny Meadow Mouse would be sure to call out:

"Mr. Reddy has a scare
At the shadow of a hare."

Then Danny would laugh in the most provoking manner, and hide where Reddy could not get at him.

If he went down to the Smiling Pool he would no sooner come in sight of Jerry Muskrat than Jerry would shout:

"Reddy, Reddy, you watch out!
Jumper's somewhere hereabout."

Then Jerry would laugh in the most provoking way and Reddy couldn't do a thing, because Jerry would be swimming with only his head out of water.

If he went to the Green Forest he would be sure to hear Unc' Billy Possum's funny chuckle from some tree overhead and then Unc' Billy would say:

"Ah done hear say it fo' a fac',
Who runs away will sho' come back."

Then all Reddy could do would be to grind his teeth and tell Unc' Billy what dreadful things he would do to him if he ever caught him.

Now, of course, all that the little people of the Green Forest and the Green Meadows did these things for was to tease Reddy Fox. When he grew angry they laughed, and the angrier he grew the harder they laughed. Of course that wasn't at all nice of them. But they didn't stop to think of that. Not one of them loves Reddy Fox, and now that they had a chance to get even with him for all the frights he had given them, and for all the mean things he had done to them, they were just bound to make the most of it. You see it didn't enter their heads that they might be making trouble for some one else. All they thought of was making Reddy Fox feel miserable.

But it is not very often that you or I or anybody else can make trouble for just one person. Did you ever think of that? It's so. You go ask Jumper the Hare. All Jumper's friends were laughing at Reddy Fox, and shouting mean things at him and calling him a coward, because they knew it made Reddy feel uncomfortable and miserable. It didn't once enter their heads that they were making trouble for any one else. Yet they were. They were making a lot of trouble for some one else, and that some one was Jumper the Hare.

Jiffy Blouse and Skirt Done in Plain Knitting

Here's simplicity itself—a jiffy knit that not only goes fast but is only plain knitting, no purling, throughout. What's more, it's made in two identical pieces (not counting the sleeves), seamed up front and back—no side seams. Make the blouse with long or short sleeves and a plain skirt.

Pattern 1568

Pattern 1568 contains directions for making this blouse and a plain knitted skirt in sizes 16-18 and 38-40 (all given in one pattern); illustrations of blouse and stitches used; material requirements.

Send 15 cents in stamps or coins (coins preferred) for this pattern to The Sewing Circle, Needlecraft Dept., 82 Eighth Ave., New York, N. Y.

30 MINUTES AFTER Eating-Drinking ALKALIZE

The fastest way to "alkalize" is to carry your alkalizer with you. That's what thousands do now that genuine Phillips' comes in tiny, peppermint flavored tablets — in a flat tin for pocket or purse. Then you are always ready.

Use it this way. Take 2 Phillips' tablets — equal in "alkalizing" effect to 2 teaspoonfuls of liquid Phillips' from the bottle. At once you feel "gas," nausea, "overcrowding" from hyper-acidity begin to ease. "Acid headaches," "acid breath," over-acid stomach are corrected at the source. This is the quick way to ease your own distress — avoid offense to others.

SEEN and HEARD around the NATIONAL CAPITAL

By Carter Field

FAMOUS WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENT

Washington.—Public utility executives would do well to consider what has happened, is happening, and probably will happen to the San Francisco bay ferries. It might induce them to exercise a little foresight instead of waiting for hindsight to prove they are right—assuming that they are. Because the trouble about waiting for that demonstration—still assuming they are right—is that they will be in the position of the motorist who insisted on exercising his rights under traffic regulations:

"He was right, dead right, as he drove along.
But he's just as dead as if he'd been wrong."

Out in San Francisco the ferries, naturally, suffered a huge loss of business when the new bridges were opened up. To recoup some, they obtained permission to reduce their rates. So they made the one-way rate for a car 30 cents instead of 50 cents, and the round trip 50 cents. Whereas the bridges charge 50 cents toll each way, except for a slight reduction for commuters.

As a result, the ferries are doing a land office business hauling automobiles, and the bridge revenues are not what they should be. So the six counties that guarantee the bridge, which means that they have to make up any deficit in paying operating charges and interest on the bonds, are alarmed.

They are appealing to the state railroad commission to reopen the case. What they want, of course, is to force the ferries to charge just as much as the bridges. Boiled down, if they get what they want the ferries might as well go out of business.

Just Imagine

Now let's go back a few years—in other words, use hindsight—and imagine a situation. Let's suppose that when the bridge was first proposed the ferry owners had reduced rates sharply, instead of first waiting in the vain hope that the bridges would never be built, and then seen the inevitable happen. Obviously, a ferry cannot compete with a bridge, once a bridge is built. If the bridge management is permitted, it can make any rates it pleases, drive the ferries out of business, and then raise its rates again. It costs the bridge management virtually nothing, save a little wear and tear on the paving, for traffic to pass over it. The main cost is interest on the investment, and that goes on, whether there is any traffic or not.

The case is strikingly similar to a government hydroelectric project. The project may be uneconomic, but once the dam is built and the power plant installed the current must be produced. The mere fact that it loses money, that it costs the taxpayers money, is beside the point. It is, not to make a pun, water over the dam. So the competing privately owned utilities lose money, the taxpayers lose money, and nobody gains, not even the consumer, because the utilities could, had they used foresight instead of hindsight, have supplied the consumer at just as low rates. As abundantly demonstrated by the San Francisco ferries.

If those ferries had reduced rates back before the bridges were authorized, it would have been necessary, in all computations as to whether construction of such bridges was economically sound, to figure tolls on the basis of ferry rates.

This sort of figuring was done, but it was done on the basis of a 50-cent ferry charge, hence a 50-cent toll on the bridge. On that basis calculations were made showing that the bridges would pay. Had those calculations been made on a 30-cent straight toll, 50-cent round trip, which the ferries are now charging, the bridges might never have been built.

No Hope of Speed

Crop control and wages and hours regulation legislation, to enact which congress was called in extra session, do not promise very rapid action. Very little doubt exists that both will be enacted, but every indication is also that congress will make haste slowly, and in rather exaggerated fashion.

The one contingency that might result in beating the wages and hours bill is that the American Federation of Labor and the Committee for Industrial Organization should both decide openly to knife it. Some think that the A. F. of L. could do it all alone, but no one here in touch with the situation doubts that both could do it.

Nor does any one doubt that they would kill it if they dared! Neither of the organizations likes it even a little bit. That resolution adopted by the A. F. of L. bristles with opposition to the original plan, and while it was disavowed by leaders in the discussion that the same objections lay against the present form, the opposition is there.

Why else, it might be asked, would an organization as politically minded as the A. F. of L. devote sufficient time to put through a resolution castigating something which had already been changed as a result of the pleading of its own president, William Green? Why not just discuss any objection which still remains?

The answer is simple. Those responsible for that resolution, in that curious form, were seeking to build up public opinion against the wages and hours bill, almost regardless of details. So they hit it hardest on what they considered its more vulnerable points, despite the fact that those points had been eliminated in the last session.

Wanted No Change

There is the possibility, of course, that there was a slightly different purpose—that the desire was really to prevent the bill's being changed again into something resembling its original and, to union labor, objectionable form.

As a matter of fact, the bitterest opponents of the bill, the folks who so effectually sidetracked it last session, holding it in the house rules committee after every one had assumed it would pass, are hoping to change the bill substantially. And some of the changes that these potent gentlemen want to make would again add some of the features that William Green managed to get stricken out.

As a matter of fact, the opposition of little southern sawmills and other small plants did not really reach the burning point last session until after Green's federation influence had accomplished these changes.

The effect of the so-called Green changes was to restrict the jurisdiction of the board, or whatever the governing body that enforces the wage and hour regulation may be called, to compelling the 40-hour maximum and the 40-cent an hour minimum. They would leave all disputes involving conditions better for labor than these particular limitations to be settled by collective bargaining.

Boost Income Tax

Income taxes on $5,000 to $50,000 stipends will be sharply boosted by congress in revising the tax law to get additional money the Treasury needs, unless there should be some totally unexpected upset. Levies on corporation net incomes will also be boosted. Corporations are now paying 15 per cent of their net incomes to the federal government, in addition to the undistributed earnings tax—which, of course, they do not pay if they distribute all their earnings to stockholders.

There will be a strong effort to lower exemptions and hike levies on incomes below $5,000, both of which are advocated, and have been for several years, by Senator Robert M. La Follette of Wisconsin. There is a possibility of boosting the tax on incomes below $5,000, but the chance of reducing the present exemptions is practically nil.

As a matter of fact, this is one of the few points on which La Follette and the New Deal differ. La Follette wants those with the smaller incomes to pay taxes for two reasons. He wants them to know about taxes, and he knows that to get as much money as he thinks the federal government should have it is necessary to go lower. It just so happens that no one has ever contradicted the statement made by Alfred M. Landon during the last campaign, that if the government took every dollar of every income in the country from $5,000 upwards it would pay only a fraction of what the government is now spending.

Very few people in the country believe this. It sounds too fantastic. But it happens to be true and La Follette, though never quoting it, knows it and acts on it.

Not on Program

Taxes were not included in the announced program for congress. But since the announcement of the program the budget figures have been worked out. It has developed that the deficit for this fiscal year will be much larger than was anticipated. It is now certain that the debt of the government, on which interest must be paid, will be increased this fiscal year by at least $750,000,000. This is much smaller than has been the case in the last five years, but there is no assurance at the moment that this is the final figure. The only sure thing is that it will not be less than that.

On top of this the Treasury knows now that a heavy shrinking of revenue will be revealed in the income tax returns of March 15, next, both on corporation and individuals. Corporation earnings will be smaller, it is forecast, than for 1936, due not so much to diminished business, for this is comparatively slight, as to increased costs—wage boosts, higher commodity costs, etc. And it is net earnings on which corporation income taxes are computed.

Individual incomes from dividends, as compared with the returns of last March, will be way down in consequence. But on top of this individual incomes will be down because there will be nothing like the profits resulting from security sales.

Lesson for November 14

THE CHRISTIAN MINISTER

LESSON TEXT—I Timothy 4:6-16; II Timothy 2:1-4.

GOLDEN TEXT—Neglect not the gift that is in thee.—I Timothy 4:14.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Two Brave Preachers.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Two Brave Preachers.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Why and How Ministers Are Trained.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Christian Minister in the Modern World.

"The Christian Minister"—there is no greater calling among men, but none is more often the target for misrepresentation and abuse by those outside, and all too often the victim of the carelessness, weakness, and sin of those within its own circle. On the other hand it has had, and continues to have to this day, within its ranks such a noble army of faithful and sacrificial men as would probably be impossible to duplicate in any other calling.

The study of today's lesson should arouse in the hearts of Christian people a high regard for the ministry as a calling, and a kindly purpose to aid their minister to live up to its glorious possibilities. Every true minister who studies it will find his spirit humbled before God in thanksgiving for the privilege of service, and in prayer that he may be forgiven for his failures and empowered for the work of the future.

The need for such a study is indicated in the verses just preceding our lesson, namely, I Timothy 4:1-5, where we read of the express warning of the Spirit of God that in the latter times there should be teaching and preaching which departed from the faith, substituting men's wisdom for God's Word. One who looks around him cannot but feel that we have fallen upon that evil day.

I. What to Preach (I Tim. 4:6-9).

The "good minister of Jesus Christ" preaches the words of God. To do this he must himself be "nourished" by them. Spare your preacher the necessity of running errands, serving on boards and committees, and encourage him to study his Bible.

Preacher, are you studying God's Book, learning and teaching "good doctrine"? If so you will have no interest in or time for "profane and old wives fables."

II. How to Preach (I Tim. 4:10-12).

1. Sacrificially (v. 10). The man who regards the ministry as a nice, easy, respectable occupation is not in the same calling as was the apostle Paul. In fact, there is nothing to indicate that he is in the Christian ministry at all, for in that calling there is labor and suffering of reproach. This is not something to be borne in a spirit of resigned submission. The minister knows and "trusts in the living God," and gladly bears every responsibility with which God may entrust him.

2. Authoritatively (v. 11). The minister of Christ speaks for God. In doing so he teaches with assurance and is to "command" men in the Lord's name. All too often the servants of the Lord feel and act like "grasshoppers" (see Numbers 13:33), and everybody else regards them as feeble and impotent, when they should be "strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus" (II Tim. 2:1).

3. Actively (v. 12). Whether young or old, the minister is to be an example, a pattern in his active daily life. Note how discriminating is the scripture. He is to be a pattern for others in speech, manner of living, in love, in spirit, in faith, and in purity of life.

III. Who Is to Preach (I Tim. 4:13-16).

1. The man who is divinely called (v. 14). God called Timothy; men recognized that call and ordained him to give his life to the exercise of his God-presented gift. This is the right order for our day.

2. The man who is properly prepared (vv. 13, 15-16). The ministry calls for the best preparation that a man can possibly obtain. He must know how to read God's Word, both publicly and privately. He is to be skilled in exhortation, and in teaching Christian doctrine.

In conclusion, let us consider the portion from II Timothy 2 which properly presents the work of the minister as that of a soldier at war against the world, the flesh, and the devil. He must be prepared to bear hardness, and he must not yield to the temptation to get into "sidelines," no matter how dignified and profitable they may be. His sole business is to serve and to please God.

What Education Means

The real object of education is to give children resources that will endure as long as life endures; habits that time will ameliorate, not destroy; occupation that will render sickness tolerable, solitude pleasant, age venerable, life more dignified and useful, and death less terrible.—Sydney Smith.

A Happy Man

Happy the man who sees a God employed in all the good and ill that checker life.—Gowper.

Fashion's Triple-Threat

HERE'S something new in the way of triple-threats, Milady: This trio of smart contestants in the thrilling game of Sew-Your-Own! With all three in your wardrobe you'll know stadium style, classroom coquetry, and sorority chic. Best of all, you won't spend a king's ransom nor a "long stretch" in their making, thanks to the economy and simplicity of these modern Sew-Your-Owns!

Sorority Chic.

Sorority chic begins and ends in the boudoirs on the third floor. This highly tasteful smock (above left) is a sorority requirement of the first order. You may choose either the short length to work in or the long length to be lazy in. Use percale, gingham or silk print.

Classroom Coquetry.

What if your knowledge of bugs or battles, or what have you, is limited? You can count on a certain coquettish smile and a certain smooth-lined frock (above center) to take you through any inquisition. Try your version in dull crepe or sheer wool.

Stadium Style.

Big moments come fast and furious when you're rooting for dear old Alma Mater, but you have to look the part to be one with that glamour and fun. Sew-Your-Own suggests its newest spectator dress just for this purpose—that you may look the part, feel the part and be on the winning side, no matter when or where the competition takes place.

The Patterns.

Pattern 1997 is designed in sizes 14 to 20; 32 to 44 bust. Size 16 requires 3⅝ yards of 35-inch material. In full length 3½ yards (short sleeves).

Pattern 1353 is designed in sizes 36 to 52. Size 38 requires 4⅜ yards of 39-inch material.

Pattern 1357 is designed for sizes 12 to 20 (30 to 40 bust). Size 14 requires 2½ yards of 54-inch material.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., Room 1020, 211 W. Wacker Dr., Chicago, Ill. Price of patterns, 15 cents (in coins) each.

New Pattern Book.

Send 15 cents for the Barbara Bell Fall and Winter Pattern Book. Make yourself attractive, practical and becoming clothes, selecting designs from Barbara Bell well-planned, easy-to-make patterns.

JOYS and GLOOMS

MANY people can safely drink coffee. But many others—and all children—should never drink it. If you suspect that the caffein in coffee disagrees with you ... try Postum's 30-day test. Buy some Postum and drink it instead of coffee for a full month.

If ... after 30 days ... you do not feel better, return the Postum container top with your name and address to General Foods, Battle Creek, Mich., and we will refund purchase price, plus postage! (If you live in Canada, address General Foods, Ltd., Cobourg, Ont.)

Postum contains no caffein. It is simply whole wheat and bran, roasted and slightly sweetened. It comes in two forms ... Postum Cereal, the kind you boil or percolate ... and Instant Postum, made instantly in the cup. Economical, easy to make, delicious, hot or iced. You may miss coffee at first, but you'll soon love Postum's own rich flavor. A product of General Foods. (This offer expires July 1, 1938.)

Alabama Power Pays Large Tax Sum Into State Educational Trust Fund

Swelling the special educational trust fund of Alabama by $349,-110.98 was the check delivered today by Lamar Aldridge, treasurer of the Alabama Power Company, in payment of the hydro-electric kilowatt hour tax. The entire amount of this check will be devoted to educational purposes. Of Alabama's 67 counties, 39 will receive over $5,000 each for high schools and elementary schools.

The payment today is only part of the Alabama Power Company's taxes for 1937. Its total taxes for 1937 are estimated at over $2,750,000 by Thomas W. Martin, president, who commenting on the company's tax bill, said:

"There is a vast difference between the millions of dollars in taxes we will pay this year and the few thousands—$55,615.64 to be exact—paid by the Tennessee Valley Authority, whose untaxed physical property in Alabama cost as much or more than ours. Should the TVA be successful in its apparent effort to destroy the power companies, the millions in taxes now paid by Alabama Power Company must be made up from some other source. Not only the state, but counties, municipalities and the United States government are beneficiaries of taxes paid by the company.

"In addition to the loss of the taxes now collected from Alabama Power Company, the state, and some counties and municipalities, will suffer a loss in tax collections because thousands of acres of rich agricultural lands and other properties are being acquired by TVA; most of it will be flooded; all of it will be removed from the tax rolls. Already several counties in North Alabama are feeling the tax pinch of the TVA where real estate assessments have been 'hiked' to offset the loss in the amount of taxable property; because TVA is a governmental agency and its properties are non-taxable. Thus, as its area of activities enlarges and it takes over more and more privately owned property, the remaining tax payers in other parts of the state will be burdened with additional taxes to make up the difference.

"In addition to tax losses there is an estimated loss to the general economy of the state of 12½ million dollars in farm income because of the flooding by TVA of some of the richest agricultural lands in Alabama.

"When all of this is considered, perhaps the people of our state will feel they are paying an extraordinarily high price for a slight, subsidized saving in retail electric rates."

—The Eufaula Tribune

RIGHT with Alabama is the progress made by Education during the past twenty-five years. "Readin', writin' and 'rithmetic" were taught in many sections of Alabama in poorly furnished one-room schools to which pupils often trudged for many weary miles. Fortunate were the few who, on the completion of the grammar grades, could afford to go on through high school. Privileged was the mere handful who enjoyed the opportunity of a college education.

In 1904-05 for instance, there were in Alabama only 15 public high schools with an enrollment of 2,600 pupils. Today there are 323 senior high schools and 70 junior high schools with an enrollment of over 160,000. Many of the one-teacher grammar schools have been replaced with modern consolidated schools, offering an enriched program of study.

At the University of Alabama, the 1904-05 enrollment records show about 400 students. Alabama Polytechnic Institute had only 450. Today the enrollment at the University of Alabama is around 5,000; at Alabama Polytechnic Institute, about 2,500. Enrollment at Birmingham-Southern, Howard and Spring Hill Colleges—and other schools in the state—show proportionate increases.

Administration of the schools and supervision of instruction has kept pace with the increase in enrollment, and in this respect our state ranks high. Educational opportunities in the poorer counties of Alabama are more nearly equal to those in the richer ones than in some of the wealthier states.

Credit for Alabama's great advance in educational facilities and methods during recent years belongs largely to her many able educators, their associates, and Parent-Teacher Associations.

No state can have a more valuable asset than an educated citizenry. List high, therefore, among the RIGHT things we have in Alabama, the progress being made in Alabama to attain this end.

Home Heating Hints

By John Barclay
Heating Expert

IMPROPER adjustment of the turn (or smoke pipe) damper in your furnace results in "chimney" loss of heat. Leave this damper closed as nearly as possible without retarding free burning of fuel or causing gas to escape into the basement.

Once you have found the ideal adjustment for it, be sure you leave it in that position throughout the heating season. Do not attempt to use it from day to day to regulate your fire. It was never meant for that purpose. The only time you need move the Turn Damper is at the start of the very cold season and again at the start of the very mild season. These two times are necessary to meet the extreme changes in outdoor temperature.

Use only the Ashpit Damper and Check Damper for regulating the fire daily—to speed up or slow down the rate at which you want the fire to burn. Rely wholly on these two dampers, and you'll get the proper fire regulation. I repeat—do not change the position of the Turn Damper inside the smoke pipe. Otherwise you'll waste a lot of very valuable fuel and heat.

Beware Coughs from common colds That Hang On

No matter how many medicines you have tried for your cough, chest cold, or bronchial irritation, you can get relief now with Creomulsion. Serious trouble may be brewing and you cannot afford to take a chance with any remedy less potent than Creomulsion, which goes right to the seat of the trouble and aids nature to soothe and heal the inflamed mucous membranes and to loosen and expel the germ-laden phlegm.

Even if other remedies have failed, don't be discouraged, try Creomulsion. Your druggist is authorized to refund your money if you are not thoroughly satisfied with the benefits obtained from the very first bottle. Creomulsion is one word—not two, and it has no hyphen in it. Ask for it plainly, see that the name on the bottle is Creomulsion, and you'll get the genuine product and the relief you want. (Adv.)

How CARDUI Helps Women

Cardui is a purely vegetable medicine, found by many women to ease functional pains of menstruation. It also helps to strengthen women, who have been weakened by poor nourishment, by increasing their appetite and improving their digestion. Many have reported lasting benefit from the wholesome nutritional assistance obtained by taking Cardui. If you have never taken Cardui, get a bottle of Cardui at the nearest drug store, read the directions and try it.

TAMMANY HALL ROUTED

La Guardia and Dewey Winners in New York . . . Detroit Rejects Candidates Backed by the C.I.O.

Edward W. Pickard SUMMARIZES THE WORLD'S WEEK

© Western Newspaper Union.

La Guardia's Victory

TAMMANY HALL went down to inglorious defeat in the New York municipal election. Its mayoralty candidate, Jeremiah T. Mahoney, who was supported also by Jim Farley and Senator Wagner, was thoroughly whipped by Fiorello H. La Guardia, candidate of the fusionists, the Republicans and the young American Labor party. LaGuardia, the first "reform" mayor ever re-elected in New York, piled up a majority of 454,425.

T. E. Dewey

The Republicans hailed the result as a great victory for their party, and it was. But it also put the Labor party in the position of holding the balance of power in future elections in the metropolis.

Second in interest only to the mayoralty vote was the fact that Thomas E. Dewey, the young man who smashed organized crime and the rackets in New York, was elected district attorney, defeating Harold W. Hastings, the Tammany nominee. Dewey, who is only thirty-five years old, promises reform in the methods of the office, and his record gives assurance these will be carried out.

The Republicans regained control of the New York state assembly and of many upstate cities.

C.I.O. Loses in Detroit

THE first important venture of the C. I. O. in politics turned out disastrously for the Lewis organization. Patrick H. O'Brien, its mayoralty candidate, declared on the stump that "labor must seize the reins of government in Detroit and every other American city." Whereupon the Detroit electors arose in their wrath and swept O'Brien and the C. I. O. out of the picture. Richard W. Reading, conservative candidate backed by the A. F. of L., won the office by a majority of 106,907 votes.

In addition, all the five C. I. O. backed candidates for the common council were decisively whipped.

In New Jersey Senator A. Harry Moore, Democrat, was elected governor over Lester H. Clee, Republican, but only by virtue of a big majority in Hudson county. Moore has held the office twice before. It was the first time in the state's history that a governor has won a third term. The state constitution prohibits a consecutive re-election but Moore was elected in 1925 and again in 1931, each time for a three-year term.

James M. Curley, who has been three times mayor of Boston and once governor of Massachusetts, tried again for the mayoralty, but was defeated by Maurice J. Tobin, like Curley a Democrat.

Philadelphia went Democratic, as did Pittsburgh, which re-elected Mayor Cornelius Scully.

Borah Talks Plainly

WHILE Republican national committeemen were gathering in Chicago for an important meeting, Senator Borah of Idaho jumped into print with a vigorous denunciation of the plan, favored by Hoover and Chairman Hamilton, to hold a midterm Republican convention next spring, for the formulation of party policies.

Senator Borah

"We have heard a great deal about usurpation and dictatorship in recent years," said Borah. "There could be no greater exhibition of usurpation or dictatorship in politics than for a few accredited men undertaking to fix the principles and policies for 17 million voters without ever having consulted the voters or received their indorsement in any way.

"The Republican party is in its present plight largely because leaders of the party too long neglected to take counsel of the voters. Leaders acted upon the theory that the voters would be led or cudgeled along the road pointed out by the leaders."

Brussels Conference

FORMAL opening of the far east peace conference in Brussels brought out speeches by the chief delegates of America, Britain, France, Italy and Russia. Davis for the United States denounced resort to armed force as a means of settling international disputes, and urged Japan and China to seek a settlement of their conflict "by peaceful processes."

He continued: "We believe that co-operation between Japan and China is essential to the best interests of those two countries and to peace throughout the world. We believe that such co-operation must be developed by friendship, fair play, and reciprocal confidence. If Japan and China are to co-operate it must be as friends and not as enemies. The problems underlying Chinese-Japanese relations must be solved on a basis that is fair to each and acceptable to both."

Eden for England and Delbos for France seconded these sentiments. The Italian representatives made it clear Italy would not stand for any coercive measures against Japan.

China was represented by Dr. Wellington Koo who said: "We desire peace, but we know that we cannot obtain it in the presence of Japanese aggression. So long as aggression persists we are determined to continue our resistance. It is not peace at any price that will render justice to China or to the credit of civilization."

A committee was named to send an appeal to Japan to open peace negotiations with China, and Germany was asked to reconsider her refusal to take part in the conference.

Labor Hits Duke's Tour

RESOLUTIONS denouncing the American tour of the duke and duchess of Windsor as a "slumming trip professing to study labor" were adopted by the Baltimore Federation of Labor, and approved by President Green of the A. F. of L. They attacked Charles Bedeaux, the duke's friend, as sponsor of the "stretch-out system."

Duchess of Windsor

Officials of the Committee for Industrial Organization, while refusing to be quoted, said the attitude of their organization on the Bedeaux system was "well known."

Official and social Washington, which had been in doubt as to what to do about the distinguished visitors, was relieved when Sir Ronald Lindsay, British ambassador, announced he would give a state dinner for the royal couple, as he termed them, the day after their arrival. Immediately thereafter it was made known that President Roosevelt would entertain the duke and duchess at luncheon in the White House.

The duke's talk on arrival was to be broadcast over all major networks, but the British Broadcasting company announced it would not pick up Windsor's remarks for rebroadcasting in England.

Bedeaux said the duke while in the United States would observe these sixteen heavy industries:

Heavy machinery, light machinery, heavy chemical work, oil refining, textiles, tobacco, steel, rubber, either coal or metallic ore mining, automobile manufacturing, prepared foods, meat packing, logging, timber sorting plus lumber milling, pulp and paper production and vegetable and fruit packing.

Almost Recognition

GREAT BRITAIN decided to let Franco, Spanish insurgent chief, send consuls to England, and to send official agents to the part of Spain he controls. This, it was said in official circles, did not imply recognition of Franco, but British Laborites thought it did, and consequently assailed the government. Anyhow, it was apparent Britain believed Franco was right when he said in Burgos "the war is won."

Wallace Plan Attacked

SECRETARY WALLACE'S "ever normal granary" plan is "politically inexpedient, economically unsound, and fundamentally unworkable," according to the Cash Grain association of Chicago which submitted a brief to a senate subcommittee at a hearing in Springfield, Ill.

"LITTLE FLOWER" WINS

Fiorello La Guardia, who licked Tammany and was re-elected mayor of New York in a striking pose as he addressed voters.

British Are Enraged

JAPAN and Italy have been vigorously twisting the tail of the British lion, and if they keep it up, that mighty beast may be stirred to action. Within a few days five British soldiers were killed and a number wounded by Japanese shells in the fighting at Shanghai. The English there charged the killings were deliberate, in retaliation for the aid the British gave a "suicide battalion" of Chinese in escaping from a warehouse in Chapei, the native quarter, to the international settlement. The British and Japanese admirals had a hot dispute over the right of the former to prevent the passage of Japanese launches up Soochow creek.

Soon after the Japanese began shelling the residential area of the settlement and an outpost where English soldiers were quartered was destroyed. Continuous shelling of Shanghai by the invaders endangered the British and American lines on the border of the international settlement and shells fell close to the American warship Augusta, Admiral Yarnell's flagship.

Japan is angry over the alleged help Britain is giving China in the warfare and there is a movement in Tokio to break diplomatic relations with London. This is urged by the "council on the current situation," an unofficial body composed of high army officers, political leaders and other influential persons. The council adopted a resolution warning that unless Britain "reconsiders its improper attitude" Japan may be forced to take certain steps of "grave determination" against Britain, despite the "deep friendship existing between the two countries for the last sixty years.

Japanese troops invaded a part of the international settlement guarded by American marines and seized a Chinese junk loaded with rice. General Beaumont, commandant of marines, immediately entered a protest and the Japanese apologized but the marines did not consider the incident closed because the Japs didn't return the junk.

The British government was not expected to take any action that would further anger Japan lest it should endanger the success of the parley in Brussels. But wise observers do not believe the nine-power treaty conference will have any definite results.

More "Piracy"

ITALY'S latest twist of the lion's tail came in the form of the bombing and sinking of the British steamer Jean Weems in the Mediterranean by a "pirate" airplane.

The London Daily Herald's Barcelona correspondent reported that the Spanish loyalist government asserted that the plane bore markings showing that it was piloted by Bruno Mussolini, son of the Italian premier. The pilot gave the freighter's crew only five minutes to take to lifeboats and then sank the Weems with bombs.

The British battle cruiser Hood was sent at full speed from Palma, Majorca, to Barcelona to investigate the attack.

In parliament the critics of the government, led by David Lloyd George, demanded a stronger British Mediterranean policy. Lloyd George flayed the government for bolstering up the international committee on nonintervention in Spain, whose history after 14 months he denounced as "discreditable and dishonorable."

Morocco Uprisings

NATIONALIST uprisings in French Morocco, which have been giving the French government a lot of trouble, are blamed on agents of "a foreign totalitarian power," meaning Italy. The disorders, mainly in Casablanca, Fez and Medina, were quelled by troops, mostly Senegalese legionnaires, and hundreds of arrests were made.

The nationalists plotted to set up an independent Arab state with Moulay Allal El Fassi as king.

Budget Conference

WHILE members of congress were beginning to move toward Washington for the extraordinary session, President Roosevelt in his Hyde Park home was busy planning means of carrying on the government program. Especially was he interested in the budget, and related financial matters, and to advise on this he called in Marriner S. Eccles, head of the federal reserve system. Treasury Secretary Morgenthau and Budget Director Bell already were there, and all listened closely to Mr. Eccles' talk concerning current business conditions and the stock market situation.

M. S. Eccles

It was decided by the President that the Commodity Credit corporation should provide $85,000,000 for the corn loans, obtaining the money from the RFC and repaying the latter agency when congress makes the necessary appropriations.

Officials of the Agriculture department gave corn growers assurance that the government will loan 50 cents a bushel on the large 1937 crop. The loans will be made, according to current plans, on field corn testing 14.5 per cent moisture content or less. The 50 cent rate will be reduced on corn containing more moisture.

Species of Candidates.

SANTA MONICA, CALIF.—It takes all kinds of candidates to make up this world. Maybe that's why the world seems so overcrowded.

There's the candidate who belongs to all the secret orders; if he left off his emblems, he'd catch cold; knows every grand hailing sign there is; hasn't missed a lodge brother's funeral in years; can hardly wait for the next one to die. No campaign complete without him.

Irvin S. Cobb

Candidate specializing in the hearty handshake, the neck-embrace, the shoulder-slap, the bear-hug, the gift of remembering every voter by his first name, and the affectionate inquiry regarding the wife and kiddies. When he kisses a baby, it sounds like somebody taking off a pair of wet overshoes. Usually has a weather-beaten wife needing a new hat.

Strutty candidate who's constantly leading an imaginary parade of 50,000 faithful followers. Loves to poke his chest away out and then follows it majestically down the street. A common or standardized species.

Biblical Wisdom.

IN THE Book of Nahum, Chapter II, I came upon this verse:

"The chariots shall rage in the streets, they shall jostle one against another in the broad ways; they shall seem like torches, they shall run like the lightnings."

Those Old Testament prophets certainly peered a long way into the future. Because I traveled by night through a main thoroughfare leading from Los Angeles to the sea and vice versa, and I knew what Nahum was describing.

But not even an inspired seer of the Bible could imagine a record of traffic mortality so ghastly as the one we've already compiled in this year of grace 1937 A. D. (automobile destruction)—or a people so speed-mad.

How to Fight Japs.

WHENEVER we have a Japanese war scare, I think of Uncle Lum Whittemore, back in west Kentucky, who loved to dispense wisdom as he hitched one practiced instep on a brass rail and with his free hand fought the resident flies for the tidbit of free lunch which he held in his grip.

One day a fellow asked Uncle Lum, who had served gallantly in the Southern Confederacy until a very hard rainstorm came up, what he'd do if the yellow peril boys invaded America.

"I'd hunt me a hollow tree in the deep woods," he said. "Yes, son, the owls would have to fetch me my mail. I been readin' up on them Japs. They're fatalists."

"What's a fatalist?" demanded someone.

"Near ez I kin make out," stated the veteran, "a fatalist is a party that thinks you're doin' him a deep pussonal favor when you kill him."

Hollywood Fashions.

SOME envious style expert says Hollywood fashions are too garish. If he's talking about Hollywood males, I say they're just garish enough. If they were any more garish than they are, visitors would have to wear blinders, and if they were any less garish, Italian sunsets would stand a chance in the competition. And I want the championship to stay in America.

Billy Gaxton picks out something suitable for a vest to be worn to a fancy dress party and then has a whole suit made out of it. Bob Montgomery's ties are the kind that I buy in moments of weakness and then keep in a bureau drawer because I'm not so brave as Bob is; and also I keep the drawer closed because I can't stand those sudden dazzling glares. And Bing Crosby is either color-blind or thinks everybody else is. But his crooning is mighty soothing. And so it goes—red, pink, green, purple, orange, sky-blue and here and there a dash of lavender.

Our local boys gladden the landscape with the sort of clothes I'd wear, too—only my wife won't let me. Stop, look, listen! That's our sartorial motto, and these jealous designers back east can kindly go jump in a dye-pot.

Sand for Litters

Sand is one of the most satisfactory litters for turkeys that growers use, according to a poultryman. If covered with burlap or papers for the first few days until the turkeys are well started on feed, there is very little danger that the turkeys will develop the habit of eating the sand. Sand is safe to use in brooding turkeys because there is very little danger of the birds becoming crop bound or it clogging the intestines.

Ducky

A certain rather exclusive club had replaced its familiar black-coated staff with young and, in some cases, pretty waitresses.

One day a member who had been strongly opposed to the change arrived at the club for lunch.

"How's the chicken?" he asked an attractive waitress rather gruffly.

"Oh, I'm fine," she replied perkily. "And how's the old pelican himself feeling?"

YEAH!

Ogdon—Culbert says there's an awful lot of girls stuck on him.

Harefoot—They must be an awful lot.

Magistrate (to talkative prisoner)—Will you stop talking and allow me to get in a short sentence?

Improving the Time

Plumber—Well, here I am at last. Sorry I've been so long.

Householder (three feet deep in water)—Oh, that's all right. While we've been waiting for you I've taught my wife to swim.

Modern Miss

"Well, Mary," said the mistress to her new maid, "I hope that you will prove to be an efficient servant."

"If you please, madam," came the reply, "I should prefer to be called a paid guest."

Mike—Oh, that's the number of the car that knocked him down.

Yes, Constipation Is Serious But It Can't Poison You!

Say Doctors

Modern doctors now say that the old idea of poisons getting into your blood from constipation is BUNK. They claim that constipation swells up the bowels causing pressure on nerves in the digestive tract. This nerve pressure is what causes frequent bilious spells, dizziness, headaches, upset stomach, dull, tired-out feeling, sleepless nights, coated tongue, bad taste and loss of appetite.

Don't suffer hours or even days longer than necessary. You must GET THAT PRESSURE OFF THE NERVES TO GET RELIEF. Flush the intestinal system. When offending wastes are gone the bowels return to normal size and nerve pressure STOPS. Almost at once you feel marvelously refreshed, blues vanish, and life looks bright again.

That is why so many doctors are now insisting on gentle but QUICK ACTION. That is why YOU should insist on Adlerika. This efficient intestinal evacuant contains SEVEN carminative and cathartic ingredients. Adlerika acts on the stomach as well as the entire intestinal tract. Adlerika relieves stomach GAS at once and often removes bowel congestion in half an hour. No violent action, no after effects, just QUICK results. Recommended by many doctors and druggists for 35 years.

Your kidneys are constantly filtering waste matter from the blood stream. But kidneys sometimes lag in their work—do not act as Nature intended—fail to remove impurities that, if retained, may poison the system and upset the whole body machinery.

Symptoms may be nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—a feeling of nervous anxiety and loss of pep and strength. Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder may be burning, scanty or too frequent urination.

—24—

"I'm—I'm modeling—for the last time."

"Can't you get out of it?"

"No."

"That's decisive. I have a present for you, but this doesn't seem to be just the moment to produce it. You seem to dislike me more than ever. I thought we might play round together. If you can't, or won't, I'll join a bunch of friends who wanted to date me up for some sort of fete this afternoon. They were all excited about a plan to surprise somebody about something. I didn't listen; I was anxious to locate you. I'll see you tonight before I leave, Brooke."

The sky was like a huge sapphire; the sunshine was rose-tinted; the ocean a tumbling mass of emeralds. A fragrant breeze, a mere suggestion of a breeze, ruffled the bright orange flame-vine on top of the high Spanish wall which enclosed three sides of a garden open to the sea, a garden filled with tables set in gay borders which were filmy frocks; there were faces above the tables, faces under large hats and men's faces with no hats at all.

From a Moorish gallery drifted male voices singing to the accompaniment of guitars as Brooke stepped from the automobile which had brought her to the charity fete. Carstons Inc. had staged the wedding party of the style show with meticulous attention to detail, even to sleek shining cars to bring the bride and bridesmaids to the ornate grilles which were the garden gates. Reporters were there and camera men, hordes of them, all the frills and appurtenances of a wedding except groom and ushers.

Madame Celeste, chic in black and pearls, was flushed with excitement under her make-up; her French accent was noticeable for its absence as she whispered last instructions:

"Wait until the singers stop, girls. The moment the orchestra strikes the first note of the wedding march, start. Don't get flustered. Don't get out of step. You're all lovely."

A violin sighed a soft note. Others joined until strings and harps and woodwinds swelled into the wedding march from Lohengrin.

Bridesmaids, their lips scarlet, their eyes shining between dark mascaraed lashes, passed between the iron grilles and moved slowly up the ribbon-outlined aisle, dragging their gold slippers a little in time to the rhythm of the music, and the swish of their taffeta slips. The first two were dressed in billowy rose-orange net; behind them at a short distance came two more in a lighter tint, then two in soft yellow, then a fourth pair in ivory, and then the bride in snowy satin so soft in texture that it trailed in ravishing folds. Slowly she came with head slightly bent, eyes presumably on the mass of white Transvaal daisies and stevia she carried.

Brooke felt the surge of motion as everyone stood up—a tribute to Madame Celeste's stagecraft—the wedding procession was so perfect that habit had brought the audience to its feet. She must keep her attention on the girls in front—why had Mark Trent come to Palm Beach—this heavenly music made one all trembly inside—would she never reach the spot where she was to turn—three stairs to mount before she reached it.

Something pulled at her eyes like a magnet. She looked up. A group of men was standing near the steps. All wore white suits with blue shirts and identical ties of Java print; each one had a boutonniere of deep blue bachelor buttons in the lapel of his coat; all were smiling broadly, she could feel their repressed excitement. Mark Trent was with them. His face went colorless with surprise as his eyes met hers in the instant before she bent her head again. Why was he here? Was this the fete a bunch of friends had urged him to attend?

The stairs. One! Two! Three! She was up. The bridesmaids had deployed to face the audience—she had almost thought "congregation"—the orange-color frocks were at the ends of the semi-circle, the tints paled till they came to the snow-white bride. Her veil had been thrown back. Time for her to turn. The music swelled into a paean of triumph. It looked miles to the iron grilles beyond which stood Madame Celeste. She was safely down the steps! She must smile.

"Ready!"

She heard the whispered word, saw the men in white who had been standing beside the stairs hurdle the guarding ribbon. One offered his arm to her. Urged huskily:

"Quick! Let's put it through."

She looked up. Mark Trent! All the bitterness and pain went out of her heart. It was as if a great wall she had built between them had crumbled to a heap which she could cross. In a flare of gorgeous happiness she slipped her hand under his arm.

"It would be you," she said, and smiled in the second before they were in step with the music. Behind her she heard peals of laughter, girls' voices, men's voices. Then applause. A woman called:

"How priceless! The men are coming out with the bridesmaids!"

Brooke stopped at the intricate iron grille. She withdrew her hand from Trent's arm, walked back a step or two, tossed her bouquet among the bridesmaids, waited to see it scatter in four parts, turned, and ran out through the gateway to the limousine.

Reporters and camera men flocked after her. Machines clicked. Mark Trent fairly lifted her into the car. He blocked the door from curious eyes as he bent forward and kissed her on the lips. It was a tender kiss. There was reverence in it, there was a promise in his eyes, but laughter in his voice.

"That's an important part of the ceremony, isn't it? Hold out your left hand, Brooke." He pressed a ring on her finger. "This is what I had for you."

He turned away as Madame Celeste hurried up.

"Back to the salon!" She gave the order to the chauffeur with the air of a queen on location. She pushed aside billows of tulle, and sank into the seat beside Brooke who hid her left hand in the satin folds.

As she drove home from Carston's Inc. dressed in the tweeds in which she was to travel, Brooke kept looking at the ring on the third finger of her left hand.

"It Would Be You," She Said.

The soft flush of a tropical evening was stealing forward when she entered the patio, the glamour of night was settling over the dark mystery of the sea. The afterglow turned the masts of the distant yacht to red gold. Birds twittered sleepily. The fronds of the royal palm stirred gently. A man who was pacing back and forth came toward her quickly. Brooke's pulses which had been none too steady broke into a quickstep.

"I thought you would be flying through the air by this time, Mark," she tried to say indifferently.

"Did you think I would leave my bride?"

She avoided his disturbing eyes.

"Bride! The wedding party turned into a riot, didn't it? It was fun. Great theater."

"Just a minute, dearest. Stop and get your breath while I explain my part of it. I told you that I met some men I knew this morning. They were all excited over a plan to surprise a wedding party at a fashion show with groom and ushers; they were a lot of boys all set for a lark; made me feel young just to listen to their fooling. When I found you wouldn't play round with me I joined them. I didn't know till the last minute that they'd picked me for the groom—not a tactful selection, and I refused the honor. But when I saw you coming up that aisle—well, they would have had to battle over my dead body to take my place. Forgive me, will you?" His caressing voice sent a ripple along Brooke's veins.

"There's nothing to forgive. I thought it was fun."

"Then we'll let that ride for the present. We've got to hustle. I have a message for you from your mother."

"From Mother! Where did you get it? How?"

"You dear! I phoned her ten days ago."

"Phoned! Not to England."

"To England. It's being done some, you know."

"Of course I know. Don't, don't be so wooden."

"Wooden!" His laugh sent Brooke's hands behind her to clasp each other. "First I was a silent policeman, now I'm wooden. That also we will take up later. I didn't know what you had written your mother about the new will. I thought she should understand that your income was the same as when she left; otherwise she might not dare spend money to rush home for the premiere of Sam's play this week."

"It is not the same as when she went away."

"Your mistake. It is. She arrives in New York tomorrow."

"Tomorrow! I don't care what it costs. I'll fly."

"I thought you'd feel that way. I have reservations for us for the night plane." He glanced at his watch. "Throw some things into a suitcase, air-weight, remember. I have a car outside. We have just time to make the flying field."

Was she real, was anything real, Brooke asked herself, as the automobile burned up miles and the broad road flowed away from it. It was alive enough now; the Palm Beach world was hastening to eat, drink, and be merry. Above, through the warm black velvet dome, dripped a million or two stars. A magic night. Shining automobiles, gracefully long and low; others, silent, powerful, fast, provided glimpses of gay wraps, films of chiffon, glints of lame, smooth heads, waved coiffures, sparkling jewels, the sombre black of evening clothes. Chairs propelled by boys with faces dark as chunks of obsidian held gayly appareled occupants. She glanced at Mark Trent beside her. Was he real? As if he had divined her question, he touched the ring on her left hand.

"Like it? Is it big enough, gorgeous enough?"

"It's perfect."

"Then you'll wear it always, won't you? You know that I love you, have loved you from the moment I caught you up from in front of that roadster, that I want you to marry me, don't you? You didn't think for a minute that I would leave you behind here, did you?" His hand tightened on hers.

He caught her close. His eager, ardent lips on hers stopped her unsteady voice.

The car drew up with a jerk. The driver pulled open the door.

"We made it, boss—" He stopped. Put his full-moon face into reverse. Reminded over his shoulder:

"You've got three minutes. Boy waiting for your bags. If you've decided not to go—"

Mark Trent jumped out. Turned to Brooke.

"Coming?"

She put her hand in his.

Christmas Bride

GRACE LIVINGSTON HILL'S NEW STORY OF ROMANCE AT THE YULETIDE!

At 27 Gregory Sterling was a self-made millionaire, his hands idle. But Margaret McLaren, impoverished Vermont girl, stalked the city streets seeking work that would give her food. A strange adventure befell these two people from opposite ends of the earth . . . it shattered precedent . . . it brought a new and better life to each.

"CHRISTMAS BRIDE" is an intensely human serial story. It recounts the transformation of a man's heart and soul . . . shows him abandoning the fruitless pursuits of an idle life, adopting in its stead a purposeful attitude.

You'll enjoy every installment of this great serial, from the light-hearted opening chapter to the gala Yuletide climax. You'll laugh, cry and sigh as the crafty novelist shifts her characters in an ever-changing, ever-intriguing pattern of events.

THE AUTHOR

Grace Livingston Hill is one of America's most prolific writers, having produced more than 50 novels and serial stories in addition to numerous short stories. Her first attempt was a child's book written at the age of 10. Widow since 1897, she supported her two children with the income from her literary work. Numberless testimonials from people in every walk of life testify to the unique value of her writing . . . inspirational, yet practical to the extreme.

POSTPONED

Their boat was drifting idly on the calm waters, the sun shone overhead, it was a perfect day.

After a great deal of silent thought, he proposed.

From the opposite end of the boat she looked at him calmly.

"As a matter of common sense," she said calmly, "realizing that we are in this boat in the middle of the ocean, on water more than fifty feet deep, and knowing that if you acted as you will act if I accept you we should be capsized, and remembering that neither of us can swim, I must decline your proposal.

"But, George," she added urgently, "row as fast as you can to the shore and ask me again."—London Answers Magazine.

HE KNOWS

Pat (watching the golfers)—Oi don't see any difference bechune that an' wor-rk.

Casey—Yez don't, eh! Well, yez would whin pay-day kem around.

Golfers, Attention!

"What's the difference between a professional golfer and an amateur one?"

"Well, a professional can control his chin both during the game and afterward."

Nonintervention

Into the court they marched the man. The magistrate looked down at the surly prisoner.

"Well," he asked, "guilty or not guilty?"

The prisoner scowled.

Very Queer

During a natural history lesson the teacher asked the class to name an animal peculiar to the United States.

"The camel," said Henry.

"That's not a native of this country," said the teacher.

"I know it isn't," replied Henry. "That's why it would be peculiar."

How About Water Cress

"Don't ever go in swimming after a big dinner," cautioned Stew Pidd, the office cut-up.

"Why not?" somebody wanted to know.

"Accounta you won't find it there," cackled Stew. — Hartford Courant.

Professionally Speaking

"Do you think it pays to go through college?"

"Shouldn't be surprised," replied Bill the Burg. "Some colleges have a lot of money these days."

AN EXCHANGE

"What's become of the sick beggar who used to stand here?"

"He's on strike and I've took over his corner. Thanks, lady."

Good Advice

Sally—How did you lose your job with the Swank Dress Shoppe?

Ann—Just for something I said. After I tried 30 dresses on this woman, she said, "I think I'd look nicer in something flowing!" I asked her why she didn't go jump in the river.

And Get Into Them

Father—Isn't it wonderful how little chicks get out of their shells?

Son—What puzzles me is how they get in.

Should Have Kept Quiet

Charles—I had a very funny dream last night. I dreamed I was in South Africa. Diamonds were lying about me everywhere.

Dorothy—Did you see any as small as the one in the engagement ring you gave me?

There Were Many of Them

Herbert—Who was the smallest man in history?

Jasper—I'm ignorant, who?

Herbert—The Roman soldier who went to sleep on his watch.

Old Masters

The question arises as to what percentage of the paintings called "old masters" are fakes. No compilation of statistics is available. By way of illustration, however, of the volume of the business done in spurious "old masters" it is said that 2,000 paintings attributed to Van Dyck have been sold to art collectors and galleries, whereas the artist actually produced only 70 paintings during his lifetime.

ME STAY HOME FROM WORK? NO SIR!

NOT WHEN GENUINE BAYER ASPIRIN EASES HEADACHE IN A FEW MINUTES

The inexpensive way to ease headaches — if you want fast results — is with Bayer Aspirin.

The instant the pain starts, simply take 2 Bayer tablets with a half glass of water. Usually in a few minutes relief arrives.

Bayer tablets are quick-acting because they disintegrate in a few seconds — ready to start their work of relief almost immediately after taking.

It costs only 2¢ or 3¢ to relieve most headaches — when you get the new economy tin. You pay only 25 cents for 24 tablets — about 1¢ apiece.

Make sure to get the genuine by insisting on Bayer Aspirin.

WOMEN WHO HOLD THEIR MEN NEVER LET THEM KNOW

No matter how much your back aches and your nerves scream, your husband, because he is only a man, can never understand why you are so hard to live with one week in every month.

Too often the honeymoon express is wrecked by the nagging tongue of a three-quarter wife. The wise woman never lets her husband know by outward sign that she is a victim of periodic pain.

For three generations one woman has told another how to go "smiling through" with Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It helps Nature tone up the system, thus lessening the discomforts from the functional disorders which women must endure in the three ordeals of life: 1. Turning from girlhood to womanhood. 2. Preparing for motherhood. 3. Approaching "middle age."

Don't be a three-quarter wife! take LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND and Go "Smiling Through."

TUBERCULOSIS SEAL SALE

On November 25, Thanksgiving Day, the thirteenth annual Christmas Seal Sale will begin.

The annual Sale, sponsored by the National Tuberculosis Association, is for the purpose of obtaining funds to aid in the fight against the scourge of Tuberculosis.

The Sale in Shelby County is directed by the women's Auxiliary of the American Legion. Mrs. M. P. Jeter. President of the Auxiliary has asked the Culture Club to sponsor the Seal Sale in Columbiana and vicinity. Mrs Lena Merrell is chairman of the committee for this purpose, appointed by the Culture Club.

The 1937 Christmas Seal depicts the Colonial Watchman in his heroic role of guardian of life and property and is symbolic of protection.

The only official "Town Crier" in the United States at the present time is in Provincetown, Mass., and with the opening of the Sale in that state, he will mount the steps of the Capitol at Boston, ringing his bell, and will sell the first sheet of seals to the Governor.

It is anticipated that approximately Two Billion Christmas Seals will be sold this year to aid in our fight to stamp out our oldest and most deadly enemy - - Tuberculosis.

Remember- - that "no home is safe from Tuberculosis until all homes are safe". Remember, too, that Tuberculosis is preventable and that Tuberculosis is curable if discovered in time.

When the Christmas Seal Sale opens on Thanksgiving Day, let us all do our part in the struggle to eradicate this preventable disease that is taking such toll every year in lives and happiness.

S. C. H. S. HIGHLIGHTS

SHELBY TRIMS PELL CITY MONDAY 26—6

In a burst of power and speed the Shelby County High School Wildcats defeated their ancient foes, Pell City by a decisive score of 26-6. In one of the hardest fought games of the year the locals greeted the visitors with a smooth running and passing attack that kept the Pell City boys on their heels throughout the game. The first score came early in the first quarter when a series of passes by Shelby carried the ball into scoreing territory and then two sharp thrust over the line netted the needed five yards for the tally.

Pell City came back in the following quarter to tie the score 6-6 and thus the half ended.

The Columbiana boys came back in the second half to overpower the visitors in straight, hard football that netted a tally in the first few minutes of play. After that it was all Shelby and before the game was over Shelby had pushed across two more markers to end with a total score of 26—6.

The game was featured by brilliant running, staple blocking, and hard tackling by both teams.

The visitors fought well and hard.

M & W Cash Procures Hardware Stock

Road Now Under Construction

For months the Democrat has coveted the happy privilege of being able to announce that definite work had begun on the State and County Road project extending from the Bibb County line to the St Clair County boundary line,. So it is an especially happy occasion that we join Shelby County citizens in extending congratulations to Chairman J M Lyon Thomas Minor, Solon McGraw, Sam Tatum and Tom Nash of the Board of Revenue for Shelby County who have been cooperating with Senator L H Ellis, in perfecting a satisfactory plan for the final achievement about mentioned.

Goodwin Construction Company of Columbiana was awarded the hauling contract, and on Monday morning, the Shelby County "pick and shovel chorus," accompanied by the steady rolling of heavy trucks began the foundation work on this advantageous and progressive step forward for the permanent development of Shelby County.

Chairman Lyon states it is the happiest day of his life to be able to release this information. It should be a joyous occasion for this Road Project realization will be a useful and a lasting memorial to all who had a part in making the "dream" a "Reality".

Commerce and business now should speed up in this territory, and when the Chelsea Highway Project next on the calender for improvement in our County, is prefected, Shelby County can proudly boast of a network of Highways second to none in the State of Alabama.

NOT GONE WITH THE WIND

On last Sunday a short distance off the Montgomery Highway, in a Negro Church, near Silurja, a most unusual gathering took place. A throng of Negro people from various points around this section gathered, and sung the Negro race. The church in its natural setting of Oaks, Pines and Willows made a typical scene of the Old South. And as these people raised their voices in the melodious strains of Swing Low Sweet Chariot and "Way By andBy" one could not help reflect that this is one remnant of the Old South that is not Gone with the Wind.

So irrisistible and enchanting was the music of this group that the white people who had come to listen, found it difficult to hold their peace, The group had gathered in the interest of the Negro School of Siluria. This school is located in the most thickly negro populated section of the County.

GOOD MORNING

MILTON BIRD

Gray Goodwin, home for the week-end, had found an old school paper and we were remembering: Ralph E. Parker, the morning he found the goat on the stage . . . . the way Ezra Crumpton argued . . . . Lewis Averytt the morning we elected him president of the Senior class . . . . Vera Mae Black, Aline Spruell and Margaret Smith and what had become of them . . . . that home run Ehney hit . . . . and Bruton Pitt's sugar cane patch . . . . Simon on the end-around . . . Miss Mary two minutes before time to read out exam grades. . . Kark going to bat. . . and that Alex City line . . . Clay playing tackle. . . . Buck that day in Bessemer when he knocked over everything but the public square . . . how pretty Mary Lyman was. . . the fly Gray caught in center field, with his head. . the ice cream Mrs. Goodwin used to make. . . Ship Sandusky, Leon Archer and Robert Schrader, and what they were doing . . . . .

The boys who come into John's steak house late of evenings are a strange lot. They come in from various places and settle down to John's food without ever mentioning what has happened during the interval between eight o'clock and then. They become immediately a group of stags again and whatever the delight of the evening, talk is man-talk, with women as far away as the stars.

There's something about a trip on the mountain that does something to a fellow, this time of the year. The old guy with the brush has been there. You see it; and you feel it too . . . . that is, if you're one of those people who live on any old street in any old house where there are trees out front. It's different from looking at trees in the spring when, unconsciously, you have the feeling that

I'd rather see a tall oak tree than be one,
I don't know why,
Unless it is that every tree I wander by
Looks like some tall defiant girl
Who daren't cry!

I wonder what Mrs. Merrill would say if some day, with my best girl in town, I got in her car by mistake and took the young lady to ride. And I wonder if I'd know Frank and Jit and Joe when I passed 'em Oh well, it was a great feeling anyhow, just thinking about it!

And did you ever see so many pretty cars in one little town. I think I'll ask the ladies to let me entertain the club some afternoon and have 'em come in their respective autos. What a parade that would be: buisks, cadilacs, dodges, oldsmobiles, chevrolets, plymouths. And, Luke, will you put a little water in this wreck, I got t' go all the way to Vincent!

After a week of hide-and-seek with the proverbial wolf, it's always a treat to go up to Narrow's Inn for an evening of dancing on Saturday. The place has got to be a regular meeting place for innumerable groups, who drift in anywhere from eight till twelve to dance. One night, when everyone was too busy with his own fun to notice when romance slipted in through the door. Apparently the crowd didn't detect any change, and things went on the same as before except for one boy and one girl who seemed a little bit happier, and a little more thrilled by the music.

Did you ever notice how happy a nigger boy is. When you know he doesn't have two pennies between him and the Place with the pearly gates. I asked Charlie Sparks about it, and he said: "No, and he doesn't have some guy he owes sitting on every corner between here and There either!"

We were talking about a fellow who was doing what he wanted to do more than anything else in the world, and making his living in that fashion. "It must be great," I said. He thought a long time before he answered. Then he said, "It must be." He was a fox hunter, and to do what he wanted to do more than anything else in the world cost him plenty of money. Before he left, he added: "I wish some guy would pay me a salary to hunt fox."

We saw in the paper that one of his best girls was getting married. So, man-like, we calle a meeting to sooth his pride. And, we felt we were capable too. Our ages ranged from seventeen to twenty, didn't they? And in that length of time you learn all theer is to know about women, don't you? And besides, hadn't we caught the love bug in flight and clipped his wings, not once but several times, each in his own fashion. So we began the meeting. Funny, but the girl went right ahead and got married!

HOW TROUBLE WAS MADE FOR JUMPER

NO ONE had enjoyed the joke on Reddy Fox more than had Jumper the Hare. It had tickled Jumper almost to pieces to think that he who was accounted the most timid of all the little people in the Green Forest should have been able to frighten Reddy Fox. Of course, it was Buster Bear who had given Reddy his first fright and made him put his tail between his legs and start for home as fast as he could run, but it was Jumper who had started after Reddy right at his heels and had made Reddy think that he was Buster Bear and so frightened him still more, so that he didn't dare stop long enough to turn and see who it was behind him. Of course, to all who saw them it looked just as if Reddy was running away from Jumper the Hare, and every one pretended to believe that he was. Then they tormented Reddy and made his life miserable for him by calling him a coward, afraid of Jumper the Hare.

No One Had Enjoyed the Joke on Reddy Fox More Than Jumper the Hare.

Reddy had fallen into a terrible rage at first and had tried his very best to catch his tormentors. But after a while he saw that the angrier he grew the better pleased were his tormentors. It was just what they wanted—to make him angry. Only Jumper the Hare took care not to have anything to do with Reddy.

Now, Reddy Fox is, as you all know, very, very sly and smart. After a little while he began to realize how foolish it was for him to get so angry, or anyway to show that he was so angry, every time his neighbors plagued him about running away from Jumper the Hare. So, no matter how anger might fill his heart he would pretend not to mind in the least and would try to laugh at the jokes, but all the time would be just boiling inside. Now, at first his anger had been all against those who had called him names and made fun of him, but as he thought it over little by little his anger turned against Jumper the Hare. If Jumper hadn't run after him no one would have laughed at him, for nearly every one had been just as much afraid of Buster as he. Therefore, it was all the fault of Jumper. The more he was teased the greater grew his hate of Jumper, until at last he made up his mind that he would catch Jumper.

Now, of course, the other little people didn't know this. They thought that they were making life very miserable for just Reddy Fox alone. Not one of them ever stopped to think that when trouble is made for one it almost always hurts some one else. They thought that they were making Reddy Fox very miserable, as indeed they were, but it never entered their heads that they were also making life very miserable for Jumper the Hare. But they were. Yes, sir, they were. If they had let Reddy alone he would have let Jumper alone. But as it was, he just grew more and more determined that he would catch Jumper. So he spent all his spare time trying to think of some plan whereby he could catch Peter Rabbit's big cousin. And Jumper, who always was very, very timid, grew more timid than ever and wished and wished with all his heart that he had not played that joke on Reddy Fox, which had made Reddy the laughing stock of the Green Meadows and the Green Forest.

Smasher of Atoms

This giant atom-smasher has been erected near the laboratories of the Westinghouse company at East Pittsburgh, Pa. With it scientists hope to break the atom for the first time. The smasher is a steel-coated tank, 30 feet in diameter, 47 feet high. Inside is an electrostatic direct current generator and a 40-foot vacuum tube. It will generate voltages up to 5,000,000, and will shoot particles of matter through the tube at 100 million miles an hour.

ALKALIZE

Often "acid indigestion" is distressing to you — and offensive to others. But now there is no excuse for being guilty.

You simply carry your alkalizer with you — and use it at the first sign of "upset" stomach. Simply take two tiny tablets of Phillips' Milk of Magnesia when out with others. Or — if at home — you can take two teaspoons of liquid Phillips'. Both act the same way.

Relief is usually a matter of seconds. "Gas," nausea, "heartburn," acid breath — all respond quickly. Just make sure you ask for "Phillips."

To Women:

If you suffer every month you owe it to yourself to take note of Cardui and find out whether it will benefit you.

Functional pains of menstruation have, in many, many cases, been eased by Cardui. And where malnutrition (poor nourishment) had taken away women's strength, Cardui has been found to increase the appetite, improve digestion and in that way help to build up a natural resistance to certain useless suffering. (Where Cardui fails to benefit, consult a physician.) Ask your druggist for Cardui — (pronounced "Card-u-i.")

Growing Cannon Fodder.

SANTA MONICA, CALIF.—To produce this crop takes time and planning.

First your veterans must grow past fighting age because those who survive the horrors of one war never willingly enlist for another. Meanwhile be sure the women have been bearing children, since children are the seed corn of your future sowing.

Irvin S. Cobb

As the newer generation grows up dose it on the old reliable P. P. P. formula — parades, pomp, propaganda. Bands and guns and flag - wavings, murderous preachments and manufactured patriotism; they all help to fertilize against the ultimate harvesting.

Befuddle the first-born on dreams of drunken glory. Teach him the neighbor over the way is an enemy who must some day be crushed without mercy. Make him believe his country's destiny demands revenge for old hurts, reprisals for old losses, widened boundaries.

And then, in about 20 years, you have a nation ripened for ruin, a race of mothers ready to offer their sons to the slaughter.

Two-Faced Politicians.

SOMEBODY says the type of politician who swaps worthless promises before election for the public's confidence—and its votes—reminds him of Janus. Janus was a god with two faces, and the ancients finally got so they couldn't trust either one of them. But it took them a long time to catch on.

Might I be pardoned for thinking of a homelier simile? I'm thinking of the pack-rat of this western country. The thrifty pack-rat slips with stealthy tread into your camp whilst you slumber and carries off something of value. But he doesn't steal it—nothing like that. He merely exchanges with you, you being asleep at the time. He leaves a dry twig behind and totes off a side of meat. He confiscates one of your boots, but, in return, confers on you a couple of dead cactus stalks. His intentions may be honest, but there is no record showing where a pack-rat ever got the worst of a trade. I figure he's part Scotch.

This Man Dewey.

WHEN the Republicans get out the hound-dawgs to run down their 1940 nominee, they might search in the tall timbers of Manhattan island.

There's a young fellow there, the name being Dewey, and he being kin to the great admiral whose deeds crackled at Manila one May day morning like the lightnings on Mount Sinai. He comes of old Yankee stock. He hails from a debatable state, Michigan; lives in a pivotal state, New York. Still in his mid-thirties, he smashed the foulest, securest nests of labor racketeers and vice racketeers in America.

He married a sweet Texas girl, as southern as they make 'em. Her grand-uncle was Jeff Davis. My daddy was Jeff Davis' relative, too.

And this young Dewey trained for grand opera. Speaking of this charm thing, think of a President who'd wind up his fireside radio chats singing "Home on the Range."

Nordic Supremacy.

RECENT events bring to mind a little story of some years back when night-riding patriots in an Arkansas county felt called on, as a sacred duty imposed upon all true Caucasians, to put the Black brother in his place; said place, in at least one instance, being a colored cemetery.

Also, there had been a flood of notices to vacate sent through the mail to members of the African race, followed by unpleasant surprise parties did the recipients fail to heed the gentle warning.

So the community was getting more Nordic by the hour and the sound of the Anglo-saxophone was heard oft in the stilly night. That's the scene and the plot. Now for the sketch:

Pelagria Perkins meets Hookworm Hostetter on Main street:

"Hooky," says Pelagria, "effen you wuz to git a letter frum dese here w'ite shirts, whut would you do?"

"Me!" says Hookworm. "Boy, I'd finish readin' it on the train."

It has just occurred to me that in calling them tugs, I have been using the wrong term. Here they are known as towboats. That doesn't strike me as exactly right either since they do as much pushing as towing. As a matter of fact, the bows of the harbor tugs are protected with rope fenders so that they won't bruise their noses against steel plates. But be all that as it may, if it weren't for towboats I might get more work done. Minutes slip by readily when I watch them.

Lesson for November 21

CHRISTIAN WORKERS

LESSON TEXT—I Corinthians 3:10-15; Galatians 6:6-10.

GOLDEN TEXT—And let us not be weary in well doing: for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not.—Galatians 6:9.

PRIMARY TOPIC—In Our Church.

JUNIOR TOPIC—What Can I Do to Help?

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What Can I Do for Christ and the Church?

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Need for Christian Workers.

"Laborers together with God"—such is the glorious and distinctive title of true Christians, according to the verse just preceding our assigned text. Unfortunate is the all too common error of regarding only pastors and missionaries as the workers in God's vineyard. While we recognize that there is a special calling for some men to leave their vocations and devote their entire time to the Lord's work, let us be sure properly to stress the importance of every Christian's being a worker for God.

The portions assigned for our study present the privilege and responsibility of Christians as fellow-workers with Christ, under the figures of builders and of seed sowers.

I. Builders of the House (I Cor. 3:10-15).

The first requisite of a building is a foundation and it must be strong and true. Builders for Christ have a sure foundation stone in Him.

1. The Foundation—Jesus Christ.

There is only definite assurance in Paul's word concerning the foundation. It is perfectly clear to him that there can be no Christian faith without Jesus Christ. Such a statement sounds almost childish. One might well assume that no intelligent person would claim to be one of God's builders, and reject his foundation stone. But, alas, many are they who claim to be Christians, who profess to be raising a structure of Christian life and testimony, but who have set aside the only possible foundation on which to build.

2. The Master Builder—and his builders.

Paul was a pioneer. He declares his ambition and calling to be "to preach the gospel not where Christ was named, lest I should build on another man's foundation" (Rom. 10:25). Such a privilege does not come to all men, but let those who thus serve learn of this "wise master builder" that they may lay only one foundation—Jesus Christ.

"Let every man take heed how he buildeth thereupon." It is a serious matter to serve the Lord as a builder, for it is possible to go badly astray at this point as well as in laying the foundation.

3. The materials—good and bad.

Whether we apply Paul's words to the building of our personal spiritual life or to the work we do in the church they are equally serious and urgent. "The day"—when Christ returns, and we shall stand before him to give account of the deeds done in the flesh—will reveal by flaming fire whether we have been faithful, true and diligent in preaching God's Word, in prayer, in sacrificial service for Christ, or have sought to introduce into our lives and into the churches we serve the "wood, hay, and stubble" of unspiritual schemes, neglect of God's Word, prayerlessness.

Saved? Yes, but entering into God's presence as a man who has escaped from his burning house with nothing but his life.

II. Sowers of the Seed (Gal. 6:6-10).

The figure changes. No longer are we builders—but rather sowers of seed. Would that it were all good seed that were sown—but we see the sowing to the flesh as well as to the Spirit. This is true

1. In our own lives. The inexorable law of sowing and reaping prevails in the moral realm as truly as it does in the physical. Men who would never expect wheat to grow where they have planted thistles, seem to expect that they may sow in their own lives the seeds of selfish indulgence, of careless neglect of the things of God, and still somehow reap the fruit of good character and noble living.

2. In the lives of others. We may be tempted to take attractive by-paths and short-cuts to win the interest and allegiance of men to ourselves and the church, but they will prove to bring but corruption and destruction. Spiritual seed will always produce spiritual life.

3. Waiting for the harvest. Harvest must be patiently awaited. We know it to be so in natural things; the same is true in the spiritual realm.

A Message of Love

One of the last slowly murmured sayings of the American poet Whittier, as he lay a-dying, was this: "Give—my love—to—the—world."

Worth-While Living

Learn to do well; seek judgment, relieve the oppressed, judge the fatherless, plead for the widow.—Isaiah 1-17.

Haste

Unreasonable haste is the direct road to error.—Moliere.

9. In the sense of the modern alignment of the major parties, he may be said to have been the only Democratic President before Wilson. Johnson was a Democrat, however, as was Buchanan, and as were Jackson, Jefferson and others, and traditionally they, especially Jackson and Jefferson, are claimed by the Democrats of today.
10. This floating station is sponsored by the French ministry of air, "Air France" and the French Line. It will operate in the North Atlantic, and at regular intervals it will flash weather reports to aviators who are crossing from America to Europe, or vice versa.

Famous Hymn

The recent sale of the original manuscript of "Onward, Christian Soldiers," recalls the manner in which that stirring religious hymn came into being.

Some Yorkshire (Eng.) Pupils, years ago, planned to make a Whitsuntide procession to a neighboring church. They asked their young curate, Rev. Sabine Baring Gould, to write them a marching song. He sat down, composed the hymn in a few minutes.

Originally sung to a tune by Joseph Haydn, its music now is that of Sir Arthur Sullivan. He composed the music as the result of a sudden inspiration.—Washington Post.

LIFE'S LITTLE JESTS

Friend—How is the help here in your laundry?

Manager—Oh, I manage to wring service enough out of 'em for my pressing needs.

Didn't Impress Him

A doctor said to his daughter: "Did you tell the young man that I think he's no good?"

"Yes. He said it wasn't the first wrong diagnosis you had made."

No Half Measures

The young man stood before the grizzled mountaineer.

"Mr. Burbridge," he stammered, "I've—I've come to ask for your daughter's hand."

The mountaineer knocked the ashes out of his pipe.

"Can't allow no such thing," he drawled. "You takes the whole gal or nothin'!"

GROUND GRIP TIRES

WIN First Honors AT TROY · BIG ROCK LILY LAKE · WHEATLAND PLOWING CONTESTS

Using Firestone Ground Grip Tires, Paul Stiefbold made the highest score for any one meet, with 92½ points out of 100. He also had the largest number of points for the four contests, 356½ out of a possible 400.

Carl Shoger had the highest average score per contest with 90 out of 100 possible points, using Firestone Ground Grip Tires.

Clarence Shoger won first place in the Young Men's Class in each of the four contests on Firestone Ground Grip Tires.

FIRESTONE Ground Grip Tires won sweeping victories this year in the plowing contests at Troy, Lily Lake, Big Rock and Wheatland, Illinois. In the plowing contests, as on the farms, more tractors were equipped with Firestone Ground Grip Tires than all other makes of tires combined. And these all-purpose tractor tires scored 3500½ points out of a possible total of 4100 for the four contests.

Why do plowing champions choose Firestone Ground Grip Tires? The answer is:

GREATER TRACTION — Takes a deeper, broader bite into the soil. Has positive self-cleaning action.

GREATER STRENGTH — Resists the strain of heavy pulling because every fiber of every cord is saturated with liquid rubber by the patented Firestone Gum-Dipping process. Two extra layers of Gum-Dipped cords under the tread bind the tread and cord body so solidly together that we guarantee they will not separate.

GREATER SAVINGS — Saves 25% in time and up to 50% in fuel over steel-lugged wheels.

GREATER DRAWBAR PULL enables this tire to do more work in a given time.

Specify Firestone Ground Grip Tires when buying a new tractor or any wheeled farm implement. And, for your present equipment, ask your nearest Firestone Implement Dealer, Tire Dealer or Firestone Auto Supply & Service Store about the economical Firestone Cut-Down Wheel Program.

Listen to the Firestone broadcast of the International Livestock Show from Chicago, Nov. 29, 30, Dec. 1, 2, 3. See your local newspaper for station and time. Also listen to the Voice of Firestone featuring Richard Crooks and Margaret Speaks, Monday evenings over Nationwide N. B. C. Red Network.

"CATTLE IS CASH MONEY"

The Montgomery Advertiser, impressed by the steady demand for livestock, reminds us that in Biblical days a man's wealth was computed by the number of cattle he owned, and declares that although wealth today is not entirely so reckoned, yet "cattle is cash money."

"There is not a more liquid asset than cattle," says the Advertiser. "Every business da in the year cattle can be turned into money, just the same as cashing a check at a bank. The stockyards at Montgomery never close, day or night. Since June 1, 1918, when the yards were opened, there has not been a minute that the years were closed to receiving stock, whereas the banks take many holidays. Cattle is money."

This is a message that should reach the eyes and eyes of every farmer in the Black Belt. Now that cotton is definitely an uncertain factor, those farmers who persist in a one money-crop hystem should at least pause long enough to realize what is going on around them. Day by day new advocates are being won to diversification and many of these farmers are turning to livestock because of the manifold advantages this section offers to cattle production.

It is admitted that starting production of livestock entails numerous difficulties, but those who have already passed through this phase of the industry have found it worth every sacrifice made. They are the best witnesses to the advantages offered Black Belt residents by livestock production and they can offer checks bearing impressive figures as substantiation of their testimony.

The Times-Journal has followed with interest the fortunes of livestock producers in the Black Belt during the industry's remarkable growth of the past few years, and has reached the opinion that our future prosperity will be determined in large measure by the degree of our development of this "liquid asset."

HUNTERS AND ACCIDENTS

Approach of the fall hunting season leads us once more to the melancholy expectation of seeing daily stories in the papers headed "Killed in hunting accident." Fvery fall the story is the same; of the men who go blithely out to get a little recreation in field and woodland, a certain number will die because of their own or others' carelessness.

Probably there isn't much that can be done to remedy matters. The hunting grounds available to ordinary city folk are usually so crowded that accidents are, as you might say, fairly begging to happen. The high incidence of carelessness among human beings makes it pretty certain that the accidents will in due course materialize.

The best that can be done is to remind each hunter that he carries a lethal weapon which a moment's heedlessness can turn into an instrument of tragedy.

REPRESENTATIVE JURY SERVICE VITAL TO JUSTICE

Two circuit court jury panels have been quashed by Mississippi judges recently, to avoid constant repetition of service by various citizens. Judge Auther Busby, of Meridian, first saw the need for such action and his move was followed by Judge J. G. Guynes, of Hazelhurst.

These judges hold that the ends of justice are not completely served when certain groups appear time and time in the jury box and, to the layman, their attitude is well founded.

It is true that many citizens are unable to serve as jurors without making sacrifices which they should not be required to assume. Others, however, find various excuses to escape duty simply because the assignment is tedious and unpleasant to them. Such persons are patently evading a definite obligation of citizenship and naturally the duty falls upon those who are more inclined toward it and to whom the money involved often proves more than welcome.

While such an arrangement suits the individuals involved, justice suffers when dispensed only by certain groups instead of a representative cross section of the citizenry. Those who serve on juries time after time cannot help but develop definite attitudes and opinions and observant lawyers can possibly secure some advantage in selection of juries by constant observation of the reactions of those who appear in the boxes at regular intervals.

To correct this situation, we must either educate our citizens to the importance of shouldering their share of the judicial burden or the courts must make the most of the limited jury material at hand by seeing that service is youth distributed over the greatest number of citizens possible.

THOUGHT FOR TODAY

WOUNDS

If your dark anger needs my tears to slake
Its sullen burning thirst, then you may take Full measure of my pain, or spill my blood
As freely given sacrifice . . . a flood
Of red repentance shed at your command.
But this I ask, that your vindictive hand
Shall strike me with a blade of sub-den steel
Which kills or leaves a clean sharp cut to heal.

The wound that jagged words have made infects
With secret festering. The heart protects
The scar, with pride to bandage it from sight,
But Memory's restless fingers in the night
Will pluck the stitches from the wound again
To bleed slow drops of unforgotten pain.

REWARD FOR PEOPLE
Who make this Life a Happier One

The last will and testament of the last William M. Carson, wealthy San Francisco business man has impressed us with its reward to "people who have sweetened my life" - - - It has impressed us as having been sincerely uttered from a GRATEFRUL heart-If there is an unpardonable sin in this world we think it is UN—GRATEFULNESS - - - INGRATI—TUDE--for those, who have along the way brightened with their thoughtful courtesies our pilgrimage here--Those who have, in other words, taken the "CURT" out of Courtesy! Those who have taken "time out" to do those little things that cost nothing in a monetary way, but are priceless pearls in our Rosary of Happy Recollections.

So, as stated above, when Mr Carson was called to go on that last Great Adventure and began to think of what he would do with his $1,800,000 worth of this world's goods he sat down and simply wrote the names of everybody who had been KIND to him, everybody whose COURTESY, EFFICIENRCY or HELP FULNESS had made life more pleasant for him - - and divided his bequests among all of them.

Included in this list of 100 names were maids, janitors, bell hops, waits, elevator boys-some comrades with whom he had played Golf people who had been thoughtful while he was a patient in the hospital, a few people with whom he had attended Church services- Classmates with whom he had attended College and so on.

There may be some who con question the romanticism displayed by the eccentric bachelor-but the Legacy has our whole hearted approval-It is an idea worth thinking over! For all of us who travel on toward graves that await us, carry with us debts we owe to those who have been fellow pilgrims- However, seldom do we take the time to tabulate their value-Might "check" on this while "hurrying" along--They do exist! Many of them in our lives. And here's hoping we never become too busy to FORGET TO REMEMBER and offer proper appreciation for the joy they have brought us.

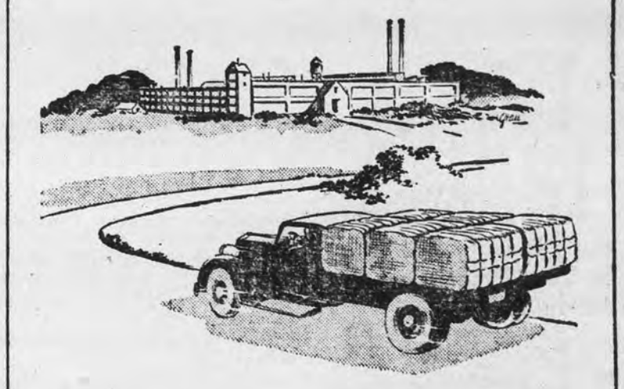
The Famous FARMALLS Come in THREE SIZES



MANY good things come in threes and among the very best from the farm point of view is FARMALL power—in THREE sizes—F-30, F-20, and F-12. Each of them is ready not only to plow but to plant, cultivate, run belt machines, and handle all row-crop and general-purpose work.

All of them have these exclusive patented Farmall features—quick-dodging ability, forward location of gangs, and braking either rear wheel through the steering gear for square turns.

Call us and we will come out and demonstrate any or all of the Farmalls.

A Nearby Market for Alabama Cotton

The cotton mills of Alabama consume an average of 667,777 bales of cotton each year. This assures the Alabama cotton-grower a ready, nearby market for his cotton.

A large part of this cotton is trucked directly from the gin to the mill, which enables the farmer to get a better price for his cotton than if it had to be shipped to a mill in a distant state.

The value of Alabama's cotton crop is increased by over thirty-four million dollars annually, through its conversion into yarn, thread and fabrics in textile mills within the state.

Morgenthau's Encouraging Speech . . . President Has Building Plan . . . Japs Take Shanghai

France has bought $10,250,000 of our store of gold, and part of the big shipment sent from New York on the Normandie is here seen being unloaded from a truck at a North river pier.

Balance Budget: Morgenthau

BUSINESS men of America received a cheering message, presumably direct from the administration, delivered by Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau. Addressing the Academy of Political Sciences in New York, Mr. Morgenthau declared the time had come for balancing the budget, but said this should be accomplished without additional taxation.

Secretary Morgenthau

Encouragement for industry and business was stated thus:

"The laws should be so written and administered that the taxpayer can continue to make a reasonable profit with a minimum of interference from his federal government."

Moreover, the treasury head went on record as opposed to a continuance of the era of unlimited government spending. Said he: "The basic need today is to foster the full application of the driving force of private capital. We want to see capital go into the productive channels of private industry. We want to see private business expand."

The plan advanced by Mr. Morgenthau for balancing the budget was to bring next year's expenditures, under the 1939 budget which takes effect next July 1, within this year's revenues. To achieve a balance, exclusive of debt retirement payments, the present scale of expenditures would have to be sliced $700,000,000, he added.

While he urged against tax increases, Mr. Morgenthau suggested that a broader base for income taxes, increasing the number of taxpayers above the present 3,000,000, would be a more equitable substitute for the present federal taxes on consumers—the so-called nuisance taxes.

President's Building Plan

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT, in a conference with several business leaders, told of his new plan for checking the threatening depression by stimulating private home building by private capital. He revealed no details, but Chairman Eccles of the reserve board said the President was confident such a program would reach full scope next year. Eccles was unprepared to say whether the undertaking would be directed through a new government agency, but thought legislation of some sort probably would be necessary.

One suggestion is that the social security reserve be used for loans for home construction. At present it is being used to pay current government expenses.

The recent decline in residential building is generally held responsible to a large extent for the slump in steel mill activity from 90 per cent of capacity to 40 per cent.

Shanghai Falls to Japs

STUBBORN defense of Shanghai by the Chinese came to an end when the Japanese troops made their way across Soochow creek and occupied the entire city. The defenders retired westward and prepared to block the way of the invaders toward Nanking.

The victorious Japanese spread death and destruction through Shanghai, and mercilessly shot down the Chinese groups which were trapped in various quarters. They turned machine guns on a platform inside the international concession from which a number of foreigners were watching the fighting, and Pembroke Stephens, correspondent of the London Daily Telegraph, was killed.

In Brussels the Far East peace conference was considering a plan for giving direct aid to China if Japan should reject mediation. Coercive action against Japan was not thought advisable, but the idea was that China should be permitted to obtain munitions and arms to keep up her fight. The chief difficulty would lie in American neutrality legislation.

Corn Crop Estimates

PRODUCTION of corn in the United States this year will total 2,651,393,000 bushels, the Department of Agriculture estimated on the basis of November 1 conditions. The estimate was 89,457,000 bushels larger than the forecast of 2,561,936,000 bushels a month ago. In 1936 1,529,327,000 bushels were harvested.

Private estimates of the current crop ranged between 2,613,000,000 and 2,710,000,000 bushels, with the average about 2,636,000,000 bushels.

France Buys Our Gold

TWO big shipments of gold abroad were made by the government within the week. The first was $10,250,000 sent to France on the Normandie. Then $5,000,000 was started to England on the Aquitania. It was believed other shipments would follow before long.

The gold shipments were handled by the stabilization fund and were regarded as an operation under the tri-partite agreement, which binds Great Britain, France and the United States in a "gentleman's pact" to maintain currency stability.

Ramsay MacDonald's Death

RAMSAY MAC DONALD, who rose from poverty and obscurity to become three times the prime minister of the great British empire, died suddenly of heart disease on a steamship bound for South America where he was to take a long vacation with his daughter. He was seventy-one years old and had been practically out of politics since 1935, when Stanley Baldwin succeeded him as prime minister. MacDonald at that time was offered a peerage but declined the honor. Even his political foes admit that he was one of the outstanding statesmen of the time.

Italy Joins Anti-Reds

MUSSOLINI has given the democratic governments of Europe something else to worry about, for Italy has joined Germany and Japan in their agreement to combat communism, and no one knows how far this alliance will go or just what are its intentions. The three "charter members" of the pact—that status was given Italy—hope that all other fascist minded nations, including Poland, Portugal, Hungary and some of the South American republics, will adhere to the agreement.

Joachim VonRibbentrop

Political observers saw the prospect of a world divided into three camps — fascist, communist and democratic.

Emerging as one of the probable chief leaders of this united front is Joachim von Ribbentrop, German ambassador to Great Britain. Hitler sent him to Rome to sign the new pact, and it is expected that the headquarters of the alliance will be in Berlin.

Officials in Rome stated the pact was not directed against any country and said Russia might have all the communism it wants so long as she keeps it at home. But they intimated the military forces of the signatories were ready to back up the agreement.

SEEN and HEARD around the NATIONAL CAPITAL

By Carter Field

Washington. — An old riddle inquires: Which came first, the chicken or the egg? And there is much to be said on both sides. So it is with the recent stock market nose-dive. Did the market reaction slow down business, or did business, slowing down, start the market on its gyrations?

As in the chicken and egg riddle, it is obvious that, whatever the starter, one will go on producing the other.

But it is interesting in this case to know that the administration believes the chicken was business jitters, while the stock market dive was the egg the business jitters laid.

This viewpoint is particularly interesting because the administration is quite certain it knows just what was the matter with business, and is now seeking out remedies. Also because there is bitter resentment in administration circles at the interests it regards as responsible.

The trouble, according to administration insiders, is prices. They were too high, and consequently produced something akin to a buyers' strike. This slowed down a hundred other lines than those initiating the trouble by putting their prices too high. Hence too many people have not been making money, too many corporations face lowered earnings, too many corporations and people are therefore pulling in their belts. And stock prices follow inevitably.

Blame Steel Industry

Chief miscreant in this picture—still stating it as viewed by the administration—is the steel industry. A close second is cement. Textiles are absolved, not because the men running the textile industry are regarded by the administration as particularly virtuous, but because the industry is helpless to do anything but cut prices to the bone. Ruthless competition is the answer to that. The administration knows a lot about it because of the vexatious question of long hours, child labor and poor wages in the industry, and because of the pitious screams the industry let out a while back against what imports of Japanese textiles were doing to its price situation.

Now, so far, is the administration disposed to blame the automobile industry. It believes the new models should be sold more cheaply, but blame here again attaches to the steel industry, in the administration view. A long standing automobile policy has been to cut prices whenever possible in order to stimulate demand and increase volume. That is precisely what the administration wants every industry to do.

It's an old theory with President Roosevelt. He believes firmly that the 1929 crash was caused by high prices in the immediately preceeding period. Prices were not advanced, during those few years in terms of dollars. But costs were diminishing due to improved machinery. Hence profits were larger. Hence a larger percentage of sales prices was detoured from the quick spenders, and into the pockets of investors. Hence overbuilding of plant capacity and gradual drying up of buying power.

Just what will be done to correct the present evil, as the President views it, is not yet clear.

Utilities Hold Off

Public utilities of this country are holding back expenditures of $1,000,000,000 a year for improvements and expansions, the securities and exchange commission has informed President Roosevelt, waiting until the way for new financing can be cleared, as they view it, by the Supreme court ruling that the holding company death sentence is unconstitutional.

This holding back, the President is informed, has been going on for three years. The President just might have thought that these figures, coming from a commission which has had so little chance to function since it was organized, because there have been so few new security issues, was an exaggeration. But within a few days after this allegation the utilities executives themselves tried to use the same argument to prove to the public that the President's utility policy is all wet. They quoted the Edison Electric institute to the effect that there was a "construction deficit of $2,600,000,000 accumulated in the past five years."

It was added that the ten-year average of new construction by the utilities from 1923 to 1932 inclusive was $752,215,000 annually. What makes this particularly significant is that it includes the period from 1929 to 1932, the last two of which were very bad indeed.

So much so that if these years are left out of the calculation there does not seem to be such a wide discrepancy between the figures given the President by S. E. C. and those supplied by the Edison institute. Or if the fact that the piled up need, so to speak, is all the greater because of those famine years, is added.

Of course the utility executives cites these figures to prove that President Roosevelt's anti-utility policy, his policy of putting the government into competition with the privately owned utilities, is actually holding back prosperity, is retarding employment, is depriving both local and federal governments of an increase in the tax base. But the President sees it very differently.

Accuse Higher-Ups

He not only believes, but has been assured by S. E. C. officials and others, that it is not the operating utility men who are responsible for the log jam, but the higher-ups in the holding companies. So his anger at the holding companies is merely augmented. In fact, names have been quoted to the President of officials operating privately owned electric companies who would be delighted to expand. Names of holding company officials who have vetoed the expansion have also been supplied him.

All of which is rather interesting to the bystander because it seems to him that the holding company executives are sacrificing their all to defend a city which has already been doomed by a flank attack. There may be some senator or representative in Washington who believes that the holding companies, whether they be of the public utility or investment trust or whatever nature, will be able to survive the present trend in taxation, but this writer has not encountered one.

The answer is simple. Up to last year dividends were exempt from the normal income tax—on the theory that the corporation paying them had already given the federal government 15 per cent of its net earnings. Moreover, corporations did not have to pay the full corporation income tax on dividends received from other corporations, for the same reason.

But now there is no such exemption. Moreover, the probability is that the corporation income tax will be increased. So there does not seem to be much future for the holding company as it moves down this tax chiseling line. It seems headed for extinction.

Hidden Short Sales

Worried as they have been about the recent stock market nose-dive, there is no disposition on the part of officials of the federal reserve board or of the securities and exchange commission to put out any propaganda about "bear raids."

As a matter of fact, the exchange commission has been studying short sales for a good many months. Those of record have not been of any great significance. But it knows also that there are many hidden short sales, and that there is no way, at present, for any governmental body, or stock exchange committee for that matter, to discover the extent and importance of these.

Normally, of counse, a speculator wishing to sell short does so through a broker. The broker, on receiving the order, borrows the stock from some holder, paying a certain charge for the privilege. If the holder wants it back before the broker's customer is willing to "cover," or buy the stock so that the same number of shares may be returned to the lender, the broker simply borrows the stock from somebody else.

Figures on this sort of trading are closely followed, and this type of short position in the market is always known both to stock exchange authorities and the government.

But the secret system is causing some concern. In such a case the speculator desiring to sell 1,000 shares of steel short borrows the certificate for these shares from some friend, and tells no one except the lender what his plans are. Then he sells that thousand shares. It looks like a legitimate sale. No one but he and the lender knows that actually the speculator, sooner or later, must buy 1,000 shares of steel to replace the loan and complete the transaction.

A Helpful Cushion

This lack of knowledge is important. Obviously if it were known to all the brokers that a great many hundred thousand shares of stock had been sold short, they would know that sooner or later these hundreds of thousands of shares must be bought so that the borrowed stocks could be returned. That reserve buying power, so to speak, would have a tremendously steadying effect on the market. In fact, that is one of the chief arguments against the abolition of short sales. This type of transaction is a very helpful cushion when the market starts to slide.

But the secret short sales do not lend this steadying effect. Other speculators do not know whether there is a large or small secret short interest in the market. For all they know there may be practically no short interest at all. So that the secrecy has a tendency, especially when the market is nervous, to depress it still further.

Government officials studying the situation point out, however, that "bear raids" are not nearly so serious as they are frequently painted. The raider must always buy back the stock he sells short. So unless he is right in his calculations that the market is too high, or that the earnings of a particular corporation do not justify the price of its securities, he is apt to be burned.

Three Kings in a Year

In 1936 England had three kings, George V, Edward VIII and George VI. England has had three sovereigns during two other calendar years. In 1483 King Edward IV died and his son Edward V was murdered by his uncle Richard III. In 1553 Edward VI died and his cousin Jane was allowed to reign only a few days. She was imprisoned by the supporters of Edward's sister, Queen Mary I, and beheaded the next year.

Nature designed the kidneys to do a marvelous job. Their task is to keep the flowing blood stream free of an excess of toxic impurities. The act of living—it's itself—is constantly producing waste matter the kidneys must remove from the blood if good health is to endure.

When the kidneys fail to function as Nature intended, there is retention of waste that may cause body-wide distress. One may suffer nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—feel tired, nervous, all worn out.

Frequent, scanty or burning passages may be further evidence of kidney or bladder disturbance.

The recognized and proper treatment is a diuretic medicine to help the kidneys get rid of excess poisonous body waste. Use Doan's Pills. They have had more than forty years of public approval. Are endorsed the country over. Insist on Doan's. Sold at all drug stores.

CHAPTER I

—1—

Gregory Sterling rode slowly out of town toward his little shack among the hills. He had just come from signing the papers which gave over to the Blue Star Production company full right and title to the land for which he had grubbed and starved and fought and almost died. He was going back to pack up and leave!

Ten years before, a mere lad with a sore heart and a great determination, Greg had come to the Far West and taken up land, worked hard, raised a few cattle, striving against great odds year after year. Now suddenly within the last few months a rich yield of oil had been discovered and the land which had been so hard to subdue had become worth millions.

Greg said it softly over to himself when he was out on the desert alone:

"I'm clearing out! I'm going back East. I'm going home wealthy, just as I said I would!"

"But it won't be home!" he added. "Not with mother gone! There'll be nobody there I care about. Nobody left! Not even little Alice Blair!"

He had never expected this thing. The utmost he had hoped for when he first came out to these wilds had been the right to do as he pleased, to hide his stricken young life after the death of his mother, to hide away from people who thought they were elected to manage him, and earn a meager living through hard daily toil.

Then suddenly in a night he was rich! He was going back! Back to the place where they wouldn't lend him $20 to start a newsstand down near the station. Back where they wanted him to be bound out to learn a trade!

The moon was shining when he reached his shack. He could see its silver light on the opposite hillside. His eye lingered on the wide expanse of sky, the purple mountains, the dark plumy woods, the river winding like a silver thread in the valley. Would he some day be homesick for all this quietness as he had longed for his home when he came out here?

It was a little past noon the next day when he finished packing and cleaning, for he took a certain pride in leaving everything immaculate. On the saddle were fastened two bundles, one sewed into an old piece of burlap bag, to be forwarded to him in his home town, the other, crudely wrapped in newspaper, containing a few necessities that he was taking with him.

When he reached the settlement town and left the bony old horse with his new owner he found an uneasy regret in his heart at parting from him, and when he bought his ticket he stuffed it into his pocket with a strange distaste.

An unanticipated shyness came upon him.

He gravely stepped forward, swung himself aboard the lowest step, his newspaper bundle under his arm, and quite casually rode out of town into the great world.

A few days later Gregory Sterling stood at the front window of the luxurious room that had been assigned him in the great new apartment hotel in his home town, looking out at the street that had been a meadow when he went away.

He had chosen the Whittall house from the list the taxicab driver had suggested because it seemed to be located out on the edge of town, and his soul was weary for the quietness and peace of his wilderness lodge. He had spent several days in Chicago shopping, having acquired what seemed to him a ridiculously large supply of clothing and several quite correct pieces of baggage. Porters and hotel clerks no longer looked at him askance. He was as well turned out as any modern young man could be.

The street was wide, and the little park ran down the center, making a boulevard of it. Traffic was whirling on either side, but the little park in the middle made a haven, a wide nice pleasant place to rest between the crossing. There were paths of cement wandering across the park, curving this way and that among the trees, and there were flower beds with late fall flowers in blossom.

A girl was sitting on a bench under a tree, droopingly, as if she were tired and discouraged. It was good to have a bit of green in the midst of the whirl, a quiet place where the traffic could not come, for tired people to rest in. But better still if the meadow were there the way it used to be!

Then suddenly as he gazed the girl slumped in a little crumpled heap and slid off the bench, as if she no longer had the power to help herself.

Greg sprang toward his door and started down the stairs, thankful that he was only three stories up, forgetting that an elevator could travel faster than his feet.

The doorman was startled as Greg burst hatless into the street.

Meantime a crowd had suddenly gathered and were staring. The clerk of the hotel came out and looked across to the park.

Greg gave one wild look around and gathered her up into his arms.

"Get me a taxi!" he ordered.

A boy dashed out into the road and stopped a taxi. A shabby man hurried to the fountain and filled his hat full of water from the basin. A woman walking through the park produced a bottle of smelling salts.

Greg wet his handkerchief in the hat and wiped the girl's forehead and lips. He let the woman hold the bottle of smelling salts under her nostrils, and they were rewarded by a long, slow, trembling breath from the girl, and then a lifting of the fringes of the eyelids just for a fleeting instant that showed great, dark, troubled eyes.

But Greg saw the taxi draw up at the curb, and he swept them all aside and carried his burden over. He got in with her in his arms.

"The nearest hospital, quick!" he ordered, and they whirled away,

"A Clear Case of Starvation, I Guess."

leaving the gaping crowd to discuss the incident.

Greg sat holding the girl in his arms, looking down at the white face against his shoulder.

He drew his breath in sharply. If she was living yet!

There! They were stopping! Yes, this was a hospital building. A white-clad doctor appeared! A nurse! They tried to take her from him, but he bore her swiftly up the steps.

"Hurry!" he said. "She may not be gone yet!"

"The emergency ward is full!" he heard a nurse's voice say sharply. "That fire! They kept bringing them in! Two have died already, but the beds are full!"

"Take her to a private room!" he commanded.

"A private?" another nurse said. "Who is she? We can't put her in a private room unless we know she can pay."

"I will pay. Get her somewhere quick!" said Greg.

She was on a bed at last, with a doctor and nurse working over her. Finally the doctor straightened up and looked around.

"H'm!" said the doctor, touching her pulse again. "A clear case of starvation, I guess. That's all!"

"Starvation!" said Greg, aghast. "You don't mean it! Not in a city full of people!"

"Oh, yeah?" said the doctor brusquely. "You don't pick food off trees in parks. Does she look like a girl who would go to your back door and beg?"

He turned to the nurse and gave low-voiced directions.

They were pressing a spoonful of something between the white lips now, and the girl on the bed drew a slow, quivering breath again and opened her eyes for an instant.

"That's it, sister," said the doctor cheerfully. "You're going to feel better now in a minute."

"A cup of that broth as soon as you can get it, nurse," he said in a low tone, keeping his finger on the pulse. Then to Greg, who was standing anxiously by:

"Yes, sir, you find 'em like this every day. Proud as Lucifer, lost their job, nowhere to turn. All the worse for them if they happen to be good."

When the broth was brought the patient swallowed obediently but did not open her eyes again.

"Will this nurse stay by her all night?" Greg asked the doctor while the nurse was feeding her the soup.

"Oh, she'll be in and out all night," said the doctor. "You know she has this whole hall to look out for."

"I'd like her to have someone with her all night," said Greg. "I'd feel better that way. I feel sort of responsible because I found her, at least till her folks get here."

"Of course you could have a special nurse if you're willing to pay for it," said the doctor thoughtfully.

"I'd like to have a special nurse," said Greg decidedly.

So presently a pleasant-faced capable young woman appeared and took charge. Greg motioned her out in the hall and talked to her in low tones.

"This girl was sitting on a park bench when I first saw her from my hotel window," he told her, "and while I was watching she fell off the bench. I brought her here and I'm arranging for her to have this room as long as she needs it till she is able to go away. But she doesn't know me and I don't know her. Maybe she might not like it to have me meddling in her affairs, but you don't need to say anything about it, do you? Just let on the hospital put her in here, can't you? I don't want to put her under any obligation."

"I see," said the nurse. "We'll fix that up all right."

"I wonder," said Greg almost shyly, "if I should leave you my telephone number would you call me in case you found out, or there was anything at all that I could do to help? In the night or any time! There's a telephone in my room. It wouldn't bother me a bit."

"Sure, I'll let you know if there is any change or anything you can do. But I guess you needn't worry. The doctor seemed to think her heart was pretty good. And I'll be right here all night."

CHAPTER II

Greg went into the dining room and ate a good dinner, surprised to find that it was well on toward eight o'clock. Why, it had been still daylight when he took that girl to the hospital!

While he ate he was thinking about the hospital. He remembered various bronze tablets he had seen about on the walls as he waited for his receipt to be signed at the office.

Why wouldn't it be a nice thing for him to endow one of those rooms so it could be used for strangers? He could put up a tablet on the door with his mother's name, a memorial to her.

The idea made him quite happy, and after he had finished his dinner he went out and walked beside the fountain in the little park, strolling past the bench where the girl had sat, even sitting down upon it a moment to wonder why she had sat there, and what had happened that had brought her into such a sorrowful situation.

As he got up his foot struck against something in the grass, something soft and yielding that slid across the pavement as he hit it.

He stooped and picked it up wonderingly. It was a flat purse with a strap across the back, one of the kind that most girls carried. It had a look of thinness about it that betokened nothing inside. He took it over and stood beneath the arc-light studying it and turning it over thoughtfully. Could that belong to the girl he had picked up, and could she possibly have dropped it as she fell?

It proved to be absolutely empty save for a thin letter addressed to Miss Margaret McLaren, 1456 Rodman street, that city. There wasn't even a penny in the little middle purse that obviously was meant for change. His heart went out with pity toward the poor child, for he felt absolutely certain that this pocketbook belonged to the girl he had picked up in the park.

He studied the envelope carefully. Where would Rodman street be?

He looked at the letter again uncertainly. It was postmarked Vermont but the town was so blurred it was unreadable. Ought he perhaps to know what was in that letter? Well, not yet anyway. If he could find her people nothing else was his affair.

English Botanist Studied Weather and Turned Forecasting Into Real Science

If a certain Scottish schoolmaster, about eighty years ago, had not been a spare-time plant-hunter, he would probably have lived and died an obscure dominie. But his hobby has indirectly caused his name to become a household word, says a writer in London Answers Magazine.

He was Alexander ("Cold Spell") Buchan, 1829-1910. Being a botanist he studied the weather in order to try to choose fine days for his plant-gathering expeditions. Cyclones, isobars, high-pressure systems and so on gradually got a grip on him—until he gave up teaching to become head of the Scottish Meteorological society.

The work he and Vice Admiral Fitzroy did in studying weather conditions all over the world, charting the winds, keeping records of cloudiness, rainfall, temperature, and the rest, turned our age-old study of the weather into a science. Not until Buchan and Fitzroy accumulated data from all over the world were we able to forecast with reasonable accuracy.

Today the forecasts are made out after reports have been sent to the meteorological department of the air ministry from hundreds of observers, including coastguards, airmen, sailors, and other meteorologists in all parts of the northern hemisphere.

But in 1861, when a daily paper first published weather forecasts, there was a flood of protests. Questions were asked in the House of Commons. Wasn't it duping the public to issue such forecasts?

And as a result the government brought pressure to bear upon the press, and the weather bulletins were temporarily dropped!

The American railroads remain the outstanding transportation industry of the country—dependable—progressive—safe. Despite higher operating costs, increasing taxes and strict regulation, they are giving 50% faster freight service, have reduced loss and damage 80%, and are today hauling all kinds of freight—from sand to silk—at an average cost to the shipper of less than one cent per ton per mile. And although some higher rates have just been granted and others are being sought, if all are allowed the price of railroad transportation would still be cheaper than in recent years.

Freight rates on the L & N are down, too. In 1936 shippers over the L & N saved $28,000,000 in freight charges, compared with what they would have paid at the average rate of 1921.

The L & N is proud of its 87-year record in serving the people of the South and hopes to merit their continued patronage.

Whether you have a shipment to make or a trip to take, any L & N representative will be glad to assist you.

DOARD OF REVENUE ORDERS REMODELING OF JAIL

The numerous jail breaks from the Shelby County jail have caused the Board of Revenue to take immediate action and order a complete remodeling of the jail house. The inadequate equipment will be replaced with modern cells, swinging bunks, and a new installment of the lighting systemn, which will make it impossible for a prisoner to escape. The contract for over $11,000 worth of material and labor will when finished assure safety for the prisoners and will prevent further escapes. Another step forward in the March of Progression for Shelby County.

BUTLER, LICENSE COLLECTOR

One of the most likable officials in the Courthouse at present is Clyde Butler of Siluria. Even if his task is not a pleasant one that of collecting delinquent licenses, he has the knack of knowing how to deal with Mr and Mrs Delinquent Tax Payer, and of collecting the tax with a smile and making 'em like it! Mr. Butler possesses the rare gift - - - of a pleasing and magnetic personality. His genuine friendliness and enthusiastic interest in his work has won for him many friends in this section.

Alabama was one of the first States to enact an Unemployment Compensation law. The law enacted by the 1935 legislature has served as a model for the other States and it was the Alabama law that stood the test in the United States Supreme Court. On January 1, 1938 the State will begin paying compensation to insured workers out of employment. The compensation will cover sixteen weeks of idleness.

Alabama used only about one fourth of her convicts in road construction last year but built more roads with convict labor than any other State in the Union.

The Alabama State Highway Commission has advertised for bids on fifty-one miles of paving to cost approximately a million dollars. This paving is to be done in the counties of Pike, Geneva, Sumter, Washington and Tuscaloosa. These are all Federal Aid Projects.

THE 1937 CHRISTMAS SEAL SALE

The 1937 Christmas Seal Sale is under way. The quota for county is directed by Mrs. M. P. Jeter, with Mrs. Lena Merrell as chairman of the Columbiana district.

The funds obtained by the sale of Christmas Seals are used in the fight against our ever-present menace - Tuberculosis. Every man, woman and child is a potential victim of this disease and no home is safe from Tuberculosis until every home is safe.

Tuberculosis is a preventable disease and prevention is largely a matter of education of the populace in general. The Anti-Tuberculosis Association has devoted a large part of their funds and their time to educational purposes.

In furnishing necessary supplies to tubercular patients, to aid in the proper disposal of the germ-bearing sputum, and proper training of the patient, they have helped to lower the incidence of the disease markedly.

The greatest advance in the treatment of Tuberculosis has been the development, in recent years, of Collapse Therapy. By collapsing the diseased lung, it is put in a condition of rest; the patient's stay in bed is much lessened and the chances of cure, in a large percentage of causes, is much increased. Then too, from the angle of prevention, Collapse is a weapon of great importance as will frequently clear the sputum of Tubercle germs in a relatively short time—thus preventing the spread of infection.

The Shelby County Anti-Tuberculosis Association is, at present, contemplating the purchase of two Pneumothorax, or Collapse, machines for the use of the practising physicians of the county in giving these treatments.

We can all do our bit in helping to carry on this great work and in protecting our own homes against the ravages of Tuberculosis.

Let us all get behind the Seal Sale and feel that we have done our part toward the control and ultimate eradication of Tuberculosis. Remember that "no home is safe from Tuberculosis until every home is safe."

CULTURE CLUB ENTERTAINED

Mrs. D. S. Lightcap, in her usual charming manner, entertained the the Culture Club on last Thursday afternoon.

Purple and gold chrysanthemums, which were grown by the hostess, made a beautiful display of the Club Colors.

An important business session was held which included some new By-Laws to the Club Constitution. The granting of a loan to a worthy student to complete a business course was also decided upon.

Mrs T K Roberts, always an interesting speaker, reviewed "The Return to Religion" by Link. Mrs. Roberts explained why a person is obligated as a citizen and a christian to serve in the club, school and church work. Also the effect of such service on the person's individuality and character.

A delicious salad course with nuts and crystalized fruit was served from a beautifully appointed table from which hot tea was poured by the President Mrs Homer Walton.

"Private Duty" by Faith Boldwin was presented the Club Library. The next meeting will be a joint meeting with the P T A on Dec. 2 at 7 P M in the High School Auditorium.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Dr. Fred Pearson widely travelled Baptist Minister of Montevallo Baptist Church, will present a program of moving pictures of the Holy Land in Columbiana Baptist Church on Friday night. These pictures are views which Dr. Pearson took while abroad last summer and are interesting as well as as educational. The public is cordially invited and there will be no admission charged.

SERIALLY IN THIS PAPER

GOOD MORNING
MILTON BIRD

Folks are funny. Somewhere every day you hear people talking about the oversupply of dogs in town. Several times, sitting around with nothing to do, we have counted them. Once we decided there were more dogs than families, but nothing was ever done about it. Several days ago a fellow came to town to buy dogs. He hung more chains on a post next to the magnolia cafe than a show rabbit could jump over. He left at dark after hanging around all day, with one shaggy hound some guy had brought in from over the mountain.

Mrs. Ellis says that in Chicago, where Margaret is in school, the weather is 20 degrees. And that Margaret wears so many clothes to keep warm that very often the people take her for a very plump and jolly old lady whose principle vocation in life is sitting around some cozy fireplace munching sweet and fattening chocolates. Remember that bald headed man, Margaret, who was gonna read the history of the big city on postal cards! Well, he's still watching the spiders, who have built the nicest web you ever saw right in his box!

In the winter, when the weather is rough outside, there is always a group of fellows sitting around Simon's stove. Some get up and play pool, others listen to the radio, while still others, interested in neither, pass smoking and talking. Even Simon, busy since five in the morning, usually enjoys it. But one day he had had more than his share of the idlers. They had brought in mud on their shoes, scattered papers over the floor, and dumped their cigarett butts and tobocco quids in the coal bucket. By nine o'clock they had all gone home and we were talking. I said, "they make a mess, don't they?" He looked up at me and sighed. "They do everything in here, Skillet. Yesterday a guy came in I didn't know. As he came toward the kitahen he began taking off his overall jumper and fiddling with his suspenders. Well, I didn't know what to do, but for the sake of my business I had to say something so I told him as nice as I knew how: "Mister, please don't take a bath in my sink, somebody will see you!"

Upshaw Davis saw in the paper that I was to write this column every week. I have written about Upshaw Davis before. Several times, in fact, I guess because he makes such good copy, and too, because I know him so well. When I told him that, he laughed. "Yeah," he reasoned, "you always ride better then y' know th' horse." One time, I remember, Upshaw saved my life. We'll tell 'em about it later, Upshaw. After about two more rehersals!

Up to Mrs. Merrill's to a dance where I ran into Doris and Felton Goodwin. I used to go over with Felt when he was wooing Dorjs. She was teaching school at Siluria then, along with Elizabeth Weldon, Christine Bell, Lucy McGraw, Kate and Mary Bodino. One night we went over in the old Cheverolet Sid had swapped a second-hand sack of corn for. We had told Elizabeth and Doris, over the phone that afternoon, that Felton's car was out of town, but that we were coming over in a friends packard who was in town for the evening. And what a ride we had that night! Several times we decided the thing had completely and emphatically balked, but always somebody turned up with the necassary coaxing and we sallied on. Sometimes as fast as twenty miles an hour, when the hills were high enough!

Uncle Gus Nathen had been collecting old papers for several months. Ever so often, in exchange for old editions of the post, he would give me parched peanuts, adding, in his strange accent, that I come out to his house and see what he did with them. I went one day and found his room nicely papered with hundreds of different publications. It's a hobby with him, I thought, noticing a certain odd artistry about the arrangement. But when I mentioned this to him, he looked at me rather dubiously and said: "I guess it don't matter how dey look, son. Dey keeks out de wind an' de cold, an' dat's whut matters t' a old nigger in de winter."

OUTSIDE LOOKING IN

Tramp Bird—So that's the king of birds, eh? Well, I'd rather be outside and not a king.

Sat Too Much?

With a pair of skates slung over her arm a young woman entered the crowded street car. A man rose to give her his seat.

"Thank you," she said, "but I have been skating all afternoon."

To Be Sure!

"Daddy, I need a quarter."

"Why don't you ask your mother?"

"Cause I've got to have a quarter."

AIMED AT THE MARK

"Did you see that boat shoot like an arrow across the stream?"

"Yes, you'll notice the river at that point forms a bow."

What Irvin S. Cobb Thinks about

The Law's Injustice.

SANTA MONICA, CALIF.—Had it happened in another country, we'd say, "What curious ideas foreigners have of law enforcement."

A footpad with an evil record held up a victim. A bystander saw the crime, identified the thief.

Irvin S. Cobb

The ruffian was held under indictment. But he could give bond. The spectator was "detained" as a material witness—a gentle way of saying he was locked up, exactly as though he had been the criminal. Well, he was guilty of being poor.

Six months later came the trial. The defendant, having been out all that time on bail, looked hale and hearty. The prosecution's witness was produced under guard, pale and sickly from close confinement. It didn't help his health any when the crook's attorney browbeat him, yelled at him, practically accused him of perjury.

The citizen sued the state for false imprisonment, for loss of wages, for separation from his family, for all he'd suffered. Under the statutes he had no standing. They threw his case out.

Meanwhile, the convicted crook had been released by the parole board and was free as a bird.

Aquatic Novelties.

INTERESTING discoveries were made in Hawaiian waters by government ichthyologists. For fear the similarity of sound may lead to wrong impressions, let me state that this department has nothing to do with Secretary Ickes, although, since ichthyology pertains to fish, Mme. Secretary Perkins might possibly have a contrary view on this point. Because they do say there are moments in the cabinet when all is not sweetness and accord.

However, the point is that Uncle Sam's piscatorial sharps dredged up a fish that is most delectable for six months of the year, but poisonous the other six months. So at least they've found a creature emblematic of the California climate.

Let this be regarded around here as treason, I will state that I'm as loyal a native stepson as any that ever came out of Iowa, having been here long enough now to join in passing resolutions endorsing the scenery and at intervals uttering three loud ringing cheers for the sunsets.

Also let envious Florida refrain from gloating. To typify Florida's climate that fish would be good only four months of the year and powerfully hard to put up with the rest of the time.

Lecturing Adventures.

IN ALABAMA is a sect which forbids its converts to laugh or even smile. Now I know who it was bought out the house when I delivered a humorous lecture down there.

The other day a chap asked me why I didn't go back on the lecture platform. I told him I'd appeared in practically ever sizable town in America, and, though it was years ago and probably popular indignation had abated now, still I wasn't taking any chances—I was waiting for some new towns to be built.

Once I tried the experimemt of slipping around to the front door to hear what the crowd said, coming out. That was the night I attempted suicide by gas, but was saved when someone, passing through the hotel corridor, smelled something that smelled even worse than the hotel smelled.

A lecturer's lot is not a happy one. But usually it's the audience that suffers most.

Eating Oysters.

THERE'S a brand-new movement called eat-oysters-in-any-month-you-please movement, or, unless you're working on space rates, it may be called E. O. I. A. M. Y. P. M., for short. Its sponsor says the prejudice against eating oysters in months having an "r" in them is a fallacy dating back 2,000 years when, between hiccoughs, a Roman senator said: "Oysters should be eaten only in certain seasons."

So it appears we've been penalizing ourselves ever since then for the indigestion of a Roman senator, although, so far as eating the California oyster is concerned—he runs around forty to the dozen—I personally could refrain for the whole year without any undue longings. The California oyster looks something like a brass overall button suffering from vertigris.

Still, maybe it's all for the best. Because during May, June, July and August is when the oyster does practically all his courting. There's little enough romance left in the world—and anyhow, who am I to come between an oyster and his love-life? He doesn't seem to have any too much fun the rest of the time.

THANKSGIVING TALKIES

The Inquiring Reporter, armed with pad, pencil and camera, asks famous people of the show world

THE QUESTION

How do you like best to spend Thanksgiving day?

CHARLIE McCARTHY, the only young man in America who is dummy enough to take wooden nickels: "Ah, Thanksgiving, how I love Thanksgiving! There's so much to be thankful for, too, this year. Last year Bergen was too broke to buy me a dinner and I went to bed awful hungry, but we're in the money now—thanks to me. I've already asked Dorothy Lamour to dinner. Of course Dot can have whatever she wants—I'll start with a whitewash cocktail to kill some of those termites W. C. Fields has been sicking on me; then I'll have a bowl of shavings in milk and an oak leaf salad with sap dressing. After that, a slice of oak log well singed over the fireplace, and for dessert—ah! some fresh air and sunshine in Bergen's new car with Miss Lamour at my side! And at eventide home to show Miss Lamour my magic lantern slides of my great ancestor, John Alden McCarthy."

BOB BURNS, hill-billy comedian of screen and radio, bazooka blower de luxe and philosopher plenipotentiary: "Thanksgivin' dinner is a real institution down in Arkansas, and I only wish I could be down there this year. Seein' as how I ain't likely to be able to git away from Hollywood, I'm plannin' to invite Aunt Kezzy Moomaw, Uncle Orchie, Uncle Chig, Aunt Poody, Cousin Labe, Uncle Slug, Cousin Hod and Grandpaw and Grandmaw Snelson out here to eat with me. Speakin' of Grandmaw Snelson, she was the first one to teach me the real meanin' of bein' thankful. She figgered we all had somethin' to be thankful for. 'Why, I ain't got but two teeth in my head,' she'd say, 'but I'm mighty thankful, especially on Thanksgivin' day, because they meet.'

Bob Burns

"I know Grandmaw'll enjoy the potlicker I plan to have, whether or not she can get the enjoyment out of the razorback ham.

HELEN JEPSON, beautiful soprano of the Metropolitan and the Chicago City Opera: "My days are ordinarily so carefully planned and faithfully executed that I have no time at all to play cook. But I love to cook, and on Thanksgiving day I dismiss the servants and really do the cooking. It is always turkey, cranberries, sweet potatoes and pumpkin pie. And while I am cooking, George (my husband) is busy carving the pumpkin which is our centerpiece. Sally, my little daughter, loves it, and George always carves two faces on the pumpkin. One side is a smiling face which Sally sees while she is eating and then when the last bite of dinner has been eaten George turns the pumpkin around and there it is—the face that hurts because it ate too much!"

For instance, if we're not getting too gruesome, here is a picture of that Thanksgiving turkey as it will look along about November 30. "Ask him yourself, dear," was mother's reply. "You are getting married in a month's time and you must have some practice."

CARDUI

In this modern time something wonderfully worth while can be done for practically every woman who suffers from functional pains of menstruation. Certain cases can be relieved by taking Cardui. Others may need a physician's treatment.

Cardui has two widely demonstrated uses: (1) To ease the immediate pain and nervousness of the monthly period; and (2) to aid in building up the whole system by helping women to get more strength from their food.

Anger Is Like Rain

Still Coughing?

No matter how many medicines you have tried for your cough, chest cold, or bronchial irritation, you can get relief now with Creomulsion. Serious trouble may be brewing and you cannot afford to take a chance with any remedy less potent than Creomulsion, which goes right to the seat of the trouble and aids nature to soothe and heal the inflamed mucous membranes and to loosen and expel the germ-laden phlegm.

Even if other remedies have failed, don't be discouraged, try Creomulsion. Your druggist is authorized to refund your money if you are not thoroughly satisfied with the benefits obtained from the very first bottle. Creomulsion is one word—not two, and it has no hyphen in it. Ask for it plainly, see that the name on the bottle is Creomulsion, and you'll get the genuine product and the relief you want. (Adv.)

HELP KIDNEYS

To Get Rid of Acid and Poisonous Waste

Your kidneys help to keep you well by constantly filtering waste matter from the blood. If your kidneys get functionally disordered and fail to remove excess impurities, there may be poisoning of the whole system and body-wide distress.

Burning, scanty or too frequent urination may be a warning of some kidney or bladder disturbance.

You may suffer nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—feel weak, nervous, all played out.

In such cases it is better to rely on a medicine that has won country-wide acclaim than on something less favorably known. Use Doan's Pills. A multitude of grateful people recommend Doan's. Ask your neighbor!

For three generations one woman has told another how to go "smiling through" with Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It helps Nature tone up the system, thus lessening the discomforts from the functional disorders which women must endure in the three ordeals of life: 1. Turning from girlhood to womanhood. 2. Preparing for motherhood. 3. Approaching "middle age."

"LITTLE STORIES FOR BEDTIME"

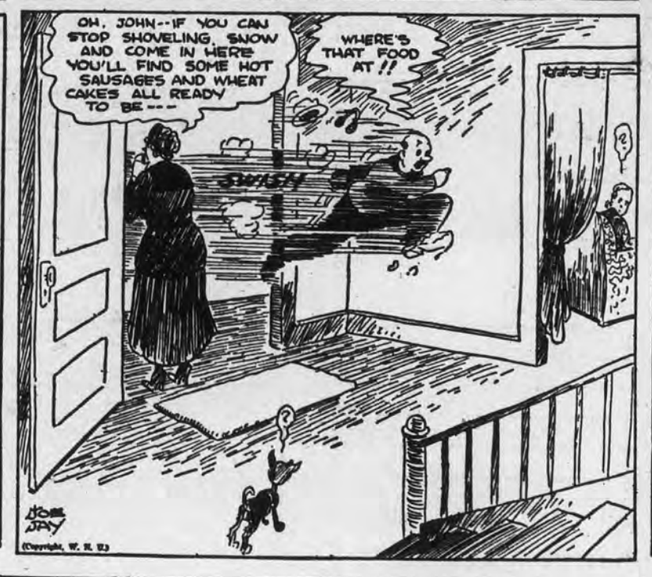
by Thornton W. Burgess

JUMPER THE HARE CANNOT SLEEP

JUMPER THE HARE was growing thin. Yes, sir, he was growing thin. He never had been very fat, but now he was thinner than ever and getting more so every day. What was making him? Why, just worry. That is all—just worry. Here it was the beautiful springtime and plenty to eat, yet Jumper was growing thin. Very few people have a good appetite when they are worried. It was that way with Jumper. He just couldn't eat much, and what was almost as bad, he couldn't sleep much. Now eating and sleeping are what make people fat, and whoever cannot eat and cannot sleep is bound to grow thin. And so Jumper grew thinner and thinner, while almost everybody else grew fat.

It was all because of Reddy Fox. Reddy had made up his mind that he was going to catch Jumper the Hare and Jumper knew it. Now Jumper can outrun Reddy Fox, and when it comes to a race he isn't the least bit afraid. But Reddy is sly, very sly. He knew better than to try to catch Jumper by chasing him. He knew that he would have to catch him by surprising him when he was asleep, or by hiding close to some place where Jumper was in the habit of eating.

Jumper knew that, too. Of course he did. He knew just as well as Reddy did that Reddy couldn't catch him in a race. He felt perfectly safe as long as he could see Reddy or knew exactly where he was. But at all other times he worried. You see, he didn't know but Reddy might jump out from behind any bush or tree, and so he had to be on watch every minute he was awake. That was bad enough, but what was worse was the fact that he didn't dare sleep. Of course, he had to sleep some, but it was in little naps from which the merest rustle of a leaf would waken him all ready to jump and run for his life. Now you know little naps like that give very little rest. And it is dreadful to close your eyes wondering if you will ever open them again. It was no wonder that Jumper grew thin.



It would not have been so bad if Reddy had been content to hunt him in the day time only. But he wasn't. You know Reddy can see in the night. And so he hunted by day or night, whenever he felt like it, and so of course poor Jumper never knew when he might safely sleep. He kept to the deepest part of the Green Forest, hoping that Reddy would not hunt for him there. You know Reddy is more fond of the edge of the Green Forest than he is of the deep, dark lonesome parts. But he had made up his mind to catch Jumper, and so now he followed Jumper to his most lonely hiding places.

It really was quite dreadful for Jumper, and yet it would have been worse for some others had they been in his place. You see, bad as it was, it wasn't quite as bad as things had been in the Great Woods, where Reddy had lived before coming down to the Green Forest. There he had had to watch out every minute for Tufty the Lynx and Howler the Wolf and Mr. Fisher and Mr. Wolverine, which was, of course, much worse than having just Reddy Fox to watch out for. So he had grown used to being always in danger. But since he had come to live in the Green Forest he had felt so much safer and life had been so much easier that now it came very hard to go back to the old way of living.

So Jumper the Hare lost his appetite and couldn't sleep and grew thinner and thinner in the beautiful springtime. And so it was that the fun that his friends and neighbors were having in teasing and making fun of Reddy Fox was really the cause of all the trouble that had come to Jumper the Hare, and he was too polite to tell them about it.

Lesson for November 28

CHRISTIAN FRUITFULNESS

LESSON TEXT—John 15:1-16.
GOLDEN TEXT—Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; so shall ye be my disciples.—John 15:8.
PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus' Rule of Love.
JUNIOR TOPIC—The Loyalty of Love.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What May We Expect to Achieve?
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—How Christians Become Fruitful.

Thanksgiving day has just afforded each one of us a special opportunity to return praise to God for the fruitfulness of America's broad acres. It is appropriate that we think today of the Christian life as manifesting itself in the bearing of fruit.

Christian work of which we spoke last Sunday may (at least in a measure) be imitated, but fruit cannot be imitated. It is the result of life and only those who know the new birth bear the fruit of Christianity.

The chapter before us is a portion of Scripture which has been the peculiar favorite of God's children in all generations. It is at the center of our Lord's words with his disciples immediately before his death on the cross.

Many are the expositions of this passage, but a beautifully simple one which came to the writer from Dr. W. Graham Scroggie is suggested as most helpful.

I. Life and Fruitfulness (vv. 1-8).

Life results in fruit and there can be no true fruit where there is no life. Christ is the vine, the Father is the keeper of the vine. We who are Christ's are the branches abiding in him, that is, living our whole life in and for him in such close union with him that his life as the vine brings forth fruit in us as the branches. That is real Christian living.

But, alas, there are branches that seem to belong to the vine but they lack the one indispensable evidence of life which is the normal bearing of fruit. These the Father must take and cast away to be destroyed. While we must not read into these words more than our Lord intended, let us beware lest we explain away their serious import. These are grave words of warning to false professors of Christianity, but they are not spoken to distress and dishearten true followers of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Fruit in the Christian is undoubtedly first of all the fruit of character but that character is also to show in conduct. Note the progress—"fruit" (v. 2), "more fruit" (v. 2), "much fruit" (v. 5). In order to bear more fruit there is need of pruning and cleansing (vv. 2, 3). Pleasant? Not always, but always profitable. Let us thank God for even the pruning knife when its work is needed.

Do not miss the prayer promise in verse 7. It is an unlimited promise with a closely limited condition. Let us meet the condition and claim the promise.

II. Love and Friendship (vv. 9-16).

"This is my commandment that ye love one another." In verse 10 we read that to abide in the love of Christ we must keep his commandments and now we learn that it is his command that we love one another. We are not to await the impulse prompted by the beauty or kindness or propinquity of someone, but we are to love one another. Many a Christian who has obeyed the commandments against stealing, adultery, and blasphemy has never noticed that he is commanded to love.

The joy of Christ was fulfilled on the eve of Calvary by the love of his disciples for one another and for him. He rejoices today when we love the brethren and love him, for thus we enter upon the beautiful relationship of friends.

Dr. Scroggie says, "We may be God's children without being his friends; the one is based on his gift of life to us; the other, upon our offering of love for him. Are you a friend of God? You cannot have God and the world for friends at the same time. The friendship of the world is enmity with God. The world hates Christ, and therefore will not love you if you are like him."

But, oh! the sweet intimacy of fellowship with him. Read verses 14 to 16. Chosen and appointed by him, for "he first loved us," we are not kept in the distant position of servants but are brought into his circle of friends with whom he shares the glorious secrets of his Father, and our Father. It is a great thing to be a Christian, a friend of the Saviour.

Intellect

Every man should use his intellect not as he uses his lamp in the study, only for his own seeing, but as the lighthouse uses its lamps, that those afar off on the sea may see the shining and learn their way.

The Past

The wise man must remember that while he is a descendant of the past, he is a parent of the future, and that his thoughts are as children born to him, which he may not carelessly let die.—Spencer.

Waiting to Be Sewn

NOW, we ask you, isn't this the layout supreme for Young America, Miss Modern and Mother Meticulous? Childish glee, sophisticated gusto and maternal satisfaction will be the order of the day when you have run-up these swank wardrobe assets. Remember, it's the natural thing to Sew-Your-Own!

For Master or Miss.

It's grand to be young in the wintertime; there's so much fun to be had. Mother, to be sure your edition of Young America has his share of outdoor fun this winter make this smart and complete ski ensemble. (For either boy or girl.) It is styled after a real ski champion's outfit and makes an instant hit with every young husky. (Incidentally, this ensemble rates mighty high as a remembrance from Santa Claus.)

Sophomore Sensation.

Here's a dress after your own heart, Milady!—I betcha. Sew-Your-Own calls it its Sophomore Sensation. And aptly, for its allure and poise are typical of the modern miss. From Paris comes its concave silhouette; from S-Y-O its concise, easy to follow sewing instructions. Make your version in thin wool or velvet for Ace occasions this winter.

Carefully Planned.

Mothers are sweet in almost any kind of dress, but in the trim new model, above right, they're superbly sweet. There's something genteel about its styling. It was carefully planned to bring you the best in style, the most in comfort. A glance at the diagram will convince the woman who sews of its simplicity. Two versions will be better than one of this charming fashion. Anything from percale to sheer wool will do nicely as the material.

The Patterns.

Pattern 1965 is designed for sizes 4 ,6, 8, 10, and 12 years. Size 6 requires 2⅝ yards of 54-inch material for the ensemble, plus ⅛ yard knitted fabric for hat, sleeve and trouser bands and ⅔ yard zipper fastener for blouse front.

Pattern 1359 is designed for sizes 12 to 20 (30 to 40 bust). Size 14 requires 4⅛ yards of 39-inch material. With three-quarter sleeves 4¼ yards are required. The bows and belt require 2⅛ yards ribbon.

Pattern 1402 is designed for sizes 34 to 46. Size 36 requires 4⅛ yards of 35-inch material. The collar in contrast requires ⅝ yard.

Our Presidents

Andrew Johnson spent seven years tailoring before he began to learn the alphabet.

During the years 1797-1801, we had a President, John Adams, elected by one party (Fed.), and a Vice President, Thomas Jefferson, elected by another party (Dem.-Rep.).

Andrew Johnson at the expiration of his term as President became a member of the senate of the United States.

Andrew Jackson introduced "rotation in office."

Taylor, Pierce and Grant were soldiers in the Mexican war.

CHANCES are, when you sit down to Thanksgiving dinner, a goodly part of all you survey has had a ride on the L & N.

Turkeys? Listen to their "gobbles" next time one of our freight trains rolls by. Likely, too, you'll hear some "quacks", "honks" and "cackles"—for our poultry shipments alone run into hundreds of carloads a year . . . Then there's butter, fresh vegetables, fruits . . . yes, a lot of cranberries, too. Not to mention beef and pork and lamb. Nearly two and a half million tons of farm products moved over the L & N last year, swiftly, inexpensively, with clock-like sureness.

Looking at it one way, you'd say that's a lot of freight. Looking at it another way—that's a lot of evidence of being a good neighbor.

SYNOPSIS

Young Gregory Sterling, having made a fortune in the West, reluctantly returns to his home town, and takes a luxurious room at the Whittall House on the edge of town. As he looks across the street to the park, he sees a girl sitting on a park bench suddenly keel over, and rushes to her rescue. He takes her, still unconscious, to a hospital, where the doctor pronounces the case starvation. Gregory engages a private room and a special nurse, Miss Gowen, and gives orders to keep secret the identity of the girl's benefactor. While Gregory considers endowing a hospital room in memory of his mother, for the free use of strangers, he finds a purse beneath the park bench where the girl had sat. Opening it, he finds it empty except for a letter addressed to Miss Margaret McLaren, 1456 Rodman street, with a blurred Vermont postmark.

So Greg started out to find Rodman street and at last discovered the address on one of a row of old brownstone front houses.

There were lights in the second story, and a dim light coming from the transom over the front door; but it was a long time before anybody came and then the door was opened but a few inches over a sturdy door chain.

"Who's there?" asked a sharp elderly voice.

"Does Miss Margaret McLaren live here?" asked Greg.

"No. She certainly doesn't. Not any more!" said the sharp voice. "I told her this morning that she needn't come back tonight whining around for me to let her in. She can't step her foot inside this house again, not till she pays me the three weeks' rent she owes me. And if it's her suitcase you've come for you can't have it till the room rent's paid."

Greg was still for a minute, considering.

"I didn't come for her suitcase," he said. "I was just trying to look up some of her friends, but it doesn't sound as if you were one. I had thought it might interest you to know that she had an accident this afternoon and she's in the hospital unconscious now."

"Accident! Humph! Well, they needn't try to bring her here. I don't intend to take care of any sick people. I got enough to take care of my roomers. I'm sick and old. All I've got to say is she deserves what she gets. Anybody that 'ud give up a perfectly good position just because she couldn't stomach the man that employs her deserves to get down and out. These aren't any times to be so squeamish about jobs. What d'you come here for anyway? Because you aren't likely to get it."

"No, so I see," said Greg indignantly. "Well, suppose I happened to come to pay her rent?"

"Who are you, anyway?" she hissed. "I never saw you with her. Why should you pay her rent?"

"I'm only a friend and you never did see me with her, but I might pay her rent just to save her having to listen to you when she is able to come back again. How much is her rent, anyway?"

"It's $15!" said the woman, belligerently, "and I won't come down a cent for cash, either!"

"Is that all?" said Greg amusedly. "Well, I'll pay it if you'll make out a receipt in full to date."

"I'm not unfriendly," said the woman, "but we have to look out for ourselves. We have to live! I suppose you can come in. If you're really going to pay." She eyed the roll of bills in Greg's hand greedily.

She wrote the receipt painstakingly and handed it over. Greg folded it carefully and put it in his pocket.

As he walked out the door and down the street Greg was thinking of his clean little shack on the hillside with the whispering pines all around. Somehow there was something terribly desolate and dreary in this rooming house. And was this the place where the little white-faced girl had lived? For how long? he wondered.

But then, of course, the pocketbook might not have belonged to her. Or even if it had the letter might not have been hers. He couldn't tell a thing until he found out if Margaret were really her name.

When he reached his room in the hotel he took the letter out of his pocket, half reverently, and opened it.

It was only a torn half-sheet of cheap notepaper, and just a few lines written on it at that, no name signed, either. It read:

"Dear Child—Sam Fletcher is going down to the village, so I write a line to let you know the money came safely. Your Grandfather says, 'Bless the child' and tell her not to send any more now. We'll make out. Get yourself a good warm winter coat. His knee is a little better now, we think. Don't overwork.

"Lovingly,

"GRANDMOTHER.

"P. S.—Is that man you work for all right? It kind of worries me what you say about him. Maybe you better try for another job."

Well, there wasn't any help here. No date except the blurred postmark, and no name of the town or people. Obviously he couldn't let that grandfather and grandmother know. He couldn't go all over the state of Vermont asking for Margaret McLaren's grandparents.

He put the letter slowly back into the envelope. He wished he knew how she was.

Early in the morning his telephone rang, causing him to waken sharply to sudden anxiety.

"Is this Mr. Sterling? Well, this is Miss Gowen, the nurse. I just wanted to tell you that our patient rested nicely all night, took her medicine and nourishment like a lamb and is still sleeping. The doctor came in in the night and says she is doing well. He says she may sleep right on through the day, you can't tell."

Greg felt like a child on a holiday after he had hung up. Why was he so glad about an utter stranger? Well, he was. It was something to have somebody to care about, even a stranger about whom he knew nothing. He had saved her life perhaps. Didn't that give him some right to be glad?

He ate his breakfast joyously, planning what he would do. He had intended going out to see the old landmarks that morning, his old home, the schoolhouse, the church where his mother and he used to go regularly on Sunday, the house where Alice used to live, all the places with which he had been familiar. But that could wait. He wanted to get this business of the hospital fixed up first.

"It Was Very Good of You to Care for Me," She Said.

He found there were formalities. He couldn't just transform a hospital room into any kind of a free place he wished at will. There were officials and there was a board. But fortunately the board had a meeting that morning, and he was informed that he could present his proposition at 11 o'clock.

The board was gracious to this opulent stranger who was willing to pay cash for a room that very often stood idle because it was available only to wealthy people. When the arrangements were completed Greg went to see about having the bronze tablet made for the door, and it was late in the afternoon before he got back to the hospital.

He found the nurse just coming out of the room.

"I've been trying to telephone you," she said. "She woke up a few moments ago and insisted on getting right up and going away. I told her that would be impossible until the doctor came, that we had no right to let her go away until she had been dismissed. Then she said she absolutely must. That she had to go somewhere and apply for a job. She seemed awfully upset that she hadn't got there by eight o'clock. I've had a time keeping her quieted down. I thought perhaps if you could come in and jolly her along a little it might help."

"I'll come!" said Greg with a light in his eyes.

When Greg arrived the nurse swung Margaret's door open and said in a clear, cheery tone:

"Miss McLaren, I'm bringing a visitor to see you. This is Mr. Sterling, who picked you up yesterday and brought you here. He's been anxious to know how you are, and I knew you would want to thank him."

The girl on the bed turned quick troubled eyes toward the young man, and a little color sprang into her white cheeks.

Greg went toward the bed with his cheerful grin.

"But say!" he exclaimed eagerly. "You're looking better already, aren't you? I certainly am glad. You had me scared last night."

The girl managed a wan smile.

"It was very good of you to care for me," she said. "I'm sorry I had to make so much trouble for everybody. You see, I hadn't been eating much yesterday. I was worried, and I just sat down there a little while to rest. I had no idea I would collapse like that. I suppose I'm rather run down. I've been working hard—"

"Yes," said Greg sympathetically, "I can see you would. And it's perhaps a good thing you did collapse just when you did. I'm certainly glad I was on hand to see you fall."

"But say," he suddenly caught himself and looked at the nurse, "am I talking too much? Are you sure I don't tire you, Miss McLaren? I wouldn't want you to have a set-back from my coming in."

"Oh, no," said the invalid quickly. "I'm glad you came. Perhaps you can fix things up for me right away so I can leave. Since you brought me here you ought to know how to cut some of the red tape that seems to hinder my leaving."

"Why, sure!" he said reassuringly. "I'll see what can be done, but I don't believe anybody will be willing you should leave right away. You see, you really need a few days' rest after such an experience."

"But I must!" said the girl firmly. "It's absolutely imperative that I go out and see about a job at once. I was to have met a man early this morning, and it is really necessary that I keep my appointment."

"Look here, little friend," he said earnestly, "we really couldn't let you go out and hunt a job today."

"Oh, but please," interrupted the girl earnestly, "you don't understand. I cannot afford to stay here."

"Well, now there you are mistaken, Miss McLaren." Greg spoke gladly, confidently. "This isn't a regular private room and it won't cost you a cent. This room is a memorial room to my mother. And the nurse goes along with it. Isn't that right, Miss Gowen?"

"It certainly is," said the nurse brightly.

Margaret McLaren lay there looking from one to the other of them, and then suddenly her great eyes filled with tears.

"Oh," she said with a quiver of her lips, "I never heard of having rooms like this for nothing, but it's heavenly, wonderful!" Her lips trembled. "I hope some day there may be a way that I can do something for somebody like this. But now listen, please—wonderful as all this is, and much as I would love to stay here and just rest—" the white lids quivered shut for just an instant over the big, dark eyes, "I just can't! I've got to get back to work. There are reasons why—" she paused.

"You needn't try to explain," he said pityingly, "you have a right to keep your reasons to yourself."

"You are kind," she said gently, "but—you aren't really even an acquaintance, you know. I mean—of course you've been wonderfully friendly, but you are really a stranger. You don't know a thing about me."

"You'd be surprised," grinned Greg suddenly, "how much I know. One can't spend nearly 24 hours thinking about a person and trying to find her friends without turning up quite a good deal about her."

"You were trying to find my friends? But I haven't any friends about here."

"So I discovered," said Greg. "But you see I was thinking there might be a mother somewhere worrying and I thought I ought to do my best to find her."

"No," she said with a hint of tears in her voice, "my mother and father died when I was a child, I have a grandfather and grandmother but they are away off in Vermont."

"Yes," said Greg. "I found that out, too. I don't know as I should, but I did. I was going to ask your pardon for that before we get through. But you see I kept thinking maybe you had somebody who would worry about you."

"Why, how could you possibly find that out?" said the girl in wonder.

"Well," said Greg, giving her one of his pleasant boyish grins, "you see, it was this way. After I got back to my hotel I walked over to that bench where you were sitting when you fell. You see, I just got back to this town yesterday after ten years out West, and it happens that park used to be a meadow when I was here before, where I used to go with my mother sometimes to pick violets. So when I went back and sat down awhile and got to thinking about you, wondering who you were and if somebody was worrying about you, and then my foot touched something in the grass and I picked it up and it was a pocketbook. I wondered if it could be yours and looked at it. There wasn't anything in it but a handkerchief and a letter."

The girl suddenly sat up in bed, a kind of fright in her eyes.

"Oh, you didn't telegraph to Grandmother, did you?"

"I couldn't," said Greg. "There wasn't any name signed but Grandmother, and there wasn't any address. Even the postmark was blurred so all I could get was Vermont."

"Oh! I'm so thankful!" said the girl, dropping back on her pillows. "I wouldn't have Grandmother know for anything."

"So am I," grinned Greg, "if you feel that way about it."

The nurse came quietly and brought her a glass of orange juice.

"Am I staying too long?" asked Greg, springing to his feet and looking apprehensively at the nurse.

"No, you're being good for her," said the nurse. "It was just time she had this, that's all. She's going to be fine in a day or so now."

"But really," said the girl as she drained the glass and handed it back to the nurse, "I've just got to look up a job tonight and be ready to go to work Monday morning. I'm so sorry to disappoint you two, you've been so kind. But it's an absolute necessity."

"Yes?" said Greg, dropping back into his chair again. "I was coming to that job. Tell me about it."

"I had an advertisement that sounded hopeful," she said after an instant's hesitation, lifting truthful eyes to his face. "I wasn't sure about it, of course. But I had no trouble in getting my first job last fall. But the head of the firm died and the business went into the hands of a receiver. Then this last job I had to leave. The man was—well—just impossible! He was very offensive. I couldn't stand it. I had to leave without my pay, which made things very hard. And—I wouldn't feel like going back for a reference."

"Now, Miss McLaren, suppose you just put this thing out of your mind and rest quietly here. I'll guarantee to get you a good job by Monday, or as soon after as the doctor thinks it's safe for you to go back to work."

"Oh, I'll take anything, at first. I must, of course."

"No," said Greg, "you won't. You've got to have a good salary. You can't live on 'anything.'

"Now, you go to sleep again and get really rested. I'll be seeing you again tomorrow. Now don't you worry. I've killed a bear and a rattlesnake and fought wild steers. There's just one more thing in that line I'd like to do and that is beat up the last fellow you worked for, and I will yet if he ever gets in my way. But meantime I'll land a job for you the first of next week. Now don't you fret another worry. Goodnight."

He took her slim little hand in his briefly, shyly and then left, with a wave of the hand to the nurse, and a smile like sunshine.

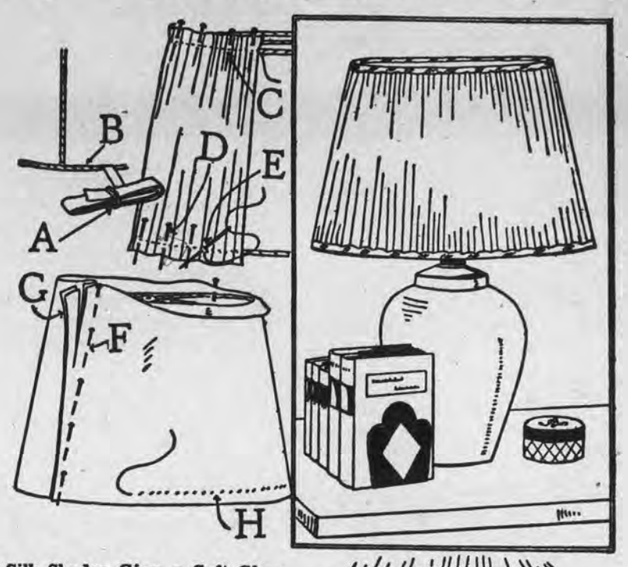
Greatest Density of Hair Is on Chin; Upper Lip, Upper and Lower Cheek Next

When a man shaves he takes off nearly as great an amount of skin as he does hair, and if he goes over his face a second time the proportion of skin that is cut off is much greater relative to the amount of hair removed.

Measurements of both items were made at the Mellon institute over a period of years, says a writer in the New York Herald-Tribune, during which many of the men at the institute did their shaving under scientifically controlled conditions. The lather and all that came with it was carefully saved and analyzed. The skin and hair particles were separated and their volume measured. Samples of both were examined under the microscope.

The research was carried on by Elbridge J. Casselman, research fellow, and Dr. Lester Hollander, of the Pittsburgh City hospital. In their report to the Journal of the American Medical Society they point out that the man with the sensitive face does not have that sensitivity when he starts, but produces the effect through the injuries to the skin by the shaving operation. The man with a black beard does not necessarily have the heaviest hairs in his beard. Two blonds were among the four men who dulled razor blades most rapidly, and two brunettes were among the four who were able to make blades last longest.



Those investigators counted the hairs on the faces of their subjects and found that the greatest density of hair is on the center of the chin, where there are 750 hairs to the square inch. The upper lip came next with 685, and upper cheek next with 500 and the lower cheek last with only 250.

Enamel Romantic Product

The ingredients from which the enameled surface of plumbing fixtures are made come from many different parts of the world. Tin oxide from the Malay States, kryolith from Greenland, barium carbonate from Germany are among the 20 elements which are combined to make the glass-like surface.

HOW TO SEW

by Ruth Wyeth Spears

Silk Shades Give a Soft Glow

THERE is subtility in the light that glows through a silk shade, and many decorators are using them for the room that needs the softness of plaited folds and the mellowness obtained by placing two tones of fabric one over the other.

Two tones of China silk, one to be used for a plain lining and the other for a gathered outside covering will make an attractive shade. Before you buy the material it is best to experiment with samples one over the other trying them both in daylight and over an artificial light. You will also need a roll of silk binding tape matching the top color of the shade. This tape is to wrap the wire frame. And fancy braid either in gold, silver or a harmonizing tone of silk is used to bind the top and bottom of the shade. Use cotton thread to match the outside tone of the silk.

Slip the binding tape off the roll and wrap a rubber band around it as shown here at A. Working from the inside end of the tape wrap the frame as shown at B. The outside layer of silk is put on next. This is gathered both top and bottom and pinned to the wire covering as at C and D so that it is stretched quite tight. Joinings in the outside covering need not be sewed but may be hidden under the folds. This material is sewed in place as at E.

Next, cut a straight strip for the lining and fit it around the outside of the frame as shown here at F. Trim the joining allowing a seam as shown at G. Sew to the frame at the bottom as at H. Trim quite close at the bottom. Turn lining to inside as at I. Slip stitch the joining. Turn in raw edges at top and whip around top of frame. Pin the binding around and then sew it with stitches buried in the mesh of the braid.

Every Homemaker should have a copy of Mrs. Spears' new book, SEWING. Forty-eight pages of step-by-step directions for making slipcovers and dressing tables; restoring and upholstering chairs, couches; making curtains for every type of room and purpose. Making lampshades, rugs, ottomans and other useful articles for the home. Readers wishing a copy should send name and address, enclosing 25 cents, to Mrs. Spears, 210 South Desplaines St., Chicago, Illinois.

Home Heating Hints

By John Barclay
Heating Expert

Rubbish and Garbage Should Not Be Burned in Your Furnace; They Cause Trouble.

I SHOULD like to caution you against burning garbage and rubbish in the heating plant of your home. Many home-owners are given to this practice, knowing it is a quick and easy way to dispose of garbage, but not realizing fully that it is very harmful to the furnace.

Your furnace was built to burn coal, and coal only. Garbage and rubbish, when burned in it, deposit a thick crust of soot on the burning surfaces, and this soot absorbs much of the heat that should go into your rooms. They also form clinkers which, as you know, cause no end of trouble for you in keeping your fire burning efficiently.

Don't burn rubbish or garbage in furnace. They cause heavy soot to cake on surfaces and waste heat and also cause clinkers to form. Keep the ashpit clean.

Remember this: A clean furnace, like a clean automobile engine, will give better service and greater comfort.

Constipated?

Don't Let Gas, Nerve Pressure Keep You Miserable

When you are constipated two things happen. FIRST: Wastes swell up the bowels and press on nerves in the digestive tract. This nerve pressure causes headaches, a dull, lazy feeling, bilious spells, loss of appetite and dizziness. SECOND: Partly digested food starts to decay forming GAS, bringing on sour stomach (acid indigestion), and heartburn, bloating you up until you sometimes gasp for breath.

Then you spend many miserable days. You can't eat. You can't sleep. Your stomach is sour. You feel tired out, grouchy and miserable.

To get the complete relief you seek you must do TWO things. 1. You must relieve the GAS. 2. You must clear the bowels and GET THAT PRESSURE OFF THE NERVES. As soon as offending wastes are washed out you feel marvelously refreshed, blues vanish, the world looks bright again.

There is only one product on the market that gives you the DOUBLE ACTION you need. It is ADLERIKA. This efficient carminative cathartic relieves that awful GAS at once. It often removes bowel congestion in half an hour. No waiting for overnight relief. Adlerika acts on the stomach and both bowels. Ordinary laxatives act on the lower bowel only.

Adlerika has been recommended by many doctors and druggists for 35 years. No griping, no after effects. Just QUICK results. Try Adlerika today. You'll say you have never used such an efficient intestinal cleanser.

W. L. Brown, Prominent Citizen In Monrevallo Tosses Hat In Ring

The Political Pot in Shelby County is daily growing more interesting as various candidates begin making preparations for their political ambitions to be realized next year.

W L Brown, prominent business man of Montevallo, and owner and operator of the Alabama Coaches Co., bus line from Sylacauga to Tuscaloosa, is the latest entrant in the race for President of the Shelby County Board of Revenue.

Mr Brown came to Shelby County from Bibb County in 1912 and since that time has been prominently identified with the commercial development of this territory. He is well known throughout the territory, is a Shriner, and Past Master of the Montevallo Lodge, an Ex-Superintendent of the Baptist S S and is now serving the Church of his faith as Deacon.

Mr. Brown's many friends through out the County will be glad to hear of his announcement for this important official position.

Notice; P. T. A. Members

The P T A will meet Thursday night, Dec. 2nd. At 7 o'clock at the High School Auditorium As guests of the Columbiana Culture Culb.. A very interesting and entertaining program has been arranged, with Mrs. Bruce. Native of Scotland and teacher at Allaabama College, as the speaker of the evening. All Patrons of the school especially the fathers are cordially invited to attend.

D. R. Ray Passes

Funeral rites were held for D R Ray, former resident of Harpersville and native of Shelby County in Birmingham on Saturday morning at ten o'clock. The Rev. J D Hunter of Gadsden, and the Rev. J H Pass officiating. Many friends in the County will regret to learn of his passing. He was 61 years of age and a prominent member of the Methodist Church. He had operated a mercantile business in Rutledge Springs for the past 33 years.

Surviving Mr Ray are his widow Mrs Josephine Rutledge Ray, Mrs V F Clayton, Little Rock, Miss Ella Ray Birmingham and Mrs Lena Merrell Columbiana, three brothers, L B G C; and P L Ray of Birmingham Interment at Elmwood Cemetery.

IN THE WAKE OF FLOOD

This scene was enacted many times in refugee centers established by the Red Cross during the Ohio-Mississippi Valley flood. Inevitably floods bring the danger of disease as drinking sources become contaminated and large groups of people are thrown together. The medical-health service of the Red Cross serves thousands each year, and is maintained by membership funds contributed to the organization at the time of its annual Roll Call from Armistice Day to Thanksgiving.

GOOD MORNING
MILTON BIRD

We were sitting around inside the City Cafe talking. Outside, a cold rain was freezing against the window. It was late but no one thought of going home. It was too cold outside; and no body likes to go to bed in cold weather. At another table, across a counter from us, a tired looking man was busy with a bowl of hot smoking soup. Apparently he was listening to our conversation, but he didn't join in. Somebody said: "They've got to teach Japan a lesson, and I hope we're in on it."

Another reasoned, his voice ringing: "I wish we could get in it tomorrow, at least it would get us out of this same old rut." Then there was a long silence before a very young fellow said: "And think of the fun it would be, while it lasted." And so we talked, happy and free in our warm room, quite unaware of the tortures and hardships a war would bring. After a while the tired man got up to leave. And we noticed then that he walked on the stumps of his thighs. When he got to the door he looked back at us and laughed, a strange hollow laugh that rattled in the close air. "If I were you boys," he said, "I'd try everything else before war!" He fumbled a moment with the latch, raised it, passed out into the night.

Homer Bearden and I were talking - we do it often - and the conversation drifted to Leo Friedburger. "I never saw him out of humor," Homer said. I agreed, and then added: "Even when he doesn't agree with you, he's too busy looking after his own business to let it bother him." There are a few others in town like that. Busy every minute looking after their own little wagons. And always, if you'll notice, they're getting places!

We had gathered at Irene-Lou's Shopp to drink our morning cocacolas. Anne Goodwin, sitting on the counter, said: "Why aren't we still having dances?" Nobody answered for several minutes. During the silence, I remembered those spleded dances we use to have out at the airport. Every body came out and had a swell time. Then Lou, comfortable on her stool behind the stove, added: "Remember the dances Mrs. Pete Jones used to give?" Everyone remembered. We remembered too the food she always had for the midnight snack. And the music . . . . "Oh, Katherina" and "June Night" and "Moonlight and Roses". Loretta Head came in then and the talk drifted down to the old Cotillion Club, high on a hill, with Arthur and his gang playing, "Stormy Weather." But nobody seemed to know why we had stopped having dances, and everyone agreed that we should begin ovel, but I suppose the same old bunch of stags will hang around the same old stoves all winter, and maybe next Spring we'll get together ayain and wonder why we aren't still having dances.

We were riding to Montevallo, talking, looking at the things along the way, when Mr. Charlie Niven said: "You know, when cars first came out nobody ever thought of talking or looking off while driving. The driver kept his attention on his car every minute." It seemed strange to me, and I asked: "Were they scared?" Mr Charlie laughed. He was quite for a moment then told me the story of a Mr Epson, one of the first drivers in Columbiana. "Epson," Mr. Charlie related, "had been driving for several weeks when one day, delighted over his progress, he said to his wife: "You know, I'm really getting to be a professional at driving. Why, I can drive now and spit."

Added at the botton of a letter Maurice had written to Santa Clause: "And please, Santa, send Skillet a house just like Mrs. Ellis'." And some other things too . . . . a seat in Zera Walton's Buick on the way to California to see Alabama play ball. . A farm like Frank Fulton's and his personality to go with it . . . . A little lighter schedule for Auburn, for various reasons . . . . Many more years of foot ball at Shelby High with Hack Wilson doing the coaching . . . . A game next year between Alabam and Spring Hill, also for various reasons . . . A job on the inside every rainy day, and on the outside when the sun is shing . . . . . Yeager Horn's appearance. Hop Cole's friendliness and Charlie Spark's way with the ladies . . . and, Santa, for goodness sake, a little work on the streets!

I wonder what I'd do for Old North State if Clarence Abbott suddenly decided that Alabama had a really good foot ball team . . . and I wonder also how I would get his cigars for him if they didn't. . .

Puzzle . . . . find the fellows, on the street at nine o'clock in the morning, who are looking forward to the coming of the county teachers on institute day . . . . and if that one is too easy, try this one: find the fellows who wouldn't like to be back in school, when those same teachers come down town around twelve o'clock to do their shopping. . . .

Tuskegee Singers At Columbiana Jan. 19th

C. H. S. HIGHLIGHTS

COUNTY HAILS NEW CHAMPS AS S C H S WINS FINAL TILT IN MONTEVALLO 32 — 0

The Shelby Hi Gridmen wound up their current season in a blaze of glory by defeating their ancient foes, Montevallo by the decisive score of 32 - 0. On the first few plays the Montevallo boys fought gamely trying the Shelby line in a series of line bucks that netted a first down. The Shelby boys, however gained the ball and Letson took a long pass on the second play and ran fifty yards only to be downed on th etwo yard line. In a series of line thursts the locals reached pay-dirt for their first tally.

After that run the Shelby boys literally outclassed their foes with Martin geting away on many of the end runs that have proved profitable to the team all season. Thornburg also showed up well and will probably be the "star stepper" next year. Wallace and Connell provided the blocking from the back field while Riddle and Thornburg, guards pulled out to do their share for the backs. The stars of the game for the locals consisted of the entire team and coach namely - Martin, Thornburg, Connell, Wallace, Taft, Wilder White, MacKnight, Riddle, Thornburg, Letson and Wilson - Coach.

This win gave the locals the County Championship.

Shelby High's Season Record:

Shelby
6	Talledega Mutes	0
12	Sylacauga Aggies	19
31	Verbena	2
53	Thompson (Siluria)	0
32	Piper	6
26	Pell City	8
32	Montevallo	0
192	Opponents	27

Five letter- earners played their last game against Montevallo last Wednesday, and two who earned letters this year for the first time.

Wales Wallace, regular for five years, and fullback for several seasons; Frank Martin, quarterback and triple - threat ace, who has played for four seasons; Bill Riddle, 190 pound lineman, who has played every position on the line; Charles Thornburg, husky guard with two years experience; Frank Wilder, big tackle finishing his best year. Connell, in the backfield and MacKnight at center, are playing their first years regularly.

IN DOUBLE KNOTS

"Does the moon affect the tide?"

"Oh, yes, affects the tide with lunacy and the untied with love."

Effective Lecture

"Did you give your wife that little lecture on economy you talked about?"

"Yes."

"Any results?"

"Yes—I've got to give up smoking."—Sarnia Observer.

Two Uses

Teacher—Johnny, what is the function of the nose?

Johnny—To blow and to hold spectacles.

IT'S EFFICIENCY

"You seem to be as successful with the girls as you are with business—how do you do it?"

"By making use of the waist."

Just a Little Smile

TRAINED MAN WANTED

A woman advertised for a caretaker for her town house, and, after interviewing a large number of applicants, found one who suited her, says the Boston Transcript.

"Thanks for giving me the job," said the man; "and might I ask you a question? You stated in your advertisement that you wanted a married man. Does that mean you have some work in view for my wife?"

"Oh, no," replied the woman. "I wanted a married man so as to be sure I'd get someone used to taking orders from a woman."

STUNG AGAIN

"Sam says he ran up against a regular vamp yesterday."

"Some girl worked him for an ice cream soda."

That's Different

Clairvoyant—Young man, do you wish to have your future read from the lines of your hand, the coffee grounds or from the crystal?

Youth—I came to ask for the hand of your daughter.

Clairvoyant—Then will you tell me what are your prospects for the future?

On His Metal

"They tell me that was a wealthy girl you were flirting with this summer."

"Yes, her father made a fortune in some kind of mine."

"Copper?"

"No. Another fellow beat me out."—St. Louis Globe Democrat.

Smart Aleck

"Do you mean to say that Sandy is famous for his after-dinner speaking?"

"I'll say! He always manages to be speaking on the telephone when the waiter brings the check."—Pathfinder Magazine.

More's the Pity

Auntie—I do hope you will like my present. I couldn't decide whether you would like a large check or a small one.

Impecunious Nephew—Any cheque would be ripping, auntie.

Auntie—Ah, what a pity I bought you a striped tie after all.

Try the Icebox

First cannibal (running into camp)—Is I late fo' dinna?

Second cannibal—You is; everybody's eaten.

And That Was Enough

"Do you spend your time with puzzles?"

"No. Only with the one I married."

Optimist

"Every cloud has a silver lining."

"Nickel plate, anyhow."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

BRUTALITY

"You say your brother was very much stuck up at the time of his death?

"Yes, he died of fly-paper."

Father's View

"Tell me, pater, what is heredity?"

"The force, my child, that arranges that all your good traits be inherited from your mama and all your bad ones from me."—Royal Arcanum Bulletin.

Time for Rejoicing

Valet—So the madam has left you? Believe me, I know just how you feel.

Master—Go on, Sparrows, you never felt that good in your life.

Something Done

Mother (to small son who is going to a party)—Now, dear, what are you going to do when you've had enough to eat?

Little Tommy—Come home.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Some Crust!

Father—When I was a little boy, I always ate the crusts.

Willie—Did you like them?

Father—Of course, I did!

Willie—Then you can have mine.—New York Post.

In Step With Santa Claus

KEEPING up with the Joneses is easy—it's keeping up with Santa Claus that has Sew-Your-Own in stitches currently. We got a peek at his wares, though, and frankly we copied some of his artistry. (You can see for yourself there's a "Christmasy look" about today's trio of fashions.) And happily you can do more than look and wish—you can make them realities the easy way: just sew, sew, Sew-Your-Own!

Cute and Cozy.

Look your prettiest in leisure or on the job in the lusciously feminine house jacket (young sister to the house coat) above, left. Santa Claus has ordered thousands of these for feminine friends in his good graces and you know S. C. usually shows impeccable taste in gifts. In handsome silk crepe or very lightweight corduroy it is as cosy as a love seat before an open fire. Make it either in the short length (see inset) or regular dress length.

Feminine Flattery.

Polish yourself off in a brilliantly styled new frock for the holidays just ahead. Sew-Your-Own's newest success (above center) will be your success once you wear it in the public eye. It is most gifted in its distinctive design, below-waist slimness, and all-of-a-piece simplicity. Make your version the very essence of chic in sheer wool or satin, in your most flattering color.

A Blouse or Two.

Tops in the fashion picture just now is that friendly little item—the blouse. A completely engaging one is shown here for women who sew. Wear it tucked in or peplum style. And here's a practical idea: you have a choice in sleeve lengths. For variety's sake, why not make the long sleeved model in silk crepe for dress; the short sleeved one in jersey for sports and all occasion wear?

Pattern 1412 is designed for sizes 32 to 42. Size 34 requires 4⅛ yards of 39-inch material and ½ yard for contrast. Short length requires 4⅛ yards.

Pattern 1394 is designed for sizes 14 to 20 (32 to 42 bust). Size 16 requires 2⅞ yards of 54-inch fabric.

Pattern 1417 is designed for sizes 34 to 44. Size 36 requires 2⅛ yards of 39-inch material; with short sleeves, 1⅞ yards.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., Room 1020, 211 W. Wacker Dr., Chicago, Ill. Price of patterns, 15 cents (in coins) each.

Uncle Phil Says:

Of Her Own Making

Sometimes when a woman recklessly debunks her husband to his face, she breaks his spirit and finds she is linked to a worthless man.

The kind of charity that appeals to your heart is the kind that can be bestowed without hurting the feelings of the recipient.

If one hasn't much to lose, one can contemplate his misfortune with quite complacent philosophy.

Good Deed Is Never Lost

He who sows courtesy, reaps friendship; and he who plants kindness, gathers love.

The man whose faults are the kind everyone can talk openly about—and does—is generally beloved.

Human nature doesn't change and ought not to; else we wouldn't know how to handle it.

EASE YOUR CHILD'S CHEST COLD TONIGHT

Tonight, at bedtime, rub his little chest with stainless, snow-white Penetro. Penetro is the only salve that has a base of old-fashioned mutton suet together with 113% to 227% more medication than any other nationally sold cold salve. Creates thorough counter-irritant action that increases blood flow, stimulates body heat to ease the tightness and pressure. Vaporizing action helps to "open up" stuffy nasal passages. 35c jar contains twice 25c size. Ask for Penetro.

YOU CAN THROW CARDS IN HIS FACE ONCE TOO OFTEN

WHEN you have those awful cramps; when your nerves are all on edge—don't take it out on the man you love.

Your husband can't possibly know how you feel for the simple reason that he is a man.

A three-quarter wife may be no wife at all if she nags her husband seven days out of every month.

For three generations one woman has told another how to go "smiling through" with Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It helps Nature tone up the system, thus lessening the discomforts from the functional disorders which women must endure in the three ordeals of life: 1. Turning from girlhood to womanhood. 2. Preparing for motherhood. 3. Approaching "middle age."

Don't be a three-quarter wife; take LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND and Go "Smiling Through."

JUMPER THE HARE CONSULTS BUSTER BEAR

JUMPER THE HARE was sitting under a low growing hemlock tree deep in the Green Forest, where he could look out over the pond of Paddy the Beaver. Jumper was not feeling at all good that morning. No, sir; Jumper was feeling anything but good. In the first place, it was a long time since he had had a real good sleep. In the second place, he couldn't rest easily a minute even with his eyes wide open. All the time he felt as if his heart might jump right up in his throat any minute. And it was all because Reddy Fox had set out to catch him, and gave him no peace night or day.

"Old Mother Nature certainly takes better care of some than she does of others," thought Jumper, just a wee bit bitterly, as he watched Paddy the Beaver swimming about in his pond. "Now, there is Paddy, perfectly safe out there in the water, and here am I, not safe anywhere. It isn't fair. It certainly isn't fair."

Then Jumper looked and listened anxiously for the least sign of Reddy Fox. But all was quiet, and once more he began to think about the unfairness of Old Mother Nature. Now, that isn't a bit like Jumper the Hare. Jumper is almost as happy-go-lucky as Peter Rabbit, and takes things just as they come. It wasn't long before he began to feel a little ashamed of himself for having such thoughts. He thought of those long legs Old Mother Nature had given him to take him quickly out of danger, and then he remembered how Paddy the Beaver has to get his food on shore, or most of it anyway, and how slow and clumsy Paddy is out of the water. The more he thought of this the more ashamed he grew of the thoughts he had had of Old Mother Nature's seeming unfairness and pretty soon he knew right down in his heart that he wouldn't change places with Paddy the Beaver if he could, not even to get rid of Reddy Fox.

He was still thinking of this when a stick snapped a little way from him and his heart gave a great, frightened thump. You see, he had grown so anxious and nervous that whenever he heard a stick snap or a leaf rustle he was sure it was Reddy Fox trying to steal up on him. Jumper held his breath and looked in the direction from which the sound had come. There, shuffling along and muttering to himself, was Buster Bear. Jumper grinned. It was a very great relief to see Buster Bear instead of Reddy Fox. You see, Jumper isn't the least bit afraid of Buster, because he kows he can keep out of his way. Buster knows it, too, and so he wastes no time trying to catch Jumper.

Jumper hopped out and sat up in front of Buster Bear. Buster sat up, too. Very funny they looked as they faced each other, one so very big and one so small, and both sitting up in just the same way. Paddy the Beaver had to laugh as he looked across at them.

"Hello, Buster!" said Jumper. "How do you like the Green Forest?"

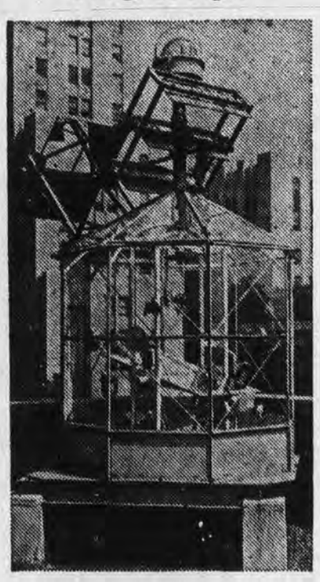
Buster's little eyes twinkled as he grinned down at Jumper. "Pretty well, Jumper; pretty well, so far. Seems to me you are looking thin. Yes, sir, you are looking thin. That ought not to be in the beautiful springtime in such a nice place as the Green Forest." Buster shook his head as if he didn't understand it at all.

"It's all your fault!" cried Jumper.

Buster Bear looked puzzled. "How is it my fault?" he demanded.

Then Jumper told him the whole story, how he had been sent to invite Buster to meet the other little people of the Green Forest, how Reddy Fox had tried to catch him, and then had been terribly frightened by the sudden appearance of Buster and had run, and then how he (Jumper) had run after him just for fun, and how all the little people were making fun of Reddy now, so that he was spending all his time trying to catch Jumper so as to get even. Buster's eyes twinkled more than ever as he listened.

"Perhaps I can help you," said he.



"Oh, will you? That would be perfectly splendid!" cried Jumper.

Lesson for December 5

CHRISTIAN REST

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 11:28-30; Hebrews 4:1-11.
GOLDEN TEXT—Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest.—Matthew 11:28.
PRIMARY TOPIC—When We Are Tired.
JUNIOR TOPIC—God's Great Invitation.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How Christ Gives Us Rest.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Christian Rest.

"Time, like an ever-rolling stream, bears all its sons away," so sang Isaac Watts in 1719. One wonders what he might say today! The mad rush of modern life—its relentless drawing of us all into its terrific tempo—leaves us distraught, nervous, overanxious. Nervous disorders are on a rapid increase, even among children. The condition prevails in the country as well as in the city, although it is aggravated in metropolitan centers.

Let us lay down the burdens of the universe for a bit and counsel quietly about that almost forgotten Christian virtue, rest. Nowhere can the troubled spirit find calm of soul as surely and as quickly as in God's Word—and in the One revealed there, for true rest is

I. Found in Christ (Matt. 11:28-30).

Rest for our souls is found not in the cessation of activity, but rather in joining with Christ as our yokefellow and in going on with him in meekness and lowliness of heart. Most of life's restlessness is the result of pride, of driving ambition to be somebody or to attain something. True humility removes all such disturbing factors.

But we do have a yoke and a burden to bear. Yes, it is true that not all is easy in the Christian life. But as someone has suggested, the burdens are like the burden of feathers on a bird. They may seem to be too heavy for his little body, but as a matter of fact they are the thing he flies with! Such are the "burdens" of Christ.

II. Received by Faith (Heb. 4:3).

Those who believe enter into rest. Faith in God through Jesus Christ brings a man into an abiding place that the storms of life may beat upon but can never move. Fair weather followers of Jesus who fall into a frenzy of fear and worry when sorrow or loss comes upon them need to learn to walk by faith. "Be not dismayed whate'er betide, God will take care of you," is more than the pious expression of a hymn writer, it is a statement of fact.

III. Rejected by Unbelief (Heb. 4:1, 6-11).

"The worst thing in the world" is unbelief — because it effectually closes the door to God's blessing. Jesus could not do "many mighty works" in his home town of Nazareth "because of their unbelief" (Matt. 13:58). Unbelief will keep us from the rest that God has prepared for his people, for it not only hinders men from coming to the Saviour, but keeps them from resting in him after they are saved.

IV. Necessary to Useful Living (v. 11).

Only when the follower of Christ appropriates that rest of soul which results from turning from his own efforts and trusting himself fully to Christ will there be that absolute surrender of every detail and problem of life to him which will bring out in daily living the glorious beauty and power of a life at rest with God.

A poem by Fay Inchfawn which has blessed the writer's soul is here passed on, with the prayer that it may help you who read these notes:

"Well, I am done. My nerves were on the rack,
I've laid them down today;
It was the last straw broke the camel's back.
I've laid that down today.
No, I'll not fume, nor fuss, nor fight;
I'll walk by faith a bit and not by sight,
I think the universe will work all right.
I've laid it down today.

"So, here and now, the overweight, the worry,
I'll lay it down today;
The all-too-anxious heart; the tearing hurry;
I'll lay these down today.
O eager hands, O feet so prone to run,
I think that He who made the stars and sun
Can mind the things you've had to leave undone.
Do lay them down today."

How true it is that we are prone to bear all the burdens of the universe when God's Word has told us to cast all our care upon Him, for He careth for us (I Pet. 5:7). It is a powerful testimony for Christ when distraught and worry-ridden non-Christians see God's children walking steady and true in the midst of disappointments, trials, and sorrows. And the opposite is also true, that failure to trust God is a practical denial of our professed faith.

HOW TO SEW
by Ruth Wyeth Spears

Thumbtack Your Draperies to a Board.

TO GIVE draperies the smartly tailored effect obtained by the professional decorator, a valance board must be used. A straight one by two inch board will be needed. A small finishing nail in the top of the window casing near each end and screw eyes placed near the top of the back of the valance board will hold it in place as shown at A. Both side drapes and valance may be thumbtacked to the board and then be quickly hung all at once by hooking the screw eyes over the finishing nails. Think of the advantage on cleaning day! Just lift board and all off the nails and take outside for dusting.

Tack the side drapes to the board first as at B, arranging fullness in flat pleats. In making the valance, allow enough material to fold around the ends of the board as at C; then tack it along the top, stretching it just enough so that it is perfectly smooth.

The valance shown here is made of glazed chintz and matches the glazed chintz border that faces the edges of the side drapes. The glass curtains may be hung just inside the window frame or to the bottom of the valance board.

Every Homemaker should have a copy of Mrs. Spears' new book, SEWING. Forty-eight pages of step-by-step directions for making slipcovers and dressing tables; restoring and upholstering chairs, couches; making curtains for every type of room and purpose. Making lampshades, rugs, ottomans and other useful articles for the home. Readers wishing a copy should send name and address, enclosing 25 cents, to Mrs. Spears, 210 South Desplaines St., Chicago, Illinois.

HOUSEHOLD QUESTIONS

Improving Vegetables.—Sugar, added in the proportion of a fourth of a teaspoon to two cups of vegetables, will improve the flavor of cooked corn, beets, peas and lima beans.

• • •

Manipulating Velvet.—The usual method of pressing seams, especially in velvet, is to get a second person to hold one end of the material while you hold the other. Flatten out the two sides of the seam, then pass the iron along on the wrong side.

• • •

Kidneys With Apple Rings.—Cut three sheep kidneys in halves and skin. Fry lightly in 2 ounces of butter. Fry also as many small rounds of bread as there are half-kidneys, and a large cooking apple peeled, cored, and cut into rings. Place the rings on a hot dish, with a piece of fried bread and a half-kidney on each. Season and sprinkle with lemon juice. Put a scrap of butter on each and serve immediately.

Vegetable Water Sauce.—Two tablespoonfuls butter, two tablespoonfuls flour, salt and pepper to taste, one cup vegetable water or half cup milk and half cup vegetable water. Melt butter in a saucepan, stir the flour and seasonings into it, and stir over the fire until frothy. Add vegetable water gradually and stir constantly over the fire until it boils and thickens.

• • •

Cleaning Brassware.—Brass ornaments should be put into hot soapy water to which soda has been added and scrubbed with a soft brush to remove any polish that may have stuck in previous cleanings. Finish off by rinsing with clean hot water and dry with a soft cloth.

• • •

That Breakfast Omelet.—That omelet will not fall if a pinch of powdered sugar and a pinch of cornstarch are added to the omelet mixture.

• • •

Ripening Bananas.—Green bananas can be ripened by placing them in a paper bag and keeping them in a dark closet for a day or two.

• • •

Concerning Mirrors. — Never hang a mirror where it faces a glare of light. The back of the mirror should be protected so that no light or water could possibly enter.

• • •

When Mending Gloves.—Slip a thimble on your finger when mending gloves and the darn can be made very easily.

He Smiled

HE SMILED—and his home was a place of happiness.

He smiled—and the children ran out of their way to greet him.

He smiled—and his co-workers in business worked better than in any other place of employment.

He smiled—and his business clients and callers spoke well of him, and his business increased.

He smiled—and followed the smile with a brotherly handclasp; and those who were discouraged and downcast went out and took a new grip on life and their work.

He smiled—and while the years rolled on, he grew younger, because—he smiled.

Beware Coughs from common colds That Hang On

No matter how many medicines you have tried for your cough, chest cold, or bronchial irritation, you can get relief now with Creomulsion. Serious trouble may be brewing and you cannot afford to take a chance with any remedy less potent than Creomulsion, which goes right to the seat of the trouble and aids nature to soothe and heal the inflamed mucous membranes and to loosen and expel the germ-laden phlegm.

Even if other remedies have failed, don't be discouraged, try Creomulsion. Your druggist is authorized to refund your money if you are not thoroughly satisfied with the benefits obtained from the very first bottle. Creomulsion is one word—not two, and it has no hyphen in it. Ask for it plainly, see that the name on the bottle is Creomulsion, and you'll get the genuine product and the relief you want. (Adv.)

Ma! I got my name in the paper!

Only Newspapers bring the news of vital interest to you

Headlines may scream of death and disaster without causing you to raise an eyebrow. But if your son gets his name in the paper — that's real news!

It isn't by accident that this paper prints so many stories which vitally interest you and your neighbors. News of remote places is stated briefly and interpreted. Local news is covered fully, because all good editors know that the news which interests the readers most is news about themselves.

Now is a good time to learn more about this newspaper which is made especially for you. Just for fun ask yourself this question: How could we get along without newspapers?

BUY AND USE CHRISTMAS SEALS

No investment pays higher dividends practical and spiritual and in a strictly humanitarian sense, then the purchase of Christmas seals furnished by the Shelby County Anti Tuberculosis Society.

Full value from every dollar so expended is assured. Whenever you purchase several hundred of these harbingers of help for the unfortunate ones, you have the rare pleasure of realizing your generosity that many times; for whenever you place a seal upon a letter or a package, there is a certain satisfaction derived therefrom.

The average citizen who goes about his daily business blessed with health and freedom from disease, is called on only once every year to join in this great humanitarian battle; and then for only a dollar or two. Shall we not respond gladly and gratefully?

The Shelby County Committee in charge of this work this year has joined with the Health Department seeking higher levels of service.

The seals this year are cheerful, and will brighten and adorn any piece of mail. So, let every letter and package, every envelope, every bundle, bear one or more of these banners of a triumphant crusade now being successfully and cooperatively waged by the Welfare and Health Departments of the County and State.

CHRISTMAS

It is a wonderful spirit that prompts people at Christmas time to pause and wish their friends joy, peace, good will and happiness—this spirit makes us all cheerful and lightearted—makes each one's horizon bright with promises—creates enthusiasm—promotes optimism—increased confidence in ourselves and others and much better we could make this little world of ours if we would make it a point to spread the spirit of Christmas throughout the year—it is too valuable to confine to the short Christmas season.

WILTON

Mr and Mrs. Carey Atkinson and family of Vincent and Mrs W Robertson and son of Wilsonville, were Thanksgiving guests of Mr and Mrs J A Bowden.

Early Traffic on Rhine

The Rhine in medieval days carried the shipping of the East; exotic spices and silks were brought up through Italy to the river, there loaded onto boats and so distributed to the lands of the North. The castles for which this region is famous were built for the most part during the Thirteenth and Fourteenth centuries, and the barons who owned them preyed on the trade that passed along the river. When their "tolls" became too heavy the cities along the Rhine had to rise in revolt and go to war to protect their shipping.

Long Distance Rates Reduced on Christmas and New Years Day!

LONG DISTANCE rates for calls made between points within the United States, on both Christmas and New Year's days, will be reduced.

The low night rates that are now in effect every night after seven and on Sundays will apply on both person-to-person and station-to-station calls made Christmas day and New Year's day.

If you can't be with out-of-town relatives and friends you can "voice visit" with them by long distance telephone at little cost.

Since these holidays are Saturdays, you can place calls any time from 7 P. M. Friday until 4:30 A. M. Monday, on both the Christmas and New Year week-ends, and obtain the low rates.

Take advantage of this opportunity to make both Christmas day and New Year's day this year a time of greater happiness for your loved ones and friends as well as yourself. With these special low rates in effect you can talk a distance of 100 miles for 40c; 500 miles $1.10; 1,000 miles $1.85, and greater or less distances at a correspondingly low cost when using station-to-station service. Person-to-Person service is slightly higher.

YULETIDE YIPPINGS

"Only 22 days until Christmas"! So the little desk calender tells us this morning, as we open a silent typewriter, look at the silly little black and white keys, and begin wondering how many of you on this cold, frosty morning have yet caught the Christmas Spirit! About this time, Old Mr. Scrooge saunters in, hands thrust deep in over coat, a scowl on his face, a sarcastic question on his lips, a cynical gleam in his eyes. "What are you tapping off this morning"? says he - - - "YULE TIDE YIPPINGS" says "we" - and if LOOKS could have felled us, there we would lie, unable ever to state another word from our mental laboratory! "Isn't this weather enough to dampen your Christmas Spirit"- says he? - - - "Do we have to read and listen to all this enthusiasm about Santa Claus again this year"? "Sure, Mister", says we-it "Orchids os your budget again"! "Will you have a sprig of holly on your coat"?—Or perhaps a "different frame of mind is necessary"! "SOMETHIN G"! But we found him adamant-No holly-No Spirit No Nothing! No sir-ree-not even "play like" its Christmas and time to turn thoughts to bringisg happiness to the other fellow less fortunate perhaps than we - - Not Mr. Scrooge! He refuses to hear the tinkle of the Jingle Bells-He refuses to think that the reindeers are all impatiently waiting for the crack of Old St. Nicholas' whip-He even goes so far as to state- "There aint no Santa Claus and you know it" - "You make me tired, he continues - - - "You are old enough to know better "etc etc-then, receiving no response, he goes out the door mumbling on down the street carrying the gloom of pessimism along with him-We turn to a sputtering little gas stove for comfort-and a little warmth-more firmly convinced then ever that Christmas Spirit is lacking in Columbiana-and it is growing late-The Christmas Tide is drawing near.

Personally speaking, there is no season of the year which brings me the thrill that Christmas holds in store. I love the sparkle of expectancy in the eyes of the little ones, who all through the day talk of the promise of glorious days to come and who on Christmas Eve curl up in the old arm chair and go to sleep firm in their belief that when Tommorrow comes, all their little requests will have been granted. I like the sparkle and glisten of the Christmas tinsel; the color ful trees brilliantly lighted with softly glowing crimson lights.I like the dainty wrappings for the tie-ups. Paper gay and festive with tiny stars of Hope, or those which merrily flaunt their bright hues of red and green. Another attractive paper design we saw while Window Shopping in the Magic City last week, was dark background of green-with tiny snow covered houses at regular intervals. And no matter how MODERN we become, nor how cynical we grow, all these things bring back the old time Christmas Spirit-Who would want to go thru the Holiday season with out

"Same Old Santa, same old joys
Same old dolls and sleds and toys;
Same old holly, same old tree
Same old gifts for cherubs wee;
Same old carol, same old light,
Same old stockings hung at night,
Same old words of merry cheer,
Same good wishes for the year.
Same old Christmas seems to me,
Thats just the way it ought to be."

Now-Mr. Scrooge, you who met us this morning with your "I don't feel like even talking about Christmas spirit" - -Don't take my Santa Claus away from me-If you just BELIEVE hard enough even now, you can hear the clatter of the reindeer hoofs as perparations are being made for their trek across our humble roofs-Sure you say,-"Thats another DREAM of Yours" - - Ah yes, DREAMS ! ! Know that current song hit-you CAN'T STOP ME FROM DREAMING - Well, you can't stop me from BELIEVEING IN Santa Claus either - Far happier is the man who accepts CHRISTMas in his life and far more prosperous will Columbiana be if some decorations are immediately put up in the stores-and this pessimistic chatter is stopped-and a more optimistic out look on Life is taken - In other words say MERRY CHRISTMAS like you MEAN it- Or, we fear you are going to be quite lonesome when the Great Day dawns and Santa Claus really makes his appearanc down the chimney on December24th and really leaves you only charred embers - and dead hopes! For, Christmas like Life is exactly what you make it!

TOM GARNER

Tom Garner and the University Glee Club are synonomous terms- and musical terms at that. We were delighted to welcome Mr. Garner in Columbiana, upon the occasion of his appearance here with the Universary Glee Club on Wednesday night. Enthusiastic over "his boys" as usual, and interested in that greatest of all known mediums of experession-MUSIC, "Uncle Tom, as he is affectionately called, received a royal welcome from alumni and old friends during his brief sojourn here. We are personally indebted to him for loyalty thru the years and for the encouragement he has often given us when sailing a somewhat "shaky" musical, mythical-DREAM BOAT on the sea of popular favor. A beautiful and a well balanced program of classical and popular selections delighted the audience in Columbiana.

COLUMBIANA CASH STORE

Decorations are now going up in the Columbiana Cash Store accompanied by a melody rendered in stentorian tones from Jimmy Brasher-which sounds a bit like Christmas Spirit to us. He assures us he is of our FAITH and firmly BELIEVES that Santa Clause is on his way-and will land in Columbiana IF we are ready to receive him-Step into the Columbiana Cash Store and we believe you will find buying a pleasure! We found some real bargains this week.

Mrs. Johnnie Fancher and Mrs Edith Caruthers were charming and gracious visitors from Wilton whom we had the happy privilege of greeting in Columbiana on Monday.

Beth Wallace, after spending the Thanksgiving Holiday season in Columbiana, with her parents, Judge and Mrs W W Wallace, returned to Sylacauga Sunday.

Don't forget the Culture Club is sponsbring a play on December 10th. Look Me in The Eye-is the title and they tell me it is GOING GREAT- with a local cast of unusual ability to put it over!

TRAFFIC LIGHT

We have written many articles in an attempt to foster interest in a Traffic Light for Main Street- and here is NEWS for you-The Traffic Light is in town and all ready for installation. We saw it in a garage across the street-This will be a great Christmas Gift from the Town of Columbiana to Columbiana citizens- and will further assure safety in crossing this dangerous corner where four streets intersect. Maybe we can use it for Christmas Decoration. It is red and green you know! At any rate, it is a most useful and long needed civic asset. We proffer thinks to the Mayor and Councilmen for this wise expenditure.

U. S.-BRITISH TRADE PACT

Treaty Planned That May Affect International Relations . . . Insistent Demand for Modification of Tax Laws

Trade Treaty with Britain

IN WASHINGTON and London it was officially announced that the United States and Great Britain had agreed to negotiate a reciprocal trade treaty, which has been sought by Secretary of State Hull ever since he started his reciprocal program in 1934. The negotiations are expected to begin before the close of the year.

Secretary Hull

American administration officials believe such a pact may lead to a commercial union of all English-speaking peoples and will be a powerful influence in preserving world peace.

London looks upon it as an instrument to form a front which all nations may enter later on conditions of most-favored-nations reciprocity, and therefore as an indirect reply to the new German-Italian-Japanese alliance.

Principles said to be already agreed upon provide that Great Britain would receive reduced American tariffs on textiles and coal.

In return she would grant the United States lower tariffs on foodstuffs, certain raw materials, iron and steel and other essentials of a rearmament program.

Immediate opposition to the proposed pact developed among the statesmen in Washington. Senator James Hamilton Lewis of Illinois, Democratic whip, protested against any British accord until the English pay off their defaulted war debt to the United States. He called the proposed pact "trade treason."

Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, Massachusetts Republican, served notice he would sponsor a resolution halting negotiation of all new trade treaties until congress can determine whether they are responsible for the current business recession.

Representative Allen Treadway, Massachusetts Republican, denounced the proposed treaty as certain to prove disastrous to American business. He warned it would throw "more Americans out of their jobs."

Governors Ask Tax Repeal

GOVERNORS of the six New England states, in conference in Boston, adopted resolutions severely criticizing the tax and tariff policies of the administration. They demanded repeal of the capital gains tax and the tax on undistributed corporate profits, and denounced the pending reciprocal trade agreement with Czechoslovakia as imperiling the jobs of thousands of American citizens.

The governors who took this action were Lewis O. Barrows, Republican, Maine; F. P. Murphy, Republican, New Hampshire; George D. Aiken, Republican, Vermont; Charles F. Hurley, Democrat, Massachusetts; Wilbur L. Cross, Democrat, Connecticut, and Robert E. Quinn, Democrat, Rhode Island.

Plotters Alarm France

FRANCE was in a great dither over an alleged plot of the Cagoulards or "hooded ones," and other rightist groups to overthrow the republican government. The secret police have been making many arrests and have uncovered secret arsenals and depots of the conspirators. Among the men they seized was Jean de la Meuse, wealthy textile manufacturer of Paris. In their pursuit of the plotters the police went as far as Switzerland, persuading the government of that country to oust the count of Paris, who would be heir apparent of the throne of France if there were any longer such an institution. He had been holding conferences with royalists.

After Labor Racketeers

FOR four months Eliot Ness, the young safety director of Cleveland, Ohio, has been investigating labor racketeering in Cleveland, especially in the building trades, and then he made a report of his findings that resulted in a special session of the Cuyahoga county grand jury to hear the stories of scores of business men who allegedly have been terrorized by labor union officials. Ness said these men were prompted to volunteer their information because of the security offered them and the knowledge that many others were prepared to testify.

Eliot Ness

In addition to protests from business men that they were being shaken down, Ness also had numerous complaints from rank and file union men that their leaders had obtained dictatorial control of the unions and had used it for racketeering purposes.

This resulted in hundreds of men being thrown out of work, impeded legitimate business, and kept hundreds of thousands of dollars in new industries out of the city, the Ness report was said to have stated.

At a meeting of the Cleveland Federation of Labor, Don A. Campbell, president of the Painters' District council, who had been mentioned in connection with the investigation, called the entire case "a lot of newspaper propaganda which has been passed around since the labor movement began," and added that "it's high time this stuff was stopped."

Harrison Backs Water

PREVENTED from considering the pending government reorganization measure by a filibuster against the anti-lynching bill, the senate engaged in a lot of talk about tax revision. Pat Harrison, chairman of the senate finance committee, after conferring with Secretary Morgenthau, declared that additional revenue to compensate for modification of the undistributed profits tax could be raised only by broadening the income tax base or by a general manufacturers' sales tax.

Senator Harrison

Mention of a sales tax aroused Senator Borah and others, and the Idahoan prodded Harrison until he backed down and said he did not quite mean what he had said.

"If, in the revision of the tax laws, we should lose some revenue, I do not believe, with the spending program that is now going on, that we would help business," Harrison told the senate. "I think the goal should be to try to balance the budget at the first opportunity. I believe the wise way to do it is to curtail some of the emergency expenditures."

Harrison proposed a return to the old normal income tax on corporations and, if necessary, to increase the rate to 18 or 20 per cent instead of the former maximum of 15½ per cent.

Bullet Kills Howard Coffin

HOWARD E. COFFIN, who was chairman of the World war aircraft production board and sponsored the development of the Liberty airplane engine, was found shot to death at his winter home in Sea Island, Ga. Beside his body was a hunting rifle from which one shot had been fired. It was assumed his death was accidental.

SEEN and HEARD around the NATIONAL CAPITAL

By Carter Field

Washington.—How long the present "breathing spell" in the reform battle of the administration against business is going to last is one of the most important questions in Washington. Few observers believe that it is anything more than a strategic retreat. Most of them believe that the offensive will be renewed, with fresh vigor, when the present business recession turns, as everyone hopes it soon will, into renewed prosperity.

Some of the Capitol Hill leaders predict, however, that even if business should blossom like the rose next summer the drive toward "planned economy" will not be resumed until after the election next November. A few even predict that it will not be resumed in full force until after the Presidential election, though this seems less probable. Such a long delay is not compatible with the President's normal mental processes.

Had it not been for the business recession there would have been a battle between congress and the President almost as bitter, and probably as significant, as that over enlarging the Supreme court last winter. Congress was all set for revamping of the undistributed earnings tax, and the capital gains tax, long before the business men back in the districts and states began to blame the whole recession on governmental interference with business management and investment trends. The business recession simply strengthened this determination.

But it also determined the President to yield, at least in part, and to lay more emphasis on balancing the budget. This in turn promises less government competition with private business, particularly in the electric industry.

To Fight Again

The same battle will be fought, but the battleground will be different. The President has retreated to a stronger position. Son James and Charley West, Tommy Corcoran and Charley Michelson, will be found buttonholing senators and representatives to prevent modification from going too far, rather than to prevent any modification at all.

And there may be no fight whatever to force immediate power projects into the seven TVA's. In fact Sen. George W. Norris is already giving out interviews that his understanding with the President on what subject seems to be very different from what the President now thinks it is.

As another result of this "breathing spell" the President and Sen. Robert M. La Follette, of Wisconsin, seem to be further apart than they have been at any time since Mr. Roosevelt entered the White House.

La Follette has never been afraid of taxes—nor of admitting frankly that more must be laid on the small income group. He has consistently scorned the New Deal intimation that the rich could be made to pay for New Deal spending. So he wants to boost the rates on small incomes and lower the exemptions as well. Moreover, he wants the government to go right on with spending—increase it until every available "employable" can be put on the government payroll.

Strategically, this puts the President in between the two extremes, an extremely enviable political position. It may make very much harder the task of the southern conservatives, who hope to win party control, nominate a conservative, and really "turn to the right" in the next national platform.

Tax Revision

President Roosevelt bends to the gale, to keep the New Deal trunk from snapping, but even as he bends he shows clearly the resiliency which will lend power to the swing back so soon as the gale has ceased blowing.

With a congress all set for revision of the tax laws to ease the burden business has been bearing, the President springs in with his message saying some changes are necessary. Then he hints at changes far less drastic than congress was determined to make.

For example, he says nothing about when the tax modifications shall be made.

Sen. Walter F. George of Georgia, member of the finance committee and powerful figure among the group of southern conservatives who hope to take control of the party away from the New Dealers, and nominate one of their number, in 1940, wants immediate revision of both the capital gains and losses and of the undistributed earnings taxes. Not only that, he wants to make the modifications retroactive—to apply to 1937 earnings.

Again, the President wants to use the modification of the undistributed earnings tax as another club against bigness. He says flatly that the tax could be changed, by granting exemptions to small companies, so as to equalize the competition between them and the big ones. Thus, he says, a long step could be made in the direction of preventing the growth of monopolies.

Actually his own Treasury department has proved to its own satisfaction from its own figures that the undistributed earnings tax did not bear so heavily on small corporations as on large ones. Actually most of the suggestions as to why the business recession had come was aimed at big business concerns rather than small ones.

Not This Session

This administration eagerness to confine modification of the undistributed earnings tax is excellently illustrated also in the statement made by Sen. Alben W. Barkley, Democratic leader, after a talk with the President. Barkley said:

"In my judgment, we cannot act this session (meaning the short session) on proposals for amendment of the undistributed profits tax to relieve new and debt-burdened corporations."

Contrast this with Senator George, who says:

"There can be no business recovery unless those who employ labor can retain some of their earnings to pay debts and to expand operations. I am confident the congress will modify the provision imposing the surtax on undistributed earnings, and allow those earnings to be used by business in the interest of the workers."

Some very shrewd observers do not believe the President will insist on the text of his first message. They think it was almost purposely put in general terms. Certainly it left plenty of loopholes. Even his flat declaration against speculative profits—an old dogma of the New Deal doctrine—was not specific.

On this point congress is determined to permit the spreading of losses over at least two if not three years, in clear opposition to the New Deal theory that saving for a rainy day merely makes it rain harder, and sooner.

Again Soft Coal

"Like the poor, the soft-coal industry is always with us," a high administration official lamented at a little gathering of the best governmental minds.

At present two agencies of the government, the Interstate Commerce commission and the bituminous coal commission, are not just seeing eye to eye on this terrifically important problem, intensified at the moment by the fact that the administration is straining every nerve to get business out of its doldrums.

The National Coal association is indignant, both at the boost in railroad freight rates on coal already granted by the I. C. C., and at the present demand for a further increase of about 15 per cent.

The present increase, the association's officials claim, "is to take effect despite the evidence that high rail rates are diverting coal in large tonnage to truck transportation as well as accelerating consumer use of substitute fuels which move by pipe-line. To add another 15 per cent increase to rail freight rates on coal, as now asked for by the railroads, will be suicidal."

The bituminous coal commission, which earlier maintained that the increased cost of coal would be borne mainly by the railroads and utilities, and not by householders, is now perturbed. It is opposing vigorously the increase now on the table before the I. C. C.

But the Railroads

But on the other hand, what is to be done for the railroads? Weakness in their stocks is regarded by the administration experts as one of the big factors in the recent stock market slides, and in the general recession of business. Administration agents have been delving eagerly into the possibility that business could be revived by railroad buying. First there was the idea of lending them more money—pouring it out. But they learned that this would interest only a few roads, chiefly those already in financial trouble. The stronger roads would prefer to do their own financing—if—and that has been the trouble—they considered the situation justified the spending.

So it has become obvious that the railroads must be permitted to earn more, not just to have cheap money loaned to them, in order to start any real amount of spending.

On this phase the I. C. C. is inclined to agree, but it has learned through sad experience, as indeed have the railroads, that rate advances are nonguarantee of bigger earnings. Freight diverts quickly to trucks. The I. C. C. has rather reached the conclusion that the only freight-rate advance that is sure to produce more money in the railroads' treasuries is one on products so heavy that truck hauling is uneconomic. Of these, coal and ores stand out like sore thumbs.

But the danger point has been reached on coal, the bituminous coal commission believes. It is concerned about the switching from coal to other fuels, though of course not concerned with whether traffic is diverted from the railroads to trucks.

You'll be passing the rest cure sanitarium, and, as the windows burst outward, you'll hear pouring forth something like this:

"Oh boy, boy! with one tremendous burst, Irish Goldberg is jamming his way from the red back line right through the black interference! Nothing can stop him!"

But don't get worked up. What you hear is merely a convalescent microphone orator mentioning a checker game between two fellow-inmates and reverting to form.

Virtues in Snakes.

SOMETHING I said recently about the folly of killing every snake on sight, without investigating the snake's character, brought a flock of letters from readers who don't like snakes.

Even a so-called venomous snake may have his better side. In Kansas, in the old local option days, you could get a drink only on a doctor's prescription, excepting in case of dire emergency, such as a snake bite. So every properly run drug store kept a rattlesnake on the premises to serve the citizenry. And the only time a drug store rattler ever refused to bite a thirsty stranger was when he was all worn out from accommodating the regular local trade.

And what though it was a snake that led Eve astray in the garden of Eden? He may have brought sin into the world, but wouldn't we have missed a lot of spicy reading matter in newspapers if he hadn't?

Yep, I plead guilty to thinking an occasional charitable thought for any decimated and vanishing group. I feel that way about old line Republicans and mustache cups and red woolen pulse-warmers.

Political Predictions.

WE TAKE the opportunity to announce that the Literary Digest, or rather its journalistic successor, will not conduct a poll on next year's congressional and state elections. The burnt child dreads the poll.

Let others go around taking straw votes, but, the way the Digest folks feel now and, in fact, have felt ever since last November, they wouldn't start a canvass to prove that two and two make four. Because, look here—what if it should turn out that two and two merely make some more Marx brothers or a double set of Siamese twins?

Anyhow, the business of basing cocksure predictions on half-cocked estimates doesn't seem to be flourishing these days. Figures don't lie, but the citizens who furnish the figures may do so, either unintentionally or just for the sake of a laugh. The rise of candid camerasationalizing—say, we just thought up that word—proves that a photograph of things as they are is mightier than a lot of loose statistics predicated on what the voters may or may not do—and probably won't, when the time comes.

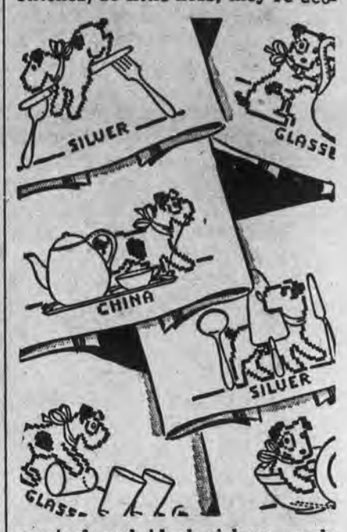
Forgotten Stars.

ONCE interviewers clamored for a hearing and her face was on half the magazine covers and her name in letters of flaming light above all the marquees. Once impressive tycoons catered to her temperamental whims; press agents waited upon her, courtiers attending a queen. Autograph seekers besieged her then, while now only bill collectors desire her signature—and they'd like to have it on a check. Speak of her to the newer generation, and somebody will say, "Who? Spell it, please."

She is all through, all washed up. But, like the deaf husband whose wife has slipped, will be the last person in town to hear the news. Having traveled a road which issues mighty few round-trip tickets, she still dreams of a come-back.



She is the most tragic and the most pitiable figure—and one of the commonest—to be found in this place called Hollywood. She is any one of the host, men and women, who, ten years ago, or even five, were glittering stars in movieland.

Increased by Advertising

In 1869 the per unit of population value of manufactured products in America amounted to $89.60. For the year 1929 the per unit of population value of manufactured products had increased to a total of $579.70. Advertising created the demand that called for the employment of three to four times the number of workers and reduced the cost of products to consumers.

SYNOPSIS

Young Gregory Sterling, having made a fortune in the West, reluctantly returns to his home town, and takes a luxurious room at the Whittall House on the edge of town. As he looks across the street to the park, he sees a girl sitting on a park bench suddenly keel over, and rushes to her rescue. He takes her, still unconscious, to a hospital, where the doctor pronounces the case starvation. Gregory engages a private room and a special nurse, Miss Gowen, and gives orders to keep secret the identity of the girl's benefactor. While Gregory considers endowing a hospital room in memory of his mother, for the free use of strangers, he finds a purse beneath the park bench where the girl had sat. Opening it, he finds it empty except for a letter addressed to Miss Margaret McLaren, 1456 Rodman street, with a blurred Vermont postmark. Reaching Rodman street, he talks to a disagreeable landlady, who insinuates Miss McLaren gave up a good job because of her boss' behavior, and that three weeks' rent is overdue. Gregory pays the rent. He then reads the letter, signed Grandmother, thanking Margaret for the money she sent. When he reaches the hospital to make arrangements for the endowment, he finds the patient improved but insistent on leaving immediately to find a job. He tells her of the room endowment, and guarantees to get her a good job by Monday.

CHAPTER III

—3—

On the way back to the hotel Greg passed a florist's shop and gave an order for roses to be sent to the hospital. They would be sent up that night and be there to brighten Sunday morning when she awoke. He did not put his name with them. It was enough that she should just have them.

Then he set himself to consider seriously how he would go about locating that job for her.

He bought a newspaper and studied the want advertisements. The paper was full of talk of the unemployed. It appeared that employment was a problem, and that there was such a thing as a depression.

It hadn't reached to his wilderness home. It was always depression there. It was something he had expected and it didn't bother him. It was only astonishing that it had been lifted so suddenly and so fully in his case. Well, didn't that perhaps mean that there was an obligation upon him, now that he had money, to help others into something that would solve their problems? Instead of just taking his money as something that would make him independent for life, something that he was to absorb in his own selfish plans and pursuits, why oughtn't he to make that money work for others, in part at least?

Perhaps he was meant to enter into a scheme that would help others, and only through others could he really get the whole pleasure that his money was meant to give. Perhaps there was a business somewhere that he could buy, or set up, that would employ a lot of despairing ones.

There was just one man, as he thought it over, who might have some sane solution of this problem. It was a man he had met on his journey eastward. He had known him only for a day, but his whole attitude of life had made a deep impression upon him. His name was Rhoderick Steele, the minister, who prayed for an elderly man who died on the train.

It had been only a few short days ago that he had parted from this man whom he had come so to admire and love, yet he seemed almost like a dream now. He kept his word and sent him his address that first night he was located at Whittall house after he came back from the hospital, but of course had heard nothing from him as yet.

By and by when he got this little girl started in some position where she was safe, perhaps he would run down to Virginia and see his friend, or get him up here for a few days. He would talk over what a man should do in these days to help get the world straightened out again. This man would know, he was sure he would know.

He went to bed eventually but he did not sleep much.

Meanwhile in an altogether up-to-date apartment not many blocks away from the Whittal house where Greg lived, a girl whose name had once been Alice Blair wakened late that Sunday morning and lay luxuriously reading the society column in the morning paper while she toyed with grapefruit and ate delicate bits of Melba toast and drank strong coffee.

There was news of the great hospital drive to which the smart set of the city was lending its gilded influence. Alice cared nothing for that except that there were occasional openings in such activities where an outsider might slip in and render a service that would be recognized and give entree later to more sacred circles. Then suddenly as her practiced eye ran down the column a name stood out that made her catch her breath and read more carefully.

It was just the last paragraph of the column about the drive and the opening luncheon at which all the great were to appear. It said:

"The committee is announcing a gift just received, the endowment of a perpetual free room for strangers who need special quiet and rest and should not be placed in the ward. The endowment is in memory of Mrs. Montgomery Sterling and given by her son, Mr. Gregory Sterling, who has recently returned to his native city and expects to make his home in this vicinity."

Alice Blair read the paragraph over several times with narrowing vision considering just what this might mean. If Greg had returned and was doing things in this high-handed way in memory of his mother he must have prospered. He must have made some money!

So Greg had returned.

But he hadn't come to hunt her up, though almost any of his old friends could have given him her history. Alice smiled shrewdly, Well, he might be worth looking up. She had no doubt but she could call him to her side again if she found it worth while.

So Alice arose, put on her war paint, got out her feathers, and took to the warpath.

She drove a high-powered cream-colored roadster and wore a stunning green dress. She drove about the city in various haunts new and old, she made descent upon various hotels and inquired sweetly if there was a Mrs. Hemingway-Smith staying there.

The clerk, of course, would shake his head and hand over the registry book saying, "Those are our arrivals today." And Alice would run through the list for several days back and finding no name that interested her, she would sigh and say that she must have been mistaken about the date, and hurry out to her cream-colored car, and pass on to another.

"I Know the Very Place," Said the Nurse Eagerly.

Alice was not easily balked. She had a gift of continuance. But it was not until midafternoon of Monday that she found the name Gregory Sterling in the same old familiar scrawl she knew so well, registered at the Whittal house.

A whimsical smile played around her thin red lips. He might be very well worth looking up. She had been told that he had taken it hard when she ran away to marry Murky Powers.

Well, she would go cautiously. She didn't want to get entangled with him again if he was an undesirable, but—well, there would be ways of finding out.

Greg slept late on Sunday morning, and then, without waiting for breakfast, because it was almost 11 o'clock, he went down the broad avenue, and presently found the street where was located the old brick church that his mother used to attend.

After church he considered what he might do to help Margaret McLaren.

And that afternoon he went to the hospital to see her. The roses were there on the little bedside stand beside her.

"Of course you sent the roses," she challenged him, "and you know you shouldn't have done it, but I couldn't help being glad, you know, that they were here. I couldn't help enjoying them. And I thank you very, very much for being so kind to me."

"I'm glad you enjoy them. And now, how are you?"

"I'm fine!" she said, her eyes shining. "I'm all eager to get up and go to work. And unless you have alrady found something for me you'd better let me release you from your promise. For I know it's not going to be an easy thing to find a job for another person, especially a stranger."

"I protest," he said with a grin. "You're not a stranger. You may have been once, but we're really acquainted now, aren't we?"

"Well, you've been very kind," she said, "but I'm afraid any man who hired me to work for him wouldn't exactly think you knew me well enough to recommend me."

"Well," he said gravely, "joking aside, I promised you a job tomorrow some time, and I mean to keep my promise. All I ask of you is to lie still till the doctor comes on his rounds—when is that, Nurse, about eleven o'clock? Well, I'll be in about twelve, and if the doctor says you are able we'll go into the matter and get it all fixed up. Now, shall we just let it go at that, and will you be good and not think about it till tomorrow? You know, yesterday it was too late to do anything about it, and I naturally couldn't see anybody on Sunday."

"I know," she said, looking troubled, "and that is why it seems as if I'd better go out, too, because you know, I might just happen to land something and go right to work. And you can't of course, be sure that you'll find anything."

"I beg your pardon," said Greg gravely, "I have a job for you now. You could go to work tomorrow morning, only that there are a few little details I'd like to settle first. But if you must get active tomorrow I'll promise you it can be done."

"Really?"

"Yes, really. I'm going to give you a job myself."

The nurse looked up with interest while he talked, and he could see that the girl was studying him.

"This is purely a business proposition," said Greg. "I'm working this out entirely for my own interests. You see, I thought if we could rent an office, maybe in some nice old lady's house, get her downstairs parlor you know, and then perhaps you could get an upstairs room and board right there, then rainy days you wouldn't have to go out at all unless you wanted to. I thought if we looked around we could find some place like that where it would be pleasant for you to live."

"I know the very place, said the nurse eagerly. "There's a dear old lady on Twenty-third street. She owns her house. She's lived there ever since she was married. It's not far from the business section, not a fashionable residential section any more, and she can't seem to rent her rooms. But it's a real nice old brownstone-front house with big pleasant rooms. I know she has a great big front room; in fact there are double parlors that would make a nice office or double office."

"That sounds all right!" said Greg eagerly. "Does it to you, Miss McLaren? How about you, Miss Gowen? Could you get off duty tomorrow morning and go with us? I think it would be a good thing for Miss McLaren to be introduced. I'll bring a taxi and come for you at 11:30, then. There'll be a few things I'll have to attend to before that."

"It seems wonderful!" said the girl again after he was gone. "Do you really think it is all right?"

"Of course," said the nurse. "He's all right. He's a real man, you can see that. And anyway, how many rotten employers have you seen since you landed in this city? You had to take your job where you found it, didn't you? Well, you've run away from one. You can always leave again if things are not satisfactory, you know. But I just know they are going to be all right!"

So Margaret ate everything on her supper tray happily, and went to sleep with a smile on her lips.

Late that night the head nurse got back from her week-end vacation, which hadn't on the whole been particularly satisfying, and went on duty early the next morning with a sour look upon her face.

And the very first thing she did was to walk down the hall to the room where Margaret McLaren was eating her nice breakfast and fling the door wide open.

"What's all this?" she cried in a tone of authority. "I thought I gave orders that this room should be thoroughly cleaned ready for a patient at 8:30 this morning. Miss Martin, are you on duty here this morning? What does this mean? This room was to have had a thorough cleaning."

"It was cleaned, Miss Grandon."

"And you put another patient in here? Who is she? What right has she here? Who gave the order? Is she paying the full price? How long has she been here? This room was reserved for Mr. Mountcalm. Nobody had a right to put anyone in here."

"Why, I think it was an emergency case," explained a passing nurse who was an undergraduate and very much afraid of her superior. "I don't know who gave the order, but the doctor said it was all right."

Miss Grandon marched into the room and confronted Margaret, who was listening to the altercation wide-eyed.

"How much are you paying in this room?" she demanded severely. "This is one of our most expensive rooms for private patients. Were you told of that? Are you paying full price?"

"Oh, no," explained Margaret sweetly, "I'm not paying anything. I told them I ought to be put in the ward, but they explained to me that this was a memorial room for strangers, and then I felt better about it. It was wonderful to have had such care—!"

"Memorial room for strangers?" snorted Miss Grandon. "Nothing of the sort! We haven't a room in the institution like that! Who told you that extraordinary story?"

"Why, the gentleman who brought me here, and the nurse. My nurse is Miss Gowen. She is down at her breakfast now but she will be back any minute and explain it to you."

"Gentleman!" sniffed Miss Grandon. "So there's a man in it, is there? I might have known it. Well, young lady, your young man has been putting a fine story over on you. This room is one of our most expensive private rooms and never has been nor never will be a memorial to anybody. For strangers! The very idea! Well, I suppose one can know what kind of a girl you are then, letting a man bring you to the hospital. Wasn't he any relation to you?"

"Oh, no," said Margaret, her eyes flashing now, and her cheeks suddenly glowing, "he was just a stranger who picked me up—"

"Oh, he picked you up on the street! Yes, I know that kind of a man. And you let him, of course! You didn't object to a stranger bringing you here to the hospital."

"I was unconscious. I had fallen. I didn't know what was going on!"

"Oh, well, that's a nice excuse and it may be true and it may not. However, you're not unconscious now, are you? You're able to get up, aren't you? If you aren't I'll have you moved over to the ward. But if you're able to walk you better get your clothes on and get out of this building before the people down in the office find out what is going on."

Trembling so that she could scarcely stand, Margaret crept from her bed and found her clothes where the nurse had so carefully put them. Her knees were all but collapsing under her, and her fingers were shaking so that she could scarcely fasten her garments, but she got herself dressed in an incredibly short space of time, put on her little hat with the brave feather, took up her flat pocketbook and got herself down the great marble hall, which she was thankful to find for the moment deserted. Got herself slowly, step by step, down the interminable flights of marble stairs and walked out of the door and down the street.

French Scientist Regards Engraving by Eskimos True System of Writing

Perhaps in future we should speak of the learned Eskimos, says a Science Service writer.

A French scientist has announced that Alaskan Eskimos could read and write. He rates them as equals in culture with the ancient Chinese and Egyptians.

This scientist, Andre Leroi-Gourhan of the Museum of Ethnography of Paris, regards the pictures Eskimos engraved or carved on their belongings as a true system of writing. That is, Eskimos used the pictures as conventional signs by which they recorded their acts and intentions, for others to read.

He suggests that Eskimos began by making pictures of their sign language. The sign for beaver was putting two fingers in the mouth indicating teeth. Eskimos learned to recognize drawings of such gestures, or of objects, just as they recognized gestures of a real person.

Ivory bow-drills, used in boring holes and in fire making, were so elaborately covered with neat rows of this picture writing that they became veritable books, on which sagas of exploits were told.

An outstanding usefulness of the writing, cited by the French scientist, was for visiting cards. Eskimo visiting cards were left for visitors—not by them. When a tribe vacated its winter village for the summer one, for example, it might leave a posted plaque engraved with instructions for following the group. Often the visitors who came were stranded travelers, or relatives driven from their own homes in some famine. Reading and writing were thus matters of life and death.

M. Leroi-Gourhan believes the Eskimos have been taken for granted as poor primitives whose disappearance would mean nothing to human civilization. Their ancient art recently surprised archeologists who unearthed fine examples. Now they are candidates for new honor, as men of letters

A Mother Speaks

"I hold aloft the torch and set it farther on.

"I have gone down to the brink of dark waters and from the cold shadows brought back warm and precious life.

"I am an inspiration and a victim.

"I have known reverence and ingratitude, adoration and neglect.

"I have drunk of joys that Heaven will not make sweeter.

"I have felt griefs that endless torment could not make more keen.

"I have been borne aloft on wings softer than those of angels.

"I have seen in loving eyes the light that never was on sea or land.

"I have known the callous cruelty of indifference, the pain of being left behind on the path of life, the agony of 'superiority.'

"I have known the joy of being told that my white hairs are the beauty of undying youth.

"I have known the anguish of being told that I was never young.

"I have known the gladness of sacrifice and its sweet appreciation.

"I have known the happiness of remorse for unmeant indifference, of regret that 'they did not realize.'

"I have slept on pillows softer than down, in which no unfilial hand had ever placed a thorn.

"I have received tributes, nobler than any paid to kings and warriors, from those who testified that what they did and were they owed to me.

"I have seen stalwart sons grow into the likeness of him I loved, and sweet daughters become what I longed to be.

"I have known the glory of fulfillment, the fame of contented obscurity, the humble renown of a completed mission, the overflowing repayment for having given myself.

"I AM A MOTHER."—Frank Marshall.

And Yonder Lay the Tenth Bairn

A divinity professor was asked to preside at the baptism of the latest-arrived infant in the already crowded home of the minister of the parish in Scotland.

The professor gave out one of the paraphrases often used on such occasions.

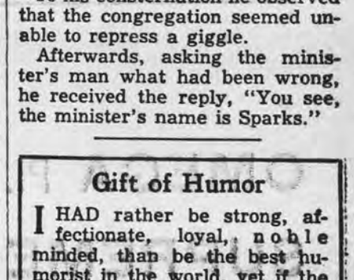
"Let us," he said, "sing from the second verse, 'As sparks in close succession rise.'"

To his consternation he observed that the congregation seemed unable to repress a giggle.

Afterwards, asking the minister's man what had been wrong, he received the reply, "You see, the minister's name is Sparks."

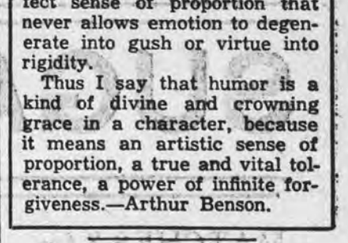
Gift of Humor

I HAD rather be strong, affectionate, loyal, noble minded, than be the best humorist in the world, yet if the gift of humor be added to these graces, you have a combination that is absolutely irresistible, because you have a perfect sense of proportion that never allows emotion to degenerate into gush or virtue into rigidity.



Thus I say that humor is a kind of divine and crowning grace in a character, because it means an artistic sense of proportion, a true and vital tolerance, a power of infinite forgiveness.—Arthur Benson.

A Late Lesson



We learn to walk early in life, but it is not until late in life that most folks learn how to keep their feet on the ground at critical times.—William H. Stuart.

124 DAYS FROM FOUNDATION LINE TO OCCUPANCY AND LAWN-MOWING

NEW YORK (Special).—The $900,000 Administration Building of the New York World's Fair of 1939, already occupied by the headquarters staff, is known as a 124-day wonder. In just so many days, two under schedule, it stood forth completed, with air-cooling system, cafeteria and all facilities in operation. The four-acre plot in which it stands, outside the barriers of the Central Exhibit Zone, had been thoroughly landscaped. Five architectural firms united in designing the structure which is said to incorporate the most advanced provisions for comfort, efficiency and safety. As the "nerve centre" of the $125,000,000 exposition, it is today the hub of multiple activities over the 1,216½-acre site.

S. C. H. S. HIGHLIGHTS

The Senior Class of Shelby County High School is at the present sponsoring a drive to enlarge the School library. Some of the town people have already made contributions among them being Miss Myrtle Miles and Mr and Mrs Samuel A Lokey. Each class has pledged their support to this cause and if the town people will cooperate with the school in this much needed movement we feel certain that the project will be a big success .... If any one wishes to help out in this manner, see any school child or preferably a member from the Senior class committee namely, Upton Baker, T C Rush Roy Simmons, Bill Riddle and Walse Wallace.

The members of the football team are now hard at work trying to make up for lost time on their studies for mid-term test. The teachers have been rather lenient up to this point - BUT - You had better get to work boys - - (Childs)

The town people of Columbiana are entertaining the current championship team of Shelby High with a banquet to be held Thurs. night at 8:00 at John's Steak house. Effort has been made to have coaches representing the four major schools of Alabama to be the honorary guests on this auspicious occasion. It is also rumored that "Good Old" Coach Hosmer will be down and are the boys happy for if you will recall Coach Hosmer was the first coach to pilot a team to a win over Montevallo.

Clean up day was held at Shelby Hi last Thursday under the direction of Professor E H Childs. Every one was surprised when the Professor donned overalls and stood Majestically in the hall and SAW that the work was well done. The work, however was a huge success and the school building looked better than "these old eyes have ever gazed on before". In the mist of swirling dust and flying particles came the pitiful drawl of Lige, the janitor, Who stated "Lawd ah'll have to work double time for a month to clean up whut dese chillun done".

Coach Wilson, since the Montevallo game has worn a constant grin and it is easy to "see through" when he, in a gruff voice yells, "You ought to have beaten those babes 50 to nothing".

(You can't fool us Coach Wilson.)

The night of Friday night last was a four star one for the Football boys who attended the Coco Cola banquet given for the merchants of our fair city. It however happened that only four (including the coach) were there and due to the fine brother like feeling that exists on the team this four found it their duty to devour their brother's portion. Their menu consisted of 34 sandwiches and 18 Coca Cola. So it is for this we say HAIL COCA COLA

"Bun" White former champion "trucker" of the school bows to a new champian in the form of a "tall light and redhead" "Seabones Simmons". Seabones attributes his success to the coaching of a certain darky in the city. Hence- THE CHAMPIS GONE - LONG LIVE THE CHAMP ! ! !

Irene-Lou Exclusive Dress Shoppe Celebrates 2nd Anniversary

Two years ago, there were two enterprising and progressive business women of Columbiana, with enviable repeutations in commercial circles who decided to combine their talents and experience and organize and open an Exclusive Dress Shoppe for Women, specializing in Ready to wear and all accessories necessary for the well groomed woman. The firm, composed of Irene Tinney and Lou McGiboney, need no introduction to Shelby County friends and coustomers, for both have been long and favorably known in their respective fields of succession salesmanship.

It is our happy privilege to join a host of friends in offering congratulations upon their outstanding success in the County, and in cooperating with them in celebrating their 2nd Anniversary Sale which will begin Friday, December 10, 1937.

The writer has looked thru the large stock of Coats, Dresses, Suits, Smocks, House coats, Lounging robes, and the daintiest selection of lingerie that we have seen anywhere and unqualifiedly states that they are prepared to give you greatest value for your dollar we have in Columbiana.

The "Irene-Lou" presonnel appreciate the valuable and loyal patronage they have received during the past two years in Shelby County and are now allowing you to share the profits derived from wise buying in their happy birthday anniversary celebration.

Buying wisely, choosing materials and workmanship carefully, considering in detail what the well dressed woman wants when she purchases a frock or a coat, you will find standard quality at prices which usually are offered in After-Holiday buying, and you may now have that new coat, dress and hat you thought you would buy after Christmas.

When you come to Columbiana during this week end, do not count your shopping expedition complete until you visit this Exclusive Shoppe for your needs.

A large assortment of Christmas gifts are also on display awaiting your inspection, and "IRENF-LOU" are happily anticipating your arrival.

J. F. Pope Co. Offers Christmas Specials

The J F Pope Store of Wilsonville has for many years held the reputation for dependable merchandise at the lowest market prices to assure standard quality. The Holiday Season is fast approaching, and has found many merchants unprepared for the Yuletide rush but this is not true at the large Department Store located in our neighboring town-Wilsonville. We have never seen a larger nor a more complete stock of goods in the County, than is now on display in the Pope Store Wilsonville There is a useful gift of a luxirinous one to fit the purse of all who enter this commodious and modern trading center, Each department is freshly stocked with merchandise and Groceries. In fact, we believe we are safe in stating that anything "your little heart desires", within reason, you will find in Pope's Store.

It is a credit to the County and especially is the Wilsonville community proud of this outstanding "Store with the city's large assortment of goods" located in the heart of old Shelby County" - - - Thrifty shoppers will make it a point to read the advertisement we happily carry this week, and we also guarantee that you will save money by shopping the Pope Store before completing your Christmas needs.

GOOD MORNING
MILTON BIRD

Things that interest me in a strange, unexplainable fashion: the simple, it's-good-enough-for-us philosophy of moonshiners who have only two laws: 'tendin' their own business, an' keepin' their families alive . . . that solemn, pacified look in a juror's eyes, though the attorney is striving vociferously to excite his emotions . . . . the wholesome appearance of farmers, who, no matter how hard the times, tell you with their eyes that their stomaches are full . . . . the happy, we-hope-you're-happy smile of a road house waitress . . . .

The manner in which very old men guess at the weather, knowing, as they must, that the weather is older than they and will run its course regardless . . . that frightened, hopeless look in the eyes of the families of law-breakers, that is twenty times more pathetic than the pitiful stars of their men folk who are facing the bar . . . . . the littleness of hate and the bigness of friendliness, and the way they so often get mixed up in our everyday world . . . the manner in which poor people, who believe in a God, are always huddled around the real and honorable things in life . . . .

The wisdom of age, warning youth of the pitfalls ahead, and all the while giving itself away through emotional delight as the things youth shouldn't do flit across its mind . . . an old lady in a new bonnet, lovelier than when she was twenty, and even more shy . . . . why every man, who comes into a garage, is in a hurry; and why all mechanics so deliberately take their time . . . . why stags, riding to a show, will go forty miles an hour, and then later with girls in the car, when the conversation is naturally more delightful, speed up to fifty-five . . . .

....The peculiar sensation inside, after a walk through the woods, where, on a high hill, I watched one crow watching the surroundings, while several others fed on the ground below. And the thought that tore through my mind: of this envy of nations, and their cruelty and greed . . . the stark certainly of the laws of nature, that make one man do good and the other bad; and the inevitable recompense afterward. . . . why the people who had the most fun climbing the hill dread more pathetically going down the other side . . . .

The hilarious acclaim of the crowd for one who has climbed above their every-day existence, and their equally hilarious lust for his pain when his fortune has played itself out . . . the working man's utter indiference as to how and why his taxes are spent, and for what . . . . and his precise and careful scrutiny of his own personal account . . . . why apples in the old tight-wads garden were always redder than those just outside the fence . . . . and that prohibition lost a greot deal of its glimmer when some states made the sale of liquer legal . . . or if it wouldn't become a very ordinary thing, without glimmer, if the good and the bad didn't keep it forever very ostentatiously and quite appealingly attired . . . .

Culture Club - PTA Holds Joint Meeting

Mrs Karl Harrison and Mrs Lena Ray Merrill were hostesses of the Columbiana Culture Club and the P T A Thursday evening, Dec 2 at the High School Auditorium, with Mrs W F Davis as program chairman. A very interesting and delightful program was given. Those who failed to attend this meeting missed a treat. The Program follows, to let you who did not come, know what you Missed.

The Club President, Mrs Homer Walton, presided in her usual capable manner.

Community Singing was led by Mrs Joe Stone with Mrs Nichols at the piano.

Miss Rennan of Alabama Collage gave a delightful and highly provocative (of a desire for pepperment creams) Reading "Love Locked out" Miss Rennan, a charming reader, so delighted her audience that she was asked for an encore. She graciously responded with Anne Morrow Lindbergh's whimsical little poem "Caprice".

Miss Mary Wooley and Mrs Joe Stone spoke to the lighter side of our nature with two amusing songs "Sweet Ivory Soap" and I Wish I were a Thimp". Mr Appleton, our County Supt. of Schools gave a brief talk on "The Outlook of the School in the Immediate Future for New Buildings". This was especially interesting to the patrons of the schools. He then introduced the speaker of the Evening, Mrs Bruce of the Sociology Department of Alabama College.

Mrs Bruce, who is a native of Scotland, talked about her country and some of its illustrious citizens, concluding her talk with some very pertinent remarks concerning war in Europe. A woman of high intellectual ability and a fluent speaker, Mrs Bruce was informative and entertaining. She expressed herself as being very proud of her country Scotland, and indeed her country can be proud of her.

After the program, the hostesses invited the club and guests into the Home Economics Department where hot tea and sandwiches were served.

Coca Cola Officials Stage Banquet

On last Friday night the Coco Cola officials were hosts at a Banquet staged in the Court house to which many friends and patrons of the popular beverage were invited by the local Representative Rowe Jones.

A Movie "Under the Lid" was shown and talks by Mr Rutledge of Anniston, Ledbetter of Sylacauga and others were enjoyed, after which delicious barbecue and chicken salad sandwiches with Coca Cola were served the 60 guests enjoying the courtesy.

R F Hammer of Selma, representative in the State Legislature and House dry leader has announced his candidacy for the post of Lieut. Governor of Alabama in next year's Primary. This post has not been filled since the death of Lieut. Thomas E. Knight.

L C ABBOTT URGES TAX PAYMENTS

In view of the elections to be held next year, it is highly important that the voters pay their poll taxes at once so that they may be qualified to take part in them in 1938. Mr. Abbott has also done everything possible to assist the public in the payments of taxes, and he urges the people not to wait until the deadline time comes and find themselves rushing to avoid the penalty and interest charges.

COTTON GINNED IN COUNTY

Census reports, according to Gordon Mooney, Special Agent, show that there were ginned in Shelby County 8,388 bales of Cotton from the 1937 crop prior to November 14, compared with 6,204 bales ginned to Nov. 14 1936.

POSTMASTER NIVEN MAKES MAIL EARLY PLEA.

The theme of this year's mail-early plea to the public by C E Niven Columbiana postmaster, is to "help us get thru with the delivery of Christmas mail by Christmas Day by mailing early, and we will get all gifts delivered on time" - - - Mr. Niven gives prompt and efficient service at all times, and a little bit of thoughtfulness on the part of the patrons fo Uncle Sam's shop- will be a courtesy we owe this popular official.

The Shelby County Court held a regular session in the Court room on Monday, Judge L C Walker presiding. A number of cases were disposed of during the one day session.

The Board of Revenue met on Tuesday, Chairman Lyon in his official capacity presiding over the business meeting. All members present. Road work is going forward on the new Road Project recently given an O K by the State in which the present Board played a vital part in putting over for the future development of the County.

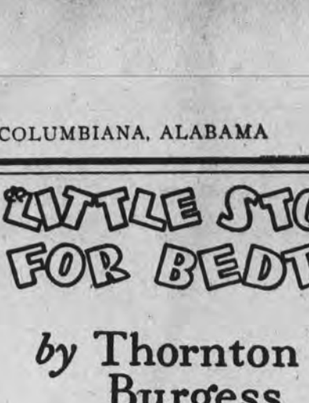
"LITTLE STORIES FOR BEDTIME"



by Thornton W. Burgess

BUSTER BEAR PLAYS A TRICK

BUSTER BEAR and Jumper the Hare had had their heads together. This doesn't mean that they really touched heads. Oh, my no! No, indeed! Jumper is too wise to get so close to Buster Bear as that. It means that they had made plans together. If Reddy Fox had known about those plans Reddy would certainly have kept away from that part of the Green Forest. But he didn't know about them, and so he didn't keep away from that part of the Green Forest.

You see, it was there that Jumper

Softly, Ever So Softly, Reddy Fox Tiptoed Forward.

the Hare spent most of his time, and so it was there that Reddy was spending most of his time now, for he was bound that he would catch Jumper to pay him for making him the laughing stock of all the little people of the Green Forest and the Green Meadows. At first Reddy had been afraid, very much afraid, that he might meet Buster Bear there.

So Reddy, because he is very smart and sly, spent a great deal of time looking for the places where Jumper made his bed and for the places where he ate. Then he would hide near one of these and wait patiently for Jumper to come. But somehow Jumper always went to a place where Reddy was not hiding. The truth is, Jumper knew perfectly what Reddy was doing, and so he never went twice to the same place. That is, he never went twice very near together. If he took a nap under a big hemlock branch and then went out to get a bite to eat, he would finish his nap under another tree instead of going back to the first one. So, though Reddy often found places Jumper had just left and hid beside them patiently for Jumper to come back, it never was of the least bit of use.

But after Jumper and Buster Bear had had their heads together Jumper seemed to grow careless. Yes, sir, that is the way it seemed. Reddy Fox noticed it right away and grinned wickedly. Three times he saw Jumper dozing just in front of a great fallen tree. Then for a fourth time he saw Jumper sit in the same place. By and by Jumper began to nod. Then his eyes closed in the sleepiest way. Reddy grinned and licked his chops. Jumper's eyes opened, closed again, opened once more, then closed and remained closed. Reddy watched a long time before he stirred, but there was no sign from Jumper the Hare. He certainly looked to be fast, very fast, asleep.

Softly, ever so softly, Reddy Fox tiptoed forward. Jumper did not move. A few steps nearer, and still Jumper seemed fast asleep. Reddy stopped long enough to grin, a wicked, hungry grin. This time he would catch Jumper and then he would see if the other people would laugh at and make fun of him any more! Softly, softly, very, very softly he stole forward until with one great jump he would be able to land right on poor Jumper. Very, very carefully Reddy fixed his hind legs to make the spring, and then—well—then he landed right exactly where Jumper had been, but wasn't. You see, Jumper had been just pretending to be asleep, and when Reddy had jumped, he had jumped, too.

Now, Jumper had jumped right over the old tree trunk and Reddy sprang after him. But Reddy is not quite so good a jumper as Jumper the Hare, and while Jumper went clear over the fallen tree, Reddy landed on top of it, meaning to jump down on the other side. But he didn't. No, sir, he didn't. Instead he fell off backward with a scream of fright. What was the trouble? Why, Buster Bear had been lying down on the other side of that old tree, and when Jumper leaped over it Buster knew that Reddy was close at hand, and so he jumped up with a dreadful growl. Just as he had done the first time he saw Buster Bear, Reddy put his tail between his legs and started for home as fast as ever he could go.

"Ha, ha, ha!" shouted Buster Bear.

"Ho, ho, ho!" shouted Jumper the Hare.

"Hee, hee, hee!" tittered Sammy Jay, who had happened along just in time to see the fun.

Works for His Food

A bird who has learned that if he doesn't work he doesn't eat is shown here at mealtime. He is Oscar, a trained goldfinch who brings many sightseers to the bird shop in Sydney, Australia, where he literally earns his seed in the sweat of his brow. The bird's food is placed in a small truck on a runway outside the cage. When Oscar feels the pangs of hunger he hauls on a string and pulls the truck to the side of the cage where he can peck at the contents.

GET READY FOR WINTER DRIVING

No section of our population is more dependent upon the automobile as a means of transportation than the residents of the smaller communities and rural districts.

Yet each Fall, many car owners cause themselves a great deal of trouble and expense by neglecting one or all of the simple yet necessary steps to assure proper operation of the car in Winter weather.

A minimum Winter protection program should cover:

1. Complete change to correct grade of lubricants for motor, transmission and differential.
2. Motor tuned up, including adjusting of carburetor, valves, distributor, sparkplugs, generator and all electrical equipment.
3. Drain and flush cooling system. Refill with suitable anti-freeze solution.

Selection of motor oil and greases for Winter driving is particularly important. You must select an oil which will permit easy starting, that will lubricate the motor throughout the entire driving range of speeds and will continue to do so for a reasonable mileage.

For many years Quaker State Winter Oils and Greases have been recognized as the highest quality and most generally satisfactory Winter lubricants on the market.

Through Quaker State's highly developed methods and equipment it is possible to produce a motor oil which will have a satisfying body over the 400-degree range of temperature it will meet. That is, when the motor temperature is way below zero, the oil will still be fluid enough to allow the motor to turn easily and also to flow freely to all the bearings. Yet this same oil has enough body to stand up and to give the motor proper lubrication when the temperature inside the cylinder wall reaches 400° and over.

As with any other product you buy, you get what you pay for. An oil of Quaker State quality is necessarily expensive to make. This does not mean, however, that Quaker State is more expensive to use. Being pure, concentrated lubrication, it stands up longer in service. It gives more miles per quart and at the same time gives the bearing surfaces safer protection.

You will want to step into the car, even when the mercury is hiding in the bulb and press the starter with every expectation that the motor will start off with its usual Summer zest. This sure starting, plus motor protection, is only possible by preparedness.—Adv.

Watch Your Kidneys!

Help Them Cleanse the Blood of Harmful Body Waste

Your kidneys are constantly filtering waste matter from the blood stream. But kidneys sometimes lag in their work—do not act as Nature intended—fail to remove impurities that, if retained, may poison the system and upset the whole body machinery.

Symptoms may be nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—a feeling of nervous anxiety and loss of pep and strength.

Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder may be burning, scanty or too frequent urination.

DOAN'S PILLS

"THE doorbell, Amanda! It may be the man with the hobby-horse," cried Natalie Parker, as she gathered up a confused heap of Christmas ribbons and gay colored wrappings strewn about the sitting room.

There was a sound of quick stamping and crunching of boots on the scraper. The old servant opened the front door and a man set an enormous package in the hall, said something about the blustering snowstorm and was gone.

As the woman carried the package in to Natalie, a chirpy sound of funny little tinkling music issued from the bulky bundle. Her black eyes snapped with delight as she cut the heavy cords.

Out tumbled a hobbyhorse, a handsome fellow with a leather bridle; a white, woolly lamb with button eyes and a bell on his neck; a long-eared rabbit with a perky tail; and a queer little whimsical top that seemed to laugh with merry music every time it was moved. There was a wispy angora cap, just big enough for a baby, and a tiny white muff, oh, so little, of real fur with a tippet to match.

Amanda gasped! "All 'em Chrismas gifs! No one cep'in you, Mis Natly, would ever think of sech things! I jes hopes 'em Harlow chillun 'preciates the—the—" but her voice wavered. The sleeve of her alpaca frock brushed across tear dimmed eyes as she picked up the crumpled brown wrappings and fled from the room.

Early next morning Natalie settled back in a train for a five-hour ride, her heart brimming with happiness.

Many changes had come over the young girl's life. Edith, her older sister, married Arnold Harlow and lived in Hillsboro. Her house adjoined the lovely old rambling stone homestead where Benjamin Parker, a widower, lived with his daughter Natalie and the faithful Amanda. When Mr. Parker passed away Natalie closed the house and went to teach kindergarten in Boston. Amanda went with her.

The train dashed along through a whirling snowstorm. Deep in the tender mood of reminiscent reverie, Natalie fell asleep.

"Hillsboro!—Hillsboro!"

She awakened with a bound. Clutching her grip, a box of barley candy, and almost dragging the cumbersome and unwieldy pack, Natalie, still half asleep, stepped out at the very end of a long frosty platform.

A tall young man in a big fur coat was waving good-by to someone on the train as it pulled out. In his excitement he took a long, free stride backwards on the platform and crashed into Natalie.

The two went down in the drifted snow in a heap. The cord broke on the big bundle. Helter-skelter the multitude of Christmas gifts scattered in every direction.

They looked at each other in blank astonishment—then amazed recognition.

"Why, Natalie Parker!" gasped the dumbfounded youth.

"Bruce Draper!"—exclaimed the bewildered girl, actually spellbound.

From somewhere in the snow came the sound of queer little rippling music. They looked at each other again with wide open eyes, then burst into rollicking laughter.

They gathered up the wayward toys and Bruce loaded them into his car. With the girl beside him, a triumphant smile played over his face, and they talked excitedly as the motor raced over the hills.

"Mother and Aunt Em just left for grandfather's farm and I'm going up tomorrow, but now tell me about yourself, Natalie."

"Bruce, surprises are so much fun. Edith doesn't know I'm coming."

Natalie got a real surprise, however, in a few moments, for no one was home at her sister's house. After repeated ringing and pounding, she looked at Bruce in dismay.

Her eyes wandered toward the Parker home.

"Oh, Bruce! I have the keys of the stone house! Let's go over and build a fire; we can at least keep warm until they come."

With logs from Harlow's woodpile Bruce soon had a roaring fire romping on the hearth. They stood before the flames, the girl's blond hair like an aureole of gold framing her face; the man, tall and bronzed, alert and capable.

"Let's look through the house," suggested Natalie, leading the way.

At the turn on the stairs there was a wonderful beehive window on the landing, and a friendly window-seat. They lifted the lid. Many things were stored in the seat.

"What's this box? Candles!—Christmas candles!" called out Bruce. "Let's light up the windows!"

Back down stairs they dashed and soon the rambling stone house was a glitter of lights. Bruce went over to Harlow's to get some more logs, and returned with the wood and a package.

"Natalie, somebody delivered these holly wreaths at Edith's; I found them at the back door. We'll put them in the windows. Ho, ho!—What's this? Mistletoe, too!"

"Here's a footstool, Bruce; tack it on the hall arch."

With a flutter of ecstacy Natalie looked up smiling, but the firm face of Bruce Draper wore an expression of grave appeal. With a combination of strength and tenderness he took her in his arms.

"Dear Natalie, this mistletoe is a symbol of the plighting of love's troth." His voice trembled.

There was a moment of silence, a moment of mutual confidence and understanding which had been almost instantaneous. Her blond head rested in the hollow of his shoulder. Through the half-closed eyes warm tears gathered—his words clung to her senses like a benediction.

The heavy front door swung open suddenly. There stood Edith, Arnold, little Phillip and Peter—and tiny Marjorie, looking in wonder, as Natalie and Bruce awkwardly stammered and blushed in confusion.

"Well, well," chuckled Arnold, "we saw the lights—we—we thought—er—," and crossing the hall he gripped Bruce firmly with a friendly hand, while Edith kissed her happy-hearted sister.

"Look here, Bruce," said Arnold, "let's make this the reopening of the old homestead and send for Amanda."

I AM a happy little tree. I stand beside the front entrance of a white cottage on a quiet street. Each Christmas time I bloom out in beautiful colored lights, and all who pass share my beauty and catch something of the joy of Christmas.

But I was not always happy like this. Once I lived in a great forest, surrounded by trees so tall I could only catch a glimpse of the blue sky above me, and I felt very small and lonely. I, too, wanted to be tall; to look out on the big world like the others and feel the sun shining through my branches. I would stretch out my limbs as far as I could, and send my roots deeper into the earth, but my progress was so slow I grew discouraged.

One day I saw a man and a boy coming through the forest. The man carried something over his shoulder and they seemed to be looking for something. Then the boy saw me and cried: "Look, father, there is just the tree we want." He ran over to me and fairly hugged me in his eagerness. The man looked me over. "Fine," he said. But when he began digging with the thing he had carried on his shoulder I began to tremble. I felt my roots snap one by one and soon I lay a tumbled heap on the ground. Life seemed over for me.

Next I was tied to a funny looking thing on wheels, that sputtered and growled when the man and boy climbed in and we started off down a twisty little road that wound through the forest, then out on a big shining highway until we came to a wide driveway that led through a sloping lawn to a white cottage.

Here I was untied and put into a large earthen jar filled with sand and carried into the house, and set in a corner of a big room beside a sunny window. Oh, the joy of having the sun on my branches. I began to feel less scared and to look about me.

In a big mirror opposite I could watch the man as he fastened me upright. Then he put a string of lights from my top to my toe, whistling softly as he worked. Then

Two Little Faces Pressed Against the Window Pane.

I heard a door open and a rush of feet—a little boy and a girl dashed into the room crying: "Mamma, come quick, and see our Christmas tree." They clapped their hands and danced about me. Soon the mother came with a box filled with shining lovely things and my plain green dress was covered with sparkling jewels. I hardly dared look in the mirror for I remembered I was only a humble tree after all, and what I saw could not be me at all; but the great silver star on my topmost branch made me feel very happy. I seemed to draw courage from just looking at it.

After a time I was left to myself. I was glad, as I needed to rest up a bit and get used to my strange surroundings. It grew dark outside and snow was falling; but inside my star shone and a quiet peace came over me.

Then once more the doors opened and a merry group of people came in. This time there were Father and Grandfather and Grandmother, too; and Mother leading the little boy and girl. Everyone was saying how lovely I was; but I did not want them to look at me. I wanted them to see two little faces outside pressed against the window pane. The boy saw them first. "Look, Daddy, Mamma!" he shouted and pointed to the window. "There are two children out there. Bring them in, Daddy; give them some of our Christmas." And the little girl clapped her hands and cried: "Oh, do, Daddy, it's cold out there!"

When they were brought in looking rather scared, but glad, I was so happy I almost shook my baubles off. Then Mother made music on a big box with shining keys and everyone sang Christmas carols. Then Father told the old story of the Shepherds and the Star that led to the Christ Child. Then a jolly man with a red coat and a pack on his back gave everyone presents, including the little strangers. There were candies and nuts, plenty for all, and such a babble of happy voices. I felt the thrill of it myself and the big star glowed in sympathy.

Sew-Your-Own Joins Santa

DID you know, Milady, that Santa Claus and Sew-Your-Own have joined forces to make this the brightest, charmingest Christmas you've ever known? Yes, it's a fact! And you who've tried so hard to be good (and never a little naughty) are going to be rewarded to the full. Gifts by Sew-Your-Own from Santa Claus to you. Here's what you may expect (but remember, "Do not open until Christmas").

Festive Fashion.

You're in line for personalized gifts this year, lucky lady, and what could be closer to your heart's desire than a velvet housecoat—nothing indeed (Sew-Your-Own knows every girl's weakness). So keep your fingers crossed and say a little prayer that December 25th will find you merry, cozy and beautiful in this festive young fashion.

Darling and Practical.

For Miss Keep-the-Home-Beautiful we've specially designed a pair of really different aprons. One is the kind to wear when actually doing kitchen chores, the other is a dressy model—so pretty you will make a darling hostess. Sew-Your-Own sends these out in one package but Santa may split them up, so don't feel slighted, Miss K-T-H-B, if your stocking gives forth only one—either the tea time model or the all-around-the-clock style.

For the Very Young.

If you're a very young lady you may find Gift No. 1393 or Gift Set No. 1423 packed neatly in your stocking one fine morning soon. The former, a dress plus dainty shorts, will be a peachy combination to wear to parties when you want to be "dressed up swell." The Temple Trio, a hat, scarf and muff set, was designed to put a little "Hollywood" in your Christmas. It's as bright and cheerful as you could wish for. Hope you're the winner, little lady!

The Patterns.

Pattern 1210 is designed for sizes 14 to 20 (32 to 42 bust). Size 16 (full length) requires 5⅞ yards of 39 inch material; in medium length 5¼ yards.

Pattern 1422 is designed for sizes Small (34-36), Medium (38-40), and Large (42-44). Plain apron requires 1⅞ yards of 35 inch material for medium size. The dressy style requires 1½ yards of 39 inch material for medium size, plus 4 yards of machine ruffling for trimming, as pictured.

Pattern 1393 is designed for sizes 6, 8, 10, 12, 14 years. Size 8 requires 2⅝ yards of 39 inch material.

Pattern Set 1423 is designed for sizes Small (18 in. head size), Medium (20 in. head size), and Large (21½ in. head size). The ensemble, medium size, requires 1⅛ yards of 54 inch material.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., Room 1020, 211 W. Wacker Drive, Chicago, Ill. Price of patterns, 15 cents (in coins) each.

New Pattern Book.

Send 15 cents for the Barbara Bell Fall and Winter Pattern Book. Make yourself attractive, practical and becoming clothes, selecting designs from the Barbara Bell well-planned, easy-to-make patterns.

Witty Dr. Holmes

Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes, the famous essayist, author and physician, father of the late justice, met a man who had devoted himself to lecturing throughout New England, without much ability for the task. In other words, he was much of a bore. "What are you about now?" asked Dr. Holmes. The answer was, "Oh, lecturing as usual. I speak at Dedham this evening." "Good," said Holmes, "I'm delighted to hear it. I never liked those Dedham people."

"FIVE Minus TWO Leaves FOUR"

WRONG? Well, yes—and no. The arithmetic of your school days taught that "If Mary had five dollars and spent two . . ." three dollars remained.

But that is mathematics—not shopping! In managing a home . . . guarding a limited family income . . . we've simply got to do better than Mary did. We must sharpen our buying wits . . . ascertain where the dollars of extra value lurk . . . take five dollars to town and get much more for the money spent.

Fortunately, there are ever-willing guides right at hand—the advertisements in this newspaper. Advertised merchandise is often exceptional value merchandise. It makes dollars S-T-R-E-T-C-H.

Calera Society & Club News by Mary McKibbon

RESOLUTIONS

We, the committee appointed by the President of the Unique Club to prepare suitable resolutions on the death of Mrs D B Jones, beg to submit the following:

Resolved that through her death the Unique Club has lost one of its most loyal members, the Methodist Church a faithful worker and the Town of Calera a true and lovable character; therefore be it resolved that we extend to her family, her near and dear friends our deepest sympathy in this sad hour, recognizing that a vacancy has been made in her home, Church and club that and not be filled. Resolved that a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, the County paper and spread upon the minutes of theUnique Club, of which she was Secretary.

Respectively,
Mrs. D. W. Boyd,
Mrs. Fay Fason,
Miss Mary McKibbon

Lister Hill In Washington On The Job

Lister Hill is in Washington fighting the battle for the farmers in an effort to secure a good farm relief bill.

He is fighting against five-cent cotton, fifteen-cent corn and miserably low farm prices.

Lister Hill is waging a battle against mortgaged home liens, proverty, distress, and failures that go with low farm prices to farmers, merchants, workers, and people in all walks of life.

He is standing upon the Democratic platform fighting side by side with the chosen leader, FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT, SENATOR JOHN H. BANKHEAD, and other friends of the farmer.

While he is in Washington looking after the interests of the people of the State he respectfully requests his friends in Alabama to fight his battles in the campaign for United States Senator in the coming election January 4, 1938.

MY RESOLVE

I shall attend to my little errands of love
Early this year,
So that the brief days before Christmas ?
May be unhampered and clear,
Of the fever of hurry
The breathless rushing I have known in the past
Shall not possess me.

I shall be calm in my soul and ready at last
For Christmas, the Mass of the Christ
I shall kneel and call out His name
I shall take time
To watch the beautiful light of a candle's flame
I shall have leisure:
I shall go out alone from my roof and my door
I shall not miss the silence of the stars
As I have before
And Oh! if I stand there very still and very long
I shall hear what the clamor of living has kept from me—
The Angel's song! —Selected

The Chief charm of CHRISTMAS is its simplicity! It is the festival that carries universal appeal for every one who understands it. We all in common share the gift of the world's greatest life which was given to the whole world exactly 1937 years ago. There is no use locating the day. Your calendar does that for you, but in order to capture the Christmas Spirit, there is one requisite—YOU MUST BELIEVE IN IT! Reread the simple, sparkling story related by Matthew and Luke which has come down to us claiming heart interest undimmed by the ages.

I know that sometimes in the midst of this turbulent and transitional era, we are prone to lose the significance of the Christmas idea. We take on occasionally, a rather warped and sophisticated idea mixed with a bit of intellectual conceit, and rob the season of its radiant glory. Some "grown-ups" have gone so far as to foster the idea that "there is no Santa Claus". Now what is said above regarding the Christmas spirit, is also applicable to Santa Claus. If you do not BELIEVE in him, he is not likely to BELIEVE in you, and you need waste no extra energy in hanging up your stocking. If you do not have the CHRISTMAS SPIRIT firmly embedded in your heart, no amount of "Wishing You A Merry One" will make you have it!

To make a long story short, you must approach the Christmas season with the unquestioning heart of a little child and possess the FAITH incident to childhood. This is the only KEY that will unlock the Treasure Chest the joyful occasion holds in store for you.

In other words here's what let's do! CATCH THE CHRISTMAS SPIRIT! Let the old tension of toil rest up a bit. Relax! Have a good time! Read again Dickens' Christmas Carol and stop SCROOGE-ING it! Let all misunderstanding melt before your glowing Yule tide logs. Let bygones be bygones! Bury the old disappointments and shattered dreams under the Christmas snow, and let them "sleep quietly beneath mantle of white". Then, and only then will your Christmas be a happy one. If the above suggestions are carried out, the radiant joys surrounding this "peace on earth" good will toward men" season will sparkle like the stars that shone on the wise man, and if your heart strings are exactly in tune, you might even hear the celestial music as did the shepherds on that "Silent Night" in the fields of Bethlehem.

POLITICS even for important national offices is taking a secondary place in the chatter going the rounds since Alabama received the invitation to the Rose Bowl-FOOTBALL is still uppermost in the minds of Mr and Mrs Public-And just who wears the Senatorial Toga recently graced by Lady Bibb Graves, is of minor importance. The race lies between HILL-HEFLIN & WILLIAMS!

CHERRY TREES

Ever since the time of George Washington the country has taken an especial interest in Cherry Trees-Even though the story has long since been debunked regarding the "little hatchet and the felling of the tree" by the celebrity.

The interest was recently revived when Congressman Virginia E. Jenckes of Indiana, purported to start a campaign to uproot the famous Cheery Trees in Washington on account of the dislike for Japan. This impresses us as about the "silliest" thing imaginable-an emotional outburst of feminine spite unthinkable in this official capacity- - or should be unthinkable! Of course nobody will seriously consider the suggestion other than to revile her for petiness - Imagine the entire Nation cutting "off its nose to spite its face" and destroying the Cherry Tree garland of loveliness around Washington! Surely there must be some tenderness and appreciation among the Japanese who have, thru the centuries, preserved the beauty of flowers, and the gesture from across the sea some years ago from the Flowery Kingdom to the United States will always remain a very beautiful and gracious memorial to beauty - Methinks the Cheery Trees will continue to sprinkle their fragrance and dainty loveliness from their historic branches - and will remain standing unforgettable mementoes sent to a "neighbor across the sea" We know that beauty will outlive bitterness and that Cherry Trees will continue to bloom and shed their oriental color. Whatever we may think of Japan's treatment of China, it should not go so far as to start a "Carrie Nation brigade" on the loveliness once bestowed on Washington and which loveliness has become a veritable shrine for thousands of visitors in Washington each season when Cherry Blossom faces happily greet them.

MY PROMISE

My promise to you
Is love forever
My soul from thy soul
No power can sever
A thousand years dear
Are but a day, dear
My love for thee, dear,
Will live alway.

My promise to you
Is understanding
In thee believing
At love's commanding
I'm thine forever
God sent me to thee
We'll keep our promise
Thru Eternity.

GONE

The day has lost a golden hour
With you it fled
I miss you as I miss a flower
When it is dead.

THE LIGHT OF LOVE

I am glad I've loved you
For no sorrow now can come to me
No blow cruel enough to crush my joy,
For always the vision of you
Will be to me
Like a faithful light
Is to a sailor
On a storm tossed sea.

FINALE

"The words that you never will say to me
When the dusk is a dream of blue and gold
With the day's last light, and the white stars spill
All of the silver the sky can hold;
The songs I never can sing to you
When the tall trees sigh and the shadows dart
Over the wall where the moon flowers are
Oh, those are the songs that break my heart.

FOR-GET-ME-NOT

I know a little sheltered spot
Fragrant with the bloom and beauty
Of the sweet for-get-me-not-
And no flower in the garden
Fairer, brighter ever grew,
Than that little flower
That Whispers - - - - -
"Always I'll remember you".

Selected

CONSOLATION

With you so far, so many miles away
I pause remembering that still we may
Be warmed and cheered by the same high sun,
Have the same star wish when the day is done,
Marvel and wonder at the same full moon,
And both alike with the God of love commune.
These thoughts bring you so close to my heart - -
Mere miles never keep love-bound souls apart.

(Westover)

EVENING

These are the things men seek at dusk:
Firelight across a room:
Green rain splashing against dim roofs,
Gardens where flowers bloom.

Light-lighted gold of a window pane,
Trees with high stars above,
Women who watch a darkening street
For somebody whom they love.

Faith of a small child's rhyming prayer,
Candleshine . . . tables spread
With a blossom or two in a gay blue bowl,
Fragrance of crusted bread.
For men may dream of a clipper ship
A wharf, a gypsy camp,
But their footsteps pattern a homing way
To a woman, a child, a lamp.

PAGING FRANK HEAD

One day this week a worried and flurried attorney came by the office "looking for Frank" - A few more hours went by and several others joined in the search - Clay "Hawk" Lester strolled by and with his droll humor made the following suggestion: "I tell you what to do "P. O."- just get a couple of fox horns, get on top of Pea Ridge and blow-I guarantee you Frank will be there in less time than it has taken you to cover Columbiana, and the Standard Oil Truck driven by my brother in law will not be far behind him" - - - We pass on the suggestion to those of you who are joining in the search for the "Head" man.

CLAY LESTER

There is one Shelby County boy whom Columbiana citizens always delight to welcome back on Main Street He is a combination of the Good Samaritan and Santa Claus-that is-SOMETIMES--- and when he is in this gay and festive mood, all share in his generosity - Such was the case on Monday afternoon, when the above mentioned gentleman blew in his old home town for abrief sojourn, and brightened the dull working hours with - the "pause that refreshes" - accompanied by his merry, optimistic chatter which dispelled the gray clouds of an otherwise rather dark day.

EHNEY A. CAMP

We were delighted to note in a current issue of Alabama that Ehney A. Camp, Treasurer of the Liberty National Life Co., was included in the group of outstanding young pioneer business men of the Magic City, and a striking likeness of the popular official accompanies the news in which all Shelby County will be interested, as Mr. Camp was a former resident of Columbiana, the son of Mrs. W L Christian, and still maintains many business interests in this County, retaining his executive position as 2nd Vice Pres. of the Columbiana Savings Bank.

Snow flakes falling adding a decided Christmas—y atmosphere on Main Street Monday, and natives were truly "Wandering in a Winter Wonderland" and getting a big kick out of it-all except one or two Chronic GROUCHES who just couldn't take it!

What's RIGHT With ALABAMA

A LAND OF PERPETUAL PROMISE

RECENTLY the author of an article, critical of an Alabama city, paid it an unwitting compliment by calling it a "city of perpetual promise." Perhaps he should have been more liberal with his compliment—and included all of Alabama.

From Biblical days, a land of promise has always been one looked toward with longing and hope. What joy would there be in living in a land without promise—without hope? What thrill of achievement could you expect to find in a section where all possibilities of development and progress had been exhausted—where the only end to look forward to would be stagnation? What pleasure might there be in the knowledge that there was no opportunity—no promise in Alabama, because she had reached the state of perfection?

If Alabama were not a land of promise, farmers from other sections would not come to settle in her rich agricultural territory to coax abundant crops from her soil; if she were a land barren of opportunity industrialists would not bring their millions into the state to establish offices, plants and warehouses (thus meeting one of her greatest present needs); if there were no promise of the future, then there would indeed be little need or reason for efforts toward self-improvement.

Let us rejoice that Alabama is a land of perpetual promise—let us hope that she will ever be!

Pumpkin Custard a Real Treat.

TREAT the family to a pumpkin custard as a change from the usual pie. Canned pumpkin is suggested because it is already cooked, mashed and ready to use, which saves considerable time and energy. Bake the custard in a basin, not too large or too deep. A good size would be one which holds a quart.

When it comes time to serve the custard, unmold it onto a chop platter and around the custard arrange prunes which have been pitted and stuffed lightly with shredded American cheese. Mounds of whipped cream placed between the prunes would be a good idea. A little prune juice poured over the top of the custard and cream will add flavor and a pleasing appearance. The canned prunes are convenient to use.

Pumpkin Custard.

2 cups canned pumpkin
¾ cup sugar, part brown
1 teaspoon cinnamon
¼ teaspoon cloves
½ teaspoon ginger
¼ teaspoon nutmeg
1 teaspoon salt
3 eggs
2¼ cups milk

Beat pumpkin thoroughly with dry ingredients. Beat eggs slightly, add to milk and combine with pumpkin mixture. Pour into baking pan, set in a pan of water (½ inch deep on pan), and bake for about 45 minutes in a moderate oven (375 degrees). Chill before serving, unmold onto chop platter, and garnish.

Quality of Hope

Hope quickens all the still parts of life, and keeps the mind awake in her most remiss and indolent hours. It gives habitual serenity and good humor. It is a kind of vital heat in the soul, that cheers and gladdens her, when she does not attend to it. It makes pain easy and labor pleasant.—Addison.

A Three Days' Cough Is Your Danger Signal

No matter how many medicines you have tried for your cough, chest cold, or bronchial irritation, you can get relief now with Creomulsion. Serious trouble may be brewing and you cannot afford to take a chance with any remedy less potent than Creomulsion, which goes right to the seat of the trouble and aids nature to soothe and heal the inflamed mucous membranes and to loosen and expel the germ-laden phlegm.

Even if other remedies have failed, don't be discouraged, try Creomulsion. Your druggist is authorized to refund your money if you are not thoroughly satisfied with the benefits obtained from the very first bottle. Creomulsion is one word—not two, and it has no hyphen in it. Ask for it plainly, see that the name on the bottle is Creomulsion, and you'll get the genuine product and the relief you want. (Adv.)

PLANS A BUILDING BOOM

President Offers Program to Congress . . . Revision of Taxes Not Likely Before January Session

Building Boom Wanted

REVISION of the existing housing law in order to facilitate a building boom was asked by President Roosevelt in a special message to congress. He said such legislation would ease the flow of credit and open great reservoirs of idle capital to fight the business slump. The responsibility for the success of such a program he placed squarely on labor and industry.

Specifically, the President recommended changes in the housing act which would:

1. Reduce from 5½ per cent to 5 per cent the interest and service charges permitted by the Federal Housing administration on loans made by private institutions.

2. Authorize the housing administrator to fix the mortgage insurance premium charge as low as ½ of 1 per cent on the diminishing balance of the insured mortgage instead of on the original face amount, and to ¼ of 1 per cent on the diminishing balance of an insured mortgage where the estimated value of the property does not exceed $6,000 and where the mortgage is insured prior to July 1, 1939.

3. Increase the insurable limit from 80 to 90 per cent in cases where the appraised value of the property does not exceed $6,000.

4. Facilitate the construction and financing of groups of houses for rent, or for rent with options to purchase, through blanket mortgages.

5. Clarify and simplify provisions for the construction of large scale rental properties through facilitating their financing.

6. Grant national mortgage associations "explicit authority to make loans on large-scale properties that are subject to special regulation by the federal housing administrator.

7. Remove the July 1, 1939, limitation on the $2,000,000,000 permitted to be outstanding in mortgages, with congress eventually limiting the insurance of mortgages prior to the beginning of construction of individual projects.

8. Permit insurance for repair and modernization loans as provided previous to April 1 of this year when this provision of the housing act expired.

President Goes Fishing

HAVING put the tax and housing problems up to congress, President Roosevelt left for Miami, Fla., where he embarked on a fishing cruise. Accompanying him was Assistant Attorney General R. H. Jackson, and the two discussed plans for legislation that would let the government proceed against the "bad" trusts without injuring those that are considered "good."

Other members of the angling party were Secretary Ickes and WPA Administrator Hopkins.

No Time for Tax Revision

"THERE is no use kidding the country," said Senator Barkley, majority leader of the senate, as he gave out the sad news that it would be impossible to formulate and pass a tax revision bill in the brief time remaining to the extraordinary session of congress. The senator had just been conferring with the President, and his statement dashed the hopes of those who believe ailing business is in dire need of such assistance as revision or repeal of the tax on undivided corporate surpluses and capital gains. Mr. Roosevelt had said he was in favor of tax revision as soon as congress was ready for it. But such legislation must originate in the house, and the subcommittee of the ways and means committee that has been studying the subject had not yet reported. So it appeared almost certain that action must be postponed until the regular session which starts in January.

Sen. Barkley

This was highly displeasing to a large number of congressmen, and Representative Celler of New York called together some 60 of them to consider the possibility of emergency action. "Business can't wait," said Celler.

Farm Bill Reported

MARVIN JONES of Texas, chairman of the house agricultural committee, submitted the house's farm bill, together with a majority report defending the measure and calling for speedy enactment so that the rise of mounting crop surpluses which are depressing market prices may be offset.

The house bill is less drastic than the senate version, but it was denounced vigorously in a minority report which declared it was "unconstitutional, unsound, un-American," likely to "work to the detriment of American agriculture," and threatening to "dislocate" foreign and domestic markets.

Both house and senate bills, it was predicted, would be modified because of the President's implied threat to veto the legislation unless it was put on a "pay-as-you-go" basis. He insisted the farm bill must not interfere with his plans to balance the budget.

After French Throne

ALARM of the French government over the plotting of the Cagoulards or "hooded ones" that led to the arrest of many rightists and the raiding of hidden stores of weapons and ammunition was far from baseless. Evidently there was a real conspiracy to overthrow the republic and set up a dictatorship and eventually a restored monarchy. The government announced, however, that the plot had been wrecked.

Duc de Guise

From his place of exile in Belgium the Duc de Guise, pretender to the throne of France, issued a manifesto announcing he had decided to try to regain the throne.

"Have the moral courage not to abdicate before present difficulties," the manifesto appealed to Frenchmen. "Do not permit, in a moment of abandon, dictatorship of any kind to impose itself.

"Certain of my ability to assure your happiness, I have decided to reconquer the throne of my fathers. France then again will reassume her mission in the world and again will find peace, unity and prosperity through a union of the people with a titular defender-king."

Vinson to Be Judge

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT sent to the senate the nomination of Representative Fred M. Vinson of Kentucky to fill a vacancy in the United States court of appeals for the District of Columbia. The post carries a salary of $10,000 a year, the same as paid a representative, but the appointment is for life and carries retirement privileges. Mr. Vinson, who has been an outstanding tax expert of the house, is forty-seven years old and serving his seventh term. His home is Ashland, Ky.

The President also nominated Associate Justice D. Lawrence Groner of Virginia to be chief justice of the court, creating another vacancy. Croner will be succeeded by Henry White Edgerton of New York, whose nomination also went to the senate.

Lesson for December 12

CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP

LESSON TEXT—I John 1:1-7; Revelation 21:1-7.

GOLDEN TEXT—Our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ.—I John 1:3.

PRIMARY TOPIC—The Heavenly Home.

JUNIOR TOPIC—God's Great Family.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Comradeship with Christ.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Daily Fellowship with Christ and Christians.

Fellowship—the word is rich in meaning, even as it concerns the ordinary relationships of life. It speaks of the association of man with man in a common enterprise, a sharing of problems and of victories—a partnership. Such relationships are very real and helpful. They lead to friendships which bind the hearts of men together in noble purpose and in tender consideration.

It is, however, a long step forward when we add the prefix "Christian" to "fellowship." For by so doing we not only bring men into the most glorious partnership with each other but we do two other very important things: (1) we limit those eligible to this fellowship to those who are followers of the Lord Jesus Christ; and (2) we broaden the fellowship beyond the association of men with each other, and bring them into the circle with Christ. What a high and noble fellowship! Do you belong? Christ says, "I am the door: by me if any man enter in he shall be saved" (John 10:9).

Our Scripture selections for today are from two books of the Bible. Both speak of an eternal Christian fellowship but the first stresses its present expression in a life of holiness and the other its future of blessed communion.

I. Christian Fellowship—Now (I John 1:1-7).

The First Epistle of John presents fellowship with God as depending on three things "which form in their combination a very beautiful picture of truth . . . God is light (1:5), hence fellowship with God depends on our walking in the light. God is righteous (2:29), hence fellowship with God depends on our doing righteousness. God is love (4:7, 8), hence fellowship with God depends on our possessing and manifesting love" (James M. Gray).

Every clause and phrase of the passage before us is so full of spiritual truth that it should have our full time but we must limit ourselves to pointing out one outstanding fact; namely, that Christian fellowship is made possible because we have a Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ. He it is who reveals the Father—the One in whom there is "no darkness at all" (v. 5). If we follow him we must "walk in the light as he is in the light" (v. 7). This allows for no dark corners, no crookedness in word or act, no backbiting nor evilspeaking.

Let us open the hidden recesses of the heart to the light of God and put every evil thing under the "blood of Jesus Christ which cleanseth us from all sin" (v. 7).

II. Christian Fellowship—for Eternity (Rev. 21:1-7).

Our present communion with God and with one another is most precious—but how often it is marred by sin and disturbed by the wickedness that surrounds us in the world. We look forward to that day when we who are the followers of Christ shall be delivered not only from the penalty and the power of sin, but also from its very presence.

There will be "a new heaven and a new earth" from which every evil thing has been taken away, in which all has been renewed in righteousness. Then will come the glorious consummation of all things when God shall come to "dwell with them and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them and be their God" (v. 3).

That communion shall never be disturbed by the falling of any tear. There will be no mourning, no crying, no pain (v. 4). Little wonder that these words have been the comfort of God's people in their darkest hours. They are not the futile words of human solace. They come from the eternal God.

Three questions have intrigued the curiosity of man: (1) Where did I come from? (2) why am I here? and (3) where am I going? The Christian is the only one who has a satisfying solution for the problem of the origin of all things, "In the beginning God"; a reason for the existence of all things, "To me to live is Christ"; and a satisfactory consummation of all things, "And God himself shall be with them." It is a great thing to know Jesus Christ as Saviour and Lord.

HOW TO SEW

by Ruth Wyeth Spears

Make This Attractive Ottoman.

GET a wooden box from the grocer. It should be about as long as the width of the chair with which the ottoman is to be used. The depth of the sides should be four inches as shown here at A.

The legs should be made of two by two's. Fasten in place with long screws through the corners of the box as shown here at B.

About half a bat of cotton will be needed. Put five or six layers of the cotton on the top, cutting the first layer about four inches smaller all around than the top of the box. Place it in the center. Cut the next layer a little bigger and the others still bigger until the last one is the same size as the top. Now, cut a layer of cotton to go over the top and down over the ends as at C and another to go over the top and down the sides as at D.

Cut a piece of heavy muslin to fasten tightly over the cotton. Cut the corners of the muslin as at E. Sew with heavy thread as at F and then tack as at G.

Every Homemaker should have a copy of Mrs. Spears' new book, SEWING. SYNOPSIS

Young Gregory Sterling, having made a fortune in the West, reluctantly returns to his home town, and takes a luxurious room at the Whittall House. In a park, he sees a girl sitting on a bench suddenly keel over, and rushes to her rescue. He takes her to a hospital, where the doctor pronounces the case starvation. Gregory engages a private room and a special nurse, Miss Gowen. While Gregory considers endowing a hospital room in memory of his mother, for the free use of strangers, he finds a purse beneath the park bench where the girl had sat. Opening it, he finds it empty except for a letter addressed to Miss Margaret McLaren, 1456 Rodman street, with a blurred Vermont postmark. Reaching Rodman street, he talks to a disagreeable landlady, who insinuates Miss McLaren gave up a good job because of her boss' behavior, and that three weeks' rent is overdue. Gregory pays the rent. He then reads the letter, signed Grandmother, thanking Margaret for the money she sent. When he reaches the hospital to make arrangemnts for the endowment, he finds the patient improved but insistent on leaving immediately to find a job. He tells her of the room endowment, and guarantees to get her a good job by Monday. Greg ponders on methods of doing good with his money, and writes Rhoderick Steele, a Virginia minister he met on the train, for possible guidance. After church, he goes to the hospital, tells Margaret he is giving her a job himself, and that in the morning they will rent an office in a rooming house known to Miss Gowen, and get to work. The following morning the head nurse returns from a vacation, ignorant of the endowed room, and insultingly questions Margaret's rights there, and tells her to get out. Margaret, still weak, leaves.

Fear, wild panic, lent strength to Margaret's feet, her frightened feet; she was able to get around the corner and into another street, and another, until, breathless, she arrived in a part of the city she did not know. She saw a railroad station, went in, sat down in an obscure corner of the ladies' waiting room, and tried to think what she should do next.

It was beginning to grow dark in the old farmhouse and Grandmother folded up her knitting and sat back in her patchwork-cushioned rocking chair.

Grandfather got himself with difficult ease into a standing posture and looked anxiously toward his sweet old wife.

"I think I'm feeling better, Mother. I think I'll go out and try a hand at milking tonight. Old Sukey has been bawling for 15 minutes and it's getting pretty late. It'll be dark in a few minutes now."

"Oh, Father, don't! Please! You know Sam said he'd be sure to be here, even if he was late. It's terribly raw tonight, and you'll just get all that pain back in your leg again."

"No, Mother, I won't. I think it will do me good!" declared Father. "Besides, I'm not going outdoors. I'll just go through the woodshed into the barn and open the door for Sukey from the inside. Now, Mother, you mustn't interfere. I've been docile as long as I thought it was necessary. But now I really feel I must get back to work again. It doesn't do to baby oneself too much. I'm not an invalid yet, you know."

"No, but you're trying hard to be. I wish you would wait. Perhaps Sam is coming up the hill now."

Mother got up and trotted anxiously to the window.

"Father, it's snowing! It really is!" she said in alarm.

"Well, that's all the more reason Sukey should get in out of it, and the snow isn't going to reach me inside the barn. For pity's sake, be reasonable, Rebecca!"

Father went to the closet and took down his old coat and cap from the peg. He wound a woolen scarf twice about his neck with elaborate care to show Mother how well protected he was.

"Put your galoshes on, Father! Yes, you know the ground is damp and it will strike in all the more because you've been sitting by the fire all these days and are tender. You don't want that pain back in your leg, you know, after all the liniment I've rubbed into it."

"All right, I'll put them on," consented the old man, "but I'm not going out on the ground."

"The barn floor is like ice, John, you know it is."

"All right, Mother. I've got them on. Better get hot mash ready for the hens and I can feed them after I bring the milk in. You're not fit to go out yourself tonight, Mother. I heard you sneezing in the bedroom just now. I'm afraid this business of having a fire only in the kitchen isn't going to be very economical after all."

Grandmother hurried around and set the table for two, trying to make it look cheery when Grandfather came in.

Then she went and stood at the window looking down the hill toward the road to watch for Sam Fletcher. How late he was! Perhaps the mail was late and he had waited for it. Oh, she hoped he had! There ought to be a letter tonight. It was almost a week since Margaret had written. She was always so faithful. Could the child be sick?

There was no sign of Sam Fletcher yet, so the old lady turned away and began preparations for the meal.

It was a nice supper, but why didn't Sam Fletcher come and bring a letter from Margaret?

When Father came in they sat down to the table and bowed their heads.

"Our Father, we thank Thee that Thou hast given us abundance for our needs, and we thank Thee for the things Thou didst not send, because we know there must have been some good reason for withholding. Make us truly thankful for all that we have, and bless and keep our dear child, Margaret."

The amen was scarcely spoken before there came a knock at the door, and a sound of feet being wiped on the old piece of burlap on the doorstep.

Sam Fletcher's face was round and rosy and he let in a cold draft of air as he responded to the bid to come in. Emily twitched her ears unpleasantly one at a time as the air blew upon her, and opened one eye uneasily.

"Brought you the evening paper. Sorry I didn't find any letters. I reckon there'll be one tamorra," he said in his loud, cheerful voice. "Gonta be a storm tanight, I guess. See ya milked the cow. Now, that's too bad. You shouldn't ha done it ——" Sam's eye was on the pail of milk that stood on a table by the sink. "I tried to get here sooner, but I had ta wait to get my harness mended. Had a bad break. I reckoned Sukey'd wait all right!"

"Well, you see, Sam, I stole a march on you. I've just been waiting my chance to get back on the job again, and this was a good excuse. I thought you wouldn't mind for once, and I really think it did me good."

"Won't You Come Inside? It's a Stormy Night."

"Yep!" said Sam, looking at him with admiring eyes, "I'll bet it did! You certainly are a game one, sick as you've been, milkin' a cow at your age! Well, got plenty of wood? It's gonta be a cold night. The wind's turned."

"Yes, plenty of wood, thanks to your kindness," said the old man with a courtly bow of his white head and a kindly smile. "Won't you sit down and enjoy our frugal meal with us?"

"No. I guess I better be gettin' on. Hetty'll be watchin' for me, an' she'll be keepin' supper hot. Well, if there's nothing else I can do fer ya. I'll beat it. But don'tcha ferget, if ya want anything in the night just ya ring the big old dinner bell. I'll hear it. I'm a light sleeper. Well, s'long. I'll be goin.' "

Mother poured out the tea into two cups and made a little stir putting toast before the coals with her back turned toward the table. Once she sniffed, just a tiny sniff, but the old man looked up suspiciously.

"Now, Mother, you have been catching more cold!" he charged.

The old lady turned quickly, brushing a tear away from her eye.

"No!" she said sharply, "it was just the draft from the door made me feel like sneezing!"

"Now, Mother, you're not crying! You're not feeling bad about Margaret not writing again, so soon after sending us that long letter?"

"No," said the old lady quickly, turning her face away to watch the toast and blinking back the tears. "No, of course I'm not crying. But it does seem strange we didn't get a letter. It's almost a week, Father!"

"Well, that's nothing, Rebecca. She's probably got some extra work the way she did the last time she didn't write for three days. Don't you remember? She'll write in a few days and tell us all about it."

"A few days!" said the old lady's dismayed voice.

Then the old lady spoke again.

"Sometimes, Father, I think we shouldn't have mortgaged the farm to send her to college!"

"Why, I don't see that college did her any harm," said the old man with persistent cheerfulness. "She didn't get her head turned. She loved the old farm, too. If I mistake not she's going to feel it some when she knows we had to part with Old Gray."

"She will, of course!" said the old lady. "Sometimes, Father, I wish we'd just kept her here. Oh, the city is so full of sin and wickedness! There are bad men in the city, and Margaret is beautiful, Father!"

"There wasn't anything else we could do, was there? I was sick, and we had no money, and Elias Horner was set on foreclosing the mortgage if we couldn't pay the interest. If we had to give up the old farm, where would we go? Since the bank failed and took everything, what else could we do but let her go when she got a good chance to earn a salary?"

And then, suddenly, while they lingered around the humble little tea table there came a sound of steps crunching outside on the icy pathway and a peremptory knock at the door.

The old lady started and half rose from the table.

The old man rose from his chair with an attempt at alertness in spite of his recent rheumatic trouble, and stepping to the door, opened it, holding a lamp from the tea table high that it might shine into the caller's face.

"Oh," he said with gentle dignity that would show no dismay at the identity of the visitor, "it's you, Mr. Horner. Won't you come inside? It's a stormy night."

The man came in, shaking the icy particles from his shaggy coat, flinging the sleet from the brim of his old felt hat.

"No, it's not a nice night," he said in a gruff voice, "but one can't always wait for June weather. Had a little business up this way, and I thought I'd just stop and serve you notice, too. Kill two birds with one stone, you know!"

"Yes?" said the old man with a sudden catch in his voice as if warning himself that he must be ready for anything. Then:

"Come in, sir!" That "sir" somehow placed a distance between the householder and his visitor, and perhaps the other man felt it, for he flung himself inside and sat down in a chair by the door as if he had a right.

"I just thought I'd step in and remind you that the interest on the mortgage that I hold on this house and farm comes due the twenty-ninth day of next month, four days after Thanksgiving."

"Yes," said the old man, "I am expecting to meet my obligations at that time." He said it with a quiet confidence, but the old lady looked at him wide-eyed.

"Are you getting ready to pay the principal as well as the interest?" asked the caller, eyeing him sharply from his shaggy, grizzled brows. "Because that's really what I called to tell ya. I'm askin' ya ta pay the whole amount. The mortgage was for three years, ya remember, and the three years is up this November!"

The old man met the frowning adversary with a clear, keen glance.

"Yes," he said, "I know. I've been thinking some of asking you to renew the mortgage for another couple of years. I'm not just sure yet."

"Well, that's what I came fer. I came to say that I'm callin' in my money an' I'm not renewin'. I need the money and I'm foreclosin' ef ya can't pay!"

The two old people sat there stunned for a minute, the little old lady wide-eyed with sorrow.

The old man still kept a calm, sweet look on his face. He took it like a blow that had been long expected.

"Do—I understand—that you—are wanting to take over the farm yourself? Or—were you expecting to sell?" he asked after a minute, quite coolly.

"Well, both," said Horner.

"Ya see, I got a man what wanted ta go in with me."

"Yes?" said the old man, gently, still with that courtly dignity. "Thank you. It is always best to understand thoroughly."

"Wal," said Horner, half embarrassedly, "that's about all. That's what I come fer. So, ef you ain't got the money yerself ya better get busy running around among yer rich friends."

"Well," said the old man, "that might be an idea."

Horner gave a quick suspicious glance back at the old man as he answered. Was it possible he did really have a rich friend? But no! Impossible! The whole country round knew the Lorimers, knew their history for a century back. Margaret McLaren, their granddaughter, was down in the city trying to eke out a scanty living for them all. Through the postmistress' sister who was a connection of the Horners he knew the size of the money orders that came. He felt sure they were not even going to be able to pay the interest. He had been biding his time and waiting.

So he flung back a hateful laugh and said:

"Well, get busy then," and climbed into his rackety old machine and sent it chugging down the mountain.

The old lady waited until her husband had closed and locked the door, set down the lamp upon the supper table, and started to wind the clock. Waited until the sound of the chugging flivver down the mountain had died away in the distance before she spoke. Then he said:

"Father! You were wonderful! I feel as if Satan had just gone away from here!"

Just about the time that Margaret was vanishing around the first corner from the hospital Miss Gowen arrived at the door of the room where a half hour before she had left her patient quietly eating her breakfast.

But what was this? The door standing wide open and the scrubwoman down on her knees just sloshing the first application of soapy water onto the floor. Why! How outrageous! What could this mean? This room was just cleaned before the patient came in and it couldn't need cleansing now.

She gave a quick glance toward the bed which was a trifle out of the range of vision from the doorway, and behold there was no patient lying in it! The bed was stripped of its linen entirely.

Miss Gowen, now thoroughly bewildered, hurried down the hall to the desk.

"Where is the head nurse?" she asked of the nurse who sat there answering the telephone. "Is she back yet?"

"She's back with bells!" said the young nurse with a dark look. "Stole in on us as usual and found everything all wrong! She says she's going to report me to the board for neglect of duty, and I was only down getting medicine the doctor had ordered. She's down in the other corridor now raising a rumpus."

Miss Gowen set her lips and hurried down the other corridor and presently located the head nurse.

"What have you done with my special patient, Miss Grandon?" she demanded excitedly.

The head nurse swung around upon her, offended dignity in her manner.

Invention Enables Trombone Players to Coax Out the Notes Without Effort

At last an inventor has come forward with a contraption to take forever the drudgery out of slide trombone playing.

The patent office has issued to Antonio Adriani of New York a patent for a sawed-off slip-horn, referred to technically as a "short-positioned trombone."

The long reach of the trombone throughout the years, has caused the trombonist considerable anguish both mental and physical because:

1. It has barred many short men from the field.

2. The trombonist, pictured in the act of knocking off some one's hat as he reached for a bass note, has been the prey of the cartoonist.

3. Because of the real danger of poking the front row trade in the face, the opera house and theater trombonist has been playing in the shadow of the footlights for decades.

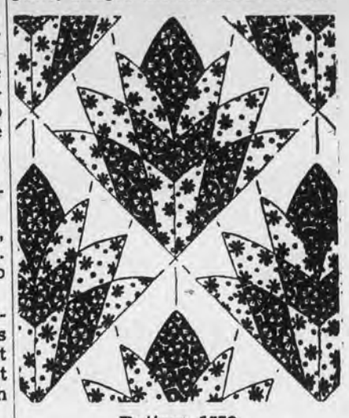
But all that should be ended now, observes a writer in the Washington Star.

By the simple expedient of short coupling the horn, Inventor Adriani has done away with what looks from his blue prints to be about half the sweep of the instrument.

Not only that, the patent says Adrian has fixed things "whereby E flat may be obtained"—which, as everybody knows, is a neat trick in itself.

The patent list also shows that inventors have been thinking about swimmers as well as slide trombonists.

Andrew Glad of Donovan, Ill., was granted a patent for something that looks like a giant duck's foot. The water enthusiast slips his feet into a pair of the gadgets, leaps in and kicks.



Those who have tried it say it makes you go like the dickens.

A Little Learning Is a Wonderful Thing

Many stories, some true, some—well, not quite so true, are told about the remarks of schoolboys.

A well-known headmaster vouches for the accuracy of this one.

A certain twelve-year-old was about to be caned for some trivial offense. The headmaster asked him how he preferred to receive his punishment.

"Well, sir," said the boy quickly, "if you please, I'd like it like the Greek style of penmanship."

"What on earth do you mean?" asked the master.

"Please, sir, the upstrokes heavy and the downstrokes light."

WOMEN WHO HOLD THEIR MEN NEVER LET THEM KNOW

NO matter how much your back aches and your nerves scream, your husband, because he is only a man, can never understand why you are so hard to live with one week in every month.

Too often the honeymoon express is wrecked by the nagging tongue of a three-quarter wife. The wise woman never lets her husband know by outward sign that she is a victim of periodic pain.

For three generations one woman has told another how to go "smiling through" with Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It helps Nature tone up the system, thus lessening the discomforts from the functional disorders which women must endure in the three ordeals of life: 1. Turning from girlhood to womanhood. 2. Preparing for motherhood. 3. Approaching "middle age."

Don't be a three-quarter wife, take LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND and Go "Smiling Through."

A CHRISTMAS LETTER

Christmas Will Soon be here Again!

Let us hope that we will strive to have a safe and sane Christmas and not spend all we have on ourselves and our own families, but let's try and make others happy who are less fortunate than we are. Some of us may feel like we are not able to give to those more unfortunate than we are, but it is not the value of what we give so much as the spirit in which we give it. So, let's each one of us try to make one other person happy during this christmas and we will be happy too.

Well Folks:

We suggest something useful. of course the Kiddies have to have some toys. You know how we enjoyed them when we were Kiddies. a long time for some of us to remember, but those memories stick just the same.

For Presents:

Wearing apparel such as Sweaters, Shirts, Shoes, Hose, Ties, Socks. For the ladies we have some mighty pretty Dress Patterns. Mother may need a comfortable Rocker and a new Rug and what about a Radio for the whole family to enjoy? Perhaps the wife would appreciate a new Stove or Range that you have been promising to get for so long, or possibly it was a new Bed, Mattress and Springs.

We Suggest:

Now Kiddies, we know you are all expecting old Santa to make you a visit real soon and we also know that you all have been real good Boys and Girls for at least a week or two, and you are hoping that he will bring you lots of Toys andgood things to eat. We hope he does too, but you must remember that there will be some children whom old Santa will not find, so you must try to make them happy by dividing your Toys with them. We have lots of Toys that will make nice gifts for your little friends and playmates.

Kiddies And The Babies:

We have Rubber Dolls, Rattlers, Blankets, Bootees, Toys etc
We have Socks for 10c to 25c, Dolls from 5c to $2.25, Tea Sets 10c to $1.95; Pianos, Ranges, Tops, Balls, Air Rifles, Cap Pistols, Dominoes, Harps, Merchanical Toys of all kinds, Picture Books and Presents too numerous to mention.

For Girls And Boys:

One pound of candy for that girl you are just crazy about, we know just how you feel about her for we have been all along there too and there is nothing we have ever found that will beat it, so go to it Boys. Give her some nice stationery, games that you can play with her while your mind is on something else. Then if she wants to give you a present, we have some scarfs, Boxes of Handkerchiefs, Ties etc., and you can buy yourself that 22 Winchester Rifle or that good Warm Melton Jacket or some Shirts, Socks, Bill Folds with key Rings.

For Older Boys: And Big Sister:

Now for "Big Sister". You Boys and Girls will just have to get Mother to help find out what she had rather have than a Sweetheart and we think we can supply it. We know she would like a box of Candy for all girls like Candy.

Now it will never do to neglect Mother? You just know what she will appreciate more than anything else in all the world - - For her children to be good to her and good to each other and to love, Honor and Obey her all the year like you do just before Christmas.

For Mother And Poor Old Dad:

Get her a box of Hankerchiefs, some Hose, Slips or a good warm Sweater. A pair of warm Brushed wool gloves for 50c would be just the thing for these cold mornings. An electric table Lamp or Electric Iron. If you do not have electricity in your home give her an Aladdin Lamp to read by at night. You will enjoy this gift.

Now this brings us down to "Poor Old Dad" he may have all this to pay for but let's try to help him bear the load. Give him a Pipe and a pound can of George Washington Smoking tobacco and let him enjoy himself before the bills come in. Then he can always use Ties, Socks, Shirts or if he likes them, A Box of good Cigars will help ease the pain.

Holiday Necessities

Last but by no means least? In order to really enjoy the holidays we will have to have some good eats. We have all kinds of Fruits, Nuts, Candies, Raisins, Cocoanuts, Shredded Cocanut for cakes, Flavoring Extracts, Confectioner's and old fashioned Brown Sugar, Chocolate, Cocoa, & spices of all Kinds Then to make a real good cake we have Azile, White Tulip and White Beauty Flours all good enough for anybody's cake. Now what is better on these cold freezing mornings than good hot Coffee for breakfast. We have it in Red Diamond French Market, Luzianne in cans and three grades of bulk Coffee that we grind for you while you wait.

We just can't tell you all the nice things we do have for you so the best way to find out is to come to see us and let us show you. We Certainly do appreciate the nice business you have given us in the past and trust that you will continue to favor us in the future. Don't for get the home merchant.

LOOK ME IN THE EYE

The play "Look Me In The Eye" sponsored by the Culture Club and directed by Irene W. Stone was staged at the High School Friday Evening.

The program began with a few words of welcome by the Club President, Mrs Homer Walton, followed by the Club Song sung by the ladies.

Every one agreed the play was a roaring success from beginning to end, full of laughs and good humor. Those taking parts were Christine Greer, Berry Letson, Saranel Carter, Earnest Taft, Bertie Lois Edwards, Roy Simmons, Stella Sloan, Oscar Martin, James Taylor, Mildred Curlee, G V Poole and Marion Martin.

The evening would not have been complete with our own peanist Mrs Henry Nichols accompained by Wales Wallace Jr. and Upton Baker with their saxaphones also a tap dance by Nell Seals. Roy Simmons and Bertie Lois Edwards gave an unusual musical skit between acts.

The Club hopes to see the proceeds of this program to begin some worth while project in our own town.

The 1937 edition of the Red and White were the honored guests at t banquet at John's Steak House, Thursday Night. For the first time in recent years the friends and patrons of the team cooperated in making this banquet possible. And did the boys enjoy it ! ! ! Disregarding the usual formallaty that usually accompanies a banquet of this sort, the boys were put in complete charge and told to disregard the faculty, coach, and friends, we might add at this point that the boys had to be told this only once, Between bites the boys all rose and got in a word and were all very much astonished when they sat down to find that their turkey, celery or pie had disappeared. Yes sir a brother like feeling certainly exists on this championship squad. This banquet culminated the highschool careers of seven seniors in the form of MacKnight, Riddle, Wallace, Martin, Wilder, Connell and Thornburg. Taking the situation as a whole we should say that the banquet was a huge success and we can assure the sponsors that their worthy cause was certainly not in vain ! ! !

INTERESTING PERSONALITIES

JOHN CONNOLLY MANAGER OF WBRC

MILDRED WHITE WALLACE

The name CONNOLLY and RADIO have become practically synononous terms, so long have they been associated together. The greeting, "This is WBRC Bankhead Hotel, Birmingham Alabama" needs no reiteration to the public, for the familiar phrase is known to every listener in the County, but we do not believe it has been possible for all of you to meet the "man behind the Mike", responsible for the outstanding growth of this Station and its presentations for the past two years. It has been my good fortune to know John Connolly ever since "way back when." both as popular Radio Announcer, Manager and last but my no means least, in that "friendly sort o' way". It now becomes my especially happy privilege to present to you the youthful Executive-Manager John Connolly -- WBRC Birmingham, Alabama.

John Connolly first won attentive ears among the "powers that be" in the radio world and with the listirners, when he made his appearance as a Cub Announcer for WBRC during the Elba Flood Relief broadcasts. On duty day and night this young man merited State and Southern recognition. In1929 shortly after this Alabama flood disaster, Mr Connolly accepted the Assistant Managerial position at WDOD Chattanooga. In 1930, he was called back to WBRC and has continued serving this station in various capacities since that time. Upon the resignation of Bill Young on Nov. 15, 1936, John Connolly was tendered the position of Manager of WBRC, which place he has filled with distinction. He is 30 years old, is married, has three children, of whom he is very proud.

To catch the busy Manager of a busy Radio Station "between studios" or offices in an endeavor to get a word from him regarding personal achievement, is an almost impossible task-Especially is this true, when we find the busy executive surrounded with phone calls, mail piled high on desk, continuities being submitted for final O. K. new changes in program assignments, and "winding up a few loose ends" before leaving for New York for a conference with NBC officials and further study of the new programs with this network- (Of course you know WBRC will go NBC in a big way after January 1st, with increased power and all time broadcasts) As stated above, it is almost impossible to talk coherently with Manager "John" under these circumstances, although he has the reputation of dealing with each task assigned with characteristicpleasing personality, unhurried manner and personal interest coupled with an inexhaustible supply of tact. He also successfully manages "temperamental artists"-with the least possible confusion- BUT, in addition to the above busy schedule, it is even more an impossible task to get John Connolly to talk about himself.

We asked him to tell us of some of his outstanding achievements since piloting the good ship Radio He stated - "Well, some of the people think I have made some progressive improvements, " -but "I am never satisfied with anything I do" For this very modest reason, we predict hard work, an insatiable ambition, and naturally, one of the most thoughtful and understanding Directors we have ever encountered in our ten years of "Radio rambles," coupled with native ability, will carry John Connolly to the top of his chosen avocation.

In speaking of the name "CONNOLLY" in connection with RADIO, we must mention here, possibly the man responsible for John Connolly's interest in this little Dingus popularly called MIKE- We should have begun the"Once upon a time" sentence, for DUD CONNOLLY, John's older brother, along with JC Bell, are pioneers of the radio trail in Birmingham! We personally recall "a long time ago," when WSY - Alabama Power Company's old station, was located in the old post office building, a program "Dud" and I dodged in and out from behind a faded red curtain and attempted to put across on an unsuspecting public-These were the days when next morning-neighbors would yell at you over the fence -WE GOT CHICAGO LAST NIGHT! DUD Connolly should sit down quietly somewhere and write some Radio memoirs and J C Bell should join in the personal recollections- History would be richer for these experience. Hearing Radio from his older brother Dud, possibly furnished the first spark of interest in what later turned out to be a whole life interest for John Connolly. Since succces has crowned each endeavor, and dreams are fast becoming realities, there must be rich compensation on the part of both the Connolly Brothers in making same possible.

Dud Connolly is Chief Announcer for WBRC and the fraternal combination of "John and Dud" is an unbeatable one!

We predict WBRC has just begun its steady climb toward the radio heights it is destined to reach. The atmosphere around a radio station has much to do with the artist who enters the portals with a little "song" to "fall to earth I know not where"- and the friendly greeting, the whole hearted endeavor on the part of all the staff of announcers, the Control Operator, and many others, who stand behind the silent looking little fellow we call MIKE, play a major part in the success or failure of each presentation. We have seen many reputable artists fail flat on account of a "domineering" Manager, or an unsympathetic - Announcer - - - To WBRC and its talented and efficient personnel to its staff artists, and to its executives, we join thousands of happy listerners in wishing for them a happy and a prasperous new year under the excellent leadership of John Connolly who assumes command in presentation of NBC choicest programs for your pleasure during 1938. We know you will be listing!

CONGRESS CONFUSED

President Returns to Find His "Must" Measures Are Facing Failure of Passage in the Present Session

Pictured above from left to right are Senator William Borah of Idaho, Senator Edward R. Burke of Nebraska and Professor Henry W. Edgerton of Cornell university and formerly of the antitrust division of the Department of Justice, as the professor was about to appear before a subcommittee of the senate judiciary committee. The committee examined the professor to determine whether they believed him a fit appointee to the United States Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia. He was suspected of not believing in the right of courts to declare legislative enactments unconstitutional. But he declared he now regarded such judicial review as a legitimate part of our constitutional system.

Stormy Days in Capital

RETURNING from his fishing trip in Florida waters with an infected gum, President Roosevelt was confronted with a situation that was decidedly disconcerting. What has been called the Roosevelt depression was becoming still more depressed and congress seemingly couldn't make up its mind what to do about it. The demand for tax revisions that would assist business out of the slump was insistent, and so was the necessity of balancing the budget. Passage of the four administration "must" measures appeared to be impossible during the extraordinary session. All of them were opposed by various blocs of the majority party as well as by the Republican minority.

The senate's farm bill seemed to have the best chance to get through, but it differed so radically from the house measure that it was certain a conference committee would have to try to find a common ground.

Secretary Wallace was reported dissatisfied with both senate and house bills. One official close to him said Wallace might urge President Roosevelt to veto any bill finally enacted which approximated either the senate or house measure.

Democrats were so badly split over the wage-hour bill that hope of passing it before the regular session of congress was about abandoned. Labor, too, was divided concerning this measure, the A. F. of L. opposing it and the C. I. O. advocating its passage. The federation offered its own version, calling for a flat 40 cents an hour minimum wage and a 40 hour maximum work week. The house bill was finally rescued from the rules committee by petition. House Majority Leader Sam Rayburn, Democrat, Texas, went ahead with plans to whip administration support behind the house measure. He said that fewer than 100 votes would be cast against the bill in its present form but warned that amendments which would make its wage-hour provisions more rigid might shunt the measure back to the labor committee and delay a vote indefinitely.

Tax Setup Needs Revision

DANIEL C. ROPER, secretary of commerce, says the entire tax structure of the United States should be revised. He was speaking at a banquet of the Business Advisory council in Chicago, and his statements appeared to meet with general approval.

Sec. Roper

"A general revision is necessary to simplify determination of tax liability, to distribute the burden of taxation more equitably, and to broaden the base of taxation to include a larger percentage of our earning population," Secretary Roper said.

He asserted that the undistributed profits tax had not entirely fulfilled its proponents' expectations that it would "bring about a higher velocity of money through larger and more widespread distribution of corporate earnings."

Mr. Roper expressed confidence that a "constructive approach will be found to the solution of the utilities dilemma and that significant results will be forthcoming."

That this confidence has a sound basis was indicated by two announcements made the same day by prominent utility executives.

Floyd L. Carlisle, chairman of the Consolidated Edison company, told the New York state public service commission that his company plans a $25,000,000 expansion program. The development came during hearings concerning a proposed $30,000,000 bond issue.

Back from submitting to the President a formula for better understanding between utilities and the administration, Wendell L. Willkie, president of Commonwealth and Southern corporation, proposed a general truce between business and the Roosevelt administration. Willkie's company has been involved in some of the bitterest controversies with Washington.

Lindbergs Come Back

AFTER two years of self-imposed exile in England, Col. and Mrs. Charles A. Lindbergh returned to the United States. Presumably they came over to spend the holidays at the home of Mrs. Lindbergh's mother, Mrs. Dwight Morrow, in Englewood, N. J. Dispatches from London said the colonel also had some business to transact in America. He is associated in an advisory capacity with Pan-American Airways.

The landing of the Lindberghs at New York was accomplished with such secrecy that they almost escaped the notice of reporters and news photographers. One of the officers of the liner on which they came said they planned to return to England immediately after Christmas.

Infantry Comes First

IN WAR operations on land the infantry is still the most important branch of the service, says Gen. Malin Craig, chief of staff of the army, in his annual report. Lessons learned by skilled observers of the civil war in Spain and the Chino-Japanese war have modified the American defense program, but, says the general, it is still the infantry that renders the decision in the final analysis. Airplanes and tanks are valuable auxiliaries to the infantry, but they cannot bring about a decision in land operations.

General Malin Craig

Inventories of armament, motorization, mechanization and equipment, in the light of the lessons abroad, show several vital needs of the first line forces, General Craig declared. These include better weapons to combat aircraft and tanks, as well as more efficient guns for the planes and tanks.

Edgerton Backs Water

CONFIRMATION of the appointment of Henry W. Edgerton of Cornell university as associate justice of the District of Columbia Court of Appeals was endangered because it was thought from his writings that he did not believe in judicial review. However, he appeared before the senate sub-committee, consisting of Senators Borah, Burke and Van Nuys and repudiated his previous utterances. Of the power of courts to declare legislative enactments unconstitutional he said:

"I regard it as not only thoroughly established as a legitimate part of our constitutional system, but which was intended by the great majority of the men who framed our Constitution. I think it was properly established by John Marshall and I haven't the least criticism of any court for any declaration of the validity of that part of our constitutional system."

Leviathan to Be Junked

JAPAN made a bid for the Leviathan, huge liner seized from Germany in the World war, but the United States Lines rejected it and sold the vessel to Metal Industries, Ltd., of London for $800,000. It will go to England under its own power and will be junked.

The Leviathan cost ten millions to build and the American government spent more than eight millions to recondition it; and also paid Germany $16,688,000 for its seizure.

Lesson for December 19

THE BIRTH OF JESUS

LESSON TEXT—Luke 2:8-20.
GOLDEN TEXT—For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord.—Luke 2:11.
PRIMARY TOPIC—When Jesus Came.
JUNIOR TOPIC—When Jesus Came.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—The Birth of Our Saviour.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—God's Gift of a Saviour.

Few indeed are the stories that will bear retelling or the books that are worth re-reading. Rare is the song that we care to hear more than once. How significant then that we come to the observance of Christmas each year with hearts full of delight in the story of the birth of Jesus, eager again to hear the account from God's Word, and to listen with attentive souls for the sound of the angel's song in the Christmas music.

The birth of our Lord as the incarnate Saviour of men is still front page, headline news, even in 1937. The glad tidings of his coming still color the thinking and living of a world that has gone far from him, that lives today in hatred and enmity, even while outwardly recalling the coming of the One who was to bring peace on earth. We have even gone so far that men feel that the way to promote peace is to use the sword. Until the Prince of Peace himself shall reign there may be no other way. But let us be certain at this Christmas time that the tender baby hand from the cradle at Bethlehem has reached our hearts and lives, bringing us peace with God and good will toward men.

The first seven verses of our chapter relate the coming of Mary with Joseph to God's appointed place at his appointed time, for the entrance into this world of the Son of God as the "Word" that "was made flesh and dwelt among us" (John 1:14). Our lesson opens with the proclamation of the blessed good news to the shepherds in the field.

I. "Unto You Is Born . . . a Saviour" (vv. 8-14).

Christ was a great teacher, one whom the common people heard gladly, "for he taught them as one that had authority, and not as the scribes" (Mark 1:22). He was a leader among men, and lived a life which was an example beyond that of any man. But mark it well, this was not the central and essential purpose of his coming. He came as a Saviour. His mother was told before his birth that she should "call his name JESUS: for he shall save his people from their sins" (Matt. 1:21).

It is not enough to be among the countless thousands who superficially observe Christmas with greetings and gifts. We must with the shepherds go and present ourselves in personal devotion to him. If you have not met the Lord Jesus as your own personal Saviour do it now. And if you know him, make this a Christmas in which Christ is supreme.

II. "Let Us Now Go . . . and See" (vv. 15, 16).

Their fear changed to assurance by the words of the angel, the shepherds at once "go" and "see." Would that all those who heard today did likewise. The shepherds might well have found all manner of excuses for not going. They had sheep to care for, they were not prepared for a journey. No, the urge was upon them "and they came with haste . . . and found" Jesus.

III. "When They Had Seen . . . They Made Known" (vv. 17-20).

Mary the mother of Jesus had special reason to ponder these things in her heart. But the shepherds "returned, glorifying and praising God for all that they had heard and seen."

"Let the redeemed of the Lord say so" (Ps. 107:2). When we have found the Lord Jesus we must not simply rejoice in the satisfaction and peace that has come to our own souls. We are saved to serve. The normal expression of the new life in Christ is the proclamation of the gospel to the ends of the earth. Only in that spirit do we truly keep Christmas!

To every one that sees these lines—whether editor, typesetter, or proofreader—whether a reader in the midst of the clamor of the great city or in the quiet of a distant countryside, whether old or young, whether well or on a sickbed, whether alone, far from family and friends, or in the bosom of your family, the writer of these lines extends in the name of Christ a most hearty good wish for a blessed Christmas.

Lesson of Experience

Experience teacheth many things, and all men are his scholars; yet he is a strange tutor unteaching that which he himself hath taught.

BUSTER BEAR MAKES A REQUEST

BUSTER BEAR shook with laughter as he watched Reddy Fox disappear just like a little red streak. It had been great fun to give Reddy such a scare.

"I guess he won't come fooling around here again in a hurry," chuckled Buster.

"I guess he won't," chuckled Jumper the Hare. "I'm ever and ever so much obliged to you, Buster Bear. I—I'd like to do something for you to make up for it. Do you think I can do anything for you?

"You Might Let Me Know If You Discover Any Danger for Me in the Green Forest," Said Buster Thoughtfully.

I don't know how I can, because I'm so small and you are so big and strong. But I'd like to do something. I would, ever so much."

Buster scratched his head thoughtfully and there was a twinkle of fun in his shrewd little eyes as he looked down at Jumper. It struck him very funny that anyone so much smaller than he and so very, very timid really might be able to help him, but he was too shrewd to look down on anyone because they were smaller and weaker than he. He learned a long time ago not to despise anyone just because they are not big and strong. So he scratched his head and his eyes twinkled as he tried to think of some way in which Jumper the Hare could repay him for giving Reddy Fox such a fright. You see, it really had been a very great favor to Jumper, because Reddy Fox was hunting him. Now Reddy had had such a scare that he would not venture back there again very soon.

"You might let me know if you discover any danger for me in the Green Forest," said Buster thoughtfully.

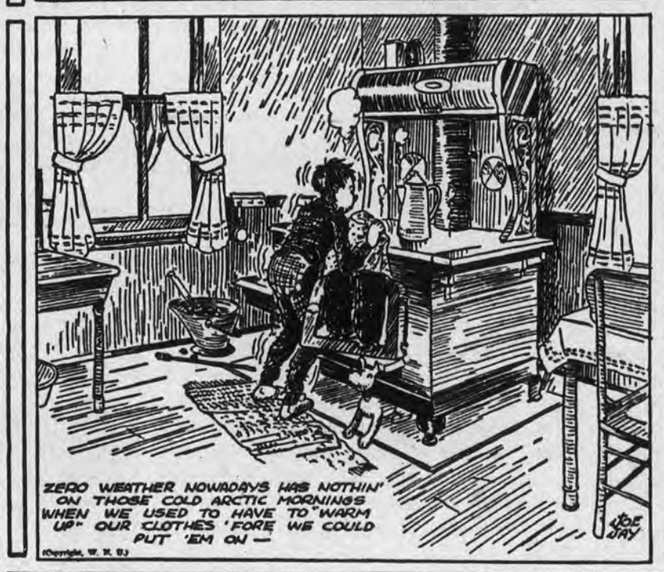
Jumper looked at him as if he didn't know whether to think Buster was joking or not. Somehow Buster looked as if he meant it.

"I—I'll be very glad to," replied Jumper, "only I don't know what danger there can be for you. You are so big and strong and have such great teeth and claws that I—why, I don't see what there is for you to be afraid of, Buster!"

Buster looked as if he didn't know just what to say. No one ever likes to admit being afraid of anything. "Does—does a man ever visit the Green Forest?" asked Buster in a hesitating way.

"Farmer Brown's boy does sometimes, but nobody is much afraid of him any more," replied Jumper promptly. "He was very nice to Chatterer the Red Squirrel and to Mrs. Grouse and to Peter Rabbit this last winter, and everybody knows it. Besides, you are as big as he is and a whole lot stronger. Of course, you wouldn't be afraid of him, Buster!"

"N-o-o, no, of course not!" replied Buster. "Did you say he carries a dreadful gun?"



"He used to, but he doesn't very much now excepting when he hunts for Granny Fox or Reddy Fox," said Jumper.

"He might if he knew that I were here," replied Buster, "so I guess if you'll let me know when he is anywhere around I'll just keep out of sight. You know I wouldn't want to frighten him." Buster looked up at Sammy Jay and winked as he said this, and Sammy chuckled. "If you really want to do something for me," continued Buster, "you can try to find out for me where there is some honey. I want some honey. I'm almost starved for some honey." Buster put both paws on his stomach and looked so forlorn that Jumper had to laugh. "Don't laugh," said Buster. "Just think, I haven't had a taste of honey since last fall! If you hear of any anywhere, please hurry to let me know. Will you, Jumper?"

Jumper promised that he would, though how he was going to find out where there was any honey was more than he could guess. But he was willing to try, for he felt grateful to Buster Bear for frightening away Reddy Fox.

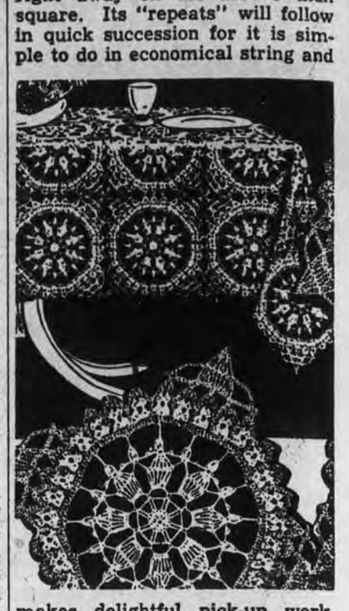
Bust of Benjamin Franklin

Houdon's bust of Benjamin Franklin, done in 1778, while he was American minister in Paris, is reputed to be the first likeness of an American made by a painter or sculptor in Europe. The statue is owned by Franklin and Marshall college.



New Fog Light

John Hays Hammond, Jr., nationally known electrical inventor, is shown with his latest apparatus to pierce the thickest fog for a distance of a quarter to a half mile. The apparatus consists of an ordinary photo-flood bulb mounted inside a riding light that has a fresnel lens. The device can be operated with a fog horn, lighting at the same time the horn blows, as a result of which circumstance a fairly close check can be had on all craft within a quarter of a mile.

THE CHRISTMAS BRIDE

SYNOPSIS

Young Gregory Sterling, having made a fortune in the West, reluctantly returns to his home town, and takes a luxurious room at the Whittall House. In a park, he sees a girl sitting on a bench suddenly keel over, and rushes to her rescue. He takes her to a hospital, where the doctor pronounces the case starvation. Gregory engages a private room and a special nurse, Miss Gowen. While Gregory considers endowing a hospital room in memory of his mother, for the free use of strangers, he finds a purse beneath the park bench where the girl had sat. Opening it, he finds it empty except for a letter addressed to Miss Margaret McLaren, 1456 Rodman street, with a blurred Vermont postmark. Reaching Rodman street, he talks to a disagreeable landlady, who insinuates Miss McLaren gave up a good job because of her boss' behavior, and that three weeks' rent is overdue. Gregory pays the rent. He then reads the letter, signed Grandmother, thanking Margaret for the money she sent. When he reaches the hospital to make arrangements for the endowment, he finds the patient improved but insistent on leaving immediately to find a job. He tells her of the room endowment, and guarantees to get her a good job by Monday. Greg ponders on methods of doing good with his money, and writes Rhoderick Steele, a Virginia minister he met on the train, for possible guidance. After church, he goes to the hospital, tells Margaret he is giving her a job himself, and that in the morning they will rent an office in a rooming house known to Miss Gowen, and get to work. The following morning the head nurse returns from a vacation, ignorant of the endowed room, and insultingly questions Margaret's rights there, and tells her to get out. Margaret, still weak, leaves and finds refuge in a railway station, considering her next step. Meanwhile, on a small Vermont farm, Margaret's feeble old grandparents worry about her, and lament the wickedness of the city, and the need for Margaret to work there in order to pay the interest on the mortgage held by hard old Elias Horner. Horner arrives to demand full payment by four days after Thanksgiving. Back at the hospital, Miss Gowen discovers Margaret's absence.

"Oh, it's you, is it, Miss Gowen? Well, I wondered when you'd turn up. Just what have you been trying to put over on the hospital authorities, I should like to know? Letting a charity case into our most expensive private room that had been under special orders for one of our best paying patients?"

Miss Gowen's pleasant eyes flashed fire.

"I had nothing to do with letting my patient into the room," she said, "she was there when I came on the case. I understood that she was placed there by orders from the office. I have nothing to do with that, but I do have to do with looking after my patient. Will you kindly tell me what you have done with her? I will go to her at once and you can settle the other question with the people who put her there. Where is she?"

"I'm sure I don't know," was the cold reply. "I told her that I would give her five minutes to dress and get out of the hospital if she was able to go. If she wasn't I said I would have her moved to the ward where she belonged. She seemed to think she could go, so I hope she has gone. You'll probably have plenty of chance to explain to the office. The idea, a girl like that in that room!"

"What do you mean, a girl like that?" asked Margaret's nurse, now thoroughly roused. "She was a lovely girl. I never saw a lovelier."

"You being the judge!" sneered Miss Grandon. "Well, we'll see whether the board of directors agrees with you when it comes to a showdown.

"This isn't a reform school and we don't keep our most expensive private rooms for young women who run around with strange young men who pretend they are paying for it, and tell lies about memorial rooms."

"But it is a memorial room," said Miss Gowen breathlessly, "the bronze tablet is expected to arrive today!"

"Oh, so that young fellow put something over on you, too, did he? I begin to see why they never made you a head nurse!"

Miss Gowen grew white with anger, and her eyes grew dark with indignation for an instant. Then she turned and strode away down the hall to the stairs and disappeared, while Miss Grandon watched her with a supercilious smile.

Miss Gowen inquired of every nurse and attendant who had been about during the last half hour, but none of them had seen Margaret McLaren, except a man down in the front office who thought he had seen a young woman come down the stairs a few minutes ago and slip hurriedly out of the street door.

The nurse went out in the street, up and down, wildly, in her uniform, the cold wind blowing her hair untidily about her face but there was no sign of her patient.

She dashed back into the hospital and interviewed all the nurses on her hall, but no one had seen Margaret leave.

At last, filled with chagrin and embarrassment, Miss Gowen took her way to the telephone booth and tried to call up Greg.

Now Greg had arisen early, for he realized that he had many things to set in order if he was to be honestly a business man before he took on a secretary in earnest.

He had spent much time in his room formulating plans, for he felt keenly that this girl would be suspicious of him if his mind appeared to be in chaos regarding his business. How could any man think in a noisy place like this? Thundering of trains, clang of trolley cars, whir of motors, bang, bang, bang of fire engines, whistle of sirens.

He felt that the first and most important thing was to get that tired, sad little girl located in a comfortable room, and somehow provide her salary in advance so that she would be relieved from financial worry. Perhaps it was almost time to send more money to those old people who had written her that pitiful little letter he had read.

So he had taken out pencil and notebook and set down in order exactly what he had decided to do and what he meant to say to the girl about her salary. That was the most difficult matter he would have to deal with, for he foresaw that the girl would not be willing to be befriended. After much deliberation he decided to find out the normal salary for high-class work of various kinds and pay her a salary that would be sort of an average of them all. He would need help in so many different ways. Buying a house, furnishing it. Surely people paid big salaries for such work. He was sure the girl, from her whole dainty appearance, had good taste and would be worthy of a good salary for that.

He ate a hasty breakfast and betook himself to the big department stores, where he sought out heads of departments and asked a lot of questions. Therefore it happened that when the little French telephone instrument in his hotel room rippled out ring after ring, it fell upon silent, unresponsive air, and word came back to the hospital booth, "They do not answer. Shall I keep on ringing?"

"Who Did That, Miss Gowen?" Asked Greg, His Voice Coldly Steady.

Miss Gowen had Mr. Sterling paged through the lobby, halls, dining room and writing rooms, but they said he could not be found. She was fairly frantic and ran back to her own hall, routing out the head nurse again, demanding more information about the disappearance of her patient.

The head nurse was coldly sarcastic, calmly triumphant, and when Greg finally arrived on the scene and went up to the room as had been arranged, leaving his taxi waiting outside, he found an agitated Miss Gowen, his box of violets still in her hand, confronting an icy superior outside the door of the room. There were tears on Miss Gowen's cheeks, angry tears, baffled tears, and a look of frantic despair in her eyes.

"There he is now!" he heard her say, and the head nurse turned to look haughtily at the man who had dared to invade her sacred precincts and disarrange her order of things.

"She's gone!" said Miss Gowen to Greg, suddenly smothering her agitated face in her handkerchief.

"Gone?" said Greg.

"Yes, gone!" said Miss Gowen, catching her breath in a kind of a sob. "I suppose you'll blame me, but I never dreamed any such thing could happen. They drove her out while I was at breakfast. They told her this wasn't a memorial room and you had lied to her."

"Who did that, Miss Gowen?" asked Greg, his voice coldly steady, his gray eyes alert, his firm jaw set in a way that made him a formidable foe. "Who dared to tell her that?" Greg's voice somehow resembled the blue of steel in a gun pointed straight at a vital part.

Then up spoke the head nurse with her most important air:

"I did!" she said coldly. "I am the head nurse. I discovered that someone had put over a gigantic fraud on the hospital, and I made it very plain to the girl who had presumed to accept a private room that she was not wanted there. I offered to have her moved to the ward where she belonged if she was unable to leave the building but she declined most ungraciously."

Greg's eyes were fixed upon Miss Grandon now, and there seemed to be points of light in them that made them burn like fire. Miss Gowen watched him startled. She wondered if the head nurse realized how angry he was. Suddenly he put up his hand and interrupted the hard, cold explanation.

"I see!" he said in the stern tone used. "You need not say anything more now. We'll deal with that afterward. The point is, where is Miss McLaren now? Don't let's waste any more time!"

Three nurses and an interne had gathered up the hall listening.

Just at that point a doctor arrived on the scene, the doctor who had taken the case when Margaret McLaren had been brought in, and behind him walked a white-clad man from the office below with a workman in his wake, who carried a large bronze plate.

"This is the room," said the white-clad attendant to the workman, pointing toward the open door of the room where Margaret had been such a short time before. "The plate is to be on the door," he said.

"Yes," said the workman. "I measured it for the door panel. I guess you'll havta ask these folks to move."

"What's all this?" asked the head nurse sharply, swinging around upon the workman.

"Just a bit of work to be done here, Miss Grandon," explained the attendant.

"But I don't understand!" said the head nurse sharply.

The doctor stepped forward pleasantly, yet with an air of authority, to explain.

"This room has been made a special memorial room, Miss Grandon," he said. "This man has the bronze plate for the door."

"Bronze plate!" said Miss Grandon, the color rising suddenly in her face. "Memorial room! What do you mean? And when could this possibly have been done?"

"This was done Saturday morning at that special meeting that was called to arrange for the extra nurses in the baby ward. It was the donation of Mr. Sterling, a native and former resident of our city. Let me introduce him to you, Miss Grandon, Mr. Sterling. And now, Mr. Sterling, how is your patient? I understand I am to have the pleasant duty of dismissing her from our care, I've just been studying her report card and it couldn't be more satisfactory."

Miss Grandon's face was a study in sudden crimson and Greg acknowledged the introduction only by another stern, steady look. Then he turned to the doctor.

"I'm sorry," he said gravely, "there seems to have been some very unkind work going on here and our patient has been driven away. I'll leave you, doctor, to find out who is at fault, while I go out and try to find the patient. I have no time to lose. I am very anxious about Miss McLaren, and if all I hear is true I'm afraid she will take pains that we shall never find her again. Are you coming to help me, Miss Gowen?"

The doctor looked from one to another in perplexity, but Greg walked quickly away to the elevator with the nurse, and the groups about dissolved hastily, so that Miss Grandon was left to face the doctor's accusing eyes alone.

The taxi was chugging away at the door and Greg put the nurse in it. She had come just as she was, except to stop long enough at her room to snatch her cloak.

Greg had given the order to the driver to go around the streets that were nearby to the hospital, and as they drove he looked down at the nurse and found her weeping softly.

"Look here, now," he protested, "you mustn't feel that way. It certainly wasn't your fault."

"Oh, but I can't help feeling it was," she said, brushing away the tears.

"But let's forget that now. Let's find Miss McLaren first. We can make it up to her. Where do you think she would go first?"

"Oh, I don't know," said Miss Gowen.

"Do you think she would go to her old boarding place and try to get her things first?" asked Greg.

"No, I don't think she would," said Nurse Gowen. "I think she would hunt a job the very first thing."

"There!" said Greg soothingly, "don't blame yourself. How would she go about getting a job as early as half past eight? Most places aren't open that early, are they?"

"Well, not many. But there are employment offices."

"Then let's go to the agencies in this region. She couldn't have walked far. She was too weak."

So they visited every agency in the neighborhood, but found no trace of Margaret.

"Well, perhaps we'd better try her old boarding place now," said Greg at last.

"I don't think she'll go back there till she has a job," said the nurse again. "She's very proud, and she told me how disagreeable that old landlady was. But, of course, it wouldn't hurt to try."

So they drove to Rodman street and interviewed the human dreadnaught again.

"Miss McLaren was to have left the hospital today," said Greg politely, "I am wondering if she has returned here yet or has gone to some friend's house. I have a message for her."

"No, she ain't here," said the old woman, looking him sharply over, and then taking in the white-capped nurse in the taxi. "Has she got a job yet? I don't want her back unless she has a job. I can't stand waiting fer my money."

"Miss McLaren has a job," said Greg firmly, "but I don't think she intends to return here to stay."

"H'm!" said the old woman sourly, "I suppose you put her up to that!"

"I think Miss McLaren will probably come or send for her things very soon," said Greg, ignoring her insinuation and speaking with far more confidence than he felt.

They drove away into the sunshine of the day that was to have been so very pleasant for them all, filled with trouble and perplexity.

"Have you any other suggestions?" asked Greg, looking at the nurse with the expression of a boy who had lost his best treasure and didn't know where to hunt next. "Did you tell her the address of the place we were going this morning to look at rooms?"

"Why, yes, I did!" said Nurse Gowen, hope springing into her eyes again. "I told her all about it. She asked what part of the city it was in and I gave her the name of the woman and told her what rooms she had."

"Well, shall we try your friend?" said Greg.

So they drove to the house where Nurse Gowen's friend lived and saw the pleasant double parlors that might be had for an office, and went upstairs to the big back bedsitting room, with a bath adjoining, that might be had for his secretary, and Greg said he would take them on the spot. The board was to begin the day his secretary arrived.

Extraction of Radium Long and Costly Process; Found Throughout Earth's Crust

The preciousness of the element radium is due in large part to the difficulties of extracting it from the parent ore (uranium) with which it is invariably associated, writes John A. Maloney in Scientific American. The wearisome labors of the Curies were not extraordinary when we consider that modern chemistry has made but slight progress in refining radium since the Curies pointed the way. Radium does not occur in great veins like coal or iron, but is found with uranium in what the chemist calls a state of equilibrium. This means that there is always a maximum amount of radium in proportion to the amount of uranium in which it is found. Contrary to popular belief, radium is found widely distributed throughout the lithosphere, or crust, of the earth, and there is good reason to believe that it occurs also abundantly within the interior of the earth.

Thus far, radium has been found in the earth associated with uranium itself or other ores containing uranium. Among these the most important is pitch-blende, which is a blackish uranium oxide containing other metals in negligible quantities as impurities. Pitch-blende deposits occur in Cornwall, England; in Jachymov (formerly called St. Joachimstaal) in Czechoslovakia; in the Belgian Congo, and in the Great Bear lake region of Canada.

Next comes carnotite, which occurs as a binder between the sands and has been found in Utah and Colorado. Carnotite bears the chemical name of potassium uranyl vanadate and it has played an important part in the history of radium in the United States.

Autunite, a calcium uranium phosphate, occurs in Portugal and Australia, and has also been a source of radium production, although not a very economical one.

What Irvin S. Cobb Thinks about

Prehistoric Lore.

DEL RIO, TEXAS.—According to the scientists, who have a great way of naming earthly phenomena without inquiring into the wishes of the phenomena, we are now living in a terrestrial era known as the Hollocene period.

Irvin S. Cobb

This will be news to a lot of people who rather suspected we were living through a stage which might be called Chaos.

Still, it's no wonder that the word hasn't got around generally yet, because this present era is quite a young era as eras go. It's merely a few million years old, which, to our true geologist, is the same as yesterday. Mention a few million years to him and he'll say "phew!" and just snap his fingers—like that.

I wonder if the authorities would pardon a suggestion from a poor ignoramus whose acquaintance with geology is largely limited to two of its surface phases, namely: Regular paved roads and those derned detours. When we consider most of the humorous illustrations and the bulk of the humorous text printed in the average smart magazine of today, and the even spicier lines heard in smart modern plays, wouldn't it be more fitting to call it, not the Holocene, but the Obscene period?

The Law's Long Arm.

THE long arm of the law—it's a grand phrase, isn't it? So mouth-filling, so satisfying to the honest citizen's soul!

It conjures up visions of unrelenting warfare against crime, inevitable punishment for the guilty. It's the bunk!

It's the bunk because of crooked lawyers; venal policemen; complacent prosecutors; soft-hearted or corrupted jurors; witnesses, bribed or intimidated; the law's delays; reversals of fair verdicts on foolish technicalities; a false sentimentality which forgets the widow and orphan of the victim and thinks only of the family of the killer; most often of all, abuse of the powers to commute and to pardon and to parole.

These days, when I see a sentenced offender handcuffed to an officer, I find myself saying to myself, "Chances are that fellow, literally or figuratively, is wearing that decoration only temporarily."

The Passing Years.

EVERY newborn year is a rosy prospect just as nearly every dying year is a dun-colored disappointment. But without revived hope what could we look forward to except being measured for a shroud?

It seems only yesterday when 1937 was busting in, a radiant, bouncing baby-child, his arms burdened with promises, bless his little soul! After several false starts, happy days were here again. Nobody was aiming to remodel the Supreme court. Senator Ashurst told us so, and didn't he know? He didn't.

Secretary Wallace, slightly assisted by Divine Providence, would immediately have the crop situation well in hand. Grass would grow only in the street leading to the almshouse. The Wall Street boys were expecting two suckers in every pot. And the song of the Bulbul was heard in the land—ah, the bulbul!

Within the 12-month the Republican party again would be a going concern. Well, if it's a going concern, the question is, where?

And now, laden with future gifts, comes 1938. How time flies! Why, before you know it, Sistie will be old enough to take a job with the radio and Buzzie will be signing testimonials.

Gambling Houses.

A ONCE famous card-sharp—not reformed, but retired—said to me:

"Show me a professional gambling house where the roulette wheel isn't crooked, where any other mechanical device is on the square, where the operatives from the bosses on down won't skin a customer—call him a sucker, if you want to; the terms are interchangeable—and I'll drop dead from shock, because no such outfit ever existed nor ever will, not so long as games can be tricked, as all of them can, and gamblers are out for the coin, as they naturally are, and the hand is quicker than the eye, which it is."

"But how about the mathematical percentage in favor of the bank—isn't that enough?" I asked.

"How about the mathematical percentage of crooked law-enforcement officers who have to be bribed?" he countered. "There's never enough coming in to satisfy those babies."

A General Quiz

1. What are the freezing and boiling points of mercury?
2. Which is larger, the United States of Brazil or the United States of America?
3. What do the designs and colors of Scotch plaids indicate?
4. What were the first messages sent by telegraph and telephone?
5. Does the use of veneer on furniture imply poor quality?

Answers

1. Its freezing point is —37.96 degrees F., and its boiling point, 675 degrees F.
2. The United States of Brazil, which is 272,000 square miles larger.
3. The clans or regiments to which their wearers belong.
4. The first by telegraph was, "What hath God wrought," and by telephone, "Mr. Watson, please come here: I want you."
5. It does not. It is the only method by which the grain or figure in some rare and beautiful woods can be displayed to advantage.

"WARMING" ACTION EASES CHEST COLD TIGHTNESS

Ease the tightness and pressure of your chest cold tonight with the thorough counter-irritant and vaporizing action of Penetro, the only salve which has a base of old-fashioned mutton suet together with 113% to 227% more medication than any other nationally sold cold salve. A Christmas Editorial

WE hope you are as happy this Christmas as we are. We've been looking in retrospect over the months since we regretfully threw away last year's Christmas tree because the drying needles just wouldn't cling to it any longer, and we're glad we didn't throw away our real, earnest love for peace on earth and good will toward men with it.

There are places in the world, somewhat remote from us, where people have not been inspired, exactly, by the eternal spirit of Christmas, and when we see what's happened there, we're more than a little thankful they ARE remote. Maybe we've had troubles, too, over the past year, but darned if we don't somehow find it hard to remember just what they were, with Christmas carols ringing in our ears and the warm spiritual glow of the Yuletide melting all the orneriness out of us. We're content just to go on doing our job, trying to print an honest, friendly and interesting newspaper that fulfills its mission of service in the community.

Meanwhile, we're determined to remember our lot will always be this happy if we keep alive the love and fellowship and humility of Christmas until December 25 rolls around again. It's a cheerful feeling; may you feel it, too. A Merry Christmas to you!

A CHEERFUL goodbye wave—the vestibule door swings shut—and the family's away—visiting on the L&N. And as their Home Sweet Home on Rails glides off, you know the most precious of all your valuables are safe in a treasure chest of steel.

Along the right-of-way and on the train itself, millions of dollars worth of automatic signals and safety devices guard them. Thousands of efficient employes are always on the job—alert to extend the 20-year record of no passenger fatalities in a train accident. This peace of mind for you—this safety for them—isn't it the greatest of all transportation bargains at 2 to 3 cents a mile?

Every foot of the way, Friendly Service surrounds them. They relax in air-conditioned comfort, sleep in deep restful berths, dine on foods so tempting that our Southern Chefs are asked how they are prepared.

When the family leaves on the L & N—they're just over at the neighbor's. Won't you drop in too, Neighbor, next trip you make out of town?

This Is Serious Business

Composing a letter to Santa is indeed serious business. The writing may not be literary, but he usually manages to fill the orders.

CHRISTMAS 1937

Just 8 more days until Christmas! How familiarly rings this old bit of news, and yet how gladly we welcome it! Christmas! The most kindly and human of all the seasons because it is penetrated and irradiated with a feeling of genuine human brotherhood.

We have read of ringing bells when royalty is born and of tolling bells when great men pass away. We have read of many Nations and their celebration of their "red-letter" days; days that feature carnivals and festivals, but once and only once does the whole world stand still to celebrate the coming of a little Babe in Bethlehem who "glorified the cradle, beautified boy hood and sanctified Mother hood". Only a little babe claims this world wide recognition and undying remembrance.

So, when we come to think of Christmas we think of the many happy little hearts that will gladly quicken to the merry hoof beats of Santa's reindeers. We think of the many legends surrounding Christmas. The many songs and stories written, told and sung thru the ages commemorating this glad season. We pause from our busy lives here in America long enough to catch a bit of this centuries old spirit and evidence the fact by lighting our Christmas trees hanging up our stocking, and by remembering friends far and near by sending a greeting card expressing a heartfult throught. There will be family re-unions of loved ones long separated. The old Bird of Cranberry dinner will be staged and games, dances, life, love and happiness will reign and the whole air at Christmas time will be tremulous with joy. True it is,

"We ring the bells and raise the strain,
We hang up garlands everywhere
And bid the tapers twinkle fair,
And feast and frolic-and then we go Back to old lives again."

—But why not? May we not, at one time during the whole year unite together in a spirit of harmony and in a festival that appeals to everyone because every one understands it and loves it. David Gregg once said: "It is worthy of all. Let the Star shine Let the Magi give gifts. Let the Shepherds worship. Let the angel faces flash out of the great dome over head. Let the church bells chime. Let the harps and organs respond to the master hand that sweeps the strings and flies over the keys, and let them turn the common air into praise. Let Christmas carols roll over the whole earth, and echo among the stars.

Let's have a happy Christmas. Stop looking backward—Look for ward and recount to yourselves all that Christmas stands for—I wish for each of you every happiness, and a day filled with the brightness that comes from the radiance of the Star of Bethlehem.

MRS F C WILSON HONORED WITH TEA SHOWER

Mrs L B Riddle assisted by Mrs Dixie Shealey entertained on Saturday afternoon at the home of Mrs Riddle in honor of Mrs F C Wilson (Clarice Evans) a recent Bride and former resident with a Tea Shower.

The color scheme of pink and green was carried out in decorations and cut flowers and ferns adorned the living and dining rooms in which were assembled former friends of the honoree. Tea, sandwiches, mints and nuts were served, and a lovely musical program was rendered throughout the afternoon by Mrs. Sasser and Elizabeth Stone.

Judge Cage Head who has been a patient at the Veterans Hospital in Tuscaloosa for the past two months was a cordially welcomed guest in Columbiana on Tuesday. He returned for further treatment in the phospital on Wednesday.

Mr and Mrs "Punch" West are happy over the arrival of a new little blessed event in their home near Columbiana.

A Christmas Pageant will be presented at the Methodist Church on Sunday afternoon at 5 o'clock. Living pictures with appropriate music will be portrayed. All are cordially invited.

WRIGHT BENTON

Mrs. William Peaschall of Birmingham has announced the marriage of her daughter, Beatrice Tate Wright, to Samuel A. Benton, on Wednesday, December 3.

The above announcement will be read with interest to a wide ty of both patries-Beatrice Tate Wright has been a favorite radio entertainer with the listeners of WAPI, and Sam A Benton, son of Mrs. Fay Miles Benton is well known in Columbiana a former resident, and also holds a enviable reputation as an Announcer of outstanding ability.

The Benton's will make their future home in Gadsden.

Closing the office in a happy ed to have Little Doc Armstrong son of Mr and Mrs Lafayette Armstrong, make his initial visit to us. Snuggled warm and cosy in his blue and babette paraphanalia, he completely won our admiration, even though he was a bit sleepy-however, he managed to smile a friendly greeting before the Sandman called too loudly that the Dream Trais was waiting! And a smile is good to see any old time. A creditable addition we will say to the outstanding citizens of Columbiana. One whom you will perhaps hear more about several years from now.

CHRISTMAS TRADITIONS

IF YOUR Christmas tree is a balsam—and that is the loveliest kind of all, both for appearance and for fragrance—then when you first light it a cheerful old superstition urges a glance at your shadow on the wall—if you dare. Should it appear headless you will not live to see another Christmas. Then, later, when the tree is burned, another tradition suggests keeping a partly burned stick to ward off lightning.

JIG-SAW CHRISTMAS ROMANCE

BY MARTHA BANNING THOMAS

CAROLINE told herself a dozen times a day that she did not care whether she heard from Stephen or not. What possible difference could it make now, after all these months of silence?

And here it was Christmas eve. Not a message! Not a card! Oh, well . . . she turned away from the window. One must not allow one's self the luxury of regret.

Fires burned brightly on the hearth. Holly hung above the mantel. Snow outside, cheer within. That was all she required. She hummed a tune in false gayety.

Caroline Was Not Alone With Her Bright Fire and Holly.

A ring at the door. Stephen? No, just a messenger boy with a box. Caroline's fingers crackled the red cellophane unwrapping it. No card. Just crazy dozens of jig-saw pieces.

She walked restlessly about the room. Then she returned to the box. Black and white pieces only. Idly she fitted a few together, leaned closer and frowned. Familiar hand-writing. Stephen's hand-writing!

Excitedly she bent above the puzzle fitting the rest together. Gradually Stephen's clear strong writing stared up at her.

"Dear Caroline," it read, "if you have the patience to put this together, I shall know you are still interested in me. I could not tell you what I wanted to, before I left, because I was not sure of circumstances. But now I know. I can take care of you. Will you marry me, Caroline? A yes would be the most marvelous Christmas present in the world. I love you.

"Stephen."

She laughed a little. She cried a little. Then she went to the mantel and snatched down a photograph of herself. This she cut up into small jagged pieces. On several she wrote a single word, which, when put together, read: "I have gone all to pieces, missing you." Then on the mouth of her pictured face, she added the single word "Yes."

These pieces she quickly wrapped up in the box sent to her, and dispatched it by a messenger, who admitted that a gentleman had given it to him, who was staying at the Inn in town.

In another hour Caroline was not alone with her bright fire and holly. And Christmas eve was what it should be. Stephen declared he had been too scared to come himself and sent the puzzle as a test-case. Then he kissed her.

Santa Himself

Niftiness for New Year's

LIKE to give yourself a lift for the New Year, Milady? Then spruce up with Sew-Your-Own — the easy way to chic. Here, for instance, are three swell swing models that will make you modern as tomorrow and put you in the running for the title, "best dressed woman." Right now it's parties you're thinking of, so pick a pair of eligibles from today's trio and you'll be groomed to hobnob with the smart young set.

Will You Dance?

The New Year's Party will be festive and so will you in the model at the left in black moire. This is a very young frock and not a little flattering to the debutante figure. It has a skirt that's built for dancing, and the oh, so slender waist is no drawback (take it from one who knows). Be sure, young lady, to have your version ready to go when the invitation to celebrate comes flashing over the wire.

Spic 'n' Classic.

There's always a "morning after," and that's when you'll be glad to have a spic and classic frock like the one above, center. It is suitable to take back to school to rouse the roommate's envy and, pleasantly enough, it's so easy to cut and stitch, a freshman can't go wrong. Make one version in flat crepe and a carbon copy in sheer wool—it is superb both ways.

Ah, My Friends.

How about a two-piecer of lame and velvet for that rousing family reunion over the holidays? The model above, right, is two pieces, but it's one with chic and figure flattery. You'll have your aunties making ohs and ahs and the bright young cousins calling you "the duchess"! What's more you'll look the part—a stunning compliment to your family as well as to the New Year.

The Patterns.

Pattern 1330 is designed for sizes 12 to 20 (30 to 40 bust). Size 14 requires 4⅜ yards of 39-inch material plus 6 yards of grosgrain ribbon to trim as pictured.

Pattern 1397 is designed for sizes 12 to 20 (30 to 40 bust). Size 14 requires 3½ yards of 39-inch material.

Pattern 1396 is designed for sizes 32 to 44. Size 34 requires 1⅞ yards of 39-inch material for the blouse; 1⅞ yards of 54-inch material for the skirt.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., Room 1020, 211 W. Wacker Dr., Chicago, Ill. Price of patterns, 15 cents (in coins) each.

New Pattern Book.

Send 15 cents for the Barbara Bell Fall and Winter Pattern Book. Make yourself attractive, practical and becoming clothes, selecting designs from the Barbara Bell well-planned, easy-to-make patterns.

GRANTING a woman's reputation for wise buying, let's trace the methods by which she has earned it. Where does she find out about the advantages and details of electrical refrigeration? What tells her how to keep the whole household clean — rugs, floors, bathroom tiling — and have energy left over for golf and parties? How does she learn about new and delicious entrees and desserts that surprise and delight her family? Where does she discover those subtleties of dress and make-up that a man appreciates but never understands?

Why, she reads the advertisements. She is a consistent, thoughtful reader of advertisements, because she has found that she can believe them—and profit thereby. Overlooking the advertisements would be depriving herself of data continuously useful in her job of Purchasing Agent to the Family.

For that matter, watch a wise man buy a car or a suit or an insurance policy. Not a bad shopper himself! He reads advertisements, too!

AROUND THE HOUSE

For Meringues.—Eggs that are several days old make better meringues than fresh ones.

A Needed Utensil.—A knife sharpener is as essential a piece of household equipment as the coffee pot. Not even an expert carver is able to do much with a dull knife.

• • •

Selecting Meats.—Good beef or pork or calves' liver is very bright in color and has little odor. Remember these points when selecting it.

• • •

Pr ring Starch.—Stir a piece of lard about as big as a five-cent piece into your starch while it is boiling. Your clothes will take on a nice gloss, and the iron will not stick.

• • •

Caring for Knit Garments.—In wearing and caring for knit garments, beware of rough surfaces, which cause thread breaks. Give the garment rest periods; steam and reblock occasionally.

Herring Salad.—Boil and cut up about six potatoes as for potato salad. Place in a bowl with two pickled herrings (boned and cut into strips), a hard-boiled egg chopped fine, and a grated apple. Make a dressing of 2 tablespoonfuls each of cream, salad oil, vinegar, and pepper to taste, and pour over salad.

• • •

Watering House Plants.—Rinse water from milk bottles will make house plants healthy and vigorous.

Favorite Recipe of the Week—

ONE of the most refreshful tasting, and attractive looking salads is that of cranberry jelly and waldorf salad. It is effective to use for a buffet supper and blends well with any meat, fowl or casserole dish.

1 can cranberry jelly
2 apples
1 cup sliced celery
Mayonnaise

If the apple has lovely red skin leave it on; cut apple into pieces. Combine the apple with the celery and blend with mayonnaise. Arrange on chop platter, with pieces of jelly around it.

Rising Tide

A new magazine has made its appearance on the newsstands of the country. It is pictorial in character under the name of the "Rising Tide," originally issued in England and now being prepared for distribution in eleven countries under nine different languages. The magazine is reported to be a nonprofit publication carrying no advertising but such matter that is of interest to the people of the world who are seeking answers to their own problems. It is said that these problems are covered without regard to race, class or creed.

Sentinels of Health
Don't Neglect Them!
Nature designed the kidneys to do a marvelous job. Their task is to keep the flowing blood stream free of an excess of toxic impurities. The act of living—life itself—is constantly producing waste matter the kidneys must remove from the blood if good health is to endure.
When the kidneys fail to function as Nature intended, there is retention of waste that may cause body-wide distress. One may suffer nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—feel tired, nervous, all worn out.
Frequent, scanty or burning passages may be further evidence of kidney or bladder disturbance.
The recognized and proper treatment is a diuretic medicine to help the kidneys get rid of excess poisonous body waste. Use Doan's Pills. They have had more than forty years of public approval. Are endorsed the country over. Insist on Doan's. Sold at all drug stores.

Their Lucky Christmas

by Luella B. Lyons

JACK and Ellen Dyson couldn't find a thing for which they could be thankful and merry this Christmas—Jack out of work and Ellen with so little in the house left for meals. But to make matters worse, shortly after Jack left, Ellen missed the emerald setting out of her ring. She hadn't worn it for a long time but it had been her greatest consolation—if the "worst came to worst"—it could be sold. And with it gone!

Jack and Ellen Joined Hands and Danced About in Their Joy.

"Five presents here and they aren't from the five and ten, either, Jack! I know, you took my emerald to buy these, didn't you?" Ellen cried out, something she would't have said had her nerves and patience not been frayed to the thin edge.

"You honestly think that of me, Ellen? If that's the way you feel, all right, think what you please!"

Neither of them realized that they were hardly accountable for their mutual lack of understanding. Tears fairly blinded Ellen as she went out to bring in the little red hen, the last member of their little flock. She kept thinking that at least this, her last offering to the holiday dinner, was honest.

Then suddenly she caught sight of the familiar emerald—there in the little red hen's insides was hidden the gem she had thought poor Jack had taken. It took but a moment or two to wash up, snatch up the emerald and dash into the workroom where she went to her knees before her husband.

"Forgive? Why, Ellen dear, it certainly did look bad for me, no wonder. If I'd not been a stubborn fool I'd have gone on and explained myself. You see, darling, on the street today I found a packet of bonds and when I returned them to their owner, he gave me twenty dollars as a reward and after he found out I was unemployed, he offered me a beginner's job in his office!"

Even an old grouch would have had to grin had he seen Jack and Ellen then join hands and dance about in their joy for a merry, lucky Christmas!

Custom of Burning Yule Log From Scandinavians

THE Christmas custom of burning the Yule log originated among the ancient Scandinavians. During the period of winter solstice, they kindled great bonfires honoring the god Thor. This was at the feast of Juul. The Saxons and the Goths also celebrated a winter festival which they called Jul, and so we derive our expression of "Yuletide," for the Christmas season.

In the time of the feudal lords, the cutting down and bringing in of the huge Yule log, or "clog" as it was then called, was a ceremony of great importance. One old writer tells us that the Yule clog "was to be lighted with a brand of the last year's log, which had been carefully laid aside for the purpose, and music was to be played during the ceremony of lighting."

CHRISTMAS AND HOW

Kay's Selfish Christmas

by Martha Banning Thomas

TOBY BARNES, just home from the office, stood regarding his wife with amusement. "You have the manner, Kay, of being about to leap up and wave a flag. What's happened?"

"I've just discovered something important about myself." Kay's short, light curls were becomingly haphazard. Her eyes were of an intense blue. She was slender and young and vivid. "I'm supremely selfish." She rose to her feet and gesticulated with both hands, "I want to be utterly, gloriously engrossed in ME!"

They both laughed. Then Kay ran forward and dragged her husband down into a wide, comfortable chair, squeezing in beside him.

"You're a perfectly grand guy," she smiled, "but this Christmas, my man, I'm going to be superbly selfish, as an experiment. Will you try it too, Toby?"

"All right," he agreed, "I'll take you on."

The next morning Kay tilted a pert gray hat on her curls, and walked imperiously to the shopping district. "I'm fed up with being poor, and scrimping and saving so I can be generous in mean, little ways. Today I . . . spend on myself!"

She felt guilty and ridiculous, and she turned her eyes away from a haberdasher's window where gentlemen's furnishings were invitingly displayed. Toby needed masses and masses of things. No, just this once she would spend with a bang all she had on something frivolous for herself. Toby had promised to do the same.

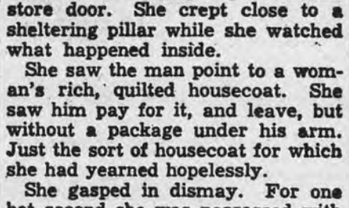
At noon she happened to notice a tall person standing by the next store window. He was absorbed in thought. Kay hardly breathed while the man suddenly plunged into the store door. She crept close to a sheltering pillar while she watched what happened inside.

She saw the man point to a woman's rich, quilted housecoat. She saw him pay for it, and leave, but without a package under his arm. Just the sort of housecoat for which she had yearned hopelessly.

She gasped in dismay. For one hot second she was possessed with anger. Toby wasn't playing fair. He had no right to make her feel ashamed and abject on Christmas morning!

When Toby's flapping overcoat was out of sight Kay slipped into the same shop, going straight to the counter her husband had left. "May I inquire," she asked crisply, "if that quilted housecoat just purchased, is to be delivered to Mrs. Toby Barnes?" She gave the house address. The clerk was startled into admitting the fact.

Kay threw up her chin. "I asked my husband, Mr. Barnes, to step in here today to buy that for me. I've changed my mind. May I exchange it for something I prefer?"



The clerk weakly nodded.

Christmas eve found Kay a bit cryptic. Toby carelessly inquired if a package had been delivered that afternoon. Kay said yes; it was waiting in the closet. As it was, though not quite what Toby supposed.

Kay was excited as a child on Christmas morning. There were waffles for breakfast and especially good coffee. Afterwards Mrs. Toby Barnes shoved her tall husband into his big chair. "Sit there," she commanded him, and left the room.

"When is this fine exhibition of selfishness going to begin?" he shouted after her. "I want to see it in action!"

Kay returned with a large package elaborately wrapped. Toby looked pleased. "There you are," he said. "I'm sorry, Kay, to fall down on our agreement, but I knew you wanted the darned thing."

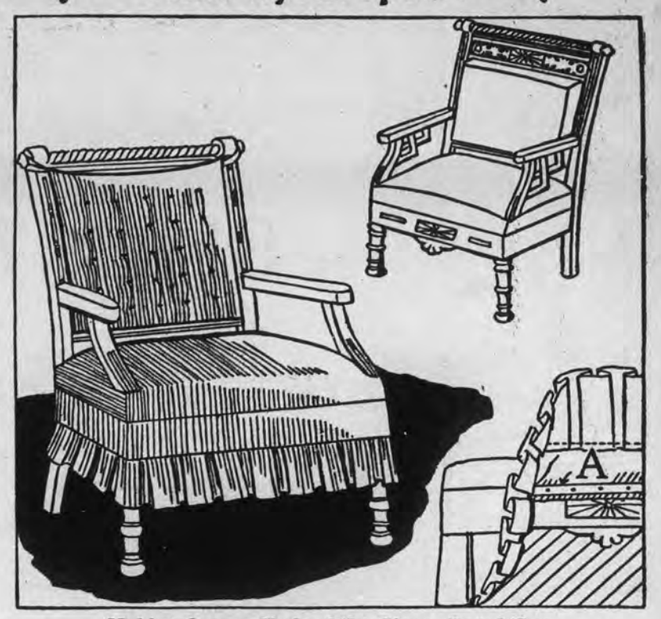
"There you are!" cried Kay hurling the box at him. "I simply will not let you squander your money on expensive things for me, Toby."

Toby opened the box, drawing forth a manly, well-tailored dressing gown for a tall gentleman. "You know," muttered his wife in a small voice, "you haven't a thing to sit around in at home."

"So this," he raved, "is the great exhibition of selfishness! And where is your housecoat, I'd like to know?"



Kay, in a thin, quivering voice, begged him to be kind while she explained.

HOW TO SEW

by Ruth Wyeth Spears

Making Over a Chair of the Ginger-Bread Era.

TO modernize the old walnut chair at the right the pieces under the arms were removed and most of the carving covered up. The padding at the back was removed entirely and replaced by a fiber board which was covered by a loose cotton filled cushion tufted like an old fashioned bed comfort except that the tied thread ends of the tufting were left on the wrong side.

This back cushion was fastened in place with tapes that slipped over the knobs at the ends of the upper carving. If the knobs to hold the cushion had been lacking it could have been tacked in place along the top on the under side by using a strip of heavy cardboard to keep the tacks from pulling through the fabric as shown here for tacking the box pleated ruffle around the seat as at A.

A plain rust colored heavy cotton upholstery material was used for the covering.

Every Homemaker should have a copy of Mrs. Spears' new book, SEWING. Forty-eight pages of step-by-step directions for making slipcovers and dressing tables; restoring and upholstering chairs, couches; making curtains for every type of room and purpose. Making lampshades, rugs, ottomans and other useful articles for the home. Readers wishing a copy should send name and address, enclosing 25 cents, to Mrs. Spears, 210 South Desplaines St., Chicago, Illinois.

Millions to Billions

There was paid to factory wage earners in America in 1869 the comparatively small total of $620,467,474. Because of an increased demand created by advertising for factory products the amount paid to workers had grown to $11,620,973,254 in 1929.

Seeking Your Will

You are seeking your own will. You are seeking some good other than the law you are bound to obey. But how long will you find good? It is not a thing of choice. It is a river that flows by the path of obedience. I say, again, man cannot choose his duties. You may choose to forsake your duties, and choose not to have the sorrow they bring. But you will go forth; and what will you find? Sorrow without duty—bitter herbs, and no bread with them.—George Eliot.

GOOD MORNING

by Milton Bird

Listening to other folks talk: Uncle Gus Nathan, "It ain't hard t' b'lieve in God w'en y' see a cyclone comin'." Norman Lefkovits: "Alabama has looked after me all right." Tom Norris: "Time and the law of average will look after it. "Leroy P Dycus: "Any war is better six thousand miles away." Irene Stone: "There's more work to coaching a play than being in it, and less fun." Rip Cox: "You win if you've got more eggs in your basket than the other fellow." W D Bearden: "Friendliness is better than austerity, in my business."

Arthur Rheden: "Given 'em th' music an' they'll dance or bust." Luther Curlee: "You can't look the snow out of the sky, Skillet." T C Rush: "Rain makes a little difference in roads." Hack Wilson: "You got to be healthy to be tough." Wales Wallace and Bill Riddle: "You're right coach." Red Simmons: "I'm frez 't a stiff jell." Mrs Fay Benton: "The first ten minutes of any snow are the prettiest." Uncle Jim when I was a boy . . . . "

There was a crowd in the probate office when I went in with the Post Judge Walker, Mary Wolley, Mrs. Roberts, Charlie Sparks, Jessie Weldon and several others. I gave Mary her paper, and Charlie his; and then turning to Jesse, I noticed he had a quarter in his hand. He traded me the quarter for his paper with this remark: "Just keep the change, lad." Everyone looked startled. Outside I remembered he was to pay me that day.

Why a man, with his senses intact will sit by his window and watch life pass by. knowing, in his own breast, that he is capable of finding happiness, yet doing nothing about it, besides eating his own heart away with a strange, self-imposed remorse . . . Why a man will tell you friendship is greater and more beautiful than love, yet sacrifice a dozen friend ships for the sting of Cupid's dart . . . . . .

Things I remember: the way the wind used to whistle through Mr W W Carter's barn . . . . Mrs Luck's theatre, where the post office is now and those Wallace Reid pictures . . the first time I read, The Sheik . . . Julia Campbell singing in the Christmas Cantata . . . those dances Mrs Leeper used to give . . . . and the Christmas Afternoon teas at Annie John Haynes' . . . . the Glee Club dance in '27, at the Old Leonard with Dan Garrett looking after the refreshments . . . Fred Harrison in amateur plays . . . Mrs W L Longshore's music on a violin . . . Mr Kimbrough at basketball practice . . . Sumpter Clarke talking between halves at Alex City. . . .

The game is the thing. And if you don't believe it, ask Ehney Camp the next time he is down for the weekend to see his folks, Mr and Mrs W L Christian. Now, Ehney and I had dis agreed over a certain country boy's ability to beat a certain City boy at the game of tennis. We had made very elaborate and quite unconscionable plans concerning this match, that was to take place sometime in August, when Ehney was down on his vacation. And August came too; as every August will, though every kid between Maine and Miami knows the next month is September and that is school time. After the first hour, the score was all even. Ehney said: "Let's get a drink." And we did. But the water didn't help. Back on the court. I thought: "Your game, Skillet, is to keep the other fellow running, hoping your shots will eventually go out of reach." But for the life of me I couldn't run this guy down. Then, out of the blue, the thought came that saved the day for the country. I remembered that Ehney had always liked a good joke. and that when he heard one he invariably stopped whatever he was doing and laughed. Well. I began the story of a very unfortunate Irishman The thing worked splendidly. While Ehney laughed, my shots whistled by. And from then on we had lots of fun and guess I did.

A PROSE POEM KEEPING CHRISTMAS

It is a good thing to observe Christmas Day.

But there is a better thing than the observance of Christmas Day, and that is, keeping Christmas.

Are you willing to forget what you have done for other people, and to remember what other people have done for you; to ignore what the world owes you, and to think what you owe the world; to put your rights in the background and your duties in the middle distance, and your chances to do a little more than your duty in the foreground; to see that your fellow men are just as real as you are, and try to look behind their faces to their hearts, hungry for joy, to own that probably the only good reason for your existence is not what you are going to get out of life, but what you are going to give life; to close your book of complaints against the management of the universe, and to look around you for a place where you can sow a few seeds of happiness—are you willing to do these things even for a day? Then you can keep Christmas.

Are you willing to stoop down and consider the needs and desires of little children; to remember the weakness and loneliness of people who are growing old; to stop asking how much your friends love you, and ask yourself whether you love them enough; to bear in mind the things that other people have to bear on their hearts; to try to understand what those who live in the same house with you really want, without waiting for them to tell you; to trim your lamp so that it will give more light and less smoke, and to carry it in front so that your shadow will fall behind you; to make a grave for your ugly thoughts and a garden for your kindly feelings, with the gate open—are you willing to do these things even for a day? Then you can keep Christmas.

And if you can keep it for a day why not always?

—Henry Van Dyke

To my friends throughout Shelby County I send my heartiest greetings and best wishes for Christmas and for the New Year.

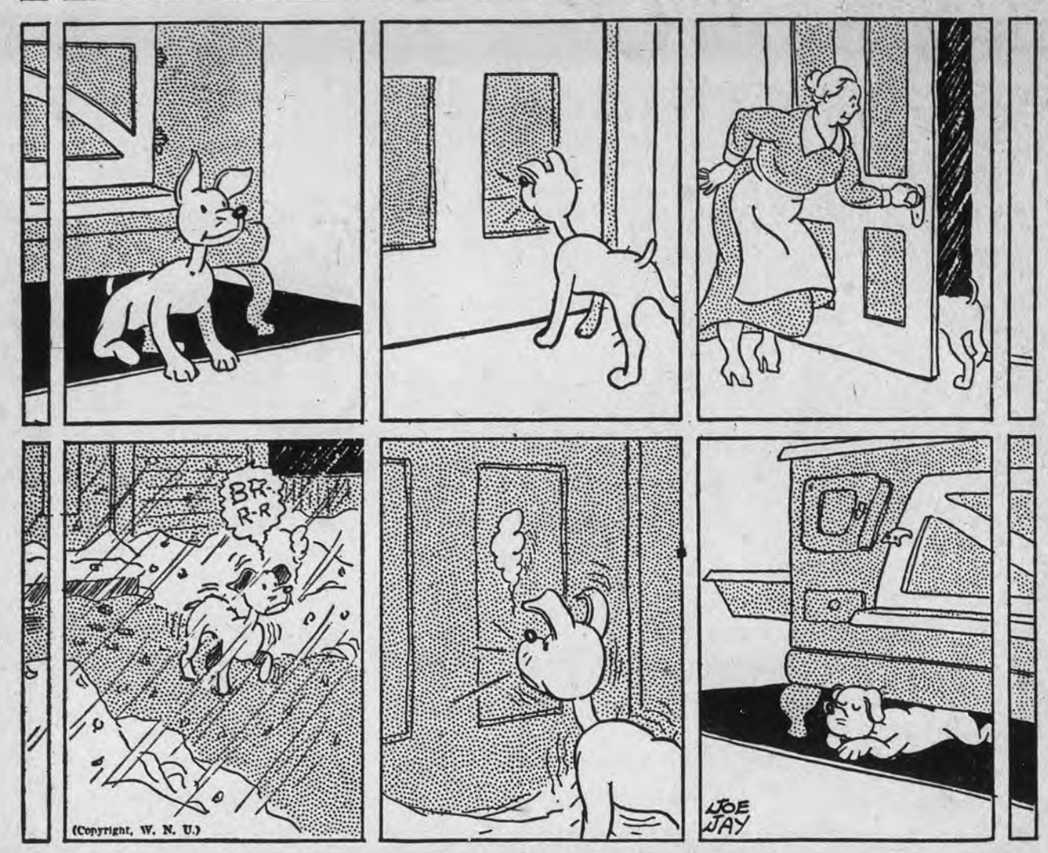
STERLING TATUM OF SILURIA KILLED IN AIRPLANE CRASH

Sterling Tatum, brilliant young aviator and son of Mr and Mrs Sam Tatum of Siluria, was killed near Fort Mitchell, Alabama on December 20th.



Mr Tatum has a host of friends throughout Shelby, County, who feel deeply this tragedy which has cast a gloom of sadness over this territory.

Lieut Tatum had recently returned from service with the Chinese flying forces and had been discharged about two weeks ago from the Alabama National Guard and had joined the U S Army stationed in Fort Benning. He had seen service in China as an instructor, but served only a few weeks after the War began, being ordered to relinquish his job with the Chinese by U S consular officials on the grounds that such services violated United State neutrality.

He is survived by his parents, Mr and Mrs Sam Tatum of Siluria, his widow and four months old son who was born in Shanghai before the outbreak of present hostilities.

Lesson for December 26

CHRISTIAN CONSECRATION

LESSON TEXT—Philippians 1:12-26.

GOLDEN TEXT—For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain.—Philippians 1:21.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Our Best Friend.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Answering Jesus.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Choosing a Life Purpose.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—What Christian Surrender Means.

Consecration is one of the words expressing Christian truth which has been so much used and so often misused that it has lost its savor. The writer remembers many a "consecration service" which meant nothing to those present except the fulfilling of a certain formula or program. The purpose of the meeting was excellent, but results were lacking because it had become a mere formality.

Paul the apostle knew nothing of any theory of consecration. He knew and lived and proclaimed such an abandonment of self to Christ and his cause as really required no statement in words—it was his life.

We close today a three-month series of studies in the Christian life. We began at the right point by considering "Christian Sonship," for no one can live until he is born and no one can live a Christian life until he is born again. We have considered together God's grace in keeping, renewing, guiding, blessing, and communing with his own. All these precious truths call us to devote ourselves to Christ in glad and full consecration.

Men give themselves thus to the building of a fortune, to the propagation of a political or social theory, to the pursuit of an occupation or profession. Why should not the Christian give himself in like measure for Christ and his holy cause?

Paul, in the verses of our lesson, shows that spirit and boldly declares that he follows Christ regardless of trying circumstance—he does so now, "in the body," not later in glory. And it matters not whether it be by life or death—"Christ shall be magnified."

I. "What Then?" (v. 18).

Paul was imprisoned for the gospel's sake. Did that stop him? no; he made the very guards who were assigned to watch him in his house into missionaries of the cross. He won each one as he took his designated period of service and sent him out as a testimony to "the whole praetorian guard and to all the rest" (v. 13 R. V.).

Then, some of his Christian associates taking advantage of the fact that he was imprisoned, went out to preach just to show that they were as good as he. They made their very preaching an expression of their envy of his popularity and hoped to heap more sorrow upon him. Did he get angry and bitterly fight back? No; he thanked God that Christ was preached. We need more of that spirit in our day.

II. "In My Body."

One of the glaring fallacies of human thinking is the idea that at some favorable time in the future we shall be able to enjoy life, do mighty deeds or serve the Lord. For example parents fail to enjoy their children because they are always looking forward to the next stage of their development. The time to enjoy and help our children is now. The time to serve the Lord Jesus is now. The day will come when we shall be glorified with him, but it will then be too late to speak to our neighbors about Christ.

III. "To Live Is Christ and to Die Is Gain" (v. 21).

Humanly speaking when a matter is one of "life or death" it is a question whether death may not intervene. The hope is that this may not be the case and every effort is made to prevent it. How different with Paul. He rightly points out that to a Christian death means entering into perfect fellowship with Christ and unlimited service for him. Every human limitation will then be put aside—knowledge, service, communion, will all be perfect and complete.

He would not, however, turn away from his present privilege and duty. Since it is God's will that he should abide in the flesh he will do it in such a way as to make it literally true that to him "to live is Christ." Every life has a purpose and that ruling passion which controls and directs a life is what should be written into the sentence, "To me to live is . . " What is it—money, position, pleasure, sin? Or is it Christ? If he is your life, then you enter into the New Year with the assurance that it will be full and satisfying, and gloriously useful.

Spiteful Words

A spiteful word cuts both ways. A slander hurts the man or woman who spreads it in a more deadly, though unseen, way than it hurts its intended victim. Victor Hugo nobly says, "Every sword has two edges; and the man who wounds with one, wounds himself with the other."

Only One Real Failure

There is only one real failure possible; and that is, not to be true to the best one knows.—Canon Farrar.

What Irvin S. Cobb Thinks about

Vanishing Wild Life.

VARNER PLANTATION, TEX.—Thanks to wise legislation, the wild fowl are coming back to this gulf country. True, the flocks may never again be what they were; yet, with continued conservation, there'll again be gunning for one and all.

But when I think back on the ducks I saw down here 10 years ago—in countless hosts—I'm reminded of what Charley Russell, the cowboy artist, said to the lady tourist who asked him whether the old-timers exaggerated when they described the size of the vanished buffalo herds.

Irvin S. Cobb

"Wellum," said Charley, "I didn't get up to this Montana country until after the buffaloes started thinning out. But I remember once I was night-herding when the fall drift got between me and camp and I sat by and watched 'em pass. Not having anything else to do, I started counting 'em. Including calves, I counted up to 3,009,625,294, and right then was when I got discouraged and quit. Because I happened to look over the ridge and here came the main drove."

Becoming a Head Man.

LET an unshorn dandruff fancier claim he's divine and, if nobody else agrees with his diagnosis, the police will jug him as a common nuisance and the jail warden will forcibly trim his whiskers for him or anyhow have them searched. But if enough folks, who've tried all the old religions and are looking for a new one, decide he is the genuine article, then pretty soon we have a multitude testifying to the omnipotence of their idol.

Let another man think he is a reincarnation of Julius Caesar or Alexander the Great, and if few or none feel the same way about it he's headed for the insane asylum. But if a majority, which is a large body of persons entirely surrounded by delusions, agrees with him that he is what he says he is he becomes a dictator.

Grandma's Togs.

WE LAUGH at our grandmothers who believed that, for a lady to be properly dressed, she should have a little something on anyway.

Maybe those mid-Victorian ladies sort of overdid the thing—bustles that made them look like half-sisters to the dromedary, skirts so tight they hobbled like refugees from a chain gang, corsets laced in until breathing was almost a lost art, boned collars so high they seemed to be peeping over an alley fence. Still, wearing five or six starched petticoats, the little woman was safe from Jack the Pincher unless he borrowed some steamfitter's pliers.

And later when, for a season, blessed simplicity ruled the styles, her figure expressed the queenly grace that comes from long, chaste lines. Probably the dears never figured it out. Just the natural cunning of their sex told them 'twas the flowing robes which gave majesty and dignity to kings on the throne and judges on the bench and prelates at the altar—and shapely women-folk.

Reading Dickens.

I'VE been reading Dickens again. This means again and again. I take "Pickwick Papers" once a year just as some folks take hay fever. Only I enjoy my attack.

Dickens may have done caricatures, but he had human models to go by. He drew grotesques, but his grotesques had less highly-colored duplicates in real life. And readers recognized them and treasured them as symbols of authentic types. The list is almost endless—Sam Weller, Sairy Gamp, Daniel Quilp, Uriah Heep, Mrs. Nickelby, Mr. Micawber, Mr. Pecksniff—oh, a dozen more.

What writer since Dickens has been able to perpetuate one-tenth so many characters? There is Tarkington with his Penrod and his Alice Adams; there was Mark Twain with his Huck Finn and Colonel Mulberry Sellers. There lately has been Sinclair Lewis with two picturesque creations, to wit: Babbitt—and Sinclair Lewis.

SYNOPSIS

Young Gregory Sterling, having made a fortune in the West, reluctantly returns to his home town, and takes a luxurious room at the Whittall House. In a park, he sees a girl sitting on a bench suddenly keel over, and rushes to her rescue. He takes her to a hospital, where the doctor pronounces the case starvation. Gregory engages a private room and a special nurse, Miss Gowen. While Gregory considers endowing a hospital room in memory of his mother, for the free use of strangers, he finds a purse beneath the park bench where the girl had sat. Opening it, he finds it empty except for a letter addressed to Miss Margaret McLaren, 1456 Rodman street, with a blurred Vermont postmark. Reaching Rodman street, he talks to a disagreeable landlady, who insinuates Miss McLaren's rent is overdue. Gregory pays the rent. He then reads the letter, signed Grandmother, thanking Margaret for the money she sent. When he reaches the hospital to make arrangements for the endowment, he finds the patient improved but insistent on leaving immediately to find a job. He tells her of the room endowment, and guarantees to get her a good job by Monday. Greg ponders on methods of doing good with his money. After church, he goes to the hospital, tells Margaret he is giving her a job himself, and that in the morning they will rent an office in a rooming house known to Miss Gowen, and get to work. The following morning the head nurse returns from a vacation, ignorant of the endowed room, and insultingly questions Margaret's rights there, and tells her to get out. Margaret, still weak, leaves and finds refuge in a railway station, considering her next step. Meanwhile, on a small Vermont farm, Margaret's feeble old grandparents worry about her, and lament the wickedness of the city, and the need for Margaret to work there in order to pay the interest on the mortgage held by hard old Elias Horner. Horner arrives to demand full payment by four days after Thanksgiving. Back at the hospital, Miss Gowen discovers the circumstance of Margaret's flight, is insulted by the head nurse and calls Greg. When he arrives, the bronze memorial tablet is being installed, to the head nurse's great embarrassment. Greg and Miss Gowen go off to seek the missing Margaret, and finally rent the prospective offices and a room for Margaret in the same house.

They came out actually cheered because they had secured those nice rooms, but then they went on hunting. Scouring every street within walking distance of the hospital.

"She couldn't really have gone any farther than this without money," said Nurse Gowen. "I had her up in a chair yesterday, and she felt topply and dizzy."

A quick look of anxiety passed over Greg's face.

"I know," he said, "that's what I've been thinking. But, you see, she did have money. Didn't she tell you?"

"No," said the nurse.

"But I put some bills in her pocketbook when I brought it back. Didn't she get her pocketbook? It had the receipt for her room rent in it. You remember I told her it was there. And I had put $25 inside the envelope that had the letter."

"She didn't say a word about it. I don't think she even looked at her pocketbook, though I think she must have taken it with her, for it was gone."

Greg looked troubled.

"Well, I'm glad I put it there," he said with a sigh.

For three long, weary days Greg carried on the search, only to find in every case nothing.

He had gone back to the hospital that first afternoon and had an interview with the powers that be. He had said things to the head nurse and her overlords that had brought down her pride and sharpness and caused the hospital officials to make great apology. They were mortified that the gift, which had indeed been generous, should have been so unfortunately received. The head nurse was in real trouble. Apologies had been demanded of her by the board of directors, but the rich young donor would receive no apologies himself. He said that when the insulted patient was found it would be time for apologies, and he wanted them made to her, not to himself.

So the days dragged by in fruitless search, each morning dawning with new hope and fear. Greg began to lose his fresh color of the wilderness and took on a haggard grayness about the eyes.

Going back to the hotel one night about a week after the disappearance of the girl who had come into his life so unexpectedly, and gone out with such seeming finality, he sat down disheartened.

Suddenly the telephone rang.

With a quick beating of his heart he strode to the instrument and picked it up.

"Is that you, Greg?" came a strangely familiar voice thrilling over the wire. "This is Alice!"

Greg found himself breathless. Was something really coming to him at last out of his past?

"Yes?" he managed to respond, trying to find his way out of the bewilderment that her call had wrought. Then she spoke again.

"Is that really you at last, Greg, after all these years of silence? I never thought you'd cut me cold like that. Don't you know me, dolling? This is Alice. Have you forgotten your old sweetheart, Alice Blair?"

"Alice Blair?" For an instant the wild thought went through his brain, perhaps it had been a mistake. Perhaps she never ran away and married Murky Powers! Perhaps the report had been false.

"Alice Blair!" he repeated dazedly, eagerly, again.

"Oh, you've come alive at last, have you, dolling? Well, you've taken your time to it. Here I've simply been languishing at home for days expecting you to come to call on me, and at last I've been driven to put my pride in my pocket and call you up. I positively couldn't stand it to wait any longer. Why haven't you come, Greg? You haven't forgotten me, have you, dolling?"

Greg found himself stirred by various emotions as he struggled to answer her. He was trying to think out quickly what might have happened in those ten years of his absence. Murky Powers wasn't dead. He was sure of that. He had seen his name on the sports page of the paper just the other day.

"Why—I—thought you were married!" he blundered out at last.

A silvery laugh trilled over the wire and rippled in his ear, making pleasant little shivers down his back. It was as if suddenly all his disillusionment had rolled away and Alice Blair was just a little golden girl again that his mother didn't quite understand.

"Married!" she lilted. "Oh, that's precious, Greg. Are you really as innocent as that yet? Now don't tell me you've been kept a babe in arms! Married! What's that got to do with it? Of course I'm married. Twice married for the matter of that. I divorced Murky, that prince of brutes, before a year was up, and I'm just back from Reno now getting rid of his successor. Safe and sane and disillusioned. But that's neither here nor there. Once sweethearts is always sweethearts, isn't that so, Greggie dolling? Or am I mistaken? Is it?"

Greg found himself bewildered by her chirping. He hesitated an instant and she went on, her tone graver now with a hint of tears behind it.

"Oh, You Dolling! Aren't You Perfectly Stunning!"

"But seriously, Greg, aren't you coming to see me right away? I need you. I really do. I've been through terribly hard experiences and I need a real friend. As soon as I heard you were in town, I rejoiced, for I knew you were just what I needed."

"I didn't know you lived here." Greg's voice sounded blunt again. He felt strangely embarrassed at the way this grown-up Alice was taking things for granted, calling him darling and telling him of her divorces. "Last I heard of you, you were living in New York."

"Oh, but that's ages ago. I went to Paris for two years, and then Florida for the winter. Took a trip to the little old Panama canal incidentally. Oh, I've been around a bit. But now I'm home at last. For a while at least. Mother's still living here, you know. She took a house on the West Side. What's that? No, I'm not with Mother. Her ways are not my ways, never were, you remember." A careless little laugh rippled over to him. "No, I couldn't be bothered living where I'm watched every move I make. I have an apartment in the Claridge. It's really quite swell. And that brings me to the point. I want you to come over and take dinner with me, just us two, you know. Come about seven and we can have a real talk. You better dress because there'll be others dropping in later in the evening, and we'll likely get around to a night club or two before morning. We always do, so come prepared. Now, you won't fail me, will you, Greggie dolling! It's so nice to have you back!"

Greg turned from hanging up the receiver and looked about his room. It was the same strange room but somehow it looked less lonesome. There was somebody in town who cared. He was going out to dinner! He was going to see Alice again! His heart was warm and eager.

The disturbing thought came that she had married again after one sharp experience, and was again divorced.

He was full of anticipation as he prepared for the evening, even whistling a wild bar or two of a nondescript song.

When he stood at last in the ornate vestibule of Alice's apartment waiting to be let in, his manner was cool, repressed, self-contained.

Greg entered the strangest-looking room he had ever seen. There were hangings of black velvet and silver cloth, and a lot of queer, triangular mirrors in unexpected places. There were flowers everywhere, rare hothouse flowers. It suddenly occurred to Greg that he ought to have sent her flowers.

It occurred to him to wonder who had sent her these roses. Great yellow ones with a glow of crimson in their hearts, dozens of them in a copper bowl reflected in a slab of mirror on a low table. Crimson roses in a tall crystal vase. Did Alice buy these roses for herself? Was she rich enough now to revel in luxuries of this sort, or did other men send them to her? The uneasy question shot like a pang through his heart, and then he saw her coming and forgot everything else.

She was wearing a frail evening frock of green satin. Her face was like a lovely flower, and her pale gold hair was drawn back smooth and close about her small symmetrical head and gathered into a knot in her neck, leaving her pretty little ears uncovered, and giving her an innocent, childlike air which the vivid dash of carmine on her small petulant lips only half belied.

A necklace glittered on the whiteness of her neck, there were jewels flashing from her small white hands.

A moment she stood poised at the upper end of the long room, letting him get the full effect of her entrance, fairly taking his breath away with her loveliness, appraising him with a delighted glance. Then, with all the gush of the Alice of old, only with perhaps a new touch of artificiality she cried out joyfully:

"Oh, you dolling! Aren't you perfectly stunning!"

Then she rushed forward and before he had any idea what was coming she had seized his face in both her slim, smooth hands and kissed him smartly on his mouth.

He started back from her. It was too soon, he told himelf. She seemed a stranger. He stiffened and met her onslaught almost stolidly.

"Dolling!" she reproached tenderly, holding him off and looking at him fondly. He stood warily regarding her.

She led him to a great deep velvet chair beside the table with the mirrored roses.

"You're perfectly stunning there, you know," she declared, and then she suddenly stooped and kissed him again, this time on his forehead just where the hair fell over the whiteness of the flesh.

He knew he did not like this either. Not so soon.

But Alice divined his mood. She sat down quietly, opposite him, sat so her lovely profile was turned toward him. Sat with a sudden sweetness upon her and a quiver of her delicate chin, while she told in hushed sentences, with downcast eyes, of the sorrows that had been hers since last he saw her. A little well-trained tear or two stole out and down her soft cheek like dew on a rose petal and trembled there on a rose petal and trembled there.

Sterling sat and watched her, his heart warming to her. Ah! This was the Alice that he had always dreamed his mother would discover in his girl some day! And this dear sorrowing girl had kissed him twice when he came in! Why had he taken it so coolly? His senses stirred as he watched her now in her sweet gentleness. He would like to go and sit over there beside her, put his arm around her, draw her head down on his shoulder and tell her how his heart ached for her. Little, delicate, lovely Alice Blair! To think that men would dare to marry her and put her through so much!

Dinner was announced while they were talking, and the subdued mood seemed to last. She seated him opposite to her with a quaint dignity and a gentle deference that put him within an atmosphere of intimacy. More and more as the meal went on and he looked into her eyes as she raised them meaningfully to his, he was thrilled with the fact that he was sitting here with Alice, dining with her, just as if they belonged together, as if they had always belonged together.

But the quiet, intimate dinner was over at last, and almost at once a caller was announced. An older man with baggy pouches under his eyes. He who answered to the name of "Mortie" greeted her with outstretched hands and patted her cheek, called her "Blair, dear," and dared to kiss her fingers. Greg distrusted him from the moment he saw him, hated him, registered a vow to stick around and protect Alice from his attentions.

Then others began to drop in, blase men who eyed Greg indifferently, noisy girls in abnormal costumes, an artist or two and a musician who had already been drinking.

Alice introduced them in a group as "the gang" and called Greg "an old sweetheart of mine." They stared at him briefly and all began clamoring for drinks.

Greg settled down sternly in a corner to watch this new development. When he looked up again Alice was sitting beside that obnoxious Mortie on the couch lighting a cigarette from his. Everybody was drinking and Alice was drinking, too. She seemed to have forgotten him. He was the only one in the room who was not drinking. Alice noticed him at last and called across the room to him.

"Greg, dolling, aren't you having anything to drink?"

Greg answered nothing and presently arose and looked about him.

No one seemed to be paying the slightest attention to him. Why should he not go?

But Alice perhaps divined his thought, and waving her hand, called:

"Come, folks, we're going out to find a nice place to spend the evening!" and she floated over to Greg and nestled up beside him.

"You're going to take me!" she confided to him with almost the sweet and gracious air she had worn at dinner, conferring her greatest favor upon him.

Something stirred within Greg again, the old attraction. He knew he didn't belong to this orgy. Yet he did not seem able to resist that look in Alice's eyes. After all, why blame her so? She had lived in Paris. She had lived with men who did these things. He hesitated.

And while he hesitated the man named Mortie came over to her with the white fur wrap her maid had brought.

"Come on then, Blair, dear!" he said possessively, holding out her wrap and folding it intimately about her shoulders.

Alice let him put the wrap about her, but she lifted her azure eyes to Greg's face.

"You may put on my wrap, Mortie precious," she said languidly, "but I'm going with my old sweetheart, Gregory Sterling!" and she slipped a little jeweled hand inside Greg's arm. "Come on, folks," she called. "We're going out to find a night club."

Exploitation of Michigan's Great Copper Deposits Goes Back to Prehistoric Ages

The history of the exploitation of Michigan's copper deposits undoubtedly goes back to the prehistoric ages, through the period of Indian domination, the early pioneer days of the first white settlers, with 1850 marking the beginning of large-scale operations on a profitable commercial basis, writes Albert Stoll, Jr., in the Detroit News.

This thought of Michigan copper was inspired by a statement made during 1864. The copper market reached its peak price, 55 cents a pound, and a number of persons made a profit by melting down copper pennies and selling the metal. A check revealed that this would have been impossible, even though they happened to be the over-sized pennies the coining of which was discontinued in 1858. Our present penny contains about 95 per cent copper and the rest zinc and tin. It would take about 140 of these to make a pound of metal and at 55 cents a pound the investor would be losing two-thirds of his money.

Since 1850 our mines have produced over one and one-quarter billion dollars' worth of this red metal, perhaps a record unequaled in any other copper-bearing district as restricted as this in the entire world. The bottom on price was reached in 1932 when copper brought only five cents a pound. Since that time it has reached 14 cents. Up to 1936 the copper country of Michigan has produced 8,882,000,000 pounds with the record year falling in 1917 with 270,000,000 pounds. About 1,000,000 pounds were produced in 1935.

In 1887 Michigan led all states in copper production, but today she is fourth with Arizona, Montana and Utah in the lead.

A Tremendous Power

The inertia of habits is one of the most tremendous powers on earth.

Catch Up on Chic

IF YOU'RE a bit behind in the thrilling game of Sew-Your-Own, Milady, why not take advantage of the holiday season and catch up? Today's trio is especially right for "vacation sewing" because it consists of simple practical pieces that require little time and trouble. Make all three and you'll have gone a long way toward putting the old punch back in the game.

Streamlined Styling.

The slip at the left is all you could wish for from the standpoint of styling. It offers superb lines from the moderately low cut V neck, through the dart-fitted waist right down to the very hem. The clever overlapping back is light proof and provides an action pleat so necessary for complete satisfaction. Important, too, is the fact that you may choose the material you wish in your own color. Better make it in duplicate for many meticulous months ahead.

Pretty in Sheer Wool.

The two-piece in the center is, like the slip, heavy on style. The defined waist is effectively young as is the flowing skirt and little round collar. It is just the frock to give one lots of git-up-and-git for the second semester, or "to break the ice" whenever one is anxious about one's appearance. It can be the height of chic in sheer wool—very pretty in flat crepe.

Modern Home Dress.

When it's home you're thinking of you naturally turn to a frock like the third member of the trio at the right. This button-all-the-way model is different enough to delight you and simple enough to set you sewing at sight. It is cut for comfort but with an ever watchful eye on that elusive little thing called chic. Crisp contrast may be had in the collar and cuffs and in that trim row of buttons that march down the line—and then back again. Look fresh in your version in pretty percale.

The Patterns.

Pattern 1946 is designed for sizes 14 to 20 (32 to 44 bust). Size 16 requires 3¼ yards of 39 inch fabric. One yard of ribbon is required for shoulder straps.

Pattern 1404 is designed for sizes 12 to 20 (30 to 38 bust). Size 14 requires 4⅛ yards of 39 inch material.

Pattern 1390 is designed for sizes 34 to 48. Size 36 requires 4⅝ yards of 35 inch material. The collar and cuffs in contrast require 1¼ yards material.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., Room 1020, 211 W. Wacker Dr., Chicago, Ill. Price of patterns, 15 cents (in coins) each.

Favorite Recipe of the Week

Fruit Cobblers Suited to Cold Weather.

FRUIT cobblers combine fruit and a simple cake batter to make a de luxe dessert which is especially suited to cold weather when hearty foods touch the hungry spot and when it is a real joy to have the oven going.

Of the many canned fruits that might be used start with the favorite of the family, whether it be apricots, peaches, loganberries, cherries or what have you. The syrup from the fruit can be used as the sauce for the cobbler just as it is, or it can be thickened and extra seasonings added, such as a bit of cinnamon, lemon or nutmeg. The sauce may be hot or cold, but it really tastes better hot.

If you do not have a recipe for the batter part, try this one:

1 egg
½ cup sugar
1 cup flour
1 tsp. baking powder
¼ cup milk
1 tsp. vanilla
¼ cup melted shortening (not hot)
2 cups drained canned fruit

Cover the bottom of a greased baking pan with the drained canned fruit. Beat the egg well, and beat in the sugar. Sift flour with the baking powder and add alternately to egg mixture with the milk. Add vanilla, melted fat (butter will give excellent flavor, but any fat can be used), and beat thoroughly. Pour over the fruit and bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees) for about 30-40 minutes. Serve warm with the hot syrup from the fruit as suggested, or any sauce preferred. Serves 6.

MILDRED WHITE WALLACE ..Editor - Publisher

Alabama -- My State -- My People

"I believe, as declared by the Democratic Platform, that our government has a continuous responsibility for human welfare. That responsibility should safeguard a n American citizen from the cradle to the grave. It is not enough for our government to prepare a man or woman for life by giving free education. There must be freedom of opportunity to use that education.

I have seen the uncontrolled forces of greed and concentrated power bring our country to the brink of political chaos and economic disaster. I have seen the strong arm and great heart of a sincere American leader halt the rush of ruin. I am proud of the fact that I could play some part and do my best to uphold his arm.

For seventy years the people of the South, because of economic injustices have been forced to wander in the wildness of economic disadvantage and distress. The hour of our deliverance is at hand because our traditional friends, the Democratic Party, is in power and because we have in the White House, Franklin D. Roosevelt who believes in giving the South and her people a square and a fair deal.

I lay no claim to an ability that would solve the problems of the nation or of the world. I come to you as a man of the South, a citizen of Alabama. The problems that are closest to my heart are Alabama's problems. Alabama has given life to my parents and grandparents. She has given life to me, nurtured and honored me. As your Senator I would try to honor Alabama by devoted and faithful service. It is in this spirit that I ask you to elect me your Senator."

He is now Chairman of the powerful House Committee on Military Affairs; He is also a Member of the House Democratic Steering Committee and if elected to the Senate, is prepared to give to the State the best years of his life.

Lister Hill For U. S. Senate

The Democrat joins thousands of Alabamians in their enthusiastic support of that peerless young Democrat, Lister Hill of Montgomery, who holds a distinguished record of achievement in Congress extending over a period of 14 years of continuous service and who now seeks at the hands of the sovereign voters of his native State, the honor of representing them in the responsible position of United States Senator.

We can conceive of no man better qualified by birth, education, training and experience to occupy this important position and meet the exacting requirements necessary for creditably representing his State and Nation than this brilliant young Congressman.

We have arrived at the above decision on the part of the Democrat after a serious and conscientious consideration of the merits and possibilities of each of the Candidates who now seek the Democratic nomination for United States Senator.

Lister Hill offers for your consideration a Program of Progress with a record of achievement behind him which will warrant your serious consideration of Performance - - rather than Promises.

Wishing for you a Happy Yuletide Season and a Prosperous and Joyous New Year.

MY CHRISTMAS WISH FOR YOU

"Have you castles in the air?
Ships across the sea?
Dreams long cherished
in your heart?
Hopes of things to be?

May your castles crumble not
May your ships return
Bringing home your cherished dreams
And all for which you yearn"

From the depths of a most grateful heart I send you Christmas greetings and keen appreciation for each thoughtful kindness so generously and magnanimously rendered me thru the past year, and during this gay and happy Holiday season. Already your thoughtful expressions have come to my desk-Gay and lovely cards with thoughtful and beautiful sentiments individually expressed gladdening the heart and lingering on like a lovely melody long after the last little Christmas candle has flickered and gone. It is an especially joyous occasion made more joyous on account of your thoughtfulness! May the joys of the season linger with you throughout the coming years - - Again I thank you and wish for you every HAPPINESS Life can give to you.

CHRISTMAS PLANS

Mr and Mrs Harold Harlin have left Columbiana for Kentucky where they will spend Christmas with Mr Harlin's father and mother. Lena Merrill is busy making preparations for a week in Birmingham. Delilah Curry is returning to Linger Longer Farm for a few days to gladden the Yule tide season for her father, Sam Curry. Barney Isbell who has been ill for the past few weeks, is up again and planning a happy time for Christmas-just "being well again is enough" - - and how true this statement is - Good Health - the greatest blessing Heaven can send. Beth Wallace and Louise Ellis at home with their parents for the Yule tide season-Mrs W A Parker, Dorthy Parker and Mrs Rose Teague leaving for Birmingham-where they will be joined by Mr and Mrs Lou Hoynes (Catherine Parker) and son for the holiday season. Etc-Etc - - -

MRS JOHN MILES

Friends of Mrs. John Miles who remember the lovely Yuletide party to which she welcomed them one Sunday during the holidays last Christmas are happy to know that she will again throw open her home to her friends this year.

Next Sunday afternoon, the day after Christmas this gentle lady who means so much to the people of Columbiana even though she has not left her own door for a long time, will expect all those who find it possible to spare a few moments for greetings. She will be assisted in receiving by her daughters, Mrs Fay Miles Benton and Miss Myrtle Miles.

No formal invitations are extended. It is expected that any friends who are interested will feel welcome.

MR AND MRS JOE STONE

Happiness over the good fortune of Mr and Mrs Joe Stone, is dimmed by the knowledge that the future lucrative position recently tendered Joe Stone in Gadsden with the Trades School, has been accepted, and the young couple will no longer reside in Columbiana, after January 1st. Mr Stone has been Vocational Instructor in the S C HS for the past ten or twelve years, and in this efficient capacity has served the educational department of the County weilding a powerful influence for progressive Farm and Agricultural projects, especially with the Future Farmers of America. He is also a member of the City Council. Irene West Stone is a talented and energetic worker in all things civic, social, religious and educational, and we know of no couple who is more universally loved nor who will be more sincerely missed in Columbiana and Shelby County than "Irene and Soapy" - - - The good wishes of the entire County follow them in their new "home-to be"! Gadsden's gain is Columbiana's loss!

CHRISTMAS PAGEANT

The Christmas Pageant, At His Throne presented at the Methodist Church on Sunday night was attended by a large and appreciative congregation.

Heart Drifts

QUIET CHRISTMAS

Now in the hush
Of Christmas Eve my heart is comforted,
My hands are quiet, and my soul at peace
I feel my house about me, warm and kind
With odor of green boughs and open fire.
I shall have time to bind
The curtains back to show a world sapphire
And white, and put three candles on the window ledge,
Such as might shine upon a manger bed.
Though carols cease,
A dying cadence lingers. "On earth peace—
Good will—good will—good will
How a small sound can fill
My heart, my house, my world, and wander far
Out to earth's very edge.
Beyond the sweet blue dusk, and find a star!

IN THE FIRELIGHT

This is the charmed and dusky hour to keep
For drowsing by a fire; in deep content
Watching the flickering shadows on the wall,
Speaking no word at all,
With silence eloquent.
And you, my very dear, falling asleep,
Soft-breathing there, how cloaked in peace you seem . . .
What silked-meshed tranquility you wear,
Ah, princely fine and fair
The fabric of your dream!

S H H

HAVE I FORGOTTEN YOU?

Have I forgotten you, you ask?
I do not think so, dear.
I cannot walk on certain streets
For fear you will appear.
And when a hurdy-gurdy plays
An old last summer song,
No matter where I go, for days
I take the tune along.
And someone on a crowded street
May so resemble you
My heart turns over quickly
And starts to break in two.

RURAL CHRISTMAS LEGEND

When kindly herdsmen entered that dark door
They placed, as humble presents on the floor
Before the Virgin and her Babe, just these Good simple gifts—a sack of fragrant cheese,
A bag of wool, a flask of warm goat's milk,
An ample cloak of fur, no robe of silk
Or gaudy ornaments of earthly pride;

Then one small shepherd boy in awkward stride
Stepped forward and with fumbling hand drew forth
From sheep skin folds and emblem of rare worth
A bell of shining brass, with crystal note,
That hung once from an old bell-wether's throat,
Laid beside the Holy Infant's head,
And with soft trembling lips, in reverence said,
"Dear Mother, take this toy for him to keep ,
This bell that led so many wandering sheep."

—L. T.

PRAYER AT PARTING

Now go with him, I beg Thee
He needs Your hand, firm, strong,
To ease the way to Sinai . . .
(The road's so steep and long!)

To him, I pray, give comfort;
Smile on him tenderly.
Men have such need of kindness
(Oh, never think of me!)

Fill his cup till waters
Of peace have touched its brim
Take care of him as I would
If I could go with him!

—H W

I MISS YOU

The day has lost its golden hour
With you it fled—
I miss; you as I miss a flower
When it is dead.
A silence steals into the room
Made glad for you
The moon looks in and wanders on
For all is gloom where you have been
I miss you.

Well friends! Christmas is here again

How have you planned to celebrate it? By trying to make other people happy we hope.

It is all right to give our friends and loved ones in-expensive gifts, but we firmly believe that we would get more genuine pleasure if we would give most of our gifts to those who are not so fortunate as we are.

We should teach our children to be un-selfish. To divide their toys with those unfortunate little ones with whom they come in contact in every day life.

So let us celebrate this Christmas in the true Christmas spirit, Do not forget all those little orphans in the different orphanages in our State. They have no parents to make them happy, so we must do all we can, IN HIS NAME, to make them happy.

We want to take this opportunity to wish each and every one of you a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

JAPS SINK U. S. SHIP

American Gunboat Panay Bombed by Japanese on the the Yangtse ... Stern Protest by Roosevelt

Edward W. Pickard SUMMARIZES THE WORLD'S WEEK

© Western Newspaper Union.

Latest Jap Outrages

JAPANESE aviators, strafing fleeing Chinese, bombed and sank the United States gunboat Panay on the Yangtse river above Nanking. The boat's storekeeper and an Italian journalist were killed.

At the same time and place the Japanese attacked and sank three Standard Oil steamers.

Several British gunboats speeding to the aid of the Panay were shelled, one enlisted man being killed and a number wounded.

Washington and London lodged stern protests in Tokyo.

Tokyo apologized with expressions of deep regret.

In America and Britain there was intense indignation over the latest outrages. No responsible person hinted that the United States or Great Britain should go to war with Japan on their account; but the man in the street felt there should be some way, short of war, by which the Japanese could be forced to cease their murderous attacks. Apologies may satisfy the diplomats but they do not restore lives.

President Roosevelt's protest was directed through Secretary Hull to Ambassador Hirosi Saito with the request that it be sent to the Emperor Hirohito of Japan. It demanded apologies, full compensation and guaranties against repetition of similar attacks. The British foreign office was in touch with Washington by cable but Foreign Minister Eden denied that the British would take the lead in international action.

Even Tokyo was stunned by the attacks on American vessels, and the planned celebration over the capture of Nanking was called off.

Before the American protest reached Tokyo the Japanese officials and commanders began apologizing and explaining. To prove its sincerity the government promptly recalled Admiral Teizo Mitsunami, in charge of naval aviation and relieved him of his post. He immediately resigned.

Survivors of the bombing, most of them wounded, told how the Panay went down with colors flying and its gunners firing to the last at the Japanese airplanes. They agreed that the attacking planes were flying so low that it was impossible for their pilots not to know they were bombing foreign ships. They said the Japanese excuse that visibility was poor over the Yangtse that day was false.

Hugh R. Wilson (pictured above), a veteran of the American diplomatic service and now assistant secretary of state, is to be our new ambassador to Berlin, succeeding William E. Dodd, whose resignation was submitted to the President.

Early Tax Revision

SUMMONING house ways and means committee members and treasury economists to a conference in the White House, President Roosevelt directed that revision of the taxes that oppress business be carried through as soon as possible. Those called were Robert L. Doughton of North Carolina, chairman of the house committee; Fred Vinson of Kentucky, chairman of a subcommittee on taxes; Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau and Undersecretary Roswell Magill.

R. L. Doughton

On leaving the White House Mr. Doughton gave out the cheering assurance that the best possible tax bill would be formulated quickly and that the taxpayer would be given every consideration.

If the contemplated measure can be rushed through congress it may be made effective on January 1, starting out what business and industry hope will be a Happy New Year for them and for all the nation.

In his press conference the same day the President gave business additional encouragement, asserting that the interstate commerce commission should take action to preserve the solvency of the railroads. He declared himself in favor of private ownership and operation of the railroads, but said receiverships of the lines cannot continue without financial adjustment.

Shortly after this the commerce commission put in a sour note by overruling the carriers' petition for 15 per cent immediate increase in freight rates.

First Flight Celebrated

FRIDAY, December 17, was the thirty-fourth anniversary of the epochal air flight of the Wright brothers at Kitty Hawk, N. C., and the day was fittingly observed by all aviation interests in the country. Under orders from the army general staff every military flying post sent up all its available aircraft at the exact hour when the two inventors first made their plane fly. About one thousand fighting planes were in the air at the same time.

Steel Workers Meet

MEMBERS of the Steel Workers Organizing committee, affiliated with the C. I. O., opened their first convention in Pittsburgh and were asked by Chairman Philip Murray to give their officials full powers to negotiate wage agreements to replace those expiring February 28 with 445 firms.

Murray said he had "every reason" to believe 100,000 steel workers out of 125,000 now working in sheet, bar, plate, sheets and black plate mills will be displaced by machinery.

Sloan's Great Gift

ALFRED P. SLOAN, JR., chairman of General Motors corporation, announced he was donating securities worth approximately $10,000,000 to the Alfred P. Sloan foundation with the hope of promoting a wider knowledge of "basic economic truths."

A. P. Sloan, Jr.

In his announcement Mr. Sloan said he deemed it proper to turn back part of the proceeds of his industrial activity to aid in bringing about "a broader as well as a better understanding of the economic principles and national policies which have characterized American enterprise down through the years, and as a result of which its truly marvelous development has been made possible."

Once the proper understanding is achieved, he said, the people may promote "the objectives that all have so much in mind."

These he listed as:

More things for more people, everywhere.

An opportunity for achievement.

Greater security and stability.

Mr. Sloan established the foundation on July 6, 1936, incorporating it in Delaware as a non-profit membership corporation.

Hungary Pays A Little

ONLY eleven nations defaulted on their war debt payments to the United States due on December 15. Hungary lined up with Finland in the honest list and sent to the treasury a check for $9,828 as partial payment. The installment due from Hungary was $51,240; her total debt is more than 33 millions.

Finland made its customary semi-annual payment to the treasury. A check for $232,142 was turned over to this government by the Baltic republic.

Pope Pius Anxious

AT A secret consistory in which he created five new cardinals, Pope Pius read an allocution expressing his "grave anxieties" because of the wars in Spain and China, and his fears for the future "because of the upheavals which are the natural concomitants of armed conflicts."

The new cardinals are: Archbishop Guiseppe Pizzardo, vatican undersecretary of state; Archbishop Ermengildo Pellegrinetti, papal nuncio to Jugoslavia; Archbishop Giovanni Piazzi, patriarch of Venice; Archbishop Pierre Gerlier of Lyons, France, and Archbishop Arthur Hinsley, Catholic primate of England.

Italy Leaves League

ITALY finally made up its mind to quit the League of Nations. No one was surprised when Mussolini announced this decision of his Fascist council, and no other nation expressed any regret over the action.

The Duce in a characteristically bombastic speech told the people about it, and delighted cheers greeted his defiance of the opponents of fascism. For some time Italy has taken no part in the doings of the league, and her resignation really is not of much immediate importance.

Silver Policy Stands

REPRESENTATIVE MURDOCK of Utah stated in Washington that he had assurances from President Roosevelt that the present silver policy would be continued as long as it was deemed necessary. Murdock asked the chief executive's views when he transmitted a resolution drafted by western congressmen urging no change be made in the silver program.

Government Wins

THE Supreme court decided that the government need not pay interest on gold bonds that were called for redemption in advance of the maturity date.

The decision, written by Justice Cardozo, was unanimous, although Justices Stone and Black had separate concurring opinions. Cardozo is ill and his opinion was read by Chief Justice Hughes.

The litigation was started by Robert A. Taft of Cincinnati, son of the late President and Chief Justice William Howard Taft; the estate of James J. Ransom of Des Moines, and Arthur Machen of Baltimore.

New Men for SEC

TWO vacancies on the securities and exchange commission were filled by the President by the appointment of John Wesley Hanes, partner of a New York stock brokerage firm, and Jerome N. Frank, radical New York attorney, now serving as an attorney for the Reconstruction Finance corporation and formerly chief counsel of the defunct AAA.

Frank fills the position vacated by James M. Landis, who retired last September to become dean of the Harvard law school. Hanes fills the post of J. D. Ross of Seattle, recently named administrator of the Bonneville dam.

House Passes Farm Bill

NARROWLY escaping return to committee, the administration farm bill was passed by the house by a vote of 268 to 129. It was believed the senate measure also would be put through successfully at once. Then it would be up to conferees from both houses to iron out the differences. There was doubt that final enactment could be obtained before adjournment of the extraordinary session.

More WPA Spending

HARRY HOPKINS, WPA administrator, announced that increased unemployment was compelling the WPA to increase its expenditures by $23,000,000 a month. He said its employment rolls, now totaling 1,575,000 persons, would be enlarged to provide work for an additional 350,000 persons. The expansion, he said, could be handled within his budget, at least for some time.

Landon Won't Run Again

ALFRED M. LANDON definitely removed himself from the presidential campaign picture of 1940 by announcing in Washington that he would not be a candidate for nomination by the Republican party and would not accept the honor if it were offered him. He added that he was not retiring from politics, but would continue active in his party.

While in the capital Mr. Landon was invited to the White House and had a pleasant chat with the President, politics and business not being discussed.

Atlantic Planes Wanted

EVIDENCE that passenger plane service across the Atlantic would be started within two years was seen in the request of Pan American Airways for bids on 12 planes capable of carrying 100 passengers each.

Performance demands call for a speed of 274 miles an hour at 20,000 feet and indicate the type of craft required would cost one million dollars each.

Brave Scouts Honored

EIGHT Boy Scouts who risked their lives to save others were cited for heroism by Daniel Carter Beard, national scout commissioner and chairman of the National court of honor.

Three scouts who received gold honor medals are J. P. Fraley of Hitchins, Ky.; Guy Groff, Jr., of Marengo, Iowa, and Kenneth Simonson of Redridge, Mich., each of whom rescued a drowning person.

Five others who receive certificates for heroism are John Mentha, New York; John Ruggi, Yonkers, N. Y.; Philip Beaney, Bath, Me.; William Benham, Napoleon, Ohio, and Eldon Shaffer, Berrien Center, Mich.

Liner Aground; All Saved

THE Dollar liner President Hoover ran aground on a small island off Formosa when en route from Kobe to Manila. Her passengers, about 600 in number, were put ashore on two rocky islets, and there were picked up by the President McKinley of the same line and taken to Manila.

Wally Lowest Duchess

THE new edition of Burke's Peerage, authoritative book on British nobility, reveals that the duchess of Windsor has been placed in the twenty-ninth or last place among the duchesses. Her husband, the duke of Windsor, former King Edward VIII, is placed as No. 4 man in the empire, behind his brothers, King George VI and the dukes of Gloucester and Kent.

HOW TO SEW

by Ruth Wyeth Spears

A Dressing Table Skirt With Corded Shirrings

THIS dressing table has a curved front and hinged arms on which to mount the skirt so that it can be opened to permit access to the drawer. To mount the skirt it must first be sewed to a band of covered buckram. Cut the buckram in a strip 2½ inches wide. Cover it with a straight piece of material as shown here at B.

Make the heading at the top of the skirt just the depth of the thickness of the table edge so that it will cover the edge of the table when the arms are closed. Use ¼-inch cable cord for the shirring. This is sewed to a safety pin and run through tucks stitched in the material as shown here at C.

The top of the ruffle is also shirred with cords. When the shirrings are all finished, sew the top of the skirt to the covered buckram strip as shown at D and then thumb tack it in place as at A.

Every Homemaker should have a copy of Mrs. Spears' new book, SEWING. Forty-eight pages of step-by-step directions for making slipcovers and dressing tables; restoring and upholstering chairs, couches; making curtains for every type of room and purpose. Making lampshades, rugs, ottomans and other useful articles for the home. Readers wishing a copy should send name and address, enclosing 25 cents, to Mrs. Spears, 210 South Desplaines St., Chicago, Illinois.

Home Heating Hints

By John Barclay, Heating Expert

Poking Fire Bed From Above Forms Clinkers, Smothers Fire, Wastes Fuel

WHILE a poker frequently is a handy implement to use on a furnace, let me caution you against using it for the purpose of agitating the fire-bed from above! That results in a lot of trouble for you and for your furnace.

Stirring the fire through the furnace door opening only mixes ashes with the live coals, creating clinkers. As you know, clinkers choke a fire and prevent the coal from burning freely and completely. Also, they clog the grates, making it difficult to shake the fire properly.

Owing to the odd size and shape of lumps of coal at the point that is poked from above, the fuel-bed becomes packed, and this packing prevents the free passage of air, thus forming clinkers. Clinkers formed this way, however, cause less trouble, for ordinarily they can be broken up and dropped into the ashpit by gently shaking the grates.

Uncle Phil Says:

Respect Due Precedent

Respect for precedent has a solid basis. Don't be contemptuous of precedent, but study its claims to authority.

Gossip thrives less among men particularly because it means a black eye if not worse.

It is nonsense to say that no one is interested in the troubles of others. We're not all inhuman.

Men have had but one burst of extravagance in clothing in the last 30 years. It was when they paid $8 for a silk shirt.

But Is He?

By his reason a man endeavors to prove that he is rid of some of his primitive instincts.

There is always a welcome place in the world for the young woman who is determined to be a lady.

Women often say it is hard to please men by the way they dress; but let a man pick out a woman's sartorial outfit and she'd be a fright.

Human conscience began to function thousands of years ago. There is a lot of it in the Bible.

LIFE'S LIKE THAT

By Fred Neher

"That feels better . . . but it's still a little snug."

The Song of Christmas

THE long journey from Nazareth to Bethlehem . . . a new Star in the sky . . . heavenly music above the hills of Judea . . . the flutter of angel wings . . . the swift journeying of the Shepherds . . . Mary and Joseph and the new-born Child . . . the coming of the Wise Men, with their gifts of gold, frankincense and myrrh . . .

From these inspiring things the Song of Christmas was fashioned more than twenty centuries ago. The years have added new notes of happiness. Carols and song upon the air . . . candles gleaming into the night . . . secret whisperings and laughter in the home . . . greetings going from friend to friend . . . deeds of love and mercy done in the name of a Child.

No great symphony or composition can match the Song of Christmas. It rises above the clatter and roar of the city; it throbs through the scattered town and hamlet; it sings through the sunlit islands of the South; it permeates the frozen wastes of the Northland. In ever-widening volume its strains echo around the world.

Before its magic the hosts of darkness take flight. It touches the slumbering chords of memory; it heals old hurts and scars; it binds loved ones in a closer and deeper tie. There are no friendless or forsaken within its sound; under its influence the strong reach out to help the weak. Peace and Love and Joy, these are its loudest notes, and they are for all men. For the Song of Christmas is the greatest of all songs because it is understood by every heart.

LOOK over that Christmas shopping list of yours.... Now cross off those gifts that come by express and parcel post; those presents from exclusive shops; toys from far-away places; nuts from California; oranges from Florida.... Too bad, you say. Well, that's what you'd probably have to do if there were no railroads.

Without the railroads many Yuletide pleasures would not be yours today.... Folks coming home; sending gifts to friends; choosing delicacies for the holidays—all these are matters of course to you; they are an essential part of your Christmas pleasure. Satisfying your heart's desire with choice selections from far-flung distances adds a special zest to your Christmas joy.... And that's what the railroads enable you to do.... they have made this possible for you.

As a citizen of the Central South, and as your neighbor, the L. & N. is glad to play its part in making your holidays more enjoyable. Like any other useful neighbor, it tries to play its part better from year to year—by providing better service, faster freight deliveries, safer and more dependable operation.

So Merry Christmas to you, Neighbor—and a fine New Year!

And, say, next time you have a shipment to make, or a trip to take, remember the L. & N., won't you?

HEFLIN
Kill the Wage-Hour Bill

THE greatest single issue in the campaign for the U. S. Senate is the Wage-Hour Bill.

This bill was written by selfish Northern interests to benefit themselves and harm the South.

Heflin is against this bill.

So is almost every other Southern Senator and Congressman except Lister Hill. Hill is for it. He was one of only two Alabama Congressmen, who only a few days ago, signed a petition to bring this bill to a vote.

Heflin says this bill will seriously hurt every man and woman in our state—especially farmers, workers, merchants and small businesses. And here is why:

—It will compel every farmer to pay more for what he buys—fertilizer, farm machinery, tools, clothes, food, in fact everything he uses.

—It will cause farm help to leave the country and go to the big cities.

—It will injure every little industry in small towns—cotton mills, gins, compresses, canning plants, creameries, saw mills and all kinds of plants.

—It will make a machine out of every free born citizen.

FRANK LYON TOSSES HAT IN RING FOR TREASURER

Frank Lyon, for 30 years a rural school teacher, and for five years a Deputy Clerk in the Sheriff's Office in the Courthouse, has authorized the writer to make the statement that he would be a candidate for Treasurer, subject to the Democratic Primary to be held in May, 1938. The above announcement will be of County wde interest to the many friends of Mr Lyon. Mr Lyon is a DEMOCRAT, is a Baptist by belief and is active in all phases of church work. He states he will deeply appreciate the voter's consideration when choosing a man for this important official position.

Gaston Scott, of the Highway Department in Montgomery was a distinguished visitor in the Democrat office on Friday. Mr Scott is actively supporting Lister Hill for Senate and was doing a bit of "checking up" on the status of Mr Hill's chances for election in Shelby County.

U S SENATE SPECIAL ELECTION

CHARLES WILLIAMS TO SPEAK IN COLUMBIANA AT 10:00

On December 31, Friday morning at ten o'clock, Hon Charles Williams will speak to the voters of Shelby County in the Courthouse in the interest of his campaign for the United States Senate. Mr Williams states he is anxious to address the people of Shelby County and cordially urges all friends to attend this meeting.

J M LEONARD JR.

"Honor to whom honor is due"- and this time honor of stopping those FIRECRACKERS enthusiasts from "taking charge of the town" on Christmas Eve-one of the heaviest shopping days Columbiana has seen in years, goes to J M Leonard Jr., who heeded the plea of many harassed citizens. When we talked the matter over with him, he snapped that new good looking swanky hat down over his eye-and stated "Well,- - - - I've got what it takes to stop 'em" - - and out he went-and pretty soon order was restored in this man's town and shoppers could continue on their way unafraid-Many favorable comments and thanks were tendered the thoughtful official Chief Clerk and J P in the Sheriff's office.

JOHN H CULVER IN TREASURER'S RACE

John H Culver, staunch Democrat of Calera and widely known citizen of Shelby County having lived here for the past 30 years, while visiting in Columbiana on Tuesday, dropped in the office for a personal chat with the writer and states he has "definitely made up his mind" to enter the race for the official position of Treasurer of Shelby County.

Mr. Culver is very enthusiastic over his prospects for the realization of his ambition to serve the people of Shelby County as their Treasurer, and will appreciate the consideration of the voters when deciding upon the man to fill this important office. He is 55 years of age and a Member of the Baptist Church, public spirited and a useful life record warranting the careful weighing of his qualifications for the position he seeks.

Joe Cocerell, prominent Attorney of Talladega was a distinguished visitor in the Democrat office on Tuesday.

The many friends of Cecil Duke, popular and efficient Clerk of the Board of Revenue regret to learn of the passing of his brother, Green Duke in Atlanta. The Democrat extends sincere sympathy.

Census report shows that there were 8,989 bales of cotton ginned in Shelby County from the crop of 1937 prior to December 13 as compared with 6,359 bales ginned to December 1 3,crop of 1936.

FARMERS ADVISE OBTAIN GOOD SEED IN JANUARY

Auburn, Ala. - - Plans should be made in January for obtaining good seed of recommended varieties of cotton and corn, says J. C. Lowery, extention agronomise.

Where possible, seed should be obtained from the breeder. If the seed are obtained from sources other than breeder, it is important to know the history of the seed as to the number of years since the original stock was obtained from the breeder and how they were handled to prevent mixing.

It is important to obtain seed early because good seed are frequently scarce late in the season.

GOOD MORNING

MILTON BIRD

Lines from a faded diary, and something about the very lovely old lady who filled its pages with her commonsense ideas . . . . .

Years ago when I was in high school I brought in firewood and coal for her fires in the winter, and water from an old well for her kitchen. She had already grown old then. Her face was filled with wrinkles, but her eyes were still bright, her voice soft, and her mouth always smiling. Hearing me in the back, she would come down the long hall, her black dress flowing about her ankles, humming some old tune that made her movements more rhythmical.

She never tired of smiling, and her music came naturally; bursting through her lips from a heart that was happy beneath. Sometimes, when the air was very cold, she would have on a little cap, that fit her head neatly, and that she fumbled with ever so often . . . . remembering. I think, other hats when she was younger.

At other times, when the sun was warm outside, we would sit under the tall ihckorynut trees and talk. One day she said, looking at me evenly out of her bright eyes: "Soon now you shall be a man, and I shall watch you with much interest." I was just three days past sixteen and her words stuck in my mind with a strange, unexplainable fastness. I didn't answer, but, looking at her, I know she understood my feelings. It was the first time anyone outside my immediate family had shown any interest in my future!

Month passed, and years. There were gay parties, given by her grad daughters, during which she would always come down, sitting in her chair, watching, laughing and talking with her young friends, listening, dreaming, remembering. One night, when the hour had come for her to take her leave, she said: "Youth must always have hilarity and joy, and it's good for age to share that pleasure; that is, within certain bounds of reason." She ceased suddenly and I waited for her to continue. Then, very earnestly: "It isn't easy to bring ourselves back from the pleasures of delight to our every-day habits that are our real virtures . . . . that is why intemperance is wholly bad." She seemed to think amoment, and then: "There is a law, older than man, that regulates the versatility of humanity . . . that mixes the work and pleasure and joy and necessity of every man's existence, so that he is either a fool or a good fellow, with no half-way point possible. It's this law . . . . of to-morrow . . . . . that will forever be in your shadow, collecting the debts of to-day . . . .

Then, at twenty, came my first love. For two months my happiness was complete, while time, unaware of our ecstasy, was carefully planning a separtion that briught me to my old friend's house in a mood she had never shared with me before, but which she understood perfectly. She said only: "You will get over it." And when I argued violently, she added: "Very often the breast entertains a strange lodger that moves casually on after a while without leaving an address. Still, the innkeeper mustn't close his shop because of it. The next may tarry indefinitely, and be even lovelier."

And on another occasion, seeing that I was very interested in another young lady, she said: "Men are very like butterflys, and women, unless they are very wise, are likely to become no more than flowers." I thought amoment and then said: "Maybe I'm in love this time." She laughed. It was a strange, hollow sound that seemed to issue amusement and fear simultaneously. "No," she said, "You're not in love . . yet. You've only getting ready for love. And you probably wont be ready when love does decide to come down your particular little street. Because you'll be expecting Utopia, and love is very common-place and real." Followed a long silence when no ound except the quick, sharp chirps of the crickets outside. After a while the clock struck ten and I prepared to leave. She watched me idly as I jut on my wraps, and as I paused in the door, hoping that she would inish her thought, she added: "Love doesn't have to have Utopia; any old place will suffice if the people who ive there are half-wise."

Then I went away ot work. Coming home on weekends I would take he things I had written and go up to her home where, in the big front oom, with the pictures of her kin looking down at us from the walls, she would read my work aloud and talk afterward. But with each visit I knew she was coming nearer the end of her journey. The reading tired her. She wanted, more than anything lse now, to be in her garden. For, s she had already said: "Where here are flowers, there is always God." Aanl for her God was something real that came into her life hrough beauty and simplicity and aith. It was finer, she always said, hen fear. She didn't understand why o many people were afraid of life nl death and a hereafter, nor did he try to. Her happiness sufficed; nd her faith was stronger than ear.

And in the end she was simply ired and they laid her to rest in the open country where the flowers and trees she loved could grow naturally round her bed.

Her name? Mrs. Kate Henderson Wallace!

SYNOPSIS

Young Gregory Sterling, having made a fortune in the West, reluctantly returns to his home town, and takes a luxurious room at the Whittall House. In a park, he sees a girl sitting on a bench suddenly keel over, and rushes to her rescue. He takes her to a hospital, where the doctor pronounces the case starvation. Gregory engages a private room and a special nurse, Miss Gowen. While Gregory considers endowing a hospital room in memory of his mother, for the free use of strangers, he finds a purse beneath the park bench where the girl had sat. Opening it, he finds it empty except for a letter addressed to Miss Margaret McLaren, 1456 Rodman street, with a blurred Vermont postmark. Reaching Rodman street, he talks to a disagreeable landlady, who insinuates Miss McLaren's rent is overdue. Gregory pays the rent. He then reads the letter, signed Grandmother, thanking Margaret for the money she sent. When he reaches the hospital to make arrangements for the endowment, he finds the patient improved but insistent on leaving immediately to find a job. He tells her of the room endowment, and guarantees to get her a good job by Monday. Greg ponders on methods of doing good with his money. After church, he goes to the hospital, tells Margaret he is giving her a job himself, and that in the morning they will rent an office in a rooming house known to Miss Gowen, and get to work. The following morning the head nurse returns from a vacation, ignorant of the endowed room, and insultingly questions Margaret's rights there, and tells her to get out. Margaret, still weak, leaves and finds refuge in a railway station, considering her next step. Meanwhile, on a small Vermont farm, Margaret's feeble old grandparents worry about her, and lament the wickedness of the city, and the need for Margaret to work there in order to pay the interest on the mortgage held by hard old Elias Horner. Horner arrives to demand full payment by four days after Thanksgiving. Back at the hospital, Miss Gowen discovers the circumstance of Margaret's flight, is insulted by the head nurse and calls Greg. When he arrives, the bronze memorial tablet is being installed, to the head nurse's great embarrassment. Greg and Miss Gowen go off to seek the missing Margaret, and finally rent the prospective offices and a room for Margaret in the same house. For three days they continue their fruitless search. Greg is beginning to grow disheartened. Meanwhile, Alice Blair, Greg's home town sweetheart of years ago, having read in the papers of his return, finds him by an exhaustive checking of hotel registers. Alice, twice divorced, treats him affectionately, and asks him to dinner. Greg is charmed until her noisy gay "gang" arrives, led by a dissipated older man, "Mortie," to whom Greg takes an immediate dislike. When they start out for a night club, Alice appealing takes possession of the dazzled Greg. Alice tells Mortie that he may help her with her wrap, but that Greg is going to be her escort.

CHAPTER VI
—7—

Margaret had sat in her obscure corner of the inner waiting room embattled by her thoughts for perhaps an hour before any sort of order came out of the chaos.

To think that she had allowed herself to be put into such a situation! Occupying one of the best private rooms at the expense of a stranger who had told her lies to keep her satisfied! And it would appear from what the head nurse had said that he hadn't even paid the expense, only pretended he was going to so that the nurse and the doctor would allow him to put her there! How terrible! How she had been deceived in that man! He had seemed so genuine, just as if God had sent him to her in her distress! Her judgment was all at fault. What could possibly have been his object? Did he for some reason want to get her under his power? She shuddered at the thought.

But presently the shame and humiliation of having been ordered out of a hospital on the ground of nonrespectability cleared away and she began to see more clearly. It wasn't her fault anyway.

Now, she must put it utterly out of her mind. She obviously couldn't do anything about it just now. Her first need was to get a job and provide against the immediate future.

Nobody, of course, would pay her right away, and she would have to get along somehow till the end of the week, but how was she going to work unless she could eat? Could she get her new employer, provided there was such a person in existence, to pay her a little at the end of the day, just to tide her over a few days? She could live on very little. Some milk and crackers, a bowl of soup now and then, or an orange or banana. As for a place to stay, she could spend one night at least here in this station. She could move in the middle of the night when she might be supposed to be going to a train from the big outer room to this one. Yes, she could very well get comfortably through a night or two in this station. And there was another station in the other part of town. Perhaps she could change to that when it became noticeable that she was hanging around here.

Of course, when she got a real job she would have to hunt a room. She wouldn't even go back for her things until she had the money to pay what she owed. For of course if that young man had been a liar, all that story about paying her room rent for her had been a lie also. And how she had prided herself upon her ability to take care of herself in a big city! Well, she would be cautious enough hereafter! And she wouldn't go near Rodman street for some time yet, not until she felt safe.

So she clutched her thin pocketbook in her hands and started up, trying not to realize how weak she felt.

"Oh, God, help me!" she breathed. Then she took a deep breath, tried to set a pleasant, assured expression upon her face, and went forward.

She found herself headed into a street that she did not know, a street of small dirty shops, printers, stencilers, grimy wholesale places.

Then just across the street she saw a window where a man was leaning over putting a large white lettered card close to the glass. Even at that distance she could dimly make out the word, "Girl Wanted," and with wondering relief she turned and sped across the street. What marvelous luck to be the first to see it. No, not luck. God was surely being good to her!

She entered the shop with fear and trembling and looked about her fearsomely.

It was only a tiny shop and its shelves and counters and even the floor seemed to be cluttered with small pasteboard boxes.

There were two men in the shop, the younger one unloading more little boxes from a large packing box in the middle of the room and putting them on the shelves. The older one, a stooped, elderly man with sharp eyes and an unpleasant mouth, came forward and looked her over suspiciously.

"Can you write a good clear hand?" was the first question he asked her.

"Oh, yes!"

He shoved forward a pad and pencil.

"Show me!"

He pointed to an address and Margaret copied it, trying to keep her hand from shaking.

"O. K.," said the man when she had finished. "Now I got a lotta circulars I want folded and addressed. I pay by the hundred." He named a pitifully small sum.

He waved his hand toward a counter at the back where were stacked what seemed to Margaret like millions of printed sheets, and quantities of envelopes.

"Oh, I can work fast!" promised Margaret breathlessly.

"Well, I'll try ya till noon on it, but ef ya don't get enough done I'll havta get a helper. Mike, take that card outta the winder, and stick it up on the shelf awhile. We might want it again."

"Can You Write a Good Clear Hand?"

So Margaret hung her hat on a nail by the window in the dusty back end of the shop, and sat down under a green shaded lamp before a stack of envelopes. The pen wasn't very good, and the envelopes were cheap, the list was long and the surroundings were unspeakably dreary, but Margaret was exceedingly thankful.

By tens she laid the addressed envelopes in long lines about her on the desk, till they presently began to assemble into hundreds, and when the desk was full she stopped and folded circulars and filled them.

But as it came toward noon the tense work was beginning to tell on her. The memory of her breakfast became very dim. This was the time that Nurse Gowen had brought her the glass of orange juice yesterday and the day before, but she must not think of that.

At noon she drank two full glasses of water, thankful that water was free, and went on with her work.

On through the afternoon she worked, a giddy faintness beginning to take hold of her. She felt shaky whenever she rose to gather up the finished work and stack it on the counter. Could she keep on till night? She knew she was working on her nerve alone. She found herself praying in her heart.

At half-past five the men began to put up the shutters and put on their coats.

The old man came over to the desk and surveyed with satisfaction the great stack of finished work.

"You've worked good!" he said, nodding his approval. "I guess you'll make the grade without a helper ef you can keep it up a day ur so longer. You better go home an' get yer dinner now."

Margaret looked up with a weary smile.

"Could you—" she began hesitantly, "would you be willing to let me have just a little money tonight?" she asked. "I have been out of work for several days."

"Sure you'll come back tamorra?"

"Oh, yes, I'll come back," said Margaret.

"Fifty cents do ya?"

"Oh, yes, thank you!" she said.

He flung a 50-cent piece down on the desk beside her half reluctantly. "It ain't my custom ta pay till the work's done," he said grudgingly, "but seein' you done pretty good I'll chance it. Now, tamorra I'll have the stamps here an' we'll mail these, see, an' then get another batch off in the afternoon mail. Ef you work as good the next two days as you done today, there's a dollar bonus in it fer ya, see?"

The color flooded into Margaret's pale cheeks. But she tried to answer meekly, "Thank you," put on her brave little red-feathered hat and went out into the dark street, gripping her 50 cents in one hand and her thin pocketbook in the other. Somehow it never occurred to her to put her money into the pocketbook. She knew she must use some of it at once or collapse, and she hurried down the dusky street searching for a cheap restaurant.

A bowl of soup, a cup of coffee. It didn't cost so much! She looked wistfully at the change. If only she could find a cheap bed and have a good night's sleep, but she must have breakfast. There was barely enough left for a meager breakfast and perhaps a sandwich to eat at noon. She mustn't indulge in a bed. The railroad station would do tonight.

So she dropped the few small coins into the inner pocket of her purse, never noticing how thick the pocket containing the letter from her grandmother had grown since last she saw it, and hurried away to the station.

She found a corner in the big outer waiting room and sat down, resting her head back and sleeping fitfully for a couple of hours.

Then suddenly she became aware of a burly policeman who kept walking back and forth, looking in her direction, and panic seized her.

She started up and looked at the big clock, noted that it was almost midnight. An official was calling out a local train and she went as if in answer to the call.

Out in the trainshed she mingled with the crowd for a little and then found her way back by another door, and entered the ladies' waiting room.

She sat for a long time behind a big post, anxious lest that policeman should trace her. Finally she went into the inner room and found a rocking chair unoccupied. But about two o'clock the porteress came and touched a woman on the shoulder, told her that her train was called, and she arose hastily and hurried away. Then Margaret with a furtive look around slipped into her place on the couch and stretched her weary limbs out straight. Ah, how good this was!

She awoke suddenly to find the porteress tapping her on the shoulder. She looked up out of a haze of pain and loss of sleep, not knowing where she was.

"There is a sick woman being brought in," said the porteress. "She was taken sick on the train. Would you mind getting up and letting them put her here? She is having a heart attack!"

Margaret arose quickly and found the early dawn was stealing in at the windows. The woman was brought in looking ghastly in the mingled light of night and morning. Margaret hurried into the washroom and dashed cold water in her face. Every muscle and nerve was crying out for rest and relief, but she remembered her job and took heart of hope.

She went out again and sat in one of the rocking chairs with her eyes closed till morning was fully come and it was time to go and hunt a cheap little excuse for breakfast.

For three days and nights Margaret went on in this way, with only broken scraps of sleep here and there in some public place. At the end of the third day she finished the last envelope, stamped the last stack of circulars, and looked up to see her employer standing before her with a few grimy bills in his hand.

"You done good!" he said. "Here's the rest of your money what you ain't had, and your bonus. We got no more use for you just now. Any time you come round and see that card in the window you come right in. You're sure to git the job. See?"

Margaret saw, and her heart sank.

Wearily she put on her hat and went out. It had turned cold and she shivered in her little fall jacket that matched her suit. It was almost dark and she felt as if she just must have a real bed tonight. Perhaps that Travelers Aid woman she had read about in the framed certificate on the wall of the station could help her to find a cheap, respectable bed. But first she must go to the postoffice. There would surely be a letter from home.

So Margaret went to the post office and found a letter from home. She cried all the way back to the station.

She sat down in a rocking chair in the ladies' waiting room and read her letter before she even stopped to get the food which she needed so much.

"My Precious Girl:

"We are in great distress because we have not heard from you in five whole days. We do hope you are not sick or anything. And it is rather hard not knowing just where you are located. Just write a postal card. I'll wait. I know I'm a silly old fool worrying about you. But you're the only child we have left, you know.

"And now I'll have to tell you some bad news.

"You see, Elias Horner came in the other evening and told us he had to have his money. Not just the interest, but the whole mortgage money that we borrowed a few years ago. It comes due just after Thanksgiving and I guess there isn't any way out of it. Of course, your grandfather has written to an old friend who used to know a lot about mortgages, to find out if there is any way we could get a new mortgage with someone else. But he isn't counting on it much. He's been going ahead planning just as if we'd lost the farm.

"We had figured that we could sell the furniture—you know a lot of it is real old and is said to be worth a good deal of money. And the farm implements ought to bring something. And then there is Sukey. A man has offered $30 for her.

"We thought if we could get together $1,000 perhaps Elias Horner would accept that now and let the mortgage run another year or two.

Harvest Timber in Oregon Forest With the Promise of an Indefinite Supply

The professional foresters' ideal is being realized in the Malheur National forest, in eastern Oregon. It is the establishment of a forest area that admits the profitable harvesting of mature timber each year with the assurance that the yield will continue indefinitely.

In the center of the Malheur forest is an open prairie some 10 miles across. Surrounding this, writes Albert Stoll, Jr., in the Detroit News, are mountains covered with fine stands of ponderosa pines. In the valley lies the little town of Seneca, with a population of 600, all families of loggers. All are employed by a lumber company which is operating in the mountains surrounding the valley under contract with the federal government.

Only mature trees are harvested and they run about four to every acre. About 20 acres are harvested each day on this basis. At this rate it will take the loggers 30 years to reach the scene of their first cutting at which time they again will be able to harvest approximately the same number of trees that have stopped growing. In the meantime seedlings and immature trees will have a chance to grow and all form the basis of a continuing, productive forest.

The logs are carted to a small mill town some 30 miles distant where 400 men are employed in converting them into lumber at a good profit to the operators. This community with its 1,200 population and Seneca with its 600 are supported solely by this lumbering operation.

Ponderosa pines reach the age of 400 to 500 years before they stop growing, and are termed mature, and the mountainsides are covered with growths ranging from one year seedlings up to the age old giants. This project is pronounced a success by federal foresters as a sustaining yield forest.

Change Wishes to Stitches

"GEE, if I could only afford that darling dress I saw the other day—I'd give my left arm—!" We who are addicted to pretty clothes and subject to the usual feminine foibles (but not too well-blessed financially) often make a wish like this, don't we? Ah, but here's good news, Milady! Thanks to Modern Sew-Your-Own you can make all your wishes come true on the "pretty percentage" basis. You may have "that darling dress" at half the price (you won't have to give up your left arm either). Why not decide today to sew, sew, Sew-Your-Own?

Looking to Spring.

The frock at the left has never been in anybody's window, but you can bet your bottom dollar it's going to be seen this Spring wherever style is of first importance. It interprets the mode in a young and graceful manner. And because it's a Sew-Your-Own original it's the last word in simplicity. Make it either with long or short sleeves in lame, sheer wool, satin, or velvet.

Pajamas for Madame.

Pajamas that make you want to wake up and live; pajamas that help you sleep like a log—is that the kind you have in mind, Milady? You can depend upon today's model either in taffeta or velvet for leisure; cotton flannel, silk crepe or seersucker for sleepy time. Make this becoming style in duplicate while you're about it and be the perfectly groomed pajama girl all-around-the-clock.

To Start the Day.

A good way to start your day, Miss Keep-the-Home-Beautiful, is to wear a dress that makes you pretty as a picture. The model at the right will do just that. Furthermore, you will be thrilled to see how easy it goes together. It's fun to Sew-Your-Own, because then you can choose the color that does things for you, and you may enjoy variety of fabrics with the difference you save by sewing. Won't you join us today—one pattern will convince you that Sew-Your-Own "really has something there."

The Patterns.

Pattern 1416 is designed for sizes 12 to 20 (30 to 38 bust). Size 14 requires 4⅛ yards of 39-inch material; with short sleeves 3⅞ yards. The bow requires ⅝ yard ribbon.

Pattern 1428 is designed for sizes 12 to 20 (30 to 38 bust). Size 14 requires 4⅛ yards of 39-inch material; also a 21-inch zipper for front closing.

Pattern 1372 is designed for sizes 34 to 46. Size 36 requires 4⅞ yards of 35-inch material; with long sleeves 4⅞ yards.

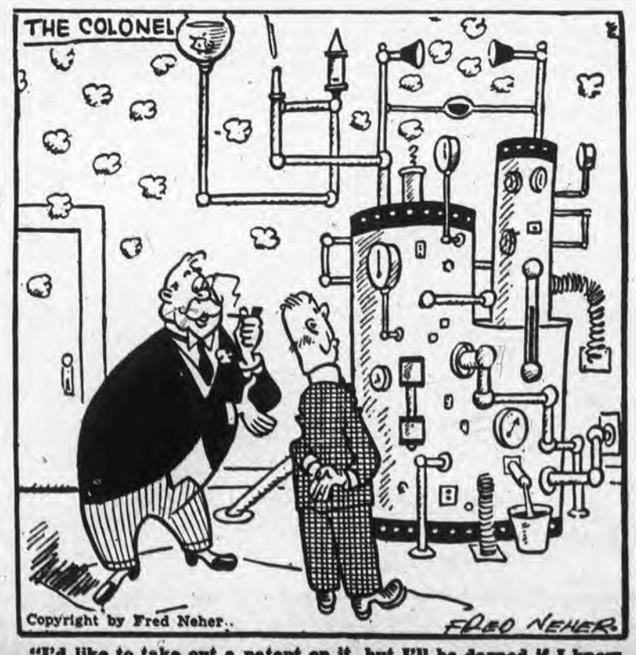
Canny Politician Had a Desire in the Matter



Who was it said the English couldn't take a joke, and that immediately?

At a hectic political meeting where representatives of the various parties were gathered, an English politician, while addressing the assemblage, was struck full in the face with the body of a dead cat. It came from the direction of the audience. A look of great anger came over his face as he prepared to seek out the perpetrator of the vile deed. But from the audience arose one who said: "Please, sir, I'm very sorry, I meant it for your opponent."

"Well, my friend," came the quick reply from the injured one, "I sincerely wish that you had meant it for me and it hit him."

THE OLD AMAZE

These are the things I pray the years may leave
Untarnished and untouched by dust and bright:
The old amaze, the spell of Christmas Eve,
Its rapture and delight:

The breathless wonder that the stars awake:
The unfaltering belief that a star once led
Three kings a devious way—that it still can lead
Men to Christ's manger bed.
And hurrying years, in passing let me keep
Some starry-eyed expectancy aglow:
The thing that children, waking from their sleep
On Christmas morning know.

And oh, some little flame of eagerness!
Years, leave it lighted as you pass, I pray!
A little inner flame to lift and bless
All hearts on Christmas Day.

CHRISTMAS ECHOES AND A NEW YEAR'S MELODY

Santa Clause has come and gone! You did not see him-You did not hear him-but like many invisible and intangible blessing, we KNOW he has been here, and that his visit will not soon be forgotten-We know that the Christmas Song he left with us will echo forever around our hearts and homes; inexpressibly sweet and unforgettably dear! a sweet lovely melody to haunt all the days of the New Year yet-to-be! A happy rhythmic theme song recorded in joyous heart beats telling just the sweetest love song of the ages and this fact was made possible on account of your THOUGHTFULNESS! Yes, the last little candle has been extinguished from a radiantly glowing Christmas tree which has twinkled a welcome each time we entered the living room. The last little bit of tinsel and silver trinkets have been taken down and carefully laid away until time for another TREE-another Christmas-and another "time out" for friends and thoughtful expression bespeaking REMEMBRANCE which have this year brought to us unspeakable happiness. How many times these mementos, cards, personal calls, and letters will come up for review when we are in need of cheerful stimulus for future endeavor,-well-this perhaps you will never realize-but we gratefully assure you that our allotted life time will be too short to attempt to merit your kindness so generously extended us during the past Yuletide season!

We find ourselves in a retrospective mood on this December morning with a strong inclination to look back thru a muchly marked desk calender-The tired Old Year is about to leave us 365 days are about to be recorded in Time's relentless Diary. On some of these little calender leaves are reminders of joys and sorrows, high hopes fondly cherished, some heartaches and disappointments and some shattered dreams are sketched there on - - - -yet, we hate to see the old year go! We reluctantly bid him "Goodbye". There is always a tinge of sadness in that little old word, GOODBYE-Fact is, there is something so absolutely final about it-So irrevocable-and Time's Clock cannot be turned back-no matter how very much we wish we might compromise with the Old Boy and trade a Yesterday for a Tommorrow-There are many YESTERDAYS we should like to bring back which we now happily recall-There are other YESTERDAYS we shall remember only as a "hushed football in a long forgotten snow"- Old Daddy Time is now slowly gathering his white robes around him-and with his scythe is cutting away the remaining hours making ready for his final curtain call before ringing up the new curtain on a new scene with a brand new pink and smiling New Year waiting - - - just around the corner-He too, is an interesting looking little fellow and we happily go to meet him-counting it also a distinct privilege to share with you the Calender of Days for 1938-Would you like to raise the curtain just a tiny bit and peek a wee little way down the future vista of days and days? Would you like to KNOW what is in store for you-? Would you-if you could? - - - - - I Wonder!

Among others coming home for the holidays were Jack McGhee and J B Turner of Auburn, Alice Roberts of Talladega, Charlie Verne Tinney, of Montgomery, Billie Chandler, of Barnsville Ga., Beth Wallace of Sylacauga, Jean Letson, Jeanette Niven of Alabama College, Ruth Luck, Bub Gordon and Conred Fowler of University of Alabama.

THE TRAFFIC LIGHT

A long needed innovation and a welcome addition to the spirit of progress in Columbiana is the Traffic Light now swinging high, wide and handsome on Davis' Drug Company corner-This little burg presented quite an impressive picture thru the holidays, with a Traffic Light and a Traffic Cop with a real whistle-directing Mr and Mrs Public-and if you think George Horn didn't mean STOP when he blew that whistle-just try getting by! It was not a little Santa Claus "pop gun"-but the emphatic "Horn" of authority ordering the motorist to wait for the green light before proceeding - - ELSEWHERE!

FOOTBALL — — BOWLERS

Mac Messer and Coach Wilson are receiving congratulations upon the lucky star which won for them trips to the Sugar Bowl and the Rose Bowl last week-Mayor and Mrs Gordon and Paul O Luck are motoring toward the Rose Bowl-with the theme song CALIFORNIA HERE I COME furnishing the chief impetus for a trip across the continent-Don't forget all those promises- gentle man-We stand for "PERFORMANCE not PROMISES" here-and we eagerly await your return-Sure, bringing at least "4 ROSES - - " -sure, direct from Rose Bowl-you said it, didn' you?

'C L JOHNS

We happily pull up a chair and extend a cordial welcome to a new Virginian subscriber who has many friends in Shelby County-C L Johns, brother of Mrs Irene Tinney who made the Yuletide season a more joyous occasion on account of his visit to Columbiana, the first in four years. Mr Johns stated he wanted to "keep posted" on Shelby County- He considered the Democrat the best medium-This tribute we deeply appreciated and happily do we travel the Virginia trail this week into his hospitable home. Thanks!

Miss Delilah Curry spent the Christmas holidays with her father Mr Sam Curry and Mrs Cage Head at Linger Longer Farm, near Montevallo.

Mrs Lena Merrell spent the holidays in Birmingham the guest of friends and relatives.

Mrs W W Carter had as her guests for the holidays Mrs Dottie Wood of Birmingham and Mr and Mrs J P Mansfield of Montgomery, Mr and Mrs Mansfield are leaving next week via air plane for the Orange Bowl Miami Fla.

Mr and Mrs Charlie Tinney spent Sunday in Montgomery with relatives,Mr Cecil Johns returned home with them to spend Monday before returning to his home in Virginia.

MRS EMMA MILES HOLDS OPEN HOUSE SUNDAY

Regal in a wine colored velvet gown Mrs Emma Miles, the "Duchess" as she has been dubbed by feature writer Della Harkness of Tennessee-held an Open House on Sunday afternoon for her many friends in Columbiana who called between the hours of three and five o'clock. Assisting in the amenities of the afternoon were her daughers, Mrs. Fay Miles Benton and Miss Myrtle Miles.

From a beautifully appointed table delicious Egg Nog, hot coffee, mints, nuts, olives and cookies were dispensed by Mrs Benton and Mrs. D S Lightcap. The "Duchess" was in a merry mood and graciously received her friends and recalled many happy incidences which have brightened the shared pathway since Mrs. Miles moved from Birmingham to Columbiana over twenty years ago-Ninety two winters have silvered hair of this universally beloved citizen of Columbiana, but her spirit is as youthful and her mind as alert as can be-She is eagerly interested in all current happenings and was especially entertaining and lovely on this memorable occasion.

Mr and Mrs Terrell Jackson of Gadsden were holiday guests of Judge and Mrs L B Riddle.

Misses Idell and Odell Turner, Mr and Mrs G R McNeil of Birmingham and Powell Blair of Cullman were dinner guests of Mr and Mrs J B Turner on Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Bob Mills of Gadsden were week end guests of miss Mamie Jo Harbin who returned with them to Anniston for the Holiday season with Mr and Mrs Max Harbin.

Rux Carter of Birmingham spent Christmas with his mother Mrs Grace Carter.

Richard and Eugene Johnston of Birmingham visited their grandmother, Mrs Emma Miles, Sunday.

Miss Alice Roberts who holds a lucrative position in Talladega is the guest of her mother, Mrs Edna Roberts.

The many friends of E L Crumpton (Uncle Lank) regret to learn he is seriously ill of Phenumonia at his home near Columbiana.

Mr and Mrs Wayne Murry and Miss Alda Murry of Ft. Deposit spent the holidays here with relatives Miss Rosa Lee Collins returned home with them for a few days visit.

Mrs Tom Elliott and son Tommie of Oplika are visiting her parents Mr and Mrs L P Dycus.

Mr and Mrs Joe Stone and children spent the holidays with his parents in Uniontown and with Mr and Mrs West in Thomasville.

Mrs Lou McGiboney spent a few days this week with relatives in Birmingham an Sheffield Ala.

Mr and Mrs Earl Wood of Gadsden are visiting friends and relatives this week.

Mrs Onnie Sternenburg of Birmingham spent Christmas day with her parents Mr and Mrs A P McGhee.

Mr and Mrs Levert Christian and Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Davis spent the holidays in Birmingham visiting friends and relatives.

Mr and Mrs Yeager Horn spent the holidays with relatives in Auburn.

Mr and Mrs Childs left last Thursday to spend the holidays at the home of their parents.

Mr Emmett Pilgreen of Selma and Fla. spent the holidays with Frank Martin.

Heart Drifts

TIME

Considering how inexorable is time
On its swift journey toward eternity,
As season follows season with the rhyme
And accurate rhythm of great poetry
One wonders at the importance of the years
To any heart—whatever may befall
In that brief space—if it be pain or tears,
Or grief or joy—what matters it at all?

To John on Patmos, circled by the sea
To Bunyan in his cell, to Lincoln slain,
To Beethoven deaf, composing a symphony,
To Christ on the cross, bearing the whole world's pain,
What does it matter now the darkness past?
Surely each hurt heart finds its peace at last.

AFTERMATH

When I have spoken any word
A friend's fajth to refute,
I feel that somewhere in the world
A bird falls mute.

When I on Children's mirth have turned
Unsympathetic eyes,
I feel that somewhere in the sun
A flower dies.

When I have done a thoughtless thing
That leaves my love in doubt,
I feel that somewhere in the sky
A star goes out.

LISTER HILL Stands Squarely on the Democratic Platform
Side by Side with President Roosevelt,
Senator John H. Bankhead, and Other Democratic Friends, Fighting the Battles of the Farmers and All Our People.

President Roosevelt, Lister Hill, and James Roosevelt on rear platform of the Presidential special train as they returned to Washington, Monday, December 7, following a meeting on the Presidential train where Congressman Hill and the President discussed farm legislation and other matters of vital importance to the people.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Washington, D. C.
December 7, 1937

Hon. Franklin D. Roosevelt,
The White House,
Washington, D. C.

My dear Mr. President:

Permit me to express again to you my appreciation of the opportunity to discuss with you while on the train returning from Miami the need for adequate farm legislation.

It is most gratifying to the farmers of the country and to their friends to see your determination to continue with the program and carry out the pledge of the Democratic Platform so that the income level of the individual farmer may be raised.

With the assurances of my esteem and regards, I am,

Very sincerely,
Lister Hill

THE WHITE HOUSE
Washington
December 10, 1937

Honorable Lister Hill
House of Representatives
Washington, D. C

My dear Lister:

In reply to your letter of December seventh, let me say that I absolutely agree that we should continue working toward the goal pledged in the Democratic Platform to the end that the income level of the individual farmer may be raised.

Let me say further that I am very happy that you are standing squarely behind the program pledged in the Democratic Platform.

It was good to have the opportunity to talk with you and to get an idea of what your Committee has in mind.

With kindest personal regards,

Very sincerely yours,
Franklin D. Roosevelt

CRUEL REMARK

"I won this suit in the election."

"You ought to have a special election called and try to lose it."

What Irvin S. Cobb Thinks about

After Dinner Speeches.

HOUSTON, TEXAS.—Lately, for my sins, I've had to listen to a jag of after-dinner oratory, including plenty of mine. I hope people like to hear me. I do.

Feature writers say professional after-dinner speakers are dying out. That may be true in New York, where folks are anxious to get the dinner over with so they may hurry to the night-spots and do some sincere and earnest drinking in an effort to forget what the stock market did to them yesterday and what it's going to do to them tomorrow.

Irvin S. Cobb

But out in the hinterlands the new crop of native orators is a bountiful one; and the typical silver tongues of the great open spaces—I'm speaking of their neighborhoods although I might include their mouths—are still convinced that the sweetest music on earth is the sound of one's own voice uplifted in eloquence.

An English preacher had the best formula: Stand up to be seen, speak up to be heard, shutup to be appreciated. If he'd left out all but the last part, 'twould have been a perfect recipe.

* * *

Tomorrow's Treasures.

WANT to acquire untold wealth for your latter years, or, anyhow, for your grateful heirs?

Then collect things. Collect cheap things which are both common and commonplace. Then sit down and wait for these objects to become obsolete and therefore priceless. Yesterday's necessity is today's junk, but will be tomorrow's treasured antique.

Assume you'd saved up old circus bills, or Mississippi river steamboat menus, or buggy whips, or those handpainted slop-jars formerly found in all truly refined homes. Henry Ford or some museum would take a lot at any price.

I'm putting aside literary works of a purely imaginative conception. I have one perfect specimen of idyllic creation—a time-table of the old Florida East Coast railroad, also a complete working synopsis of the Townsend plan—just sheer fantasy. But the most fanciful romances are the platform pledges adopted at national conventions of the two great parties during the last twenty years—there's real fiction for you!

* * *

Germany's Colonies.

EVERY nation is united in the magnanimous attitude that to Germany should be restored the colonies taken from her by the winning side in the World's war—except the nations that acquired the said colonies in the split-up.

That's the main hitch. It's more than a hitch. It's a hard knot, tied originally with hate and sealed now with greed. In other words, sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander—unless it happens to be our gander, which naturally alters the case.

Nor seemingly has it occurred to any government that the original owners of Germany's former territorial possessions might like to have a say about whom they're going to belong to in future. But then, if ever we started considering the wishes of despoiled native tribes over the world, where would the white man's noble civilization be?

Cosmopolites.

THE last time before this that Captain Mike Hogg and Major Raymond Dickson returned to their ranch at Cast Blanca, Mex., they were just back from New York.

That night, at the bunkhouse, the hands, mostly Texas lads, foregathered to hear the bosses tell about the wonders of the great city. One or two of them had visited New York, so these cosmopolitans proceeded to exhibit their familiarity with its sights.

"Major," said one, "I reckon old Grant's tomb's still doin' business at the same stand, eh?"

"And I bet the aquarium is right where she was when I was there," said another. "And all them tall buildin's."

There was present one lanky youth who had never been fifty miles away from where he was born, in a bend of the Rio Grande; probably never had seen a town of more than a thousand inhabitants. But with all these seasoned travelers showing off, he didn't mean to be left out. He waited for an opening.

"Cap'n Mike," he said, "tell me, is that there same feller still runnin' the hotel in New York?"

Lesson for January 2

THE GOSPEL OF MARK: A PREVIEW

LESSON TEXT—Mark 10:35-45.

GOLDEN TEXT—And whosoever of you will be the chiefest, shall be the servant of all.—Mark 10:44.

PRIMARY TOPIC—What Two Brothers Asked Jesus.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Who Are the Great?

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—A Look at the Gospel of Mark.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Mark's Gospel: Author, Origin, Theme.

Beginning a New Year is always a thrilling experience. The thought of an unwritten record is a pleasant one and at the same time most solemnizing. We must take heed, you and I, what we write upon that page which lies before us with the inviting caption—"1938."

Next to having New Year's day fall on Sunday, it is most appropriate that the Lord's day should come between the holiday of yesterday spent with our family and friends, and the work-day on the morrow, when we begin the year's labors. Today we tarry in God's house to pray and counsel together in the light of his Holy Word regarding the new year of grace and opportunity.

We begin today a six-month study of the Gospel of Mark, which presents Christ as the Servant of God. It is the Gospel of the mighty acts of divine power, rather than of words. It is characterized by energy and spontaneity. It moves rapidly. The characteristic words are "straightway," "immediately," and "forthwith," which are used more than forty times.

Before considering our lesson for today, we would undoubtedly like to "meet the author." John Mark was the son of the Mary in Jerusalem in whose home was "the upper room" where so many important events took place. He was a cousin of Barnabas and went with him and Paul on the first missionary journey. For some reason he lost heart and went home, much to Paul's distress. Happily we find that the young man redeemed himself in Paul's estimation and was later well spoken of by him (Col. 4:10, Phile. 24, and I Tim. 4:11).

The lesson text chosen for our "preview" of the Gospel is one which shows the weakness of human ambitions as contrasted with the true spirit of humble service which characterized Christ.

I. Selfish Ambition Rebuked (vv. 35-41).

Ambition is not in itself wrong, but when it becomes so extreme that it projects self forward at the expense of others it becomes selfish and destructive. The fact that these men were evidently earnest and were, indeed, seeking a place with the Lord in his glory does not change the situation. They were selfish even in dealing with holy things.

James and John had asked for a great honor in the kingdom, but had not sought to share in the suffering that preceded it.

Their own ignorance of what was involved, their own weakness, their observation of God's hand in the carrying out of his own plans, should have deterred them. There is such a thing as holy boldness, but there is also such a thing as unholy temerity.

II. Sacrificial Service Defined (vv. 42-45).

Christianity is not organized after the manner of secular government (v. 42). Much of the mischief that has come to pass in the church is the result of "running the church" as an organization, when it should be allowed to develop as a living organism.

Anyone who observes with even a little care knows that the church of Jesus Christ is hindered most seriously by the presence of pride and selfish ambition. Some people will not work unless they can rule. Their money is withheld unless it buys for them a dominating interest. The pastor is persona non grata unless he recognizes the desires of the "right" people. None of these things are done as obviously as our words would suggest. There is much careful "fixing" and "wire-pulling" behind the scenes. But it amounts to exactly the same thing, and it is all entirely foreign to the spirit of Christ.

Are there then no Christians who humbly serve the Lord? Yes, praise his name, there are many, and wherever they are found they are the salt of the earth. God uses and blesses them to his own glory. They may not be (and often are not) in "positions of leadership," but they are actually the leaders of the church in its true work on the earth.

Man

Man is by nature weak; he is born in and to a state of dependence; he therefore naturally seeks and looks about for help.

Avoid Becoming Stale

I have lived to know that the secret of happiness is never to allow your energies to stagnate.—Adam Clarke.

Success

There is no road to success but through a clear strong purpose.

Sure to Delight in Colors Bright

Add an old-fashioned bouquet of dainty roses, cornflowers, daisies, fern, and forget-me-nots to your bedspread and preserve the glory of Summertime throughout the year! A lace frill—actual lace, gathered a bit—trims your colorful bouquet. Easy to do, the charming result is well worth the brief time spent on a bit of simple embroidery. Begin on it right away! In pattern 5906 you will find a transfer pattern of one motif 16¼ by 21½ inches; one motif 5½ by 9½ inches; four motifs 3 by 3 inches; a color chart; material requirements; illustrations of all stitches used.

Pattern 5906.

Uncle Phil Says:

Charged for Ignorance

There are no new laws of Nature, but men never seem to learn the importance of those that already exist.

If we must gossip, let us gossip about the important people dead and gone. That's what most of the new biographers do.

We envy the Indian for at least one thing. He doesn't make excuses.

Man is said to be the only animal that can laugh, but we believe that a dog does.

Deadens Our Outlook

It never did any good to dwell on gloom and regret.

Everything is in the top drawer of the chiffonier and if you search long enough, you'll find it.

Almost every man is important—to some one.

Happiest home is the sturdy oak and clinging vine kind—and 2,000 years have proved it.

Reason why it is so hard to suppress noise in the big city is because big cities up to 1890 used to be proud of their noise.

AROUND THE HOUSE

Testing Hot Fat.—To test the temperature of hot fat for deep frying, drop a small cube of bread into the frying kettle. If it browns in one minute, the temperature is right. The frying kettle should be about half full, never more than two-thirds. Have a piece of brown paper, or an absorbent paper towel handy on which to drain the fried food of excess fat.

• • •

Saving Leather Chair. — The comfortable old leather chair that was sent to the attic years ago because the leather had finally become shabby can be made usable again if the worn part is concealed by a slip-cover. If it is covered in nice, dark blue the chair may be used winter and summer.

• • •

Polishing Furniture.—That foggy appearance on highly polished furniture can be removed by sponging with a cloth dipped in a solution of one quart clear water and two tablespoons of vinegar, wiping dry with another cloth and rubbing.

• • •

Egg Celery Sandwich. — Chop hard-cooked eggs up fine and season them with salt and pepper. Add half as much finely chopped celery and enough mayonnaise to make the mixture easy to spread.

• • •

Removing Ink From Carpet.—Carpets stained with ink should be treated at once with salt. After removing the soiled salt, rub with a cut lemon and finally sponge with warm water.

• • •

Save Chicken Fat.—Chicken fat may be used as a butter substitute in cooking. Consequently, it is a good plan to save the fat from boiled, stewed or fried chicken.

• • •

Washing Window Shades. — Soiled window shades may be washed by spreading each shade on a flat surface and then rubbing it with a clean cloth or sponge and soapsuds.

Still Coughing?

No matter how many medicines you have tried for your cough, chest cold, or bronchial irritation, you can get relief now with Creomulsion. Serious trouble may be brewing and you cannot afford to take a chance with any remedy less potent than Creomulsion, which goes right to the seat of the trouble and aids nature to soothe and heal the inflamed mucous membranes and to loosen and expel the germ-laden phlegm.

Even if other remedies have failed, don't be discouraged, try Creomulsion. Your druggist is authorized to refund your money if you are not thoroughly satisfied with the benefits obtained from the very first bottle. Creomulsion is one word—not two, and it has no hyphen in it. Ask for it plainly, see that the name on the bottle is Creomulsion, and you'll get the genuine product and the relief you want. (Adv.)

Were you ever alone in a strange city?

If you were you know the true value of this newspaper

Alone in a strange city. It is pretty dull. Even the newspapers don't seem to print many of the things that interest you. Headline stories are all right, but there is something lacking. That something is local news.

For—all good newspapers are edited especially for their local readers. News of your friends and neighbors is needed along with that of far off places. That is why a newspaper in a strange city is so uninteresting. And that is why this newspaper is so important to you.

NOW is a good time to get to . . .

KNOW YOUR NEWSPAPER

THE YEAR Old and New

By Philander Johnson
In the Washington Star

HAPPY NEW YEAR comes to view.
I'll say "Happy Old Year!" too.
Since a share of happiness
Lies in memories we possess.

Old year, we cannot forget
Duties that were bravely met,
Nor the courage that was taught
When the hours with doubt were fraught.

Old year, 'mid the shades of guile
You have offered many a smile,
Like the sunshine, clear and warm,
That must conquer every storm.

Be the future what it may,
Pioneers have shown the way.
Happy New Year comes to view—
I'll say "Happy Old Year!" too.

Two New Year's Organ Hunters

by LUELLA B. LYONS

ANN HUDSON hadn't recovered from the shock of the first Christmas present her husband, Phil, had given her, their first holiday together. Hadn't she always dreamed of receiving a nice car or a fur coat, or something equally as nice? But he had laid just a fifty-cent piece at her plate Christmas morning. All he could afford just now, he said.

"Ann, dear, get on your wraps, dig out the fifty-cent piece and let's spend New Year's day by attending Hartman's farm sale just north of Morton City, today," he urged. "You know Frank Hartman had some grand antiques and maybe you can make that fifty cents pay interest by investing it." He loved to tease her.

Everyone in Fletcher and Putnam counties had had the same idea and by the time the Hudsons reached the Hartman farm Ann had quit being heartbroken and disappointed over her insignificant gift.

"There's one thing, they won't be able to give away here," a neighbor told Ann. "That's that pair of old reed organs over yonder. One belonged to Mrs. Hartman and the other to her Ma before her. No one will so much as carry an organ home these days!"

That set Ann wondering, but when Phil started the truck homeward, he was the one who was wondering. "You always know best, honey, but won't you let me in on the secret? Why the two organs at two bits each, please?"

"Just to tease, I'm not telling, but you must admit I got a lot of music for four bits, Phil."

Spring displaced the winter and along came the summer and with it a round of county and state fairs, exhibits and the like. And when the prize lists were being published, one item stood out like a sore thumb—"Extra classification—Antique reed organs—oldest and finest group display: First, second and third prizes, Mrs. Phil Hudson—$30.00." That was a sample of the prizes Ann collected throughout that summer and she and Phil attended farm sales everywhere, hunting rare old reed organs which Ann tinkered with, polished, mended, played and finally exhibited, dates and all. She had started something, for others were delving into the organ collecting hobby.

New Year's morning rolled around again and Phil found a tiny envelope at his plate. "Just a little gift and a little interest on that four-bit investment you financed last year. Let's hunt up a farm sale to celebrate the day, too, Phil. What say?"

Ann and Phil Attended Farm Sales Hunting Old Organs.

"Sure, but it's 82 miles away so we'd better get going. What's 82 miles in the lives of two organ hunters?" he gibed back.

"EVERYONE will be at the New Year's party but me," wailed Ruth, "and you promised to take me."

"I know, daughter," her father responded, "but not in such a storm."

"There probably won't be any party," Ruth's mother consoled her. "They'll have it some other time."

"Imagine a New Year's party at any other time!" Ruth laughed bitterly. "I never get any fun. Cooped up here on the farm all winter, and now when there's something doing, father backs down on his promise. Scared of the storm! Why, I wouldn't be afraid to drive over alone."

"Well, you aren't going to! All right, I guess we can make it. Go get your things."

Ruth jumped up and kissed him. Her mother's protests were scarcely heard.

Before they had gone far Ruth admitted the storm was really worse than she had realized. The snow was not very deep, but the howling winds had piled it in strange drifts that made even their own gate and the familiar road seem queer and unreal. The windshield, except where the wiper swung back and forth, was blurred,

They Stumbled On Together, Feeling Their Way.

and she strained to make out the edge of the road. Her father also was having trouble.

"We'll have to turn back, Ruth," he said. "There isn't a chance. It's getting worse, too. Better to miss the New Year's party than the New Year."

"Of course, father." Ruth felt relieved.

The car swung around, the brakes jammed. The soft snow settled down under the two front wheels which hung over the edge of the road. "We're stuck, Ruth," her father said. "I doubt if I can get enough traction to back her." They got out, scraped away the snow and tried to lift the car, but one wheel was caught. Ruth shivered. "Hadn't we better hike home before this storm gets worse—and we get too cold?" asked Ruth.

Following the road proved quite a task. They stumbled on together, feeling their way, and at last the welcome lights of home showed them the right direction. "This isn't much of a New Year's eve celebration," Ruth admitted, "but it's a lesson. I'm making my New Year's resolution right now not to insist on my own way."

"That's right, honey," her dad replied, "and if you remember that, I'm sure we'll always have much happier New Years."

Eating Peas on New Year's

There is a popular superstition in some sections that eating of peas on New Year's will bring fortune during the year.

HOW TO SEW

by Ruth Wyeth Spears

Make Luncheon Sets of Striped Material.

THE napkins and mats are fringed and then whipped to keep them from raveling and to strengthen the edge. This is a very quick and easy finish to use for linens of the coarser weaves and is in harmony with peasant dishes and provincial furniture.

In cutting the material for the mats and napkins it is best to pull a thread to guide you so that the edges will be perfectly straight and fringe easily. Cut right along the little opening made in the material by drawing the thread as shown at A. Plan the size of the mats and napkins so that the material will cut to good advantage and the stripes will arrange themselves in a pleasing way through the center of each piece. Napkins for this purpose may be as small as nine inches square though many people like them a little larger than this. The mats are usually about eleven by eighteen inches.

Pull out the threads to make the fringe at the edge as I have shown here at B. From a half to three-quarters of an inch is a good depth for the fringe. Save the threads you pull out and use them for whipping the edge as I have shown here at C.

Every Homemaker should have a copy of Mrs. Spears' new book, SEWING. Forty-eight pages of step-by-step directions for making slipcovers and dressing tables; restoring and upholstering chairs, couches; making curtains for every type of room and purpose. Making lampshades, rugs, ottomans and other useful articles for the home. Readers wishing a copy should send name and address, enclosing 25 cents, to Mrs. Spears, 210 South Desplaines St., Chicago, Illinois.

Favorite Recipe of the Week

Corn Tamale Pie.

ONE-DISH meals for the main portion of the supper are a great help to the housewife who is doing the last minute preparation. This popular tamale pie can be fixed in the morning when you are doing work around the kitchen and then not heated until time to use.

1 No. 1 can whole kernel corn
2 8-ounce cans tamales
1 8-ounce can tomato sauce
1 dozen ripe olives
½ cup grated cheese
Salt and pepper

Blend the whole kernel corn with the tamales, tomato sauce, and olives; season with salt and pepper and pour into a casserole. Sprinkle cheese over the top and bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees) for about 40 minutes, or long enough to heat the pie thoroughly.

Hot biscuits, spiced peach pickles, and a green salad would taste good with this supper.

Fruit would make the best dessert. Just plain chilled canned pears, apricots, or plums would be a fine finish, or if you prefer, a soft custard may be served over the fruit.

Are Women Better Shoppers than Men?

GRANTING a woman's reputation for wise buying, let's trace the methods by which she has earned it. Where does she find out about the advantages and details of electrical refrigeration? What tells her how to keep the whole household clean — rugs, floors, bathroom tiling — and have energy left over for golf and parties? How does she learn about new and delicious entrees and desserts that surprise and delight her family? Where does she discover those subtleties of dress and make-up that a man appreciates but never understands?

Why, she reads the advertisements. She is a consistent, thoughtful reader of advertisements, because she has found that she can believe them — and profit thereby. Overlooking the advertisements would be depriving herself of data continuously useful in her job of Purchasing Agent to the Family.

For that matter, watch a wise man buy a car or a suit or an insurance policy. Not a bad shopper himself! He reads advertisements, too!

Gods, Goddesses, Dancers

In India nearly all of the 33,000,000 gods and goddesses of the Hindus are considered to be dancers and their images show them in some symbolic pose. Most Indians cannot understand or believe in a god without grace, rhythm and the ability to express his infinite soul through movements of his body. One of the chief sacred books of Hinduism states that the principal activity of all gods is dancing.—Collier's Weekly.

"COTTON SOUTH FACED WITH ECONOMIC DISASTER"

"I agree with State Commissioner of Agriculture Robert J. Goode that the Cotton South is faced with economic disaster,"

—Says—
J. THOS. HEFLIN

"Savage and Outrageous Discrimination"

In a release to the press of an editorial to appear in Alabama Farmers Exchange Bulletin for Dec. 31, Commissioner Goode sounds the most important warning to Alabama farmers sounded in a generation. The farm bills which passed the Senate and House and are now in conference prohibit Alabama farms from turning lands, taken out or forced out of cotton, into production of food, feed and forage crops.

"I pledge my vote and my life," says J. Thos. Heflin, "that the farms of Alabama shall not be burdened with any such savage and outrageous discrimination.

"As much as I would regret to differ with the Administration I would fight to the death any such measure. I know I would have with me the same vast majority of the Senators and Congressmen from Alabama and the Cotton South who opposed Mr. Lister Hill's vote to enslave Southern labor and industry with the iniquitous Wage-Hour Bill. I will accept no measure the principle of which I know is wrong and unjust.

"I oppose now and I will forever oppose federal legislation that will make some agent or bureau master of the lives of the working people of Alabama. I oppose now and I will forever oppose any measure that would prevent Alabama farms from supplying the consumers of Alabama with a shortage of 34% in our own meat consumption, 46% of our milk, 54% of our corn, 90% of our oats, 57% of our eggs and 67% of our hay. I oppose the principle of such legislation. When Alabama returns me to the Senate I guarantee the battle of the Century before any such Conqueror's terms are imposed upon the Cotton South.

"I pledge you not only a vote but a fight to the death. No man in Alabama can doubt my ability to make opposition effective on the floor of the Senate or doubt my knowledge of cotton conditions, NOW, when the crisis is upon you. I am ready for the service. I enlist for the war."
